M. Guyot proceeds to show how far England was ahead of France in the time of Louis XIV in her attitude to authority of all sorts. France was a slave to authority, civil, spiritual, learned and scientific. In England everything was examined, questioned, freely discussed. So discoveries of all sorts were made there that could not have been made in France at that time. "The scientific methods learnt in England," says M. Guyot, "were greatly responsible for the formation of the firm, precise, simple and concise style which characterized the eighteenth century up to the time when Rousseau's influence prevailed. After tracing the effects of leading novelists on French fiction, of our two greatest English Philosophers on French Philosophy, of Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations" on French political economy, and of the historical works of Gibbon, Hume, Robertson, Hallam, Macaulay, Buckle, Freeman and James Bryce on the minds of French historians, M. Guyot sums up his argument as follows:—"The intellectual influence of England on France has been exercised in the following forms:—(1) The chief one is liberty; England has freed French thought and French science from the 'authority' argument; Shakespeare freed our theatres from the Aristotelian rules; Locke and English institutions taught the rest of the world the true conditions of political liberty.

* Voltaire was banished from France instead of being sent to the Bastille for demanding reparation from a high personage who had insulted him. By this apparently trifling incident England benefited enormously.

(2) The second form which is a consequence of the first, is the scientific form. It is Bacon against Plato, Newton against Descartes, Lyell against Cuvier. The movement was continued by Darwin and Spencer. It was strengthened also by Adam Smith. It is the inductive method opposed to intuitive conception. It is reality opposed to the assertions and subtleties which we inherited from the Greek sophists.

(3) From a literary point of view its character is similar. Swift and Daniel Defoe gave to their inventions the reality of legal reports. Walter Scott made history familiar by making his heroes eat, drink and sleep. Richardson, Fielding, Thackeray, Dickens and George Elliot taught us to see and relate little facts of everyday life.

(4) From a political point of view England has rendered a distinct service to the world, which it is only just beginning to realize in all its bearing. In ancient republics, and more especially in absolute governments; parties were considered as factions; the party which had seized the reins of power was bound to destroy and crush the others. England has shown a system established on co-existence and free competition of the different parties; a system which has sheltered that nation from revolutions for more than two centuries, and however badly may be adapted parliamentary government to the various countries which have borrowed it, it has put an end in most of them, to conspiracies, pronunciamientos and revolutions.

In short, the intellectual influence of the English over the French taught the latter to subordinate their subjective conceptions to objective methods, and to learn the character and utility of competition in politics, in economics and in biology." W.D.

THE LITERARY INDEBTEDNESS OF ENGLAND TO FRANCE.

The article of M. Yves Guyot which appeared in the Fortnightly Review some months ago dealt with "The Influence of English thought on the French mind." It was followed by an address delivered to the Alliance Franco-Britannique at Strathallan House, in London, by Professor J. Churton Collins bearing the above title. It is quite natural that to an English scholar like Professor Collins it should appear as though England is more indebted to France than France to England when literature alone is considered. The two lecturers did not cover quite the same ground. M. Guyot did not confine himself to literature in comparing the two countries by any means. He discussed general mental development and enlightenment, science and philosophy and other subjects. Well informed English readers can not but endorse all that Mr. Collins says on France's influence on English literature. "It may be said with truth," observes Mr. Collins, "that what the Greek language and Athens were in imperial times to the Romans, the French language and the chief centres of culture in France have since the middle of the thirteenth century been to cultivated Englishmen. In that century the most popular university in the world was the University of Paris. Roger Bacon studied there. Grossetête studied there, and Bacon and Grossetête were but the first of a long and distinguished dynasty of English philosophers and scholars who were proud to enroll themselves among its students. Of our national literature the French were the fathers. From the Norman Conquest and its direct effects the real history of that literature begins. Yet while following French literary models in so many particulars, our good old Saxon tongue so held its own that in our Bible no less than about 74 per cent. of the words used are purely native, in Shakespeare the average is about 90, and in Tennyson about 88. But our early poetry and our early prose were permeated with French thought and followed the French style. Chaucer, the father of English poetry, whose poetry Spenser terms "the pure well of English undefiled" was at least two-thirds French—French by name, French by descent and French in temper. His models, his masters, were purely French. It is very improbable that he ever read a line of purely English literature, says Mr. Collins. All Chaucer's poems can be traced to French sources. Ten of the Canterbury Tales owe their plots to French originals. Sir John Mandeville, for six centuries regarded as the father of English prose, turned out to be a mythical personage. The classical work bearing the title of the Travels of Sir John Maundeville was composed by two French citizens of Liege, Jean de Bourgoigne and Jean d'Ouire Meuse out of books of travel then current. To France we owe our early drama. All our early plays appear to be of French origin. Right down to the Elizabethan age the influence of French literature was very powerful. In that age the Greek, Latin and Italian literatures were undoubtedly the predominating influences, yet the writings of a whole string of French poets powerfully affected our lyric and sonnet literature. Spenser owed his great indebtedness to du Bellay and du Bartas. Of the former he writes:—

"Bellay, first garland of Free Poesie

"That France brought forth tho' fruitful of brave wits,

"Well worthy thou of immortalitie."

On our poetry the Divine Semaine, through Silvester's English version, had for several generations enormous influence, even furnishing Milton with the germs which he developed in his minor poems and that invocation to light which opens the third book of Paradise Lost. But perhaps no individual Frenchman affected English thought so deeply as Montaigne. It would take, Mr. Collins says, more than a stout octavo volume to give in detail the ways in which the minds of Bacon, Burton, Cowley, Sir Thomas Browne, Swift and Pope were affected by the perusal of Montaigne's Essays, and there are many reasons for thinking that their influence can be traced even in one or two of Shakespeare's plays, especially in Hamlet. "There can be little doubt," says Mr. Collins, "that Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress owed its suggestion and many of its details to some translation of Guillaume de Guilleville's Pèlerinage de l'Homme or to some chap-book derived from it." Our drama during the Restoration age owed an immense debt to France. Wycherley's Love in a Wood draws largely on Molière's Ecole des Maris and Ecole des Femmes, and from the latter play The Gentleman Dancing Master and the Country Wife derived their ground-work. Mr. Collins supplies a long list of English plays whose French origin is acknowledged by all scholars. Every movement in criticism, he tells us, emanated from France. In fiction it was the same. Swift's Gulliver's Travels in every chapter reveals the fact that both the incidents given and the whole style of writing were drawn from Cyrano de Bergerac's Histoire Comique. Sterne is two-thirds French. Then, in another walk, that prince of English historians, Gibbon, has himself acknowledged all he owed to the French language and to French authors, to Pascal, to Bayle and to Voltaire. At one time he contemplated writing his great work in French, it being far more familiar to him than English. Turning to writers on politics, the works of De Tocqueville, Thierry, Guizot, Michelet, Thiers and Taine have been as influential in England as hey have been in France. On philosophy in England, Victor Cousin and Auguste Comte have placed their mark; while theology has been deeply affected by the works of Renan, Lamennais and Lacordaire. The art of expressing thought in a graceful manner Englishmen have learnt from France. To the genius of France may be applied what the Roman poet said of his mistress:

Illam quicquid agit quoquo vestigia vertit,
Composit furtim subsequiturque decor.
"Whate'er she does, where'er her steps she bends,
"Grace on each action silently attends."

Professor Collins thus concluded his eloquent lecture:—"And long may France continue to be what for more than seven centuries she has been—the correctress of all that is characteristically infirm and defective in us; long may the esprit Gaiolois continue to temper our graver and more sombre native genius, and long may her classics be living influential examples to us of that high severe conscientiousness and loyalty to art which has given them their immortality, and teach us something of the secret of their inimitable style, something of that distinction, that lucidity, that grace which in the art of expression appear to be their inalienable inheritance and characteristic."*

SCIENTIFIC VALUE OF THE O-ANA SAMA.

On the afternoon of the 11th inst., at the residence of Mr. Sadakichi Inaba, the owner of the O-ana sama, Prof. Tsuboi gave a lecture for an hour and a half to an audience of nearly one thousand concerning the remarkable O-ana sama caves whose exhumation took no less than four days. Below are the essential points of his interesting lecture:—

"The first cave has, at a point over ten feet from its stone-walled entrance, an elevated place, where an unglazed earthen vessel, a broken piece of an arrow-head, a straight sword over two feet long and a human bone were discovered, while to its right were found a bridle, a kushiro (a kind of bracelet), a magatama and kuda-tama (both well-known gems), another human bone and several teeth. From an examination of these teeth, it was deduced that an old person and a youth had been buried there. Inferences have even been made as to which of them was buried alive as the dead one's retainer, in accordance with the ancient custom, called junshi.

"In the second cave were found the bones of five persons; but it is indeterminate whether they were victims of war, plague, or junshi. Among other curiosities were a gray iwaihe (an earthen vessel used in ancient times as a sake cup offered to a deity) which, when struck, produces a sound like that of a bell, a silver ring discoloured to green, and a number of ruri balls, apparently for the purpose of a rosary. Now, ruri is no other than ancient glass of an emerald hue, and this proves that glass had been used for ornaments by the Japanese before giyaman (originally 'diantant', but erroneously applied to glass) was imported by the 'Southern Barbarians.'

"Much to our disappointment," says the Professor, "nothing remarkable has been found in the rest of the caves; but it must be called a satisfactory result seeing that we have dug up some 250 specimens altogether. Besides, few ancient human figures of clay are equal in perfection to the two specimens obtained in this excavation; and they are doubtless those of men, judging by their headgears.

"Now, relics of antiquity in Japan are generally classified under two heads—the Stone Age Antiquities, which belong to a race entirely different from the Japanese, and the Gem * Since writing the above the news of the great loss the English literary world has sustained by the sudden death of Professor Collins has reached Japan. Professor Collins occupied the chair of English Literature in Birmingham University at the time of his death. He was a prolific writer on a wide range of literary subjects. He was a leading Shakespearean scholar and a great authority on French Literature. His last book on Rousseau and Voltaire appeared only last April.

W.D.

Age Antiquities, which belong to the real ancestors of the Japanese people. Although most of the former class show the barbarous ignorance of such races, it is provable by scattered shells and other signs that they had fixed habitations, while proofs of the settled dwellings of the ancient Japanese are not in evidence. Devoted sympathy and reverence, however, seem to have been shown by the latter to their dead.

"Graves of olden times are also divided into two kinds—one made 'on hills in the shape of a mound or a hyotan (gourd) and the other made in caves; and the O-ana-sama thus belongs to the latter kind, while the four graves on Hyotan-yama belong to the former. It is considered quite remarkable that the two kinds of graves should be found so close to each other.

"That there existed among ancient Japanese inhabitants the barbarous custom of junshi is a fact recorded in Japanese history, but in the 23rd year of the Emperor Suinin's reign (7 B.C.), on the acceptance of Nomi-no-Sukume's suggestion, this custom was abandoned by using earthen figures instead—a fact one is reminded of by the human arms, broken pieces of skirts, and horse's heads all made of clay, or the ornamental bell, wrapping cloth, tomo (an instrument fixed to the left hand when shooting arrows), and so forth, that were obtained from these caves.

"Also, taking into consideration the custom of burying gold, silver and precious stones with the dead, the prohibition of which was proclaimed in the 2nd year of Daikwa of the Emperor Kotoku (646 A.D.), we conclude that these caves must have been made before that date, or more than 1,300 years ago.

"From the old graves on Hyotan-yama were obtained the head of a stone pole (a relic of the Stone Age), and haniwa (earthen images of men, horses, or jars, half buried in the ground side by side in a ring).

"In short, the excavation of these six caves of Hyotan-yama has given us abundant material for historical investigations."

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

At Friday's evening's meeting of the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society at Van Schaick Hall, when the Rev. C. F. Sweet, of Tokyo, lectured on "Dante and the Divina Comedia," the following musical programme was presented:—

Song....."Thorn".....Adams.
Mr. S. H. Sonerton.
Song.....(a) "I wonder if ever the roses".....Slater.

THE FLEET.

Rear-Admiral Sperry and his staff, who were staying at the Hama Detached Palace and the Imperial Hotel as national guests, retired officially from the capital on Friday. They left Shimabashi by the 3.50 p.m. train and arriving in Yokohama at 4.40 p.m., returned to their ships.

In consequence of the banquet on the Fuji and later the Ball on the Mikasa held in honour of the American officers, on Friday evening, a large number of fire works were sent up both by day and night, and special illuminations were displayed in Yokohama to celebrate the occasion. The ships of both fleets were also beautifully lit up. The city was bustling, and the Band was thronged with the usual crowds uttering enthusiastic bansais.

THE IMPERIAL COURT.

The former Governor-General of Australia and Lady Northcote, now in Tokyo, will be received by the Emperor and Empress in audience at 10.30 a.m. on Oct. 24th.

Viceroy Tang was received by the Emperor and Empress in audience at 10.30 a.m. on Oct. 23rd. His Excellency conveyed gifts from the Imperial Chinese Court to Their Majesties, namely, a pair of flower-vases and a leopard skin from the Emperor of China to the Emperor of Japan; a pair of bracelets and two rolls of brocade, from the Empress Dowager of China to the Empress of Japan.

On Oct. 22nd the Emperor presented yen 5,000 to the family of Field-Marshal Marquis Nodzu towards the expense of the latter's funeral, which was to have taken place on the following day.

The Emperor will leave on Nov. 9th for Nara to be present at the military manoeuvres to be held in the vicinity of Osaka and also to be present at the naval manoeuvres to be held near Kobe. His Majesty will return on Nov. 20th.

The Emperor and Empress have presented yen 3,000 to the family of the late Viscount Enomoto towards his funeral expenses.

The Prince Imperial will proceed to Gumma Prefecture, leaving Tokyo on Nov. 4th. The Imperial Body Guards will carry out manoeuvres in that province.

On Oct. 28th, the Emperor presented to Viceroy Tang Shaoi and General Tsai-Pu a pair of silver vases each and to their parties several other gifts.

PROFESSOR FULTON'S RECITAL.

A moderately large audience assembled at Van Schaick Hall yesterday evening to hear a recital by Professor Robert L. Fulton, A.M., Dean of Oratory and Professor of Elocution and Oratory in the Ohio Wesleyan University. The nett proceeds of the entertainment were to be devoted to the Union Church Building Fund. An excellent and varied programme beginning with Mrs. Cleveland's "No Sects in Heaven," was received with enthusiastic applause, Professor Fulton generously adding another selection at the close—an amusing story of a college hazing incident. The full programme was as follows:—

1.—No Sects in Heaven.....Mrs. Cleveland.
2.—Aux Italiens.....Lord Lytton.
3.—A Scene from the Dog Club.....De Mille.
4.—Uncle Israel's Call.....Caroline Stanley.
5.—Parnassus and the Captive.....Willis.
6.—Flower Scene from Ingomar.....Halm.
7.—Scenes from Hamlet.....Shakespeare.
8.—Christmas Night at the Quarters.....Russell.
9.—College Hazing Story.....—

The Rev. E. S. Booth, who presided, moved in suitable terms a vote of thanks to Mr. Fulton, which was cordially endorsed.

During the evening a pianoforte duet was admirably rendered by Miss Griffin and Miss Moulton.

NAVAL WEDDING.

On Friday afternoon the marriage took place at the American Consulate-General of Lieut. Com. L. Calvin Bertollette, of the U.S. S. Vermont, to Miss Lucille Eleanor Meigs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Meigs, of San Francisco. The bride, who arrived on the Korea the same morning, was given away by Capt. Fletcher, of the Vermont. The ceremony, that of the Episcopal Church, was performed by Rev. Dr. Evans, of the Minneapolis, in presence of Acting Consul-General Babbitt, and the band of the Vermont played music appropriate to the occasion. Lieut. Overstreet acted as best man and the groomsmen were six classmates of the bridegroom. After the ceremony a wedding dinner took place at the Grand Hotel. The happy couple go to Manila, where in the meantime the bridegroom will be stationed.

YOKOHAMA CHARITY ORGANIZATION.

The annual meeting of the Yokohama Charity Organization was held at the Board of Trade Rooms on Monday. In the absence of the Chairman, Consul-General Miller, Mr. G. G. Brady presided. There was a large attendance, including Messrs. J. A. Harmssen, B. C. Howard, L. Mottet, Rev. W. P. G. Field, M.A., Messrs. P. Messer, Hon. Secretary (Committee), E. C. Davis, A. L. Robinson, I. Bunting, Ostwald, R. Bohlke, J. de Cuers de Cogolin, H. E. Cole, A. L. J. Dewette, H. D. C. Jones, F. G. Sale, C. H. Thorn, Adjutant Carter of the Salvation Army, etc.

After the notices calling the meeting had been read by the Hon. Secretary,

The following report and accounts for the period ended 30th Sept., 1908, were laid before the meeting:—

The Committee beg to lay before the Subscribers the following Report and Statement of Finance. During the period under review the Society has been able to extend relief to 94 destitute persons of the following nationalities.

American.....	24
British.....	7
Danish.....	3
Dutch.....	1
German.....	9
Greek.....	1
Norwegian.....	5
Portuguese.....	2
Roumanian.....	1
Russian.....	19

The sum of yen 267.97 was expended on board and lodging for 32 destitute persons prior to February last, when our new Home was opened. We have also expended yen 735.20 for passages to various ports, and yen 525.00 towards the maintenance of needy residents.

The Committee desire to record their thanks for all gifts of clothing, to the proprietors of all the local journals, for inserting without charge advertisements calling attention to the needs of the Society, as also to Messrs. Pearson and Mackie for auditing the accounts free of charge, and to Mr. Church for typewriting gratuitously.

The Committee again beg to remind Subscribers that all funds entrusted to them are carefully and systematically distributed.

From the accompanying figures of receipts and expenditure it will be seen that the Society starts the 1908/9 Financial year in debt, and to discharge that deficit and provide for future requirements they can only once more rely on the generosity of the Community.

Consul General H. B. Miller, U.S.A., Chairman, Revd. W. P. G. Field, M.A., B.C. Howard, J. A. Harmssen, L. Mottet, G. G. Brady, Hon. Treasurer, P. Messer, Hon. Secretary.

G. G. BRADY.

Hon. Treasurer.

We have examined and audited the above Statement of Receipts and Disbursements with the vouchers, and hereby certify same to be correct and in accordance therewith.

MILLER, PEARSON & MACKIE
A. E. PEARSON, C.A.

The CHAIRMAN said:

Gentlemen,—Prior to his departure for the United States on furlough your Chairman, Consul-General Miller, requested me to perform the duties attaching to his office upon this occasion, which explanation will, I trust, be held sufficient for the appearance of your Honorary Treasurer as Chairman at this our annual general meeting.

The accounts for the past year, which I imagine are self-explanatory, are before you, but should any information regarding them be adjudged necessary I shall of course be only too happy to afford all adequate explanation. I may say these accounts have been kindly audited as usual by Messrs. Pearson and Mackie free of charge.

Last year you will remember, we carried forward a debit balance of yen 1,156.84, which amount you will see has been duly paid off, and you will observe that we start our financial year 1908-1909 with a debit of yen 144.07, which I can but hope will be deemed satisfactory.—(Applause).

Thanks doubtless in great part to the eloquent appeal by your late Chairman, Mr. C. V. Sale, at the last annual meeting, the response in the way of subscriptions was indeed munificent, a large percentage of our foreign firms, their officers, and a few private individuals collectively handing us the sum of yen 4,015.81. The sincere and hearty thanks of your Committee are due to all those gentlemen whose names appear on the list attached to our report.

In pursuance of the wishes expressed at last year's meeting your Committee were enabled, with the hearty co-operation of Commissioner Estill, to make all necessary arrangements with the Salvation Army for the opening of a Home for the relief of the destitute under the aegis of this Organization. The chief points in the mutual understanding as to the working of this Home were as follows:

(1) That the Home will be opened by and under the management of the Salvation Army.

(2) That the Charity Organization will send all destitute men that come under its care to be dealt with according to the merits and circumstances of each case, the Charity Organization making an allowance of yen 1.50 per diem for each man.

(3) It is understood that two classes of men will be dealt with, viz. (a) the deserving destitute and (b) the beachcomber. The provision made for the latter, while being good and clean, and the food wholesome and sufficient, will be much plainer than that in the case of the former.

(4) The Officer in charge of the Home will use his discretion as regards employing the men who are in the Home in any kind of work he may think them capable of doing.

(5) The men to be placed out in situations or berths secured for them on board ship at the earliest opportunity.

(6) That when men make application direct to the Home for assistance the Officer in charge will admit them if deserving, and will apprise the C.O. of what he has done immediately.

(7) That when men are received from the different Consuls or on the recommendation of private individuals payment must be made by the parties concerned and not made chargeable to the C.O.

(8) That should the Home be run at a loss the C.O. will assist the Salvation Army up to yen 2,000 annually.

Commissioner Estill also added to his letter of Agreement the following:—

"We should very much like to support the Home without any extra assistance, that is by payment for the men we receive and donations from sympathisers. In view, however, of the fact that the number of men will be limited and that this number will always be kept down to the lowest figure possible makes it very improbable that the income of the Home will equal the expenditure. The rent and cost of oversight will be the same whether there be few or many men in the Home."

Our new Home, No. 276-c, Settlement, was duly opened in February last with Adjutant Carter as Officer-in-charge, and I can but express our hearty approval of the work he has since carried on with so much tact, energy and care. I may say that his monthly remuneration for his more than difficult task is yen 30, with free quarters in the Home.

For the first six months working under this agreement with the Salvation Army we have paid them the sum of yen 450 over and above the monthly charges for the men received into the Home, and for the six months ending next December I fully expect that we shall have to provide a sum of at least between yen 500 and yen 600.

And now, gentlemen, as to our working during the past year, I will classify the men coming to our notice as follows:—

(1) The regular cadger or beachcomber who travels from port to port begging and never working unless absolutely compelled.

(2) Men who have deserted their ships in port and are left behind, thereby forfeiting all claims on the steamship companies or their agents, many of them having no papers or documents to prove their nationality, and consequently being quite unable to claim any help from the various Consuls.

(3) Those deserving of help, including men who by unfortunate circumstances, carelessness, and lack of forethought become destitute.

Adjutant Carter informs me that in dealing with 70 men since January he has found more than three-quarters belonging to Classes 1 and 2, those who still linger in Yokohama to-day belong chiefly to Class 1.

Now, gentlemen, when after the last general meeting Mr. Messer and your humble servant accepted the office of Hon. Secretary and Treasurer respectively, we fondly hoped that in view of the widespread prominence given by our friends the Press to the necessity for this Organization in our midst, the help, the consideration, the sympathy of not only our subscribers but of the whole foreign community would be given to us in our utterly gratuitous task. Let me say at once that no such help has been forthcoming, but that the community per se, by disregarding the speeches made at our last meeting and the leaders written on the subject in our Press, have succeeded in crippling our enterprise, and fostering in our midst a band of beachcombers and undesirables of every description. From cases coming to my notice I have culled three, which explain themselves:—

Case 1.—This man came to Yokohama on February 22nd and was in the Home 13 days, and when approached on the subject of being sent away he replied that he refused to leave Yokohama. He was then told that our Organisation would not continue to keep him indefinitely. He then left the Home, saying he had friends who would look after him. After his departure it was discovered that he had collected yen 50 by means of begging during the time he was an inmate of our home. He continued to beg in Yokohama for more than six months, occasionally visiting Tokyo for a change. He was in Yokohama 2 1/4 years ago doing the same thing, and has been in practically all the ports from here to Singapore. He passes as a subject of various countries as it suits him, and to the knowledge of our Officer-in-charge has gone under two names here this year.

Case 2.—This worthy was received into our Home three times. He has been in prison at least ten times, and is at present in Yokohama supported by begging and is an habitual drunkard. On one occasion he appeared at the Home at midnight intoxicated; in the morning he promised to reform, but returned at 11 a.m. once more in a similar condition. He was arrested in the afternoon for being drunk and disorderly in the street. He has been here since January.

Case 3.—This undesirable came to the Home for a meal, saying that he wanted to get some work. Our officer arranged a berth for him on a vessel that same day, but he purposely stayed away from the Shipping Office until it was closed. He was then instructed to be at the same place at 10 a.m. on the next day to meet the Master of the ship, but waited until the vessel had left and the opportunity lost. He then came up smiling and seemed surprised to find he was too late. He has been in Yokohama, Kobe and Tokyo for one year, and has become a recognised coacher for all newcomers in the art of beachcombing, being known to Adjutant Carter by a special name which he could mention. Upon one occasion he was handed a letter to our Officer-in-charge from a resident asking him to take care of the man for two days in the Home. This letter was never presented, but was returned to the giver with the information that our officer refused to give him any assistance whatever.

Now, gentlemen, I am convinced that when your Treasurer was handed the Public Purse containing over yen 4,000 you expected—nay, you demanded—that he use a certain modicum of common-sense in the disbursement of those funds, and that only the really deserving destitute should be relieved thereby, and certainly not those who were proven wastrels and cadgers. How have these men found any support in our midst, gentlemen? It is the old curse of indiscriminate charity over again. This evil, as pointed out last year, has nullified to a great extent the work of our Organization and will render it practically useless so long as it is practised in our midst. From a leading London newspaper I extracted the following letter a few weeks since. The writer says:—

"I have more than once watched a procession of unemployed, and don't hesitate to say that at least a third of them belong to the regular tramp class, and have come to town from all parts of the country on the look-out for loot. There is no mistaking the soft 'pad' of the tramp and his furtive glance as distinguished from the slow, solid tread of the real workingman. Again, indiscriminate and ill-advised charity is responsible for a good deal of 'unemployment' at present ruling. There is a town here in a good neighbourhood where people are both rich and charitable: the mills in that town, though they would afford work for many, are at present idle. 'Do you think,' said the owner, 'that I can get people to work my mills? Not while they can go begging and whining to all the residents round here, and get what they want without working for it.' This town is no exception to the rule. Were we to distribute charity on the lines of if a man will not work neither shall he eat, we should hear much less of the woes of the unemployed."—(Applause)

Those remarks, gentlemen, apply very forcibly to my point: so long as we thoughtlessly continue aiding and abetting wastrels by providing alms so long shall we be surrounded by these unwelcome gentry, and the objects and aims which your Committee are struggling to carry out will be utterly defeated. I have often been approached by individuals who have informed me that they have rendered help to such-and-such poor devils, as the latter had informed them that Mr. Brady had treated them rough (laughter) (which was probably true), and had also refused to lend any aid on behalf of the Charity Organization—a really absurd contention, as I can assure you and everyone else here that every case deserving of help has been relieved by us as far as possible; and if the casual beachcomber has given anyone to understand that it was useless approaching me for assistance, that, I maintain, in itself should have been sufficient guarantee that the case deserved no sympathy whatsoever. To put it plainly, gentlemen, we must either support this Organization and the officers who give their time, energy and trouble to its proper working by our individual support and sympathy or abandon once and for all as useless such a means for dispensing public charity.

You will ask if I have any solution of the difficulty to offer. One and only one. We must persevere once more appeal to our friends the Press to point out to the public at large here the absurdities of indiscriminate charity. I would propose that the whole community be advised that the Charity Organization is ready to receive subscriptions from even 50 sen upwards (the amount usually given to the casual wayfarer, resulting as a rule, in a visit to the nearest grog-shop), that we grant each and all subscribers a receipt bearing upon it the following:—"The within mentioned person or persons being members of the C.O., guarantee to send any and all applicants for relief direct to the Home, No. 276c, Settlement, and upon no consideration whatsoever to afford pecuniary assistance."

They may rest assured that any men so sent will receive all necessary attention, and if the case deserves the slightest support, that support will be forthcoming. And now, gentlemen, in laying down the reins, together with my friend Mr. Messer, unconditionally, I must apologise for the length of these remarks, but I consider such explanation a duty to this Organisation, to your Secretary, and to myself. If perchance these remarks should call forth some controversial opinion, may I beg that letters over various nom-de-plumes to our public journals be dispensed with, and that a visit be paid to me at my office, No. 72, where I shall be only too delighted to cross the swords of argument with anyone?—(Hear, hear.)

Finally, we unhesitatingly agree as to the necessity for this Charity machine in our midst, but if in future the wheels of this machine are to remain clogged, the hands of the engineers tied, would it not be better and wiser to at once consign the entire mechanism to the scrap-heap of oblivion?—(loud applause.)

Mr. E. C. DAVIS said the very able speech of the Chairman to which they had listened with much interest, showed that he and his associates had given the matter of the Charity Organization such profound thought and study that there was very little indeed he or anybody else present could add to the eloquent remarks they had just heard. In thanking them on behalf of all present for their work during the past year he would also propose the adoption of the report and accounts as presented to that meeting by the Committee.—(Applause.)

Mr. BGLKE, in seconding the resolution, said he hoped the Charity Organization would be as successful in the future as in the past. On behalf of the German community of Yokohama he begged to tender their best thanks to the Charity Organization, and to Mr. Brady for the services he had rendered to the Organization, services that he hoped would be given again next year.

The report and accounts were unanimously approved.

Mr. H. D. C. JONES proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the retiring Committee, whose work had been no sinecure. Dealing as they did with so many applicants for relief they must have had a great deal of personal inconvenience added to their arduous duties. He proposed the re-election of the present committee en bloc, with the exception of Mr. Messer, who, he understood, found it impossible, in consequence of the pressure of business, to continue in that office. He would propose that Mr. Brady act as Secretary to the new Committee. They all knew the deep interest Mr. Brady took in charitable work in Yokohama, and taking their text from the very interesting speech he had made that afternoon as chairman he was quite sure he would show a record of good work. The suggestion had been made that Mr. Pearson be asked to accept the post of Treasurer, and he believed that gentleman, if elected, would gladly take on the work for the coming year.—(Hear, hear.)

Mr. COLK, in seconding the proposition, said he would suggest the advisability of applicants for relief being referred direct to the Home rather than to the offices of the Secretary or Treasurer. That, he thought, would obviate a great deal of the trouble and work which had devolved upon those two officials in the past.—(Hear, hear.)

The resolution was unanimously approved.

Mr. I. BUNTING as a new subscriber and as a recent unbeliever in the Charity Organization, said when first it was brought up as a sort of resuscitation he doubted very much whether they would see any improvement, but he had been most agreeably surprised at the very efficient work carried out by the Society in the past year. (Applause.) It seemed to him their appeal was not only for money, but for loyalty on the part of the foreign community here. With regard to the appeal for money he supposed it would take the form not only of subscriptions but also of orders on the Salvation Army for support in individual cases. As to the loyalty surely the evidence of the work of that Organization was enough for any individual with common sense to follow the suggestion and shut down at once on indiscriminate charity. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. A. L. ROBINSON proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, commenting on the great amount of labour and time he had unselfishly devoted to the work of the Organization.

The CHAIRMAN said the work of the officers of the Organization was a labour of love. He hoped the community would respond in as munificent a way as last year or even more munificently.

Mr. DAVIS pointed out that a more munificent response would be necessary, as they had received a subscription last year from the Nippon Race Club which might not again be forthcoming.

Mr. F. G. SALE asked if the funds of the Organization last year were equal to their needs.

The CHAIRMAN said they could use far more money than they received.

Mr. SALE said the subscription list was lengthy, but the amounts were very moderate. Probably most of them would increase the amounts of their subscription if called upon.

The CHAIRMAN said they wanted more individual subscribers. They would be specially in need of funds, this year, as though they had received yen 500 from the Nippon Race Club last year, owing to circumstances over which the Japanese Government had control, but over which the Race Club had none, that subscription might not again be forthcoming.

This concluded the business.

MARRIAGE IN YOKOHAMA.

The marriage took place on Thursday afternoon at Christ Church, at two o'clock, of Miss Maud Beatrice Simpson, of Milford, Massachusetts, America, daughter of the late Hon. Randolph Simpson, and Mr. William Edwin Gooch, son of Arthur Gooch, Esq., of Norfolk, England. Acting Consul-General Babbitt witnessed the marriage in his official capacity, and Rev. W. P. G. Field performed the church ceremony, Mrs. Field playing the wedding march and accompaniment to the hymns, "The Voice that breathed o'er Eden" and "Oh, Perfect Love." Mr. E. Kellogg escorted the bride into the church and subsequently gave her away. Mrs. Gillon was present as Matron of Honour, the bride having been staying with Mr. and Mrs. Gillon since her arrival here, and both the bride and Mrs. Gillon were very prettily gowned. Mr. Ibbotson acted as best man, and after the ceremony a reception was held at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Gillon.

FIRES.

About 6.10 p.m. on Oct. 24th fire broke out in the factory of the Yokohama Electric Wire Company, Takashima-cho. Five buildings were destroyed. The damage is estimated at yen 200,000 including the buildings and contents. Negligence on the part of some workmen is reported to have been the cause.

The Benten Bashi welcome arch which was partially—not totally—destroyed by fire on the night of the 22nd, was not long suffered to remain in its damaged state. At eleven o'clock the same night the work of reconstruction was well in hand, and by an early hour in the following forenoon the arch had resumed its original appearance. Thus the disfigurement in the scheme of decorations was very temporary indeed.

Fire broke out in Kinitu, near Chiba, on Oct. 24th, destroying one house. Three persons were killed.

Fire broke out on Sunday morning in South Odawara-cho, Tsukiji, Tokyo, destroying 12 houses. An old man was killed through the collapse of a burning building.

On Monday morning fire occurred in Omori, burning down six houses. A fireman was injured.

BASEBALL.

THE result of the baseball match between the team of the Wisconsin and the players of the Keio Gijuku College which was played on Oct. 22nd on the ground of the latter was 11 to 3 in favour of the Japanese.

The Y.C. & A.C. defeated the Peers' School on Saturday by 13 runs to 3. There was some good hitting and base-running on the part of the Yokohama men, while the fielding of their opponents left much to be desired.

A LITERARY MISCELLANY.

Lichfield has been glorifying the memory of its literary hero with much form and ceremony. The 199th anniversary of Dr. Johnson's birth was marked, on the 18th ult., by the placing of a laurel wreath on the statue of the great Doctor, and by a "Johnson Supper" later in the day. Mr. Churton Collins, the distinguished litterateur, and Professor of English Literature at the Birmingham University, was to have taken a prominent part in the proceedings, but for his untimely death the same week.

The late Professor was well known as a lecturer. He was a literary enthusiast with great powers of making his subject appeal to his audience. His success was largely due to his habit of dispensing with notes. His memory was as prodigious as his reading was wide. In the course of a single lecture he might introduce half a dozen long quotations, every one repeated without consulting his text. In conversation he would quote long passages of newspaper articles which he had read that very day, and he was said to know Homer and Virgil by heart.

Professor Collins in his later days was wont to take a great interest, strange to say, in criminology, and followed this up by joining what used to be known as "the Crimes Club," the members of which used to meet once a month to discuss this or that mysterious murder. Such proceedings must tend to morbidity, and there are many of his friends who wish that the Professor had left the subject alone.

Johnson's great biographer was also honoured in the Lichfield celebration. Professor Collins was to have unveiled a statue of Boswell, as to the artistic merits of which opinions differ. The statue of Johnson at Lichfield has been pronounced the worst thing in statuary in all England, but it derives some dignity from its size. Beside it, the Boswell statue looks somewhat insignificant, though interest is added by the adornments of its pedestal with medallions of Burke, Garrick, Goldsmith and Sir Joshua Reynolds.

There is clearly to be a "boom" in the artistic aspects of Shakespeare this season. Mr. Rackham, whose editions of Rip Van Winkle and Peter Pan have been so great a success in previous years, is to give us, through Mr. Heinemann, a new artistic presentation of A Midsummer Night's Dream. The French artist, Edmund Dulac, is to produce The Tempest for Hodder and Stoughton much in the same form that that firm produced the same artist's Arabian Nights illustrations last year; also Mr. W. Heath Robinson—Twelfth Night.

Chapman and Hall have published an edition of The Tempest with illustrations in colour by Paul Woodroffe. It is a delightful book. Mr. Woodroffe has done his work admirably. There is a fine note of imagination in his pictures illustrating The Tempest, and this—one of the greatest things in literature—has never been better presented than it is here. As an example of typography alone the book is a desirable possession. Lastly, and with a strong claim for the book-lover, comes the Century Shakespeare in 40 dainty little volumes at the modest price of 9d. each (1/6 in leather). Each volume has its frontispiece, introduction, notes and glossary, while one of the volumes is devoted to an Introduction to Shakespeare by the well-known authority, Dr. T. J. Furnivall.

Mr. Clement Shorter, the eminent critic, complains of the constant appeal of certain editors "for free copy for his journal. One asks you about your favourite food, another about your favourite drink. The latest enterprise in this particular is one which asks me whether I think London a "wicked" city than Paris or the reverse, and encloses a stamped post card; but surely there are things that cannot be said on a post card. Another editor asks me for the names of the twenty most distinguished of living men. Not for twenty guineas, nor 200, would I name the twenty most distinguished living men. I should make enemies of all the remaining celebrities contained in Who's Who—several thousand I believe."

Nevertheless there are not wanting people who have sufficient assurance to take upon themselves to decide such wide and invidious questions on the strength of their own small knowledge.

The Literary Agency of London inform us that the two hundred and fifty guinea prize First Novel Competition which they organized on behalf of a London Publisher whose name is not yet disclosed, had brought in over 150 M.S.S. by the 31st. of August, the last day on which M.S.S. were eligible for the Competition. M.S.S. began to arrive immediately after the first announcements a year ago, but more than two thirds of the total number were received during the last ten days: the inference being that the unusually large prize and the names of the adjudicators induced many authors to try their hand at a first novel who would not have been attracted by an ordinary prize competition. The readers who have been examining the M.S.S. as they came in report that the general level is very high, and in their opinion there are at least two or three of distinguished merit, and a large number with sufficient merit to ensure publication. The adjudicators are Mr. Andrew Lang, Mr. W. L. Courtney, and Mr. Clement Shorter, and their decision will be made known at the earliest possible date, together with the names of the prize winner and of the Publisher on whose instructions the Competition was organized.

Miss Marie Corelli's new book "Holy Orders, the Tragedy of a Quiet Life" has met with the favour we are accustomed to associate with this popular novelist's work. The first edition, a very big one, is already sold out, and a second edition is in hand, despite the fact that the story runs into 520 closely printed pages. It is one of those novels "with a purpose" which the literary critic is wont to write down as inartistic, but Miss Corelli's spirited style and her vigorous attacks upon sundry class-interests and customs go far towards sustaining the interest of the reader, while there is no denying that the majority of her stories are in themselves of considerable interest.

The Manchester Guardian recently published a severe criticism of English fiction of the past year or two, on grounds of morality. French novels by comparison, it declares, have become cleaner, English the reverse. On the other hand the South Wales Daily News urges that "French fiction embraces a much less wide scope than English..... Imperialism has been the inspiration of many of our younger writers. Whereas French writers are still too fond of the love motive, writers like Mr. Kipling and Mr. Wells have found a world of fancy outside the normal. If our fiction is less artistic than the French, it is more comprehensive." The same journal draws attention to the high quality of the fiction now appearing in the columns of the great weekly newspapers.

Social questions bulk largely in the September number of the International Review, to which the editor, Dr. Rudolfe Broda, has contributed an article on "The Future of Marriage." Other papers of allied interest are "The Problem of Divorce in France," by Paul Margueritte, and "Legislation and the Frequency of Marriage," by Jacques Bertillon. The subject of Marriage has been recently discussed at considerable length and with great frankness in the columns of the Daily Telegraph. The correspondence has given evidence of a strong feeling against (1) the inadequacy of the present divorce laws (2) the unbending attitude of the Church on the whole question (3) the unsatisfactory nature of the device known as "judicial separation," which since the act of 1895 has been brought to bear on the marital relations of no less than 160,000 persons.

The following spirited verses appear in the

Saturday Evening Post under the caption of "The New Musician." It is a matter for regret that, since the poem deals in the broadest issues and sentiments common to the whole world, the second stanza should introduce a local touch:—

SILENCE your ancient music,
Your dreams of a distant star:
Give us a song of the life we live,
A Song of the Things That Are!
Sing of the white Sierras,
Of the Gloucester fleet at sea,
Of the great North's silent forests
And the baking Florida key.
Give us the railroad's rumble,
The hiss of the forging steam,
The shops by day and the mills by night,
And the trolley's tortured scream.
There you will find your heroes,
There till the world shall end:
The man who works for his children,
And the man who dies for his friend.
There does the prize await you,
And not on a distant star,
For the song that shall last for ever
Is the song of the things that are!

THE LAW COURTS.

THE "AGENOR" CASE.

The final appeal lodged with the Court of Cassation by A. Lewis and C. A. Hill against the decision of the Tokyo Appeal Court was dismissed on October 23rd. Thus the accused have to undergo penal servitude for life as decreed in the lower Court.

IMPORTANT SHIPPING CASE.

The following is the judgment given in the case instituted by Y. Tsuji and F. Goto against the British India Steam Navigation Company, Ltd., whose Yokohama agents are Messrs Samuel Samuel & Co., claiming yen 457.76 and yen 483.70 respectively. Plaintiffs were represented by Dr. F. Yamada and Defendants by Mr. H. Nakamura. GIST.—The claims of Plaintiffs are dismissed, and they are ordered to bear the costs.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs' Counsel asked the Court to give judgment ordering Defendants to pay to Tsuji Yuichiro yen 457.96 and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from Aug. 23rd, 1905, until execution of the decision, and to pay to Goto Fusajiro yen 483.70 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from Aug. 11th, 1905, until execution of judgment. Counsel further asked the Court to order Defendants to bear the costs. As the ground of Tsuji Yuichiro's claim, Counsel stated that the Defendant firm made a contract on June 15th, 1905, with Messrs. H. M. T. Padsha Sahib and Co. at Madras to carry four bales of hides bearing the marks "338 in diamond with S.T. on top and Nos. 28-31" consigned to plaintiff in Yokohama. Defendants took delivery of the goods in good condition, and shipped them on the steamer Warrior, belonging to the firm. On the vessel's way from India to Japan, the goods were transhipped to the steamer Tsui-tep, belonging to the Java-China-Japan-Line. On Aug. 5th, in the same year, the goods were brought to Yokohama by the last mentioned steamer. After landing then the consignee found that the hides were diminished in bulk by 278.96 kin (the tare, 10 kin, of each bale was not included in the quantity specified by Captain R. Tipple); that is, 757 hides were found missing. The price of the hides being yen 157 per 100 kin, when they were shipped at Madras, the shortage amounted to yen 437.96 to which the fee, yen 20, paid to the surveyor was added, making a total of yen 457.96. As to the cause of the damage Counsel stated that the goods were stolen during the steamer's voyage and that Defendants should be held liable for the damage. Defendants, however refused to make good the damage. As to the claim of Goto Fusajiro, one of the Plaintiffs, his Counsel stated that on June 15th, 1905, Defendants made a contract with Messrs Mirza, Mehadeys, Pahari and Son at Madras under which six bales containing sheep skins with the marks "F. G. in a diamond, Nos. 54-59" were consigned to Plaintiff in Yokohama. Defendants received the goods in good condition and shipped them on their steamer Warrior. For the convenience of the Defendants, they were transhipped to the Java-China-Japan Line's ship Tjiltep. On Aug. 5th the same year the goods arrived at Yokohama. Plaintiff examined them after they were landed on the Customs grounds and found that they were short 278 kin in weight (the whole tare, 62.7 kin, was excluded from the specification given by Capt. R. Tipple.) At the market price, yen 165 per 100 kin, at the time when the goods were shipped, the shortage amounted to yen 458.70 to which the fee, yen 25, paid to the surveyor was added, making a total of yen 483.70. What was short was believed to have been stolen during the voyage. Plaintiff asked Defendants to pay for the damage sustained by the consignee in accordance with the conditions stipulated in the bill-of-lading. Defendants, however, refused to admit Plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff's Counsel produced Exhibits A-1 to 4; and availed himself of Exhibits B-2 and 3, though he refused to admit the documents. Counsel stated that the word "robbery" included in the conditions of the bill-of-lading meant theft committed by forcible means and not larceny.

Defendants' Counsel, in asking the Court to dismiss Plaintiff's claim, contended that (1) the Defendant firm was quite ignorant of the contents of the packages in question. There was no change in their outer appearance. The goods were delivered in good condition to Plaintiffs, after which Defendant had no responsibility whatever happened to them (2) as agreed between the parties, the goods were transhipped to another steamer at Hongkong at the expense of Defendants and at the risk of Plaintiffs. When they were transhipped to the Tjiltep at Hongkong, there was no complaint by the Dutch shipping agents as to the state of the packages. Nothing was stolen during the voyage. Even if there was a certain amount of damage done to the goods, Defendants were not responsible for it. (3) a special condition was stipulated in the original bill-of-lading that Defendants should be free from any damage originating in imperfect packing. The packing of the goods in question were done with old materials and was generally imperfect. Defendants had no responsibility for the goods, the packing of which was defective. (4) Plaintiff's Counsel stated that the goods were stolen by ingenious means during the voyage. Such means, however, should be regarded as the Act of God, and accordingly Defendants should be absolved from any damage arising out of such an accident. According to the conditions specified in the original bill-of-lading, Defendants were free from damage arising through theft. (5) Even supposing that the damage arose through wilful action or negligence on the part of the crews of the steamers, Defendants should not be held responsible as there was a special condition specified in the contract. (6) As Defendants were ignorant of the contents of the packages, they refused to admit the quantities named by Plaintiff's Counsel. Counsel produced Exhibits B-1 to 3; admitted the existence of A-1 to 4; and avoided Exhibits A-1 and 2 and the statements by Mr. M. Razar and Honda Shikazo.

Grounds.—As to the cause of the dispute, the parties, it seems, were agreed on the points that a transportation contract was concluded between them; that the goods were carried from Madras to Yokohama in accordance with the contract; and that the contract was made in accordance with the laws of British India corresponding with British Marine Law. According to British Marine Law, the first transportation agent completed transportation of goods over the route assigned to him after which he appointed a second agent to carry the goods over a further section thus accomplishing the carriage of the goods. The agents should be respectively responsible for any damage that occurred on the sections on which they worked. Under a contract similar to the foregoing arrangement, made at Madras. The goods were accordingly carried from Madras to Hongkong by the Warrior and from Hongkong to Yokohama by the Tjiltep. There was no dispute between the parties as to the facts above mentioned. It was specified in Exhibit B-1, the bill of lading, that the goods in question should be transhipped to another steamer. As a condition of the transshipment, it was stipulated that they would be transhipped at Rangoon or Hongkong at the expense of the ship owners and would be sent to Yokohama by another steamer and that when they left the first ship, the duty of her owners was held to be entirely accomplished. This condition was admitted by Plaintiff's Counsel. Consideration was given to the question of whether a portion of the materials was stolen during the voyage. There was no doubt, according to Exhibits A-1 and 2, that the alleged theft was committed during the voyage from Madras to Yokohama, but there was no evidence to show whether it was committed on the first steamer or on the second. In such a case, the question would arise, which of the parties had to produce evidence in order to ascertain the ship on which the goods were stolen. According to British Marine Law, theft was deemed to have occurred on the first ship, if the occurrence was not traced; and the breaking of cargo or any other damage like that to have taken place on the second. The essential point in the present dispute was that none of the packages containing the hides and skins was stolen but a portion of the contents was missing. It was inferred from Exhibits A-1 and 2 that a portion of the goods were stolen by breaking the packages by some ingenious means. Therefore the alleged stealing must be regarded as damage caused to the goods; and the theft must be taken to have been committed on the Tjiltep. Plaintiff's Counsel did not produce evidence to rebut the foregoing inference and accordingly his contention as to the cause of the claim could not be admitted. Defendants have no responsibility to bear in connexion with the claims of the Plaintiffs. As to the costs of the case, the first clause of art 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure is referred to.

The judgment was signed by Presiding Judge T. Miyake, and associates M. Aritake and K. Ono, on Oct. 21st at the second civil section in the Yokohama District Court.

CLAIM BY AN ARCHITECT.

The hearing of a case instituted by Mr. K. Shimoda of the Shimoda Construction Co. against the Standard Oil Co. claiming yen 875 and interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from Sept. 10th 1906 until the execution of judgment began on Oct. 29th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Hasegawa.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. Ideura and Defendants by Mr. Akiyama.

The statement of Plaintiff's Counsel was that in April, 1906, his client received instructions from Defendants to make a plan and specification for a house and a warehouse to be built at Itosaki, in Bingo province, and he received a verbal promise from Mr. H. H. Beers, the superintendent of the construction department in the firm of Defendants, to receive a fee of 2½ per cent on what was estimated in the specification. Mr. Shimoda had drawn the plan and made the specification as Defendants asked him. Defendants, adopting the same, invited tenders for the construction. The Shimoda Construction Co., apart from Mr. Shimoda as their architect, sent in a tender. Their tender, however, was disallowed on account of the fact that their estimate was a little different from what was requested by the Standard Oil Co. Later the warehouse, etc., were built in accordance with the specification rendered by Plaintiff, the cost of which buildings was about yen 30,000. The fee of 2½ per cent on this amount made yen 750. Plaintiff spent yen 110 on account of his visit to Itosaki before making his specification, and he also paid yen 15 for sending a telegram to America making an enquiry as to the price of iron materials.

Defendants' Counsel contended that the Standard Oil Co. did not ask Mr. Shimoda to make the plan or specification for the buildings referred to by Plaintiff's Counsel.

Plaintiff's Counsel produced a few construction plans as to which he made a brief explanation. Subsequently he asked the Judge for leave to examine Y. Kobayashi and T. Koyama, both employees of the Standard Oil Co., and S. Tokito, as witnesses. The Judge granted the request.

The proceedings were adjourned till Nov. 10th.

YOKOHAMA.

A regatta which was fixed to take place between Japanese and American bluejackets in Yokohama harbour on Friday afternoon was abandoned.

Capt. Grant, chief of the staff of the American Fleet, visited the Honcho and three other primary schools on Oct. 21st in company of an official of the City Office. He made brief addresses in which he thanked the pupils who presented illustrated post-cards to the Squadron.

A judicial official from Tokyo searched the office of T. Fujihira, a share broker, at Kanagawa on Oct. 22nd in connexion with the recent fraud committed at the office of a sharebroker in Sakamoto-cho, Tokyo, by offering thirty forged shares—face-value of yen 50 each—of the Tokyo Fertilizer Company.

T. Takahashi and nine others, who were undergoing examination in the Yokohama District Court in connexion with the Customs scandal, were committed for trial on Oct. 24th.

A gentle shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama at 9:56 p.m. on Oct. 24th, the duration being 1 minute and 47 seconds.

Some prominent foreigners and Japanese held a dinner party on the evening of Oct. 25th at the Social Club in honour of Mr. Saka who was recently promoted Governor of Ibaraki, and Mr. Yuasa who was appointed first secretary of Kanagawa prefecture as the successor of the former. Mr. N. Mitsuhashi, Mayor, presided and made a congratulatory speech. Subsequently the British Consul-General and other foreign and Japanese gentlemen gave addresses.

Japanese papers report that 36 American blue-jackets have deserted from their ships and their whereabouts are not yet known. According to the Yokohama Chief Police Office, the statement is not reliable. All the men returned to their ships prior to their departure.

Enquiries for raw silk appeared on Oct. 26th and 27th from America and Europe. The market, which had been gloomy for some days past, became steady. A Lyons telegram says that the silk market shows activity.

The Yankton of the American Fleet left Yokohama on Oct. 26th for Manila. She had been undergoing repairs of the damage sustained in the storm on her way to Japan.

The health returns of Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended Oct. 25th are as follows:—

A soldier belonging to the Yokosuka artillery was found dead on the railway near the Shikura tunnel on October 26th. He is believed to have deliberately laid himself on the line.

On Tuesday afternoon a coolie named M. Toyosawa attacked another coolie, T. Nanazawa, with a sword at Kanagawa, inflicting severe injuries on his breast and head. The former escaped and the latter was removed to the Abe Hospital. The cause was a slight dispute as to money.

A sailor belonging to a French steamer now in harbour was arrested by the Kaga-cho police on the evening of October 25th, on a charge of having stolen some silver articles from the shop of Y. Kono, in Honcho-dori.

Baron Sufu left for Nagano on October 28th by the 6 a.m. train to be present at the Industrial Exhibition in that city.

The Isezaki-cho police have arrested two men in Magane-cho. They are alleged to have broken into the Buddhist temple Shokokoji in O-okagawa near South Ota-machi, and stolen yen 24 and various articles on the night of October 18th, as already reported in these columns.

Changes have taken place as to the positions of some police superintendents of Yokohama. Mr. S. Hongo of the Chief Police Office was removed to Yokosuka; Mr. T. Maruyama of the Kaga-cho office to the Chief Police Office; Mr. J. Tanaka to the Kaga-cho Office; Mr. S. Suzuki of the Tobe Office to the Kanagawa Office; Mr. M. Ishiguro of the Harbour Office to Yokosuka; and Mr. I. Mochida of the Kotobuki-cho Office to Isehara.

According to investigations made by the union of the various warehouse companies, the stocks of sundry merchandise in Yokohama amounted to yen 10,229,890.22 at the end of September.

On October 22nd a coolie living in South Ota-machi was found to have committed suicide by hanging himself in the woods on Jujimi-yama. The corpse was handed over to the City Office as the man has no family or relative.

Two Russian women, one 20 years old, and another 33 years, were punished by the Kaga-cho police on October 27th with a fine of yen 5 each on a charge of having quarrelled in the street in front of No. 123, Yamashita-cho. It appears that they established a grog-shop on joint account, at No. 106, Yamashita-cho, before the arrival of the American Fleet. The business was unsuccessful and the dispute was the result of it.

A man was arrested by the Tobe police on Oct. 28th on a charge of incendiarism and was sent to the District Court. It appears that he set fire to a house in O-okagawa, on the night of Sept. 20th. The building was burned down.

T. Otsuna (27) formerly an employee of the Kanagawa Prefectural Government, was arrested on the night of Oct. 26th while trying to break into a restaurant in Isezaki-cho.

TRIBUTES FROM ADMIRAL SPERRY AND CAPT. MURDOCK.

(COMMUNICATED.)

Admiral Sperry and several of his officers, as well as a large number of the sailors, took every occasion to express their appreciation of what the two hundred guides provided by the Y. M. C. A. had done to make their visit pleasant. Both at the American Embassy and on his flagship the Admiral went out of his way to tell one of the Association secretaries what he felt. He said, "You may quote me as saying that our men don't really want to drink or dissipate when they go ashore. Your Association has enabled them to have a genuinely good time. Your guides and information folder told them where they ought to go, and how to get where they wanted to go, and keep out of trouble. For this I want to thank you and all who united with you in the endeavour."

Captain Murdock, of the Rhode Island, addressed the following to the Japanese Y. M. C. A.:

"The officers and men of the Atlantic Fleet will always cherish the warmest recollections of their visit to Japan and of the courtesy and kindness shown them. Among other favours has been that extended by the Young Men's Christian Association, which has been as helpful and useful to the men of the ships as they have always found it at home."

"We wish our friends in Japan every success in their work."

YACHTING.

There was a light north-westerly breeze on Saturday and the 22-raters finished late. The first prize was the "Pele Cup." Four boats started, and they finished in this order: Winsome 5:28.08, Edna 5:38.57, Chocho 5:32.90. As the race was sailed on Club time Winsome and Edna received 2m. 56s., and Chocho 4m. 24s., so that Winsome takes first prize and Chocho second.

Five Larks had a race which resulted in No. 12 coming in first at 3:56.30, and No. 2 at 4:00.46.

CUSTOMS PROTESTS.

Mr. S. Yamazaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs, recorded his decision, on Oct. 27th, on a protest lodged by Messrs. Carl Rohde and Co., No. 70, Yamashita-cho. The firm imported "tetrapol," a kind of laundry soap, on which the appraisers imposed 30 per cent ad val. duty in accordance with the 3rd clause of No. 521 of the General Tariff. The importers contended that the duty should be sen 97.2 under the Conventional Tariff as it corresponded with B., 2nd clause of No. 521 of that tariff. The protest was allowed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"FAIR NAGASAKI."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—An article on the above subject contributed to the Japan Mail a few weeks ago by the present writer, seems to have stirred up a formidable array of adverse criticism among those most affected. As the writer was personally cognisant of the data from which the article had been prepared he naturally refuses to stand corrected by those who either have not been equally observant of Nagasaki life, or who are personally interested in throwing doubt upon the facts.

It is particularly noticeable that none of the critics have ventured to question the main contention of the article, namely, that foreigners in Japanese ports generally do not appear to be sufficiently careful to represent the best phases of the civilization from which they come; and whether under these circumstances the Japanese are not justified in formulating their foreign policies accordingly. Just as in America there is a tendency to judge Japan by the emigrants sent thither, so in this country it may well be the general stamp of the foreign resident, in his attitude to morals and religion, that has raised suspicions among the Japanese as to the advisability of further encouraging his presence here. If a foreigner has neither observance nor respect for the highest that his own civilization has produced, one cannot expect the Japanese to entertain any respect for him, or regard him as particularly beneficial to the country. What, for instance, would be thought of a Japanese subject in London or New York, who publicly ridiculed the ancestral faith in the Imperial House, and jeered at the religious customs of his race? Were he a Christian, he might be excused from taking part in certain things, but in no case would he be excused the offence of despising sacred things. But the foreigner in Japan imagines that he can trample with impunity upon the most sacred moral and religious traditions and tenets of his race, and still be esteemed a desirable citizen, by the Japanese. Yet neither the Japanese Government nor the best of the Japanese, can be deceived in this way; the rulers and citizens of this country know very well that deniers and traducers of the moral and religious standards of a race, are a dangerous element in any community. Herein are the seeds of disloyalty, anarchy, and general disorder. The writer has known the Japanese authorities to decline the services of certain foreigners on moral grounds; this has taken place in the case of selecting teachers for schools, perhaps more often than in other spheres. But it is an admission of the principle which I contend, should guide foreigners in this country. What a vast influence it would ultimately have on the relations between Japan and other countries, if all foreign Governments would submit to the same motive in selecting men for consulates and positions representing them in the East, and if all the heads of business firms would exercise a like solicitude in making up the clerk lists of their offices! Admittedly there are many notable examples of the best side of Western Civilization amongst us, in every part of Japan, but the crowd who seem determined upon rendering nugatory such good examples, are the characters to whom every right-minded person must honestly object.

One of the most pointless yet amusing criticisms in the course of this discussion, has naturally been offered in the Kobe Chronicle, wherein is made an attempt to justify the manners of the Nagasaki saloon keeper in refusing to let the soldier's wife have the use of her mother's bible. That newspaper as everybody knows, is generally kept busy in seeing that the views of foreigners in Japan generally are properly ventilated, and of course, in this case, as in so many others, must take up the cudgels on behalf of its most worthy constituents. Like most of the Chronicle's efforts to bolster up a false argument, there is a complete misunderstanding of circumstances, and an evasion of the real issue. The Kobe journal says that if the soldier's wife had money to buy her ticket on the steamer, she must have been able to pay her debt at the hotel. As a matter of fact the woman did not have any money for this purpose. She had a ticket by the American transport-ship from Manila to San Francisco, and did not need much pocket money, as she expected to meet her husband in Nagasaki. Not only so, but the property seized by the saloon keeper was of sufficient value to cover her debt until the arrival of her husband. This is probably the first time in the history of the Kobe Chronicle that it has ventured to admit value as attaching to the bible, and even in this case the value evidently amounts to no more than as proving sufficient ground for an immeasurable degree of meanness. No, the reason why the saloon keeper retained the bible was not because of its value as security, but because he was evidently of the same creed, and consequently, as his supporter, the Kobe Chronicle. The saloon keeper was an American citizen, not a Japanese, as the Chronicle implies, so that the illustration drawn from an imaginary similar event in England is not well taken. Nevertheless, I venture to doubt absolutely whether there could be found in England or America many creatures so inhumanly depraved as to take advantage of a decent woman's misfortune in so contemptibly petty a manner. The wretch who, refusing to be content with all a woman's property, should insist on taking her mother's bible as well, or the photograph of her dead body, or her Buddha, or her crucifix, or any other sacred and personal possession of the kind, would in any civilized country meet with summary treatment at the hands of any manly man able to defend her.

The Kobe journal is typically representative of the effete side of Occidental civilization, of whose taint the Japanese are rightly beginning to be afraid; for the logical conclusion of the attitude which this paper takes towards Christianity and all the highest that Christianity has produced, is that the world would be better without such stuff. But the Japanese knew very well that there is only the choir of accepting the best that Christendom has produced, or returning our steps to paganism. As a matter of fact the people that are doing most for the moral and spiritual redemption of mankind are those at whose efforts and convictions the Editor of the Kobe paper most frequently and deliberately jeers, and at whose most sacred sentiments it goes out of its way to cast ridicule. It has an hygienic appetite for the deflections of missionaries and all engaged in promoting Christian Character among men; and on the eccentricities and idiotic excesses of the fanatical Christian, it regales the palates of its friends as occasion serves. These parasitic organs that live on the life of the community, without contributing anything to its moral and spiritual forces, are doubtless taken at their due worth by the Japanese, as they are by all intelligent foreigners. Yet we cannot forget in this country, that parasites are unpleasant, if not positively irritating, to say the least; and when unduly in evidence become a positive sign of dirt and disease.

If the Editor of the Chronicle honestly resents any attempt at urging the foreign population of Japan to live up to the best traditions and principles of their civilization, and is quite content with the example of moral and spiritual ideal from these foreigners now set before the citizens of this country; if the moral and religious principles of Christendom are thus nauseating to his superior tastes, why does he not betake himself to some paradise untroubled by these conscientious scoundrels; say to Central Africa, Turkey or Sulu.

SIR,—The American fleet has come and gone. It may be of interest to note whether the Japan Gazette will favour the public with a symposium on the fleet's reception or if, in face of the notorious article "Have the Japanese developed the capacity of Friendship?" of May 18th last, it will, like Brer Rabbit, "lie low and say nuffin."

THE MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS AND THE INDIVIDUAL OPINIONS OF THE SUMMARIZER.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I am neither a clergyman nor the son of a clergyman; I am not even an orthodox layman. I should not wonder if any theological position were further removed from that of Mr. Woodd than from that of the gentleman he criticises. Nevertheless, I fully associate myself with Mr. Woodd in his strictures upon the injection into the Monthly Summary of the Japanese Religious Press, a most valuable feature of the Japan Mail, of the individual beliefs or disbeliefs of the summarizer. I take the Weekly Mail solely that I may have the two summaries it contains in a form convenient for preservation, but valuable as they are, they would be still more so if the summarizer did not insist upon summarizing his own individual opinions regarding matters upon which, so far as I am aware, he is not a recognized authority. Especially are his incursions into the borderland of science and theology, and his attempt to play the double rôle of scientist and theologian open to serious criticism. And to think of sneers at so distinguished a man of science as Sir Oliver Lodge coming from even the very able writer of the summaries in question! As the Scotsman said when he lost half a dozen relatives, one after another, in a few weeks' time, "It's getting pairfectly redeekulus."

Faithfully yours,
Yokohama, October 23.

A PREACHER OF HUMILITY AND PATIENCE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The Rev. C. H. Basil Woodd, a Missionary belonging to the English Church Missionary Society, in a longish letter published in your columns takes me to task for certain statements made in a review of Mr. C. T. Gorham's "First Easter Dawn," which I contributed to these columns last August. Mr. Woodd is evidently one of those self-satisfied clerical gentlemen who would soon make a crooked world straight if allowed free scope for action. For the sake of brevity and clearness I will tabulate Mr. Woodd's charges against me. (1) I have committed the heinous sin of over-praising a work called Supernatural Religion. (2) In my review I showed ignorance of the crushing nature of Dr. Lightfoot's reply to that book. (3) That when commenting on Mr. Gorham's views I made all sorts of wild statements. (4) That in a recently published Summary of Japanese Current Literature, I was wicked enough to say that Mr. Balfour has his own axe to grind. (5) I lack the humility and patience exemplified so sublimely in Mr. Woodd's letter, that I am not a fit person to review theological works of any kind. The sermon preached to me closes with a few words of solemn warning to you, sir, which I hope you take to heart in all humility.

I am a very busy man and hence I shall not follow Mr. Woodd in all his meanderings, but content myself with a brief reply to his 5 charges. (1, 2) As regards "Supernatural Religion" I read it when it was first published. I have the latest edition in front of me as I write. The testimony of unprejudiced scholars to its greatness as a presentation of the argument against supernaturalism is not affected by the ipse dixit of the writer of an obituary notice in The Times. Nothing could be sillier than to assert as Mr. Woodd does that Supernatural Religion was confuted by Bishop Lightfoot because one of the writer's for The Times refers to it as "a pretentious bubble pricked." On this subject a fair-minded writer in referring to Cassels' book and Bishop Lightfoot's reply says:—"Here is a good instance of the ease with which the laity can be deceived—if anyone will take the trouble only to glance at these two works, he will find, to his astonishment, that the whole of the overwhelmingly important portion of the book under review, such as the chapters on miracles, on the Resurrection, on the Incarnation and on the Ascension, has received no attention! Besides, there is a reply to Dr. Lightfoot's Essays* which completely demolishes the Bishop's arguments.† Does anybody suppose that a scholar of the calibre of Dr. Lightfoot would have penned learned article after learned article in the attempt to refute arguments that carried no weight with them in the public mind? The line taken up and defended by Mr. Cassels in his great work is that followed in a series of articles published in the Encyclopædia Biblica, which Mr. Woodd will of course carefully avoid reading. (3) Mr. Woodd's theory seems to be that only orthodox people are reliable when writing on Theology. This is the view of the dear old Missionary Society (more than 34 years behind the time, at least 2 centuries!) to which Mr. Woodd belongs. Mr. Woodd's argument is this. Messrs. Gorham and Denning both say things with which I don't agree, and therefore they are both untrustworthy. (4) Mr. Woodd carefully avoids giving the context of the passage he refers to, bearing on a remark of Mr. Balfour's. There is no such passage in any Literary Summary, but in the Summary of the Religious Press published on Oct. 3rd (Weekly Mail) attention is drawn to the fact that all orthodox Roman Catholic Divines and some leading Protestants as well are of opinion that modern science is hostile to Christianity.‡ In the face of these declarations," I said, "the recent dictum of a political orator who has his own axe to grind like Mr. Balfour on the harmony between modern science and genuine Christianity carries little weight. Christianity must be twisted and made to assume all sorts of fantastic shapes in order to be reconciled to modern scientific teaching, say the leading European Catholics." My business in writing Summaries is to set opinion against opinion and let readers choose. Mr. Woodd is naturally on the side of Mr. Balfour. As to the axe question. Of course Mr. Balfour's return to power largely depends on his attitude to the Church. Is Mr. Woodd so simple as to think that politicians never trim, never speak to the gallery? As things are now, trimming and compromise are conditions of political success. (5) For a man who comes rushing into print in such an extremely bombastic manner to be preaching humility and patience to me is a bit of a joke. One is inclined to say to him, "physician, heal thyself." As for the "right hand of fellowship" which this meek disciple of Christ tells us he can not hold out to outcasts like myself, it is just possible that I should be able to survive the loss of this fellowship. Happily there are lots of people in this country who are less advanced in knowledge than Mr. Woodd claims to be, who are antiquated enough to treat people who differ from them with a good deal of courtesy and even to honour them as earnest, sincere and fearless lovers of truth.

You, sir, as editor of this journal, are called on to treat your readers as so many children who are not to be trusted to choose mental food for themselves. You must select more orthodox writers when heterodox books are to be reviewed—on the principle, sir, that the opinion of enemies on all questions are more reliable than the views of those who have strong sympathy with any cause. It is really a pity that editors of newspapers can not be instructed by the dear old wisecracks of Salisbury Square as to what they should publish in their journals. How correct the whole world would become if in all humility literary men and scholars generally would consent to be guided by Mr. C. H. Basil Woodd and his fellow-thinkers!

I am yours, &c.,
Sendai, October 21st, 1908.

ELEMENTARY BUDDHISM.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—May I ask you to be kind enough to notify in your paper that the Rev. A. Lloyd's return is delayed by the fact that he could not obtain a berth on the Siberian Railway in time to arrive on Oct. 28th as he had hoped. It is thought better therefore not to begin the lectures on Elementary Buddhism till the third Saturday in November.

It is hoped nothing will prevent Mr. Lloyd from delivering the first of the course on Saturday, Nov. 21st.

Yours faithfully,

A TRAMP ACROSS INDIA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The enclosed cutting is from an English newspaper. You being an old military man, must know what this private went through, to get away from a place he was not satisfied with. The thought occurs to me that if you published the story it would be an object lesson to some of the Foreign element of the Far East, who are always complaining of the land they live in through some of the local newspapers.

Yours respectfully,

AN ENGLISHMAN.

Private James Houston, of the 2nd East Lancashire Regiment, stationed at Karachi, has been handed over to the military authorities at Calcutta as a deserter. Houston, who is alleged to have deserted on March 3, went on tramp. According to the Pioneer Mail, Allahabad, he covered a hundred miles of the Sind desert, and then struck the railway, afterwards travelling by slow stages by rail and foot to Calcutta, where he was arrested. Some time ago Houston was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for desertion. On that occasion he was arrested in Bombay.

"B." AND THE "TARI-MUTUEL."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—My communication to the Japan Mail of the 22nd inst., on the subject of the attitude of certain foreigners towards violation of Japanese law in regard to race-track gambling, seems to have excited the wrath of the Kobe Herald, whose editor attempts to relieve himself in a lengthy denunciation of the critic. Presumably what most irritated the Herald was a reference to certain questionable actions that took place at the Naniwa race-track a few Sundays ago. I think all unprejudiced minds will admit that, notwithstanding his doughty championship of a lost and disreputable cause, the editor has lamentably failed to justify the behaviour of those foreigners who insisted on violating the rules of the place in being supplied with whisky on that occasion. As to the conduct of the foreign women present at Naniwa that day, it has been admitted both publicly and privately that they participated in the gambling carried on at the race-track; and I, for one, cannot see why people should object to the name, if they insist on the game. A thief is a thief, independently of any more pleasing title with which he may wish to cover his shame; and a man who takes his neighbour's money without adequate return, in a game of chance, or even attempts to do so, is nothing else than a gambler; and so long as he is willing to stoop to such a means of adding to his purse, he must further be ready to face the depreciation he will inevitably suffer in the estimation of all reputable persons. I have been assured by reliable men in charge of foreign firms in Japan, that they never employ in their offices young men known to gamble. But if the Kobe Herald is right, and gambling is an honourable profession, why should youth, or a clerkship, disqualify a man for it? If the business of a foreign firm is rendered unreliable by having gamblers at the lower rung of its ladder, surely the business cannot be regarded as made more reliable by having them at the top. Personally I know from my acquaintance with business men in England, that they are always suspicious of a man who gambles, be he old or young, and that whether at home or abroad they would not retain such a person once his habits were discovered. If this is the attitude of all the best banks and business houses, how can any foreign resident of Japan have the face to claim a right to gamble or to venture upon an effort to exculpate those who persist in a practice that reputable business men hold to be dishonest?

The editorial assertion that the foreigners who persisted in evading the Japanese regulations with regard to intoxicants, on the occasion named, represented the most prominent citizens of Kobe—"persons of recognized position," the editor styles them. I will not venture to question, as I know little or nothing about the foreign residents of that city; but it must be inferred that if this sort of thing stands for the best that Kobe can offer in the way of respect for law and the dictates of refined society, it is rather a questionable compliment to the rest of the foreign community. The present writer does not claim a knowledge of Kobe sufficient to dispute the contention of the Herald in this respect, but a large acquaintance in Tokyo and Yokohama does not lead him to believe that Japan is so scarce of material that race-track gamblers and persons who over-ride Japanese regulations with regard to intoxicants at races, have to be included among the people of "recognized position," so that personally one may be pardoned for doubting the justice of this reflection upon Kobe.

CLERGYMEN AND CLERGYMEN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In commenting on the narrow-minded remarks of the Rev. C. H. B. Woodd a few days ago, I quite forgot to mention the fact that when the Review of "Easter Dawn" appeared in your columns in August last an Episcopal clergyman, who is certainly a far better informed theologian than Mr. Woodd, wrote to compliment me on the Review, describing it as "able" and so on, and asking me to lend him the book. While taunting others with only knowing half-truths, it is not a fact that Mr. Woodd plainly shows by his letter that he is not acquainted with the views of hundreds of clergymen on the inspiration of the Bible, miracles, and the like? If, as Mr. Woodd maintains, I am 34 years behind the times in my knowledge of what has been written on theological questions, is he not quite a century further back? Were he acquainted with the writings of Deismann, Gardner, Gray, Haecel, Harnack, Schmiedel and Soltan, would the mild utterances of my review have taken his breath away? But the Evangelicals are taught to shun heterodox books like poison and to go on denouncing "Rationalism on the one hand and Ritualism on the other" in the style of their antiquated organ, the Record. Directly Mr. Woodd stops doing that, directly he makes up his mind to follow truth wherever it leads him, his salary will no longer be paid by the Society to which he belongs. That he and others know. This circumstance is known to the world too. The C. M. S. has endowed certain teaching. Uter their "shibboleths" and you will be regularly paid. Refuse to do so and you will be reduced to penury, with wife and children to support, for all they care. Are these the people who have a right to taunt others with being "unreliable"? Who would ever think of relying implicitly on men who are paid to teach certain doctrines and who can only give them up at the risk of losing perhaps their only means of subsistence?

* By the author of Supernatural Religion (Longmans, Green and Co. 1889.)

† "The Churches and Modern Thought" by Philip Vivian, pp. 55, 56.

‡ The passage referred to was culled from the Seikyō Shimpō.

Mr. Woodd has been four or five years in this country and so it may be presumed that he knows Japanese sufficiently well to comprehend the meaning of a proverb which is very applicable to his case:—I no kawazu daikai wo shirazu. With the rapid movement of theological thought Mr. Woodd is not acquainted. The C.M.S. do not supply their missionaries with works like the "Encyclopedia Britannica." Hence the alarm caused by my review in Mr. Woodd's mind.

THE JAPANESE SAILORS' HOME.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—On behalf of the Japanese Sailors' Home in London we would like to avail ourselves of your columns to thank the many friends who have made the performances of "The Princess" such a success. On hearing in June of the great difficulty the Home was in for money we appealed to friends for help and it was decided to give "The Princess." It was a great help when Miss Kirby consented to take the part of Princess and the chief burden of preparing the play fell on her.

The first performance at Karuizawa owed much of its success to the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Kirby let us have the use of their garden. Our thanks are due to all the performers who gave so much of their time and trouble during the summer; and also to Mrs. W. Silver Hall, who undertook the refreshments, Mrs. Mitsui, who provided all the lemonade; Mrs. Wharton who gave the material for the students' dresses and Mrs. Kirby who gave all necessary tailoring. As we had no advertising nor printing, our expenses were very small, including bringing of chairs (lent by the Auditorium) dresses, gratuities, etc. They came to the modest sum of twenty-five yen. The proceeds of sale of tickets with some donations were 335 yen; the refreshments brought in 90 yen, so that we had exactly 400 yen to send to the Sailors' Home.

The performance was considered so successful that the actors were asked by many to repeat it in Tokyo. This time Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda most kindly let us have their garden. On this occasion it was decided to benefit some local charity as well as the Sailors' Home, and the Oji Institute was chosen. The Princess Iwakura, Viscountess Hanabusa and Viscountess Okabe consented to be patronesses. We had an ideal day for the performance and Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda added much to the enjoyment of the guests by providing tea for the whole audience of about 600 people.

Mrs. Ishii, of the Oji Institute, interested her many friends and they obtained for us the privilege of having the band of the Imperial Household.

The performers in "The Princess" to whom we offer our thanks were Mrs. Sweet, Miss Caldwell, Miss McKim, Miss Thompson, Miss Kirby, Miss Ruse, Miss L. Seymour, Miss Shaw, the Misses Cahusac, Miss Booth, Miss E. Gardiner, Miss Russel, Dr. Seymour, Mr. Sweet, Master R. Kennedy.

Our expenses were:

Hire of chairs .....	67.50
Erection of awning, etc.....	19.90
Dresses .....	5.70
Printing of play in Japanese, and tickets.....	15.75
Advertising .....	20.25
Refreshments for band .....	15.20
Carriage of goods .....	1.50
Gratuities .....	5.00
	151.00

Receipts.

By sale of tickets ..... 1,055.00 |

By sale of photos and post cards at Karuizawa ..... 16.00 |

The profits being 920 yen, 460 yen has been sent to the Sailors' Home as a cheque for £96.19.2 and 460 yen to the Oji Institute.

SUSAN BALLARD,
Hon. Secretary in Japan to the Sailors' Home in London.
MARION BICKERSTETH,
Formerly Hon. Sec. in London to the Home.

Enclosed is a letter from Mr. ISHII.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of 460 yen which is our share of the proceeds of the entertainment at Mr. Sonoda's Garden on Saturday, Oct. 10th. It was so very kind of you and those ladies and gentlemen who took part in the performance. My sincere thanks are due to the ladies and gentlemen who have taken interest in my work, and have done so much for it; and I deeply appreciate their goodness. The gift will help my work much and the encouragement given to me by such interest and help is very great indeed. Again thanking you all, and with my kind regards.

Yours sincerely,

R. ISHII.

ASSERTIONS WITHOUT PROOF.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—Your correspondent "Traveller" makes sweeping assertions in reference to the habitual interpolation of my personal opinions in the "Monthly Summaries of the Japanese Religious Press," but furnishes no proof of the truth of his allegations. As far as my memory serves me, Sir Oliver Lodge has not been discussed at all in any Summary written by me. What appeared in the Mail referring to Sir Oliver did not call in question his greatness as a scientist, but simply emphasized a fact known to all scholars, namely, that scientists are often most untrustworthy when dealing with questions far removed from their own special line of inquiry. A scientist who believes that he has had communication with spirits comes in for rough handling at the hands of other scientists nowadays. "Traveller" should read what Professor Ray Lankester and men like him have to say on the line taken up by Sir Oliver. But why drag Sir Oliver in at all in connection with the Summaries referred to?

"B." vs. MR. E. C. DAVIS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

In reply to your correspondent Mr. E. C. Davis, I may say at once that he is entirely mistaken in assuming that the purpose of my letters on the subject of the pari-mutuel were to asperse, or in any way disparage, the character or prestige of my fellow foreigners in Japan. I think the more fair-minded of them will be ready to recognize that I have never wilfully manifested any such motive. I have simply taken some facts for which some few foreigners of a certain type are responsible, and, without the slightest desire to be inaccurate or unjust, I have offered a few criticisms based on these facts. Until the facts can be got rid of, it is but fair that an honest opinion of them should be allowed. If a fair account of what is actually going on in support of race-track gambling and other vices, against the Japanese Government, is to leave a correspondent open to the unwarranted charge of "vilifying his own nationals," then all he can say is, so much the worse for the so-called "nationals," as they alone are responsible for the verdict.

Nor can one who has been accustomed to horses of all kinds, from childhood, accept your correspondent's gratuitous assumption of his ignorance as to what constitutes an animal of real value in the community. According to most of the participants in this discussion, the chief use of race horses is the opportunity they offer the gamblers for fleeing the defunct public. I may say further that I was fully aware of all that Mr. Davis volunteers as new information on the fancy prices commanded by race horses that have made their mark; but if this was intended as an argument in favour of the intrinsic value of the race-horse to the community, in the general sense in which a horse is valued, my contention, which he courteously calls "utter rubbish," is profound reason beside it. A racing yacht might likewise command a great sum of money, but how could that be regarded as having a practical bearing on the production or improvement of ships used in the regular service? Fighting cocks, and prize fighters, also command large sums of money, but the improvement, either of fowls or human physique, cannot be in the remotest sense due to the influence of cocks or boxers. Persons desiring arguments in support of an evil must be in great straits to find them, when such illogical theories and fancies have to be imposed on the patience of the public.

With regard to your correspondent's opinion that in England the public is in favour of race-track gambling, I may say that I am probably as familiar with the views of the best type of British citizen as most men, and I have never met with, or heard of, any man of moral importance, who publicly advocated gambling in any form; and I am still convinced of the truth of my contention that the best type of Englishman does not consider gambling a decent or proper way of acquiring money. The fact that English newspapers publish the race-track news is no more a proof that the vice of gambling is approved by the best citizens, than that the reports of thieving and embezzling operations are a proof that dishonesty is popular in England. The newspapers print the news of all that goes on, without reference to the character of the principles involved.

If, as your correspondent seems to admit, race-track gambling is to be included in the same moral category as the Yushikura, I am content to consider no further argument necessary to discredit it in the judgment of all respectable people. Where will you find a pure-minded man or woman who considers accommodations for the facility of the lowest vice, a necessity? In the same light must all right-minded persons regard the vice of gambling. In a moral sense there are no necessary evils. To admit the necessity of an evil is to preclude the duty of destroying it. To permit toleration of a vice by attempting to license it or to wink at it, is to encourage it. Neither common sense, nor the dictates of humanity, would tolerate in any civilized community, a doctor who attempted to live by feeding a disease to keep his hospital full of patients. What better are the brothel keeper and professional gambler? Just as it is obviously the duty of a government, and of all good citizens, to wipe out disease and give it no quarter, so it is in the case of vice, and all that goes to corrupt the morals of the community. As well banish thieves and robbers, procurers and murderers to isolated districts for the protection of society, as to adopt this method of minimising the gambling evil and other vices. How a man can preserve a moral conscience, or even a spark of manhood, and yet sanction the exposure of his sons and daughters to these vices, is rather a problem to explain. Is there a reputable foreigner in Japan to-day, who will unblushingly declare that, in his opinion, society ought to make provision for satisfying the vicious passions of the gambler, the libertine, and other parasites of a degenerate humanity? Evidently some people think there is; but I may be permitted to say that, by the grace of heaven, I am not one of them.

When I think of the numbers that have been ruined, even in this country, by gambling, for which vice certain foreigners are now demanding more ample and unrestricted provision, I am obliged to repeat that I am ashamed of some of my fellow-countrymen. I have at this moment in mind a broken-hearted mother in a sweet English home, whose son in this country not only gets away with a good monthly salary, but an even larger amount which he gets by begging deceitfully from his mother as well. Think of giving the smile of encouragement to a practice so fiendishly vicious as to turn a well-brought-up son into a creature that would treat his mother like that! I know of another young man entrusted by his father with a large amount in payment of a certain investment in shares. Later it was discovered that the money (nearly yen 100,000) had gone to the race-track gamblers. The effect upon the youth of Japan has been equally vicious. The race-tracks of this country, and indirectly those who support them, have been responsible for many a defalcation and suicide of the past year. Yet the maw of the inhuman monster is not satisfied, but is still a thirst for the blood of men. Who has a friend or a relative to throw in to stay momentarily this insatiable gnawing of vice at the vitals of our civilisation? Those who keep the mills going ought to be obliged to find the gist. I am well aware it is often little use to warn or to plead with those mad with the heartlessness and folly of vice; for their main mental activity appears to consist in gratifying an inordinate conceit that would teach its moral and spiritual betters as well in matters of law and politics, as in creed and conduct; but surely there are anon, at us enough enlightened and developed characters to take these unfortunates at their true value, and give them no opportunity of influence in the community. Now that the Japanese authorities have made up their minds to suffer these parasites no longer on the race-track, there might be some chance of extending the excellent vigilance to other haunts of the vicious, if all the respectable foreigners and Japanese would only come out and show their colours in loyal and manly support of the Government's action in suppressing the gamblers.

FOREIGNERS AND THE RACE-TRACK: WAS "B" MISTAKEN?

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the course of some remarks of mine on the subject of the pari-mutuel in a communication to the Japan Mail recently, I made critical reference to the presence of foreign ladies and gentlemen as participants with the Japanese in the betting at the Naro race-track on a certain occasion; and also to the alleged demand of the foreigners to be supplied with intoxicating liquors in spite of regulations to the contrary. I beg to say that the information on which these statements were made, appeared in a report of the said races, published in a Kobe paper a few days previously; and as this report met with no public contradiction I naturally assumed that it was correct, especially as I defended the action represented. I notice from letters appearing since in Kobe papers just to hand that the foreigners concerned, deny the truth of the reports made and of the incidents alleged to have taken place at Naro. I therefore sincerely apologize to those affected by my remarks, exceedingly regretting that I should have been led to use in illustration a report which now appears not to have been founded on fact. Needless to say I was not aware of the persons affected by my remarks, nor do I even know where the Naruo race track is, so there could have been nothing personal intended by my letter to the Japan Mail.

Yours, etc.,

"B."

WATER TUBE BOILERS AND THE AMERICAN FLEET.

The intelligent engineer of to-day has for some time past been convinced of the high efficiency of the water tube boiler for marine purposes but the unique performance of the battleships belonging to the American Fleet recently in Yokohama, 12 of which are fitted with water tube boilers, will finally clear away any doubt in the minds of those who may not be so well informed. No less than 8 of these fine vessels, namely: the flagship Connecticut, Minnesota, New Jersey, Louisiana, Nebraska, Kansas, Vermont and Rhode Island are fitted with Babcock and Wilcox Boilers and, as reported in the London Times of June 6th, 1908, speaking of the general performance of the vessels and the coal economy of the boilers, "honours were with the Connecticut class, which would proceed day after day at 10 knots with little variance in consumption. The five of this class could go from San Francisco to Manila without coaling." In addition to the 6,000,000 H.P. of Babcock and Wilcox land and marine type boilers installed on land, throughout the world, there are in use or on order at the present time nearly 1,300,000 horse-power of Babcock and Wilcox Marine Boilers for 266 vessels in all the branches of the Navy and Mercantile Marine; including 66 battleships and cruisers and 95 merchantmen.

The Babcock & Wilcox Marine Type Boiler although extensively used in the larger vessels of the Naval and Mercantile Marine is not suitable for torpedo boats, picket boats and such like small express type vessels. The boiler that is considered by the British Admiralty and others to be the best type for these express purposes is the White-Forster boiler, which has now got an excellent name not only because of what it is doing on torpedo boats but because the fast scout H.M.S. Mohawk gave such excellent results with it. The local office of the Babcock & Wilcox Co. is to be found at No. 23, Yokohama.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

ENGLISH PRINCIPAL OF TONGSHAN COLLEGE DISMISSED.

London, October 22.

Sir Edward Grey, replying in the House to Mr. W. Mitchell-Thompson, member for North-West Lanark, stated that Sir John Jordan, British Minister at Peking, is interviewing the Chinese authorities on behalf of the English Principal of the Tongshan Engineering College, who has been summarily dismissed. The ground of Sir John Jordan's intervention is that a notice of six months is usual in such cases. The matter is still under consideration.

DEMONSTRATION IN MONTENEGRO.

Later.

A warlike demonstration has taken place at Cetinje, two of the daughters of Prince Nicholas heading a procession bearing banners and singing war songs. The Austro-Hungarian Legation was guarded.

MARRIAGE OF KAISER'S SON.

The fourth son of the Kaiser has been married at Berlin to Princess Alexandra of Schleswig-Glücksburg.

THE BALKAN NEGOTIATIONS.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking in the House of Commons, said that the object of the communication made to the Powers is to secure their agreement to a programme which, without widening the area of disturbance, would settle the difficulties. Turkey being the most adversely affected it is trusted that the first object of the Powers will be to secure compensation for Turkey, to safeguard her interests and to strengthen the new regimen, which will have such beneficial results on Turkish administration.

Turco-Bulgarian negotiations are at a deadlock. Turkey is insisting that Bulgaria must capitalize the Eastern Rumelian tribute, which Bulgaria declines.

Sir Edward Grey, in the Commons, declared that the approval of Turkey is necessary to any programme laid before the Conference.

THE BULGARIAN ENVOYS.

London, October 23.

The Bulgarian envoys are returning to Sofia. No agreement has been arrived at in the matter of tribute, but it was arranged that a Turco-Bulgarian commission should settle the railway difficulty. Turkey estimates that the amount due from Bulgaria owing to the lapse of tribute is ten million pounds sterling.

AUSTRIA AND TURKEY.

Negotiations between Austria and Turkey are at a standstill. The latter desires the sanction of Europe to the annexation of Bosnia, while Austria wants a direct settlement.

SERVIAN DEMANDS.

London, October 24.

M. Novakovics, ex-Minister of the Servian Government, is going to Constantinople on a special mission from Servia. The latter demands an extension of her frontier all along the river Drina, thus connecting Servia with Montenegro.

PROPOSED SCOTTISH SHIP CANAL.

The corporation of Glasgow have decided to ask the Government to sanction the construction of a ship canal joining the Forth and the Clyde, thus linking together the North Sea and the Atlantic. Plans are already prepared.

AUSTRIAN PRESS ANGRY.

Later.

The Vienna press denounces Great Britain as responsible for the rupture of the negotiations between Turkey and Austria, and declares that Austria, supported by Germany, will attend the Conference only on the annexation of the provinces being recognized as an accomplished fact.

Fifty chests of artillery cartridges, partly destined for Servia, have been confiscated at Linz, in Austria.

CURZON'S OXFORD REFORM SCHEME.

Lord Curzon's Oxford reform scheme includes the opening of the degrees to women on the same basis as men.

RUSSIAN TROOPS CROSS THE PERSIAN FRONTIER.

October 25.

Reuter's agent at Constantinople has received information that Russian troops have crossed the Araxes and entered Azerbaijan. It is presumed that they intend to occupy Tabriz, where panic reigns.

GLASGOW UNIVERSITY.

The election for the Rectorship of Glasgow University has resulted as follows:—Curzon, 947 votes; Lloyd-George 935, Kier Hardie 122.

RUSSIA AND PERSIA.

London, October 26.

St. Petersburg.—It is denied that Russian forces are crossing the Persian border.

VIENNA STILL BITTER.

Vienna.—The press continues the bitterest anti-British campaign. The semi-official Wiener Zeitung goes the length of asserting that Britain has offered the Porte a loan of fifty millions and the support of her warships in the event of a re-actionary rising, on condition that she breaks off the Austrian negotiations and agrees to the Conference.

Austria attempted to renew direct negotiations with the Porte, but the Grand Vizier emphatically declined, declaring that Austria's demands were contrary to the Turkish constitution.

RUSSIA AND GERMANY.

M. Iswolsky has interviewed Herr von Schoen, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Prince Buelow, Chancellor, and has lunched with the Kaiser. It is officially announced that the Russo-German negotiations are proceeding in the most cordial manner.

SERVIA AND THE TSAR.

Later.

The Crown Prince of Servia goes to St. Petersburg to-day with King Peter's autograph letter to the Tsar.

THE CONFERENCE.

The Porte has now asked Germany to induce Austria to accept the Conference.

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS RELATIONS.

An influential meeting of commercial and political men has been held at St. Petersburg, at which it was decided to establish an Anglo-Russian Chamber of Commerce to co-operate with the newly formed section of the London chamber.

VENEZUELAN SEIZE BRITISH SCHOONER.

London, October 26.

Venezuelans have seized a British schooner en route to Trinidad, trade with which, by a decree of President Castro, had been practically prohibited. The passengers and crew were imprisoned.

MORE HEARST REVELATIONS.

Hearst has published more letters showing the political and financial relations of the Republican ex-Governor and ex-Attorney General of Pennsylvania with the Standard Oil Co., three of whose nominees, including Elkins, were appointed to supreme judgeships.

TAXATION OF FOREIGNERS IN JAPAN.

London, October 27.

Mr. M'Kinnon Wood (Glasgow) replying to Mr. (?) Nield (Ealing) in the House of Commons said that Japan is understood to be preparing an answer to the protest entered by Great Britain, France and Germany relative to the state and municipal income-tax, but no attempt will be made by Japan to evade the Hague award regarding the taxation of the foreign concessions: there has been merely a difference of opinion relative to the interpretation of the award.

THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE INTO PERSIA.

The Russian Foreign Office has informed the Ottoman Ambassador that Russia is moving troops into Azerbaijan, in accordance with an understanding with Great Britain, to restore order, after which they will retire. The advance to Tabriz will depend on the consular advices received from that place.

RUSSIA AND THE PERSIAN FRONTIER.

London, October 27.

Reuter's correspondent at Teheran telegraphs that there is no news of any actual violation of the Persian frontier, although two regiments of Cossacks have concentrated at Julfa and the Russians have threatened to advance if their interests at Tabriz are endangered.

THE CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

The contest in the Canadian elections has been rendered more acute by charges of wholesale corruption in connexion with trans-continental railways.

Later.

The Elections are an ample vindication of the Laurier administration. Laurier has been elected for another term of five years. The returns for Ottawa and East Quebec are incomplete. They indicate a majority of 50 against 66 in the previous election.

British Columbia, resenting the Oriental policy of the Laurier Cabinet, has elected four Oppositionists.

THE BALKANS.

Later.

The Balkan question continues complicated and precarious. Much depends upon Germany's advice to Austria. An official statement issued in Berlin says that Germany does not object to the principle of the Conference, but cannot assent to the discussion of proposals to which Austria objects. Subject to further negotiations, Germany and Austria will endeavour to reach a peaceful and just solution of the difficulty.

The British Foreign Office has issued a denial of the suggestion that the interruption of the Austro-Turkish negotiations was due to the advice or the influence of the British Government, whose opinion is that a direct arrangement would smooth the way to a general settlement, but that Turkey is the best judge of her own interests.

THE RUSSIAN MOVE ON THE PERSIAN FRONTIER.

Sir Edward Grey, replying to a question put by Mr. Dillon, said that Russia had moved 400 men to the frontier, but has ordered them not to cross unless Russian lives at Tabriz are in danger. He added that England agreed to Russia's right to claim what we claimed ourselves, namely, the right to protect the lives and property of her countrymen. He asked the House to admit that Russia had acted in conformity with the spirit of the Convention.

WORK FOR THE UNEMPLOYED.

London, October 28.

The London County Council has passed proposals for public works costing nearly a million sterling for the benefit of the unemployed.

DEATH SENTENCE FOR SEDITION.

The Criminal Court of Constantinople has sentenced to death two Turks for inciting to revolt against the Constitution. The public cheered the sentence, shouting "Long live Liberty!"

THE KAISER'S APOLOGY:

A REMARKABLE PRONOUNCEMENT.

London, October 28.

The Daily Telegraph publishes a remarkable interview with the Kaiser which it says has been communicated on unimpeachable authority.

The Kaiser said that he resented as a personal insult the constant misrepresentations of his unceasing offers of friendship by a section of British public opinion bent on treating him as the arch-enemy. Going back to the time of the South African War His Majesty said that his refusal to receive the Boer delegates caused the collapse of the effort of the Boers to secure European intervention. Moreover during the war he declined an invitation from France and Russia to join in humiliating England by intervening when the war was at its height during "Black Week," 1899. He replied sympathetically to a grief-stricken letter from Queen Victoria and, having ordered one of his officers to furnish an exact account of the numbers and positions of the opposing forces in South Africa, he marked out a plan of campaign which he submitted to the German General Staff and then despatched to England. It was a curious coincidence that the plan adopted by Lord Roberts was very much on the same lines.

He concluded by defending the necessity for a strong German Navy. Germany's interests were expanding and her commerce world-wide. Who could foresee the possibilities which the future has in store for the Far East, in days not so distant as some believe? Only Powers with great navies will be listened to with respect when the future of the Pacific comes to be solved. It may be that even England will be glad that Germany has a fleet, when they shall speak together on the same side in the great debates of the future.

THE CHINA ASSOCIATION.

London, October 28.

A dinner has been given by the China Association under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Scott. Among the guests were Sir Robert Hart, Mr. Gundry, General Gaselee, Sir Henry Blake, and Keswick. The Chairman paid a tribute to the Tientsin, Hongkong and Shanghai branches of the society, who did their utmost to further the views of those on the spot. Admiral Noel pointed out the great change which had taken place in China. He said that until railways were fully introduced there were great possibilities of danger owing to uprisings. He emphasized the importance of the Kowloon railway for developing the trade of Hongkong.

THE BALKANS.

An identical note has been sent by England, France and Russia to Serbia advising Bulgaria to send an envoy to Constantinople to arrange equitable compensation. Bulgaria has replied accepting the advice contained in the note, which included the disbandment of 75,000 reservists.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

SERBIA'S DEMANDS.

London, October 23.

A special telegram from Belgrade says that Serbia will insist on Turkey getting compensation for the annexation of the two provinces and for the bestowal of autonomy on them. If these demands are not conceded, every one states that war is inevitable.

REFORM ACTIVITY IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

London, October 23.

Constantinople.—The Reform Committee have published a manifesto declaring that they and the army represent the majority of the nation, and are prepared to crush the reactionaries if the latter attempt to oppose the new Liberal régime. The movement of troops from Salonika into the capital shows that the Committee are determined to supersede the Palace troops.

PRUSSIAN FINANCE.

Berlin.—The new Prussian finance proposals, necessitated by the requirement of ten million pounds of fresh revenue, coupled with the forthcoming demands of the Imperial Government for an additional twenty-five millions yearly, unpleasantly surprise the bourse and public. The proposed tax on trading profits of companies and corporations is greatly disliked. A Socialist organ has published startling details of the Government's proposals, which include a tax on gas and electricity. Owing to the pressure of the ticket tax and the economic depression the state railways show a deficit probably totalling 6,000,000 (?) marks.)

AUSTRIAN IRRITATION AGAINST ENGLAND.

October 24.

Vienna.—There is strong irritation against England, against whom the charge is brought of striving to prevent agreements between Turkey and Bulgaria and between Austria and Turkey. Baron Aehrenthal repeats that Austria does not object to the principle of a European Conference provided the Austrian standpoint is recognized in the programme, which should be precisely fixed beforehand.

LABOUR AND SOCIALISM IN FRANCE.

Paris, October 25.

The Chamber of Deputies has debated upon the revolutionary methods and ideas of the labour, leaders, with their attendant campaign of anti-militarism and anti-patriotism, which could best be stopped by dissolving the labour confederation or by internal reforms and counsels of moderation. The whole question is perilous for the Government. The Socialist Minister, M. Jaurès, says that Labour has effected a miracle in reconciling the majority of the dissident Republicans. He urged the danger of arresting the development of trade-unionism. The Chamber voted confidence in the Cabinet by a great majority.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

Bulgaria refuses to indemnify Turkey for the tribute hitherto paid. Turkey declines Austria's suggestion that she should acquiesce in the annexation of the provinces independently of the Conference.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

London, October 25.

New York.—A careful canvass by the Chicago Tribune gives Mr. Taft 295 votes and Mr. Bryan 188, and it is stated that the democratic managers do not find any great popular feeling in favor of Bryan. President Roosevelt has prevailed on every member of the Cabinet to go on the stump.

ENGLAND THE CULPRIT.

Berlin.—The suspension of the direct negotiations between Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria is most unwelcome. The result is largely attributed to British influence.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN.

Later.

The Novoe Vremya has an article which reiterates Russia's good-will towards Japan, but enumerates a long list of grievances which engender a doubt of Japanese friendship.

BRYAN CONFIDENT.

London, October 27.

New York.—Bryan is confident of victory. He made thirteen speeches on Monday and seventeen on Tuesday.

JAPANESE BONDS.

On the Stock Exchange Japanese Bonds are active and slightly higher.

DEBATE IN THE HOUSE.

There has been a debate in the House of Commons on the Government proposals for the relief of distress. The debate revealed that the Government had not provided the House, or apparently themselves, with a trustworthy estimate of the magnitude of the evil. The Labour leaders affirm that nearly £7,000,000 are urgently needed for relief. This is excessive. Nevertheless the country regards the Government's attitude as somewhat casual.

GERMANY, AUSTRIA AND THE BALKANS.

Later.

The Berlin Government has accepted the Near Eastern programme drawn up in London and Paris, with the exception of the points to which Austria objects. Austria will agree to enter the Conference provided that her annexation of the two provinces is accepted as an accomplished fact.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

London, October 28. Great Britain, France and Russia have presented an identic Note hoping that Bulgaria will refrain from mobilization and will agree to give Turkey equitable compensation. The Note advises Bulgaria to send an envoy to Constantinople. Italy and Germany approve of the Note.

EXHAUSTED PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

London, October 28. New York.—The presidential campaign seems to be becoming a mere physical endurance test. It is a painful spectacle to see Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan, exhausted, endeavouring to make themselves heard. Bryan endures the test the better.

THE CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

Ottawa.—The Liberals will have a majority of fifty in the new Parliament. The result has staggered the Conservatives, who, with the influence of four provincial governments in their favour, expected to sweep the country. All the Ministers were elected.

THE SHAH FAILS.

Teheran.—The Shah has failed to issue the promised electoral law.

(SPECIAL TO THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

The general Elections have taken place in Canada, resulting in the present Government under Sir Wilfrid Laurier being sustained by a large majority. The full details have not yet been received, but it is evident the anti-Japanese labour party, who have opposed with so much vehemence the Lemieux agreement, have not cut much of a figure in the campaign.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

THE BALKAN CRISIS:

AUSTRIAN CLAIM FOR DIRECT NEGOTIATION: THREATENED WITHDRAWAL.

London, October 22.

As the Austro-Hungarian Conference his Excellency M. Aehrenthal said that direct negotiations between Austria and Turkey were actually proceeding; that at the Conference of the Powers a clear statement would be submitted, and that in view of Austria's position, she had no objection to the opening of a Conference. From this explanation it was generally inferred that the negotiations between Austria and Turkey would have a favourable issue. But suddenly it was rumoured that the British Ambassador at Constantinople had protested against direct negotiations between Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria. Further, according to news from Sofia, the Turkish Representative and the Bulgarian Envoy have nearly reached an agreement as to the question between Turkey and Bulgaria.

October 23, p.m.

According to a statement published by the Austrian Government, intelligence from Constantinople showed that the negotiations with Turkey were progressing favourably and a successful issue was expected. Subsequent events showed that a difficulty had arisen on Turkey's side, but that Austria was adhering to her idea of direct negotiation, which course would conduce to the interests of Turkey and Bulgaria, as well as strengthening the resolve of the Powers to hold a conference.

October 24.

It is stated in Vienna that, relying on England's assistance, Turkey has announced to the Austrian Ambassador the suspension of the direct negotiations in order that the points under discussion may be submitted to the conference. Referring to this the Vienna papers attack England severely. They allege that she is not acting in the interests of peace, but is merely seeking to correct her previous errors of foreign policy and to recover her forfeited supremacy of influence. They add that if the various questions between Austria and Turkey are not to be settled by direct negotiation but are to be submitted to the Conference, Austria will not enter the latter. In that event Germany also will refuse to take part.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

From the Japanese Consul General at Ottawa. October 28.

In the general elections yesterday for members of the Canadian House of Representatives, the 221 successful candidates were divided as follow:—

Liberals.....	130
Conservative.....	83
Unattached.....	2
Uncertain.....	6

This is a great victory for the Government. With the exception of British Columbia, where the result is still uncertain, the country has returned all the members of the present Cabinet.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIA'S DESIRE FOR PEACE.

London, October 27.

St. Petersburg telegraphs that M. Iswolsky has come to an agreement with the German Government with reference to a conference of the Powers and with reference to the questions to be submitted to it. Russia has thus given unequivocal evidence of her desire to promote the cause of peace.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL RETURNS.

New York, October 21.

The agricultural returns of the United States this year are officially reported to be satisfactory. Nevertheless the actual yield is about 10 per cent. less than that of average years. An area of new land has been prepared for cultivation while the produce from the reclaimed land was comparatively small.

THE RECEPTION TO THE AMERICAN FLEET.

Further details with regards to the reception in Japan of the American Fleet have been published by the Herald and other newspapers in New York. They express profound satisfaction. The cloud which has overhung the relations of Japan and the United States for some time past is now cleared away. A great impression has been created among Americans by the report that the pupils of the various primary schools sang the American national anthem while welcoming the American visitors.

THE RECEPTION OF THE AMERICAN FLEET.

New York, October 22.

The New York Herald correspondent in Japan reports that the welcome accorded to the American officers and men by the Japanese is totally unprecedented. The enthusiasm of the Japanese in receiving the guests was so unexpected that the Americans could scarcely believe at first that it proceeded from the Japanese. But all misgivings have been completely dispelled.

SUFFRAGETTES PUNISHED.

The thirteen suffragettes who were arrested on the charge of attempting to rush into the House of Commons on the 13th inst. have been sentenced to imprisonment for terms ranging from three weeks to three months. They declare that they prefer jail to peace.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

New York, October 23.

To-day President Roosevelt and his staff had a conference in connexion with election matters. They decided to visit several States with a view to supporting Mr. Taft. On Oct. 26th they will proceed to those districts in which strong opposition is being experienced and where the Republican party is in disfavour, directing their efforts specially to Ohio.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

New York, October 26.

The election is close at hand, viz. on Nov. 3rd. On Oct. 26th, Messrs. Taft and Bryan made speeches, the competition becoming very keen. Their respective success seems to depend upon the number of ballots obtained in New York State.

San Francisco, October 26.

In connexion with a letter sent by President Roosevelt to Mr. Knox, a Senator, in which the former recommended Mr. Taft as a sincere supporter of the working men, Mr. Gomper the leader of the Labour Union, despatched a wildly worded note to the President saying that an opposer could not so suddenly become a friend, and blaming the attitude hitherto taken up by President Roosevelt and Mr. Taft. On the evening of Oct. 25th President Roosevelt wrote to a leader of the labour party in New York insisting that Mr. Taft had always been a friend of labour. There is no doubt that a majority of the labour men are supporting Mr. Bryan, a fact which gives rise to some anxiety among the Republicans.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg, October 26.

The envoy of Montenegro visited Mr. Titiaff, acting Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, on Oct. 25th and asked him to take strong measures at the proposed international conference, or otherwise to leave the present complication untouched. The Russian Minister replied that there was no difficulty in reaching a point where the interests of Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy, would agree. He added that there need be no pessimistic views as to the conference.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

New York, October 27.

Collating the various reports from newspapers and other sources, it is estimated that Mr. Taft will receive 241 votes and Mr. Bryan, 156. New York, however, is not included in this estimate.

THE EMPEROR'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION AND THE ELECTION CAMPAIGN.

Owing to the Presidential Election taking place on Nov. 3rd the celebration of the Emperor's Birthday is postponed. All the leading Japanese will hold a dinner party at the Carnegie Hall on Nov. 4th and Mr.

At 67 a Bluff, Yokohama, on November 5th, Prof. EDWIN EMERSON, aged 85 years and four months.

At Retz Buildings, No. 179 Bluff, on November 4th, EDITH M. LOWELL, of Seattle, Washington U.S.A.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE theme of the annual new year poem party at the Imperial Palace has been fixed to be Setchu-no-matsu, or cedars in snow. Poems from the public will be received not later than January 10th.

PRINCE ITO, Resident-General, will leave Oiso on Nov. 14th for Seoul.

ON Saturday morning snow fell in Sapporo. This is four days later than the first fall of last year.

MARQUIS GUICCIOLI, the new Italian Ambassador to the Imperial Japanese Court, arrived in Tokyo on Nov. 4th via Vladivostok.

A CASE of cholera is reported in Tokyo, the patient being a man living in Saruwaka-cho, Asakusa. He died on Oct. 31st.

THE Emperor of Japan has decorated Mr. J. D. Clark, the editor of the Shanghai Mercury, with the Fifth Order of the Rising Sun.

PROFESSOR Arthur Lloyd, of the Imperial University, Tokyo, who has been in England for some months on leave, returned to Tokyo on Nov. 4th.

ON the evening of Oct. 31st an explosion occurred in the third class waiting room at the Asahigawa Railway Station. Three passengers were injured.

THE contract for the new Union Church building has been placed with a Japanese builder for yen 44,000. The building is to be completed by Dec. 31st 1909.

EARLY on Wednesday morning fire occurred at the Ashio copper mine, destroying four buildings. The damage is estimated at yen 35,000. Two men were injured.

THE Denpo reports that Mr. S. Yoshiwara, formerly Vice-Minister for Home Affairs, will be appointed Vice-President of the Oriental Development Co. in Korea.

THE Itabashi Race Club will hold its autumn meeting on Nov. 14th, 15th and 16th. Some Tokyo papers report that the Club will not admit the public at the meeting.

PRINCE KANIN, who has been present at the opening ceremony of the Formosan Railway, left Kelung on Oct. 30th by the cruiser Anefawa for Saseho on his way to Tokyo.

THE Jiji says that the Mutabe coal mine which was under the control of some foreigners of Yokohama was transferred to the Mitsui Bishi Kaisha for yen 360,000, on Nov. 1st.

MR. H. TASAKA, a Progressist, representative for Ehime prefecture, who has been undergoing examination on a charge of fraud in the Hiroshima District Court, was committed for trial on Oct. 29th.

A LIGHTER (103 tons) laden with coal struck a rock and subsequently sank on the morning of Nov. 2nd in the neighbourhood of Hawafuri. The vessel was on her way from Wakamatsu to Osaka.

THE following telegram has been received at the United States Consulate-General in Yokohama from Mr. James F. Smith, Governor-General of the Philippines Islands: "Cholera yesterday two cases. Smith."

THE Coast Inspector's Office of the Chinese Customs gives notice that the Yangtze Cape Bell Buoy has been removed from its former position and has been placed off the steep-to bank to the southward of Yangtze Cape, to mark the entrance to Hang-chow Bay. From the Buoy Gutzlaff Lighthouse bears S. 76° E. (magnetic), distant 14.4 miles. The Buoy has been changed in colour from red and black vertical stripes to red.

THE committee who were recently appointed to make preparations for revising the Treaties will meet on Nov. 6th at the Foreign Office. Count Komura, Minister for Foreign Affairs, will preside and give an address.

A SEMI-ANNUAL general meeting of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha will be held about Nov. 25th. An interim dividend for the last half of this year—from May to October—will be declared at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum.

DURING eleven days ended Oct. 31st the foreign trade of Yokohama was: Exports, yen 8,355,258; and imports, yen 3,226,100. Exceeded in the exports was yen 5,129,158. During the same period, gold amounting to yen 50,000 was exported.

THE pheasant shooting season having commenced on Nov. 1st, a number of sportsmen, foreign and Japanese, proceeded to the country districts, especially, it is said, to the regions at the foot of Fuji where game is reported to be abundant this year.

A CHANGE has taken place in the control of the Tokyo Nichi Nichi Shinbun. Mr. Kato Takaki, the President, has resigned in connexion with his appointment as Ambassador to London; and Mr. Chikami Kiyo-omi, a member of the House of Peers, succeeds him.

MR. S. TSURUHARA, Director of the Bureau of General Affairs in the Residency-General, in Seoul, who recently resigned his post, will be raised by the Emperor to the House of Peers. The appointment will take place before the opening of the forthcoming session.

A TELEGRAM to the Asahi says that the crew of the fishing vessel To-o Maru who were recently seized by Russians and brought to Vladivostok, were released on bail on Oct. 31st. According to the crew, some of the fishermen on the Boso Maru have been shot by the Russians.

It is reported by the Asahi that a mine rich in molybdenum has been discovered in the mountainous district of Tonami, Toyama prefecture. Some days ago, a quantity of the ore was sent to the Tokyo College of Engineering for analysis, with very satisfactory results. The Tokyo paper adds that some foreigners in Kobe are endeavouring to obtain a concession for the mine.

FIRE occurred on the steamer Chosei Maru (703 gross tons) which arrived at Otaru on October 27th from Miyako, Iwate prefecture. The flames which originated in the engine room spread at once through the vessel owing to a strong wind. Both ship and cargo were severely damaged. The steamer is insured with the Kobe Marine Transportation Insurance Co. for yen 50,000. She belongs to T. Shinatani of Yamaguchi prefecture.

REV. HENRY F. WILLIAMS, editor of The Missionary and other publications of the Executive Committee of the Foreign Mission of the Presbyterian Church U.S. (Southern), sailed on the S.S. Korea from San Francisco, October 6th, for a visit to the mission fields in Korea, China and Japan. Mr. Williams will be absent six or seven months. His visit will include a number of the missions of other denominations and a thorough study of the foreign missionary enterprise in the countries named.

THE KAISER'S UTTERANCES.

Friday, October 30.

The Daily Telegraph's interview with the Emperor of Germany, which was sent across the wires by Reuter on the 28th inst., has been duplicated by the London correspondent of the Mainichi Dempo. One passage, however, is amplified, namely that relating to the Far East. This amplification makes the Kaiser say that, in view of the example set by Japan and in view of the high position won by her among the nations, it is not impossible that China may do likewise, in which case the Far Eastern problem could be solved only by countries possessing powerful naval forces. This additional account of His Majesty's utterances does not possess cardinal importance, for it was easy to read such a meaning into Reuter's version of the remarkable interview. The Mainichi Dempo's telegram winds up with the somewhat cryptic utterance that His Majesty's statements have produced a profound impression, but whether it is a favourable or an unfavourable impression, we are not told.

The Asahi Shimbun also has a lengthy telegram from London on the same absorbingly interesting topic. Special attention naturally centres upon the Kaiser's statements as to his attitude during the South-African War, and as to the ultimate destination of the great fleet that he is building. It will be observed that Reuter this morning quotes Paris—a somewhat vague source of information—as saying that the project of intervention in the South-African War was submitted really by the Kaiser himself to Russia and France, but that its acceptance was defeated owing to an appended proviso that adherence to the Frankfort Treaty must be a preliminary condition. As between these two versions, the public will have no hesitation in crediting the explicit utterance of the German Emperor in preference to unsubstantial rumours circulating from Paris. The Asahi's telegrams quote The Times as commenting in very sceptical terms on the Kaiser's explanation of his navy's ultimate purpose. The London journal asks how the Far Eastern destination of this great fleet is to be reconciled with the facts that its basis is placed in the Baltic Sea, and that the ships are remarkable for their small coaling capacity.

It is very disappointing to find that the authenticity of the alleged interview is practically acknowledged in Berlin. We had hoped that some modifications at least would have been announced. The average Englishman will be quite content to believe that the Kaiser sincerely desires to establish the best possible relations with Great Britain, but, on the other hand, it will certainly be felt that the relations of Europe with the Far East will not be promoted by this excessive frankness on the part of the German Emperor.

Saturday, October 31.

A telegram from Berlin to the Japan Post says that the interview published by the Daily Telegraph took place some six weeks ago; that it has no reference whatever to the conditions at present existing in Europe, and that the sole object of the Emperor was to remove false impressions prevailing in England. We (Japan Mail) do not imagine that any Englishman will doubt the Kaiser's sincerity in this matter, or question the earnestness of his desire to be friendly with England. But, on the other hand, it is not to be supposed that, when his Majesty draws aside the curtain and reveals the European picture of 10 years ago, the Occident can fail to be started.

The Japanese press, though Japan is so directly and intimately concerned, observes remarkable reticence with regard to the Kaiser's utterances. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun is one of the only two journals which comment editorially upon His Majesty's resurrection of the "Yellow Peril." The gist of what that journal says is that the Kaiser must be left in solitary possession of his disquieting anticipations as to troubles in the Far East. No Japanese can discern any symptoms of such trouble, or conceive any cause for it. Three, at any rate, of the great Powers of Europe have joined hands with Japan to preserve peace and to ensure civilised progress in Eastern Asia, and the United States, although she has not negotiated any distinct entente or convention in such a sense, may confidently be included in the powerful group pledged to that policy. Where then can any sign be detected of the peril against which His Majesty of Germany is hastening to construct an immense navy? Ordinary intelligence does not suffice to follow the flights of His Majesty's prescience, and, if Japan credits him, her only course would be to follow his example in naval expansion. But Japan does not share the Kaiser's apprehensions.

We presume that the other leading Japanese newspapers will sooner or later comment upon utterances which have such vital interest for this country, but they are wisely holding their peace at present.

The Jiji Shimpō refuses to believe that the Emperor of Germany has been rightly reported with regard to his declaration of purpose in building a huge fleet. Nobody can possibly discern in the present or future condition of the Far East any peril of such immense dimensions as to call for a display of Europe's united naval force. It is true that His Majesty was at one time influenced by the "Yellow Peril" nightmare, but since then he is understood to have arrived at a clearer perception of the situation, and it is scarcely conceivable that he should now have revived the antiquated scare. An explanation of His Majesty's ship-building programme, or as a device for inserting a wedge into the union between England and Japan, this conception would be unworthy of His Majesty's well known intelligence. On the whole, therefore, the Jiji prefers to think that the Kaiser has been misreported.

Monday, November 2.

Telegrams from London and America show that the agitation continues with reference to the Kaiser's somewhat unguarded utterances. His Majesty's words seem to have gravely offended the French, who strongly repudiate the responsibility of having suggested European interference in the South African War, and insist that it was Germany who took the initiative in that matter. All the critics seem to be agreed as to the unwisdom of reviving the "Yellow Peril" scare, which ought to have been completely exorcised by the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and by the unwritten but still evident entente between the United States and Japan. What is particularly regrettable is that His Majesty's words appear to have failed of their main purpose. If the interview makes one thing clear more than another, it is that the Kaiser's great motive in allowing his views to be published was to establish friendly relations between Germany and England. That motive ought surely to be palpable to anybody reading the interview with attention, and if the Kaiser has deliberately departed from the lines of cold prudence for the sake of winning a warm corner in Great Britain's heart, Englishmen should be the last people in the world to criticise his methods or question his sincerity. That is not the usual nature of Englishmen, and we have been hoping day by day that the telegraph would bring news of a generous re-action in English public opinion. It will come sooner or later, we entertain no doubt.

Tuesday, November 3.

It will probably be long before we hear the last of the now celebrated interview. So far as the Kaiser is concerned, it is now beginning to be clear that the document embodying his views was handed by His Majesty originally with the intention of having it subjected to the usual scrutiny, in order that so much of it as might seem expedient should be given publicity. The compilation of the document had its origin in a desire expressed by some unnamed Englishman direct to His Majesty in the sense that the relations between Germany and England might be greatly smoothed if the facts which the Emperor had made known from time to time to this Englishman were communicated to the British nation. The Kaiser in fact merely jotted down a number of points which seemed to him highly relevant and passed the paper on to his Chancellor, who in turn was expected to follow the usual routine. Prince Buelow, however, did not read the paper. He appears to have relied on the Foreign Office to exercise all the prudence dictated by so important an occasion, and he probably thought—though this is a mere conjecture of our own—that before the document assumed its final form prior to publication it would be once more brought under his own notice, and again placed before the Emperor for sanction. But the Foreign Office officials would seem to have formed a wrong conclusion. They thought that in view of the route which the document had taken to reach them, its form had been definitely decided by the highest authority, and they simply transmitted it for publication. The whole thing is most unfortunate, especially for the Emperor, who is thus made to figure in a very imprudent rôle. It may be that His Majesty has impressed upon his officials such a sense of his strong personality that they shrink from using their own wholesome discretion in any subject which appears to have received even remotely the cachet of Imperial approval. But if that be so, it is not a commendable state of things, and we can not be surprised that the German press is vehemently demanding complete reorganisation of the methods of the Foreign Office. The explanation which Prince Buelow will have to give to the Reichstag will be heard with very great interest, but we doubt whether the Kaiser will be able to do sufficient violence to his generous impulses to sacrifice any of his Ministers for a fault which after all may be described as excessive obedience. Meanwhile, however charitable a view one may disposed to take of the whole incident, it is certainly construable as a strong indictment of the danger of one-man rule, even though that man be a William the Second.

We are a little surprised at the line taken by The Times. If Reuter's telegrams be correct, the conclusion reached by the great journal is that the Emperor's utterances prove that the majority of the German people are not friendly to Great Britain, and that England must therefore put forth greater strength than ever to supply herself with an invincible navy. To us it seems that if the Kaiser's utterances show anything they show a sincere desire to clasp hands with England. With what other conceivable purpose can they have been made? At the same time we can not pretend to think that His Majesty's explanation of his ship-building motives is at all adequate. The danger against which his new navy is avowedly directed has not yet begun to have visible existence, unless, indeed, he regards Japan as the head and front of that danger, a conclusion which all must be very unwilling to admit, seeing that Japan is England's ally, and that the whole of her modern history entitles her to be regarded as a friend of the Occident, not as her enemy. Englishmen, therefore, may possibly be disposed to say "if that be all the explanation which His Majesty has to offer about the purpose of his navy, he has failed completely to reassure us." That is true, and we may here refer incidentally to the utterance of a local contemporary which virtually contends that no explanation whatever is necessary, and that the same reasons which impel Britain to build a large fleet of Dreadnoughts must fairly be supposed to be equally cogent in Germany's case. But that is precisely what they are not. Germany's mercantile marine does not hold incomparably the leading place in every sea from pole to pole, nor are Germany's dominions scattered over every part of the inhabitable globe. She has no apparent practical cause for the colossal effort she is now making, and until such a cause can be shown, the only alternative conclusion is decidedly calculated to make Englishmen uneasy.

Wednesday, November 4.

The telegrams this morning from Berlin add very little to public knowledge of the incident which has caused so much disturbance in Europe. Confirmation is now given to the fact that the interview was a compilation of statements made by the Kaiser to various Englishmen at various times. These Englishmen, believing that a good effect might be produced between their country and Germany by publishing His Majesty's remarks, embodied them in a document, which they submitted to the Emperor, soliciting his approval for its publication. The Kaiser assented in general terms, and passed the document on to the Chancellor, doubtless relying on the discretion of the latter and of the Foreign Office officials to fully expurgate all mischievous details. But it happened that at the time Prince Buelow was absorbed in the financial question, and moreover the document, being written in English, required some time to decipher. The Prince accordingly passed it on to the Foreign Office, having doubtless the same faith in the latter Department's scrutiny that had been reposed in his own by the Kaiser. But unhappily the Foreign Office misapprehended the function to be performed by it. It believed that historical accuracy alone was to be ascertained, and thus by a series of what may be called accidents, supplemented by some perfunctoriness, the collection of conversations found its way into print as an authorised interview. The German nation can not be expected to be satisfied with an explanation which shows that the working of the administrative machine does not guarantee the country against any serious mishaps. No one appears to doubt that the explanation is perfectly sincere, but the telegrams indicate that the unfavourable impression has been deepened rather than erased by this detail of facts. It is evident that someone will have to be sacrificed, and one can not but sympathise with the difficult position in which the Emperor finds himself placed. From Japan's point of view, the fact that the "Yellow Peril" still bulks largely in the Kaiser's imagination is most unfortunately confirmed.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Saturday, October 31.

Inasmuch as a few more hours will place us in possession of the final result of the great contest now raging in the United States, telegrams giving particulars of the fight have only pallid interest. An estimate has been published as to the constitution of the new House of Representatives. It puts the Republican supporters at 227 and the Democrats at 164. This is said to have greatly inspired the Republicans. Moreover, in New York State, where some anxiety was felt, it is now confidently alleged that Mr. Taft will secure 170,000 votes against 125,000 polled for Mr. Hughes. Meanwhile Mr. Bryan seems to be as vigorous as ever. He is continuing his campaign in Ohio, and his latest move is to declare that Mr. Rockefeller has definitely identified himself with the Republican Party, thus proving that, if Mr. Taft be elected, the interests of the country will be sacrificed on the altar of the Trusts. One regrets to learn that accusations of bribery and corruption are freely uttered, but, after all, charges of this kind always play a part in every presidential campaign. Mr. Taft has been unable to endure the strain of continuous appearances on the platform, and he has ceased his speechifying in New York State, not, however, before great results were achieved.

Tuesday, November 3.

As the crucial moment approaches, confidence in the success of Mr. Taft seems to increase. The betting is now 4 to 1 in his favour. New York and Ohio are believed to be secure, and the only States in doubt are Maryland, Virginia and Indiana, though even there a Republican majority is expected. Doubtless before these words are published something definite about the result of the election will be known in Japan.

A curious feature of the contest is that Mr. Rockefeller's recommendation in Mr. Taft's favour is construed as a deliberate attempt on the part of the oil King to impair the prospects of the Republican candidate. In a word, Mr. Rockefeller's commendations are supposed to bear even in his own eyes the character of condemnations. That is surely suspicion run riot.

Wednesday, November 4.

San Francisco telegraphs that although the Democrats and Republicans are similarly confident as to the results of the election, the forecast of impartial observers is that Mr. Taft is certain of 244 votes, against 177 for Mr. Bryan. Of the remaining 60 odd votes it is believed that at least one-half will be cast for the Republican candidate, whose election is therefore a foregone conclusion.

Thursday, November 5.

The Asahi's telegrams from New York say that Mr. Taft obtained 320 votes in the Electoral College and Mr. Bryan 163. In New York and Ohio the Republican candidate's success was very marked. San Francisco's figures, however, differ slightly from the above: they assign to Mr. Taft 325 and to Mr. Bryan 150. In Chicago the Republican candidate's majority is said to have been 30,000. In the States of Indiana and Iowa there is believed to have been equal voting for each candidate. The records in the State of Minnesota are said to be 80,000, Pennsylvania 250,000 and Illinois 170,000 for Mr. Taft. Ohio is believed to have gone Republican but Nebraska Democrat. Mr. Hughes, the Republican candidate for the Governorship of New York City, is believed to have obtained a majority of 57,000. It is thought that in the sequel of the elections for Congress there will be no special change in the composition of the House.

Of course there has not yet been time for the Japanese newspapers to express themselves editorially at any length, but there are already sufficient indications that they will be unanimous in rejoicing over the election of Mr. Taft, who won golden opinions by his speeches and his demeanour when he visited Japan the year before last. It is evidently a widespread conviction that the election of the Republican candidate will contribute materially to promote the friendship between Japan and the United States. In business circles the opinion of the leaders, as quoted by the Hochi Shimbun, is that the result of the election will give a further impetus to trade prosperity. Japanese producers had been somewhat uneasy lest the Democratic candidate should be successful, a result which would have probably been followed by tariff changes calculated to embarrass trade more or less. But now that this apprehension is dispelled, a further development of the revival which set in some months ago may confidently be expected. The Business Men of the Pacific Slope now in Japan are quoted as saying that, had Mr. Bryan been elected after his long separation from administrative affairs, it would have been impossible to predict what radical legislation might have ensued, but now that the choice of the country has fallen on Mr. Taft, things may be expected to move smoothly in an uninterrupted groove.

Count Okuma is quoted by the Hochi Shimbun as speaking in very eulogistic terms of Mr. Bryan, whose highly moral life the Count contrasts with that of the majority of Japanese statesmen, greatly to the latter's disadvantage. According to the Count's reckoning, Mr. Bryan may still look forward to 20 or 25 years of strong political life, and it is quite on the cards that he may win his way to the Presidential chair in the future, but with that forecast even Mr. Bryan's greatest admirers will hardly agree.

A correspondent, writing over his own signature, sends us for publication a letter intended to unveil the anonymity of "B," whose recent communication in these columns caused some natural excitement in Kobe. This new correspondent, who speaks in a powerful strain, indicates by name a gentleman whom he believes to be the writer of the "B" letters and asks us to publish the identification. We are not at liberty to do so. It is our plain duty to respect the anonymity of every correspondent until he himself relieves us from the obligation of doing so, and we should not be discharging that duty did we make our columns the medium for conjectural identifications, whether correct or incorrect. This is a matter of elementary journalistic canons. So far as the Japan Mail is concerned, we can not assist to unveil a correspondent who has entrusted to our good faith the obligation of concealing his identity.

CHINA.

Friday, October 30.

With regard to the Hankow-Szechuan Railway, it is alleged that in spite of the vehement opposition of the Chinese merchants at Hankow, the Peking Government has decided to raise a loan of two million sterling in London for the construction of the line. The transaction will be undertaken in the name of the Railway Bureau, not in that of the Bureau of Posts and Telegraphs.

A telegram to the Asahi Shimbun from Hankow says that about one half of the reclamation works of the Japanese settlement at that place will be concluded in November, and that the corresponding area of land will be allotted at the close of the year, on payment of one fourth of the upset price. The remaining work will be completed in December, and the allotments relating to that portion will be made early next year.

An Imperial decree has been issued with reference to the Yeh-Han Railway (Canton-Hankow). The Throne appoints Chang Chih-tung to be overseer-in-chief of this important work, and directs him to report at once every symptom of opposition or obstruction on the part of local officials or inhabitants. The chief impression conveyed by the language of the Decree is that the difficulties besetting the path of railway construction in China are very great.

Amoy experienced on a large scale the calamity which befel Yokohama on the eve of the arrival of the Atlantic Fleet. In Yokohama's case the calamity was confined to a heavy deluge of rain which more or less injured the decorations, but Amoy was visited by something like a hurricane, which wrought so much havoc that the work of timely restoration proved very difficult. It is not to be understood that there were two separate storms. What happened simply was that the hurricane which the Atlantic Fleet encountered on the 14th, 15th and 16th inst., broke with full force over Amoy, but did not touch Yokohama with more than a fringe of rain. Great damage seems to have been wrought at Amoy, and many of the decorations, which had been prepared at the cost of weeks of labour, were destroyed, and had either to be abandoned altogether or to be resuscitated within a fortnight.

We are now in receipt of Shanghai papers down to the 23rd instant, and we do not find in them the remotest reference to the panic which furnished material for the Mainichi Dempo's telegrams published in Tokyo on the morning of the 21st, and therefore wired from Shanghai on the 20th. It is scarcely conceivable that had such a state of affairs existed in a settlement which lives by commerce, the leading journal of the place would have maintained absolute silence. It seems to be a fair inference, therefore, that the stories wired to Tokyo were gross exaggerations. They can not be dismissed as mere canards, but they are constructed out of material much too flimsy to attract serious attention. The view subsequently formulated by a leading Japanese merchant, whom we quoted, was evidently much nearer the truth.

Saturday, October 31.

The autumn manoeuvres in Hupeh Province are to involve 11,000 troops of all arms and over 1,000 horses. Preparations were to have been completed by the 31st ultimo.

The proposal made by the Viceroy of Chili that a foreign loan of 10 million yen should be effected for the purpose of furnishing China with a navy is said to have come up for consideration in Peking. The telegram (Jiji Shimpō) adds that the question seems to have taken the military authorities by surprise, from which we infer that the plan had been matured in naval circles without reference to the Army.

It is stated, also on the authority of the Jiji Shimpō's Peking correspondent, that the Russian Government has announced its intention of withdrawing all its Legation guards from Peking, and also the small detachment of troops stationed in Tientsin. The Legation Guard numbers only some 80 men, and the Tientsin detachment, 10.

The competition among the overland carriers between the East and the West is evidently growing very keen. Two of the competitors labour under the disadvantage of having to include a sea-voyage in their itineraries. The Russian route is the most handicapped in this respect, for, although passengers coming by it to Japan need make only the short voyage between Vladivostok and Tsuruga, yet, if they are bound for China, they have either to resume their sea voyage from Japan, or to extend it direct to Shanghai from the northern terminus of the line. The South Manchuria Railway is better situated so far as people bound for China are concerned, because their water-voyage is limited to the narrow sea between Tairen and Foochow. On the other hand, these passengers have to re-entrain at Harbin, and if Japan be their destination, they must make the somewhat lengthy over-sea trip from Tairen to Shimonoseki. The Chinese line is the best situated of all three, for a passenger can leave Peking by train and reach Europe travelling overland through the whole distance. The Japanese recently established a service of fine steamers between Tairen and Foochow, and in point of time are able to offer a more tempting schedule than that of their Russian competitors. It now appears, however, that the Chinese are waking up to the potentialities of their position. They are about to arrange so that people entraining at Hankow will be able to reach Harbin in four days via Peking, Shanghai and Mukden. This route will beat anything that Japan or Russia can offer in point of time, but of course there will be two changes, one at Mukden and one at Chanchung. The Japanese will not be total sufferers by this competition, for passengers coming by the Chinese route will have to make use of the Mukden-Chanchung section of the South Manchuria Railway. The over-land connexions between the Far East and the Far West are certainly developing rapidly.

On the 28th ultimo an examination was held in Peking of military cadets educated in foreign countries. Fifty-six students who had received instruction in Japan, and 12 who had received instruction in Germany, passed the examination successfully. Among the Japanese, twenty were passed with honours, and among the German students, one. Passing with honours in this case means that the successful candidate is immediately gazetted with the rank of lieutenant, whereas passing without such distinction brings with it the rank of ensign only.

One of the Mongolian Potentates, by name Cha Sakato, has met with condign punishment from Peking owing to his having borrowed a million roubles from Russia. He has been reduced in rank, and deprived of a portion of his territory. This Prince is the one who visited Japan some time ago. The Chinese Government has further announced that if any Mongolian Prince hereafter borrows money from a foreign country without the permission of Peking, he shall be deprived of his territory altogether.

It is telegraphed—Nichi Nichi Shimbun—that the present Viceroy of Mukden has memorialized the Throne urging the withdrawal of the permit granted some years ago by Viceroy Tsen to Messrs. Bush of Newchwang and some Japanese subjects for the exploitation of gold and copper-mines in the valley of the Yalu. Mr. Hsu assigns, as a reason for this measure, that Viceroy Tsen had not sufficient authority to grant such a license. It will naturally be asked after this how much reliance can be placed on permits obtained from Chinese high officials. Tsen was Governor-General in Mukden at the time that he gave the concession, and the question whether he exceeded or did not exceed his legitimate powers in doing so was not one for an English firm in Newchwang or for its Japanese partners to consider.

It appears that there has been some ambiguity hitherto about the exact position of the Russo-Chinese frontier between the province of Kilin and the Amur region. The general belief has been that this boundary was clearly marked by the courses of the Amur and the Sungari, the right bank of the former and the left bank of the latter being Chinese territory, whereas the opposite banks were Russian. A delimitation commission has been now appointed, however.

Shanghai sends a curious piece of intelligence. It is to the effect that the United States Government has decided to establish a big college at Wei-hsien in the province of Shantung. Accommodation is to be provided for 3,000 students, and there will be 36 professors, all Americans. The cost of this great enterprise is put at 4 million dollars gold, but on what conceivable pretext Washington is making such a colossal incursion into the realm of foreign education, there is no suggestion. We suspect some big mistake somewhere.

Monday, November 2.

The recently received news is confirmed that an arrangement has been effected between China and Japan with regard to the lines of telegraph established by the Japanese troops in Manchuria outside the limits of the railway zones. The lines within the zones, as we understand the matter, have never been in dispute, being regarded as appendages of the railway. But the lines outside the zones belong to a different category, and it was obviously more consistent with wise economics that these lines should be utilised for the convenience of local communications than that they should be removed merely because they were Japanese. It is now stated that China has agreed to purchase the lines at a reasonable price, and that orders have been issued to the Custom Houses at Dairen and Shanghai to furnish half a million yen each for the purpose.

Wednesday, November 4.

The payment of the Boxer indemnity continues to be a source of embarrassment to China. Owing to the greatly reduced gold price of silver, the contributions from the various provinces on account of the indemnity are said to show a shortage of something like 3 million dollars, and the Shanghai Taotai has memorialized the Throne in the sense that the contribution should be increased. It is not inconceivable that the Boxer affair has contributed materially to the development of the rights-recovery spirit. Probably not one

In every 1,000 units of the Chinese population knew anything about the Boxers, still less sympathised with their programme, until the knowledge was imparted in the objectionable form of a demand for a large annual payment by way of indemnity. It may be assumed that what the Chinese thought was, "this is a payment on account of foreign extortion, not on account of Chinese misconduct." Yet what was to be done, after all?

Accounts are now published of the projected establishment of a large educational institution in Shantung by Germany and China in coöperation. Berlin is to give a sum of 350,000 marks for establishment expenses, and will contribute thereafter 75,000 marks yearly for purposes of maintenance, while China will give 40,000 marks each year for the same object. The subjects taught at the college will be law and administration, mining, manufacturing and medicine. We apprehend that this is the institution which was erroneously spoken of, some time ago, as an American enterprise.

Shanghai telegraphs to the Asahi Shimbun that Tibet is the scene of some disturbance. The only details given are that the priests have taken up arms against the Chinese troops, and have inflicted a defeat upon them. A force has been ordered to the scene from Szchuan, and Peking has addressed to the Lama an instruction calling upon him to order the immediate disbandment of the priests. But the Lama has replied protesting his inability to take any such step, and there the matters rests.

Thursday, November 5.

It is expected that the Dalai Lama will leave Peking on the 20th inst. On the fête day of the Empress Dowager he is said to have received a most gracious message from the Throne, together with a gift of 10,000 taels a year for life. The message urged that on his return to Tibet he should do everything in his power to cement friendly relations between the two countries. This, we presume, is the closing chapter of what has certainly been a very interesting episode in Chinese history.

A Chinese correspondent of the Peking and Tientsin Times, writing under date of October 24th, says:—

The Dalai Lama and his unique and picturesque retinue are still distributed in many Buddha temples. It is said that the party will leave for Lhasa via Shansi, Kansu and Mongolia at the beginning of November next. Under special orders of the Empress-Dowager the sum of Tls. 10,000 is put aside every day to meet the Chief Pontiff's daily expenses in the capital by the Comptroller General of the Imperial Household and not from the Imperial Exchequer; apparently the visit of the Dalai Lama is at the expense of the Manchu Throne.

It is unknown why the Empress Dowager takes such a step in regard to the troublesome visitor whose four years' wanderings in China have cost the Throne Tls. 5,000,000.

It is stated that the Japanese Government has consented to a proposal made by the Chinese Government to send the following numbers of students every year to be educated at the institutions indicated: namely, the First High School 50; the High Normal School 25; the High Commercial School of Yamaguchi 25; the High Industrial School of Tokyo 40; and the Medical School of Chiba 10, the total being 150. This will involve enlargement of the various schools at outlays of from 1,000 to 4,000 yen, a part, at any rate of which is to be disbursed by China.

The residence of Baron Ozaki in Yotsuya, Tokyo, was visited by a burglar on the morning of Nov. 1st. A lot of clothing valued at about yen 500 was stolen.

KOREA.

Saturday, October 31.

There has been another outbreak of disturbance on Kanghwa Island, which lies in the Chemulpo offing. Some months ago a party of insurgents on this Island opened fire on a Japanese vessel, and a force was sent by which drastic measures were taken to restore order. It was then assumed that the trouble had been eradicated. But there has now been another outbreak. About a hundred insurgents have made their appearance, and have behaved like common bandits, burning houses and stealing property. Preparations are in progress to deal effectually with these disturbers of the peace.

Sunday, November 1.

Lieutenant-General Okasaki, Commander of the 13th Division, has just returned from Korea. His troops are about to be relieved after an unusually long period of foreign service. This is the Division which took part in the invasion of Saghalien in the summer of 1905, and, as the men must then have been serving with the Colours for at least a year, it follows that they have been continuously on over-sea duty for more than 4 years. The Lieut.-General says that their work in Korea has been of a very arduous character. The Division was broken up into no less than 270 detachments for service against the insurgents in as many places, and while this service was attended with much hardship and no little danger, it had brought small credit, and the soldiers on their return are not likely to receive any welcome comparable with that extended to their comrades who fought in Manchuria for a much shorter time. The General adds that the men enjoyed excellent health from first to last, and that they became genuine old campaigners, well versed in all sanitary arrangements and notably skilful in measures of first aid to the wounded. As for the insurgents, this officer regards the majority of them as little better than bandits, nor does he think that they have been by any means eradicated. Dealing with them in the field is a matter of the greatest difficulty, for they have so terrorised the peaceful inhabitants that the latter will not give information as to their whereabouts, and thus it is often impossible to distinguish between rebels and ordinary folks. The 6th Division from Kumamoto, which replaces the 13th, will find it no easy task to step into the latter's shoes, as it will lack experience of the different conditions prevailing. A great deal of the work will be in future be done by the Assistant Gendarmes of whom there are 4000 in all, the proportion being 3 Japanese to 7 Koreans. Although the pay of the Korean gendarmes is only from 5 to 8 yen monthly, any number of them are ready to serve.

Monday, November 2.

On the 31st ultimo a detachment of Japanese gendarmes under the command of second Lieutenant Koyama, landed on the Island of Kanghwa for the purpose of dealing with the insurgents who recently made their appearance there. The final result of the expedition is not yet known, but it is evident that the gendarmes found the task very difficult. Favoured by the topographical features, the insurgents—or bandits as they should apparently be called—offered a desperate resistance, and some loss is said to have been inflicted on the gendarmes. When the latest news was despatched, the gendarmes were engaged in an attack on 60 insurgents who were encamped on a hill called Pehlienhwa.

Captain Takeda of the Japanese Navy, Superintendent of the Coal Briquette Factory at Tokuyama, was recently sent to examine the coal mines at Pyongyang. He is said to have reported most favourably on the prospects of the enterprise, which in his opinion will constitute an important source of fuel both for the Navy and the railways.

Wednesday, November 4.

The former proprietor of the Dai Han Mai-II Shimpō, Mr. E. T. Bethell, who was sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment some time ago by a British tribunal for publishing matter calculated to incite to violence, has instituted legal proceedings against the N.-C. Daily News on account of an alleged libel which appeared in the latter's columns on the 31st of last August. Counsel for the Plaintiff applied for and obtained 10 days' suspension in order to prepare pleadings, as his client was absent in Korea. There was a long discussion as to whether Mr. Bethell should be required to give security for costs, he not being a resident of the place where the suit was instituted. The Judge, who evidently had from the first no doubt about the matter, heard with exemplary patience everything urged by Mr. Bethell's counsel, and then ordered security to the amount of 500 yen to be lodged.

Thursday, November 5.

The Kanghwa insurgents are reported to have made their escape. When we last heard of them they were encamped on a hill surrounded by Japanese gendarmes, but it is said that they managed to make good their flight under cover of darkness.

Major-General Muda, attended by his staff, is reported to have visited the families of the men who recently met with an unfortunate fate, being mistaken by the Japanese for rebels. There were 21 households comprising 82 members. To each head of a household a solatium of 600 yen was paid, and to each member of the household 100 yen.

THE ROYAL FAMILY OF ENGLAND.

We can not too strongly protest against an article in the Japan Advertiser which must be described as grossly insulting to the King of England and to the late Queen also. The material used for the article is taken, in part at any rate, from the columns of the New York Sun, but instead of condemning the latter's writing as gratuitously offensive, the editor of the Japan Advertiser reconstructs it and gives to it all the credit conferred by large type and prominent position. Thus there is not even the excuse of frank reproduction. This community consists mainly of Englishmen, and something is due, even from an American journal, to their feelings of loyalty for a revered Sovereign and to their affectionate remembrance of a Queen whom the whole world honoured throughout her long life of simple-hearted devotion to the cause of duty. There is not and there never has been in any of the Settlements in Japan a British journal which would have suffered itself to do violence to the feelings of the American section of the residents by writing of the President of the United States as the Japan Advertiser has written of Queen Victoria and King Edward.

The new Italian Ambassador to the Imperial Japanese Court left Vladivostok on Nov. 1st for Tsuruga on his way to Tokyo.

THE CHIENTAO FRACAS.

A detailed account is now published by the Asahi Shimbun with reference to the recent disturbance at Chutzchieh in Chientao. The details differ in some respects from the account previously received over the wires. What we now learn is that the first trouble arose in connexion with a conflagration at the house of a Chinese resident. A Japanese mounted gendarme, by name Endo, hastened to the scene, and was directing operations for the extinction of the fire, when he was set upon by some Chinese coolies and fell from his horse. In the act of falling—so the story runs—he struck with his whip the head of a Chinese soldier, and the latter, assisted by two or three of his comrades, at once attacked Endo and endeavoured to carry him off under arrest. The gendarme resisted as best he could, and while this struggle was in progress an officer of gendarmes, Captain Okumura, arrived upon the scene, and endeavoured to make it clear to the Chinese that they were exceeding their powers in attempting to arrest a Japanese subject. By this time a considerable number of Chinese soldiers and constables had assembled, and Capt. Okumura judged it expedient to remove Endo from the scene as quickly as possible. This act exasperated the Chinese so much that they attacked the Japanese vehemently, and severely wounded a private of gendarmes, named Sonoi. It then became necessary for the Japanese to use their pistols, and at the sight of firearms the Chinese dispersed. This happened on the afternoon of the 11th, and the following afternoon saw another fracas at a different place in the neighbourhood of Hoiryong. It was here that the Chinese soldiers and constables endeavoured forcibly to interrupt the building of an addition to a Chinese house, which had been rented from its owner to serve as a temporary barracks for Japanese gendarmes. The idea of the Chinese was that the Japanese had no right to erect any kind of edifice on the left bank of the Tumen River. As to the exact particulars of the struggle which ensued, the accounts are somewhat confusing, but they agree in attributing the first use of force to the Chinese and in representing the Japanese as having acted solely in self-defence. One of the Chinese assailants was killed and two were wounded. Subsequently to the struggle the Chinese officers seem to have behaved with praiseworthy moderation. They repaired to the Japanese local headquarters and entered into an agreement containing drastic provisions against the recurrence of such trouble. It is added that when the matter was submitted to the chief Chinese official in Chientao, he decided that the Japanese had acted in legitimate self-defence, and that there must be no renewed attempt to obstruct the building operations of the gendarmes.

In the columns of the N.-C. Daily News we find the following account of the recent Chientao fracas between Japanese gendarmes and Chinese soldiers and police, the story being described as the Chinese version:—

It appears that on or about October 14 a number of Japanese soldiers were sent across the river on the border of Chientao into Chinese territory to erect certain police or military outposts against which the Chinese authorities protested. The Japanese military, however, paid no heed to their remonstrances and continued on their work. The Chinese authorities then sent petty officers and interpreters to the scene to tell the Japanese that such erections on Chinese territory could not be permitted; whereupon they were at once mauled and had their epaulettes, etc. taken away from them. They reported the matter to their authorities, who at once sent other men to the scene to tell the Japanese that such high-handed action on their part could not be tolerated, when the Japanese petty officer said that their building the outpost was by order of the Japanese officers, and, if the Chinese interfered, they would be shot.

The following day Chinese police were sent down with a view of impressing upon the Japanese that building military outposts on Chinese soil could not be permitted. These men went down by cart and were unarmed. As soon, however, as they got out of their carts a rain of bullets showered on them, wounding the majority (8) of them. The Japanese then carried the wounded across the river to their hospital, where two of them have already expired, and others are said to be dying.

It appears from the report of the survivors that the evening before, the Japanese had dug trenches, etc. about the place preparatory to meeting attacks from the Chinese. It cannot, therefore, be said that the action of the Japanese was not premeditated.

The case is now in the hands of the Waiwupu, which has proposed to the Japanese Minister that the affair should be investigated by a joint commission, which the Japanese authorities are not inclined to entertain.

In view of what had happened in Chientao, concludes the account, Reuter's message of October 16, to the effect that Chinese troops had fired on a Japanese frontier post, when several hours' fighting followed, and that the Japanese Commander had demanded satisfaction, etc., could only be accepted as a result of gross misrepresentation.

The radical difference between the above account and the Japanese version is that the latter represents the Chinese as having been the first to resort to force. We have as yet no means of judging between the two stories, but the Chinese statement leaves something to be desired in more than one respect. It alleges that after two altercations between the Japanese builders, as the one hand, and emissaries from the Chinese local authorities, on the other, and after the Japanese had given warning that any one interfering with their work would be shot, a third detachment of Chinese constables was despatched to the scene, "unarmed." Surely such procedure showed not merely temerity but even recklessness? Then, again, if, as the Chinese allege, the Japanese twice refused to stop the building work at the instance of the local authorities, and if they pleaded the authority of their officers' orders for persevering, why was not a communication addressed to these officers? Did the Chinese seriously imagine that any injunction delivered by them to a force of Japanese gendarmes would be respected and obeyed by the latter in preference to the instructions of their own commanding officers? As for a joint commission of investigation, such a recourse is altogether unusual in cases of the kind. Each side holds its own court of inquiry and acts upon the facts elicited.

RUDENESS: UNEXAMPLED IN JAPAN.

The very last thing that one expects in Japan is a breach of courtesy, and an act of downright brutal rudeness on the part of an educated man is something so rare as to be well nigh incredible. The Yorozu Choho, however, has been guilty of such an act. Angered, apparently, because invitations have not been extended to any of its staff in connexion with the welcome given by Japan to the business-men of the Pacific Slope, the Tokyo journal announces that the visitors are of such a low class and so unacquainted with the rules of etiquette as to preclude their introduction to journalists, who would lay bare the truth. A newspaper writing such an article about men who are the honoured guests of its country is about as fit to deliver judgments on the rules of etiquette as a deaf mute is to discuss harmonies. We should not allude to the incident at all had not the article in the Yorozu been translated into the columns of the Japan Chronicle and carefully reproduced by the Japan Herald, so that it has thus been brought to the notice of the foreign residents and of the men whom it attacks. Neither the translating nor the reproducing journal thinks of stating what they must well know to be the truth, namely, that the Yorozu Choho is about as true a mirror of Japanese sentiment and Japanese opinion as Captain Hobson is of American opinion and American sentiment, and that the extreme boorishness of such writing is resented more strongly by the Japanese themselves than by those against whom it is directed. The merchants of the Pacific Slope are too level-headed to weigh the disappointed vapouring of a solitary yellow journal against the appreciative greetings of a nation.

Everything has its comical side, and in this instance the Japan Chronicle furnishes material for amusement. A few days ago, we wrote an article ridiculing the views ventilated by Captain Hobson in the columns of the Cosmopolitan Review, views which, when propounded from the platform, had been laughed to scorn by his own countrymen. The Japan Chronicle at once attacked us for calling attention to such a matter on the eve of the arrival of the Atlantic Fleet. But almost before the ink of that attack was dry, this same Japan Chronicle translates and drags into the light of foreign publicity the grossly offensive discourtesies perpetrated by the Yorozu Choho against its country's guests at the very moment when they are sojourning in Kyoto, and therefore at the very moment when these rude utterances are sure to attract their attention. Such delightfully reckless flagrancy in practising the diametrical opposite of what one preaches, and in performing the trick publicly, is quite refreshing.

NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENCE.

We are surprised to find that the Kobe Herald, to which journal "B." seems to have written without complying with the requirement of sending his true name and address, asks whether "B." employs a similar secrecy when he writes to the Japan Mail? It must be assumed that this question is propounded in jest, for our Kobe contemporary is well aware that unless "B." had satisfied that requirement of good faith, his letter would never have found a place in these columns.

Yes, we agree with the Kobe Herald that a remarkable deluge of remarkable letters have recently appeared in the Japan Mail. It is our invariable rule to extend the hospitality of our columns to all bona fide correspondents whose letters satisfy the ordinary requirements of morality and who write with a legitimate purpose. Whether a correspondent attacks this journal or whatever be his purpose, we think it only just that he should enjoy the right of appealing to the public just as fully as the editor of a newspaper enjoys that right. "W. D.'s" attack upon the press of the world was a case in point. We do not endorse the attack. Indeed we think that it errs in the direction of extravagance. But its severest strictures are not infrequently justified, and if such opinions be held by a responsible writer, it is better that they should be ventilated—better from every point of view. Nothing is wholesomer than to hear occasionally what others think of us.

THE BOYCOTT.

Tuesday, November 3.

Quite a serious affair is reported by telegram from Hongkong. It took place on the 1st inst. A large mob of Chinese, who are supposed to have arrived in the colony from Canton, attacked a number of Chinese stores, and wrecked some 6 of them. The cause assigned is indignation on the part of the Cantonese roughs because certain Hongkong merchants showed a disposition to abandon the anti-Japanese boycott, and had begun to deal freely in Japanese products. The police turned out in force—200 are spoken of—and attacked the rioters, but the latter seem to have offered resistance, for several of them are reported to have been injured. According to one account 200 arrests were made; according to another, 96. It is stated that further disturbance is apprehended, but we gather that the violence was not directed at all against Japanese life or property. The Hongkong Government may be expected to deal drastically with these disturbers of the peace, and possibly an opportunity may be afforded for giving a death-blow to the boycott. Everything will depend upon the attitude of the Chinese authorities. If they are sincerely desirous, as they profess to be, of putting an end to a most unjust state of affairs, they can now give a proof of their sincerity. Their plea has hitherto been that the boycott was conducted in such a quiet orderly manner as to forbid official interference.

A telegram on this subject from Shanghai puts the number of arrests at 150.

Wednesday, November 4.

There are no further details this morning as to the riotous conduct of a party of Chinese subjects in Hongkong, but little doubt seems to be entertained that the disturbance was organised by the promoters of the anti-Japanese boycott. Canton telegraphs to Nagasaki that the boycott has been revived, and that all persons violating its vetoes will be severely dealt with. The immediate consequence is that the Chinese merchants at Nagasaki, Kobe and Yokohama are reported to be suspending all exports of Japanese products.

It certainly does seem to be time that the Chinese Government should interfere in this matter. It is absolutely incredible that the Canton authorities are quite impotent to bring about a change. They cannot force people to buy or to sell any special class of goods, but they certainly can use their influence to demonstrate to the leaders of the boycott that such conduct is mischievous and unwarranted. If the principal promoters of the boycott can not be discovered, the inference is that the Chinese officials are singularly incompetent. It may be confidently inferred that no Western Power would have tamely endured such treatment for so long a time.

Thursday, November 5.

It is very plain from the telegrams reaching Tokyo that the Chinese roughs in Canton and Hongkong have succeeded in re-fanning into vigorous flame the embers of the anti-Japanese feeling which were supposed to have nearly subsided. They call themselves by a name which may be translated "The Do or Die Union," and they have posted and circulated warnings to the effect that anyone dealing in Japanese products will receive the chastisement of heaven; in other words, will be assassinated. Two of the Canton newspapers are assisting this agitation by spreading a rumour that Japanese marine products are poisonous. Naturally a panic prevails among the dealers in such merchandise.

Mr. Tang Shaoh, speaking at a banquet given in his honour by the Chinese merchants in Yokohama, deprecated the boycott as injurious to the interests of both countries, and urged that a more liberal view should be taken by the tradesmen of China.

The Japanese newspapers preserve strict editorial silence in the face of these outrages. Possibly they may speak plainly at a future date, but it would appear that they are at present determined to say nothing which might aggravate the situation. We can not too strongly praise this commendable reticence, but we presume, of course, that the Tokyo Government is taking due steps. The arrest of over 100 of the rioters ought to serve as an opportunity for demonstrating the strong measures with which the authorities are prepared to visit these lawless acts of coercion. The Cantonese are proverbially turbulent folks, yet it is hard to believe that if the Peking Government were really in earnest, it could not accomplish something in the way of putting an end to this boycott.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

Saturday, October 31.

Berlin telegraphs to the Japan Post in the sense that the highest authorities in Germany are deprecating any attempt to interpret the Kaiser's recent interview as in any sense hostile to Japan. These exponents of His Majesty's views seem to take the line that the mutual disputes among the Powers of Europe may so weaken them as to have the effect of incapacitating them for vigorous prosecution of the peaceful competition in Eastern Asia. It is added that the Kaiser harbours the best wishes for the continuance of Japan's progress and expansion.

If the above be correct, and, considering its source, we are warranted in believing it, the conclusion is that His Majesty's apprehensions centre upon China. But China's development into a Power capable of menacing Europe in any shape or form seems to be such an infinitely remote event that this analysis does not at all account for the precipitancy shown by His Majesty in building up a great German fleet. Moreover, there is the obvious argument that if the Kaiser trusts Japan and is gratified by her development, which indeed we do not at all doubt, he should regard her as a principal bulwark against the very danger which he professes to apprehend in the Far East.

The Münich Dempo has a telegram from London saying that the German press is much embarrassed by His Majesty's utterances.

Happily the Balkan complication seems to be unravelling itself. Bulgaria is reported to have replied to the Powers in the sense that she will gladly revoke the order for mobilization if Turkey agrees to recognise her independence, and that she will give due consideration to the question of indemnity.

Monday, November 2.

Monday is always a dies non, comparatively speaking, in the matter of telegraphic news from Europe, the day of rest being really as well as nominally observed by news-agents in the West. They begin to wire the opening week's intelligence on Monday morning, which means Monday evening in the Orient. Thus we have little intelligence to-day (Monday) about the Balkan crisis, and that little is not reassuring. It appears that the Bosnians are up in arms; that they are determined to oppose annexation by Austria, and that 500 rounds of ammunition have been served out to each soldier. Austria would make short work of Bosnia were only this little State in question, but all Europe is interested in preventing the drawing of the sword, for that would probably mean an extensive conflagration. A meeting is said to be about to take place between the Emperors of Germany and Austria, and, as both these Sovereigns will leave nothing undone to preserve the peace, there is still good hope of an amicable settlement.

Thursday, November 5.

The telegraph this morning says that the Crown Prince of Serbia returned from St. Petersburg on the 3rd instant, having received assurances of Russia's indirect support provided that Serbia abstains from all acts of violence. It is said that the Russian people sincerely sympathise with the difficult position in which Serbia finds herself. The Duma's President has addressed to the President of the Servian House a message urging that a peaceful settlement of the present complication will conduce greatly to the welfare of the Slav race. This message is regarded as a true reflection of Russian public opinion.

The latest news says that the Russian note presented at Vienna is regarded as of distinctly unfriendly tone, doubtless because Russia persists in her refusal to recognise the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina without the endorsement of a European Conference. If that attitude be maintained by Russia—who doubtless has England and France at her back—a very difficult situation will be created.

The Münich Dempo has a telegram which indicates that military preparations are being vigorously pushed on by Austria and Serbia. The former Power is massing troops on one side of the Danube and the latter is building forts on the other. The Vienna Government has forbidden the passage of contraband of war across the frontier.

"THE JAPAN FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC MONTHLY."

The editor of this useful magazine has now contrived to bring the publication nearly up to date, for the September number reaches the public at the end of October. Still one more effort to save another month would add very largely to the value. This additional expedition is promised from November, and moreover, the price is now reduced to 12 yen annually, or 1.25 yen per single copy. The number now before us contains, among other valuable matter, a very solid article on the "Financial Policy of the New Cabinet." During the past few weeks the public has been placed so fully au courant of this subject that little further information is needed, but there had not yet been any synopsis so clear and illuminating as that of Mr. Mochizuki, and it also bears the cachet of authority. We would also draw particular attention to an interesting translation of a report sent by the Japanese Consul at Hankow. He takes an emphatically optimistic view of the future of Chinese trade in general and of Hankow in particular. Indeed he thinks that the day is not far distant when Hankow will outstrip Shanghai as an commercial mart.

THE UNITED STATES SQUADRON AT AMOY.

Saturday, October 31.

The United States Squadron reached Amoy safely on the 30th ultimo and was met in the offing by three—some accounts say four—Chinese cruisers which conducted the vessels to their anchorages. The weather is said to have been perfect, but as yet no details are furnished as to the reception given to the Squadron by the Chinese. One telegram speaks of the belief prevalent among the lower orders of Amoy to the effect that the American ships had come to coöperate with the Chinese in recovering the island of Formosa from Japan.

Sunday, November 1.

Amoy does not seem to have made any very striking effort to welcome the Second Squadron of the United States Atlantic Fleet. According to telegrams received by the Asahi Shimbun and the Mainichi Shimbun, there were neither illuminations, decorations nor fireworks on the Chinese side. An entertainment was given in the evening to the officers and men of the Squadron, but the place chosen for the purpose was so far from the town that nothing like a popular demonstration could be held, and, although six or seven members of the Reception Committee endeavoured to make things pleasant for the officers, the duty of entertaining the men was left entirely to servants. San Francisco telegraphs that the Chinese authorities, apprehending an insurrection of some kind, refrained from any demonstration on a large scale, and that in the popular eye the chief interest attaching to the American ships centered upon the supposition that their visit to Amoy was preparatory to an attack upon the Japanese in Formosa. Very likely all this is more or less exaggerated. We may fairly assume that the Chinese local authorities did everything in their power to make things pleasant for their American visitors, but, after all, Amoy could only be a weak anti-climax to Tokyo.

Monday, November 2.

The telegraph continues to speak in a disparatory tone of the steps taken by the Chinese at Amoy to welcome the Second Squadron of the United States Atlantic Fleet. San Francisco wires that the Peking authorities declare themselves ignorant of the coming of the Squadron; but that is obviously a canard, for the intended visit has long been spoken of, and the measures taken by Peking to welcome the Squadron were planned some time ago. Other telegrams sent direct from Amoy describe the ceremonies as decidedly disappointing. There appears to have been a tolerably general entertainment on the 31st ultimo, when 3000 blue-jackets were given lunch by the local authorities on shore. The great trouble appears to have been that the people themselves took no part in the festivities. According to one cablegram, this feature was to be rectified by imparting an international character to the torch-light procession which would have taken place in any circumstances on the 3rd inst., in celebration of the Empress Dowager's fête day. For the rest, however, the most convivial part of the entertaining is said to have been done by the Americans themselves. We should be disposed to discount these telegrams in view of the fact that they emanate mainly from Japanese sources, which are naturally not interested in imparting an over-cordial aspect to such celebrations. But this correction can not be very largely applied, inasmuch as the American correspondents with the Squadron confirm the Japanese version. Of course no special significance attaches to the incidents. The Chinese do not enthuse easily, and nothing is to be said except that the local officials did not take sufficiently thorough steps to enlist popular interest. All experience goes to show that intelligence from the outer world percolates very slowly into the dense mass of Chinese humanity, and probably 7 out of every 10 Amoy citizens never gave a second thought to the coming of the Squadron until Admiral Emory's ships appeared in the offing.

Wednesday, November 4.

The celebrations at Amoy on account of the coming of the Second Squadron of the American Atlantic Fleet are described as having been eminently satisfactory on the 2nd inst. The Chinese entertained some 3,000 of the officers and men, and the foreign residents organised a garden party on a large scale. The latter is said to have been permeated by a spirit of extreme cordiality, and to have been thoroughly enjoyed. Unfortunately rain interfered to some extent. Nevertheless the reception at Amoy does not appear to have proved particularly grateful to the Americans. San Francisco telegrams speak of the great contrast between Japan's lavish hospitality and the somewhat cool demeanour of the Peking Government as illustrated by the doings at Amoy.

THE PALACE.

The doings at the Palace on the 3rd inst. are reported to have been more than ordinarily brilliant, in consideration of the fact that it was His Majesty's 57th Birthday. All the Princes of the blood from the Prince Imperial downwards were present, as were also the Elder Statesmen, the foreign Representatives, the Ministers of State and all the other high dignitaries. After the audience a banquet was given. His Majesty, in proposing the healths of the Potentates and Chief Magistrates of the world, expressed his pleasure at being able to state that Japan's relations with foreign countries were eminently friendly. Marquis Katsura, on behalf of the Japanese section of the guests, thanked His Majesty for his gracious words and wished him long life and prosperity. His Excellency the British Ambassador replied with corresponding brevity in the name of the foreign Corps Diplomatique and the countries they represented. He thanked the Emperor for the gracious reception given that day, and he wished that His Majesty's reign might be prolonged for many years, to the happiness and welfare of his subjects.

The military part of the festivities was of more than usual magnitude. Fully 20,000 troops of all arms mustered on the Aoyama parade ground at 9 a.m. under the command of General Viscount Kawamura, and, the weather being very fine, this great array of men presented a splendid spectacle.

Telegrams reaching Tokyo showed that the day was celebrated with great éclat at a number of places so great as to vividly suggest the growth of Japan's influence in the Far East. Among them are mentioned Hongkong, Shanghai, Amoy, Peking, Seoul, Pyongyang, Gensan, Fusan, Antung, Mukden, Dairen, Changchun, etc.

A graceful incident of the celebrations was a visit paid by the Vice-Commander and 40 officers of the Second Squadron of the United States Atlantic Fleet to the Japanese Consulate at Amoy, to offer their felicitations on the occasion, and to renew their expressions of appreciation for the hearty and graceful welcome given to them and their comrades while in Japan.

MAJOR-GENERAL AOKI.

This officer, who has hitherto been serving in Peking as commander of the Japanese troops in Pehchili, has just returned to Tokyo, and has made some interesting remarks to a member of the Hochi Shimbun's staff. With regard to the withdrawal of the foreign troops from North China, the General draws attention to a point not hitherto generally noticed. He says that, owing to the depreciation of silver during the past two years, great distress has prevailed among the trading classes in Tientsin, and a large number of people have come to rely solely for means of subsistence upon the traffic that they were able to carry on among the foreign troops. When these are withdrawn, one of the props which have hitherto saved the situation from complete collapse will be removed. The General speaks in terms of unmeasured criticism with respect to the methods of Japan's policy in China. He considers that Japanese diplomats have altogether lost sight of what ought to be the great purpose of their policy, namely, to cement really friendly relations with the neighbouring Empire. The intercourse between Japan and China has a record unequalled elsewhere. The two countries have been on terms of greater or less intimacy for something like 15 or 16 centuries, and nothing ought to be further from Japan's thoughts than to adopt a pettifoggery meticulous attitude in dealing with her traditional friend and geographical neighbour. China's aspirations are perfectly legitimate. It is natural that she should seek to assert her sovereignty within her own dominions, and it is even more natural that she should desire to build and operate her own railways, considering the political uses to which this agent of civilization has been applied by the aggressive ambition of foreign countries. Japan ought to sympathise with China in all these aspirations and should assist her reasonable hopes, instead of opposing them by crabbed reference to the letter of this law or the text of that protocol. General Aoki is evidently a firm believer in China's future as a great world-power. He says that in four years' time she will have an army of 36 Divisions; that she is now busily engaged training officers, and that when she has achieved her present purposes she will be a powerful military State. The spirit now animating her is often erroneously attributed to the influence of the Russo-Japanese War. That is a misapprehension. It is a spirit which has been steadily growing for many years back, and it has to be reckoned with as a permanent factor of the Far Eastern situation, not as a transient ebullition.

RAILWAYS IN MANCHURIA.

The Fakumen Railway is evidently destined not to be the only difficult problem with regard to the establishment of lines of communication in Manchuria. It is now stated that the project for a road from Hailung-cheng to Kaiyuan has nearly matured. This scheme was mooted in 1906 by a Liaoyang capitalist, but he failed to enlist sufficient coöperation. Subsequently a German firm in Shanghai is said to have been approached, and to have agreed to furnish funds on condition that the contract for building the line and equipping it was given to the firm. This method of raising funds seems also to have been abandoned, for some reason not stated, and the project has now been revived by its originator, the Liaoyang capitalist, who is said to have obtained a promise of subscriptions amounting to one million yen, namely, one sixth part of the total cost of the line, which is 150 miles long. The Viceroy of Manchuria is reported to have approved the scheme, and there is thus a possibility of its becoming a joint official and private enterprise. In that event the question assumes considerable importance from the Japanese point of view. Hailung, Kilin, Changchun and Kaiyuan constitute the four angles of a parallelogram having for its westerly side the South Manchuria Railway. Kaiyuan lies to the north of Mukden and to the east of Fakumen, and, if a railway were built joining Hailung with Kaiyuan, it would only have to be extended to Fakumen to become the great carrying agent of the richest region of Manchuria. If further a road were built from Hailung to Kilin, it would draw practically all the traffic from Kilin province to the Kaiyuan-Fakumen route, and the proposed Sino-Japanese line from Kilin to Changchun would become more or less a dead letter. The fact is that, if all interests are to be fairly consulted, the system of railways in Manchuria must be planned on a co-operative basis. If the Chinese are to be allowed to mature their present schemes, the South Manchuria Railway would become practically an isolated line, all the roads which ought to serve as its feeders being in the hands of the Chinese, who are naturally anxious to reduce to a minimum the actual value of the Japanese road.

RUSSIA.

From St. Petersburg telegrams to the Asahi Shinbun we gather that the opinion in favour of closing Vladivostok is paramount in Russia to-day. Vladivostok has hitherto shared with Hongkong the honour of being one of the only two free ports in the Far East, and in putting an end to that phase of its career the Russian Government seems to be bent on sacrificing local interests to those of the railway. So soon as protective duties are levied upon goods entering overseas, the Russian colonists in Siberia will have to depend upon the mother country for supplies, and will have to get them overland.

It seems not improbable that the opening of the new Duma, which took place on the 28th inst. will be followed by some severe struggles between the Conservatives and the Constitutional Democrats. The first question which the latter have raised in the House is a charge of alleged illegal action on the part of the police in dispersing a meeting which was held to consider the problem of the Near East. The Opposition, headed by M. Makrakoff, came together in one of the cathedrals on the 27th inst. and unanimously adopted a resolution in favour of placing this question in the forefront of the attack upon the Government. As yet we have no information as to the proceedings of the meeting which was dispersed.

There is a rumour cabled to the same newspaper that M. Iswolsky's resignation is imminent. The reason assigned is a statement said to have been made by him to a representative of the Novoe Vremya in Berlin. That paper quoted his Excellency as saying that he intended to submit to the verdict of the people through the Duma the policy adopted by the Government in the Near-Eastern complication. This utterance evoked strong applause from the Constitutional Liberals, but it greatly offended the Conservative Party, who hold that a policy which has once received the approval of the Sovereign can not be submitted for popular endorsement. The telegram says that in consequence of this indiscretion M. Iswolsky, on his return from Berlin to St. Petersburg, was met at the station by two Secretaries only. We sincerely hope in the interest of European peace that these rumours may prove baseless.

THE BRITISH SOCIETY.

On the 20th instant there was held in the Nobles' Club, Tokyo, a meeting of Japanese and British subjects interested in the organization of a Society which shall be to the Japanese capital what the Japan Society is to London. There were present about 60 out of the 118 promoters, and among the Japanese were several who had received their education at Oxford, Cambridge or other well known seats of British learning. Count Hayashi was called to the chair by acclamation, and the meeting proceeded at once to consider the draft regulations. Some discussion arose as to the appellation of the Society, several being in favour of introducing a word which would show clearly that the Japanese members were an integral part of the personnel. The term "British Society," though it is a good deal better than the flagrantly ungrammatical "Japan Society," which has had such a successful career in England, leaves much to be desired, but no suitable substitute presented itself. The British Ambassador proposed the "Japanese and British Society," but he withdrew the proposition in view of an explanation from the chair that the matter had been fully discussed already, and that the name "British Society" had been deliberately chosen with the intention of approximating as closely as possible to the sister Society in London. It was decided that the office of the Society shall be in Tokyo; that there shall be 21 members of Council; that there shall be an annual dinner, the first to be held towards the close of November for the direct purpose of bidding farewell to Mr. T. Kato, who proceeds to London as Ambassador in December, and that the subscription shall be 5 yen annually, the remainder of the current year being reckoned as a whole season in order to recoup the establishment outlays. Finally, by a unanimous and very demonstrative vote, the British Ambassador was elected to be President. We should add that the declared object of the Society is "to encourage the study of things English, and also to promote cordial relations between the peoples of Great Britain and Japan."

A JAPANESE ABROAD.

Dr. Matsuoka, a Managing Director of the South Manchuria Railway, having just returned from the Occident, has some interesting observations to record. Europe, he says, came to the conclusion, some time ago, that Japan was about to follow in Italy's steps financially. The programme of the Katsura Cabinet corrected this impression, and the change of view was accentuated by the news of the postponement of the Exhibition. But although a much more favourable estimate now prevails, the time has not yet come when foreign capital will pour into Japan freely. The Professor speaks in a very pessimistic strain about France. The spirit of economy, he thinks, has gained excessive dominion. Men think only of saving money and putting it out to interest. The upper and middle classes prefer to be without children rather than to pay the cost of supporting them, and the lower classes would rather lose Cochinchina than have to bear further imposts for the sake of keeping it. In Germany things are different. There the instinct of progress and the determination not to be beaten are all-powerful. Manufacturing industries are prosecuted with the keenest zeal, and technical education is imparted in the most thorough manner, so that even factory hands are full of intelligent capacity. Japanese artificers would do well to repair to Germany for instruction. Nevertheless signs of luxury and extravagance having made themselves apparent, the Kaiser issued an admonitory Rescript, and as this preceded by one month the similar Edict issued by the Mikado, the Germans think that the latter followed the former's example. This traveller concludes by saying that things are no longer as they used to be in London. A few years ago, one could buy an article with full confidence in getting a good English production, but Germans have now invaded even the English metropolis, and one has to be careful or one gets an inferior German imitation. Such is Professor Matsuoka's view. But the Germans go their way with distended pockets, which is the main thing.

THE BUSINESS MEN OF THE PACIFIC SLOPE.

A farewell banquet was given by the five principal Chambers of Commerce of Japan to the Business-men of the Pacific Slope in the Nippon Club, Tokyo, on the evening of the 3rd inst. Mr. Nakano proposed the health of the guests and Mr. Dohrmann, representing the guests, replied that he and his fellow-visitors would never forget the over-flowing friendship which had marked their reception in Japan, and had been a worthy accompaniment of the scenic charms of this beautiful country. When they returned to their homes they would be able to tell their countrymen that on the other side of the Pacific Ocean there lived a people eminently progressive in the best sense, and absolutely friendly to the American nation.

What may be regarded, we presume, as the final banquet to the Business Men of the Pacific Slope was given by the members of the Japan Traders Association at the Nihonbashi Club on the evening of the 4th inst. Japanese newspapers report that the Business Men were represented by fourteen and their entertainers by about 150. Several speeches were delivered. They are not reported at any length by our Tokyo contemporaries, and we can only say that they were characterised by all the courtesy and compliments usual on such occasions. One of the American merchants suggested the advisability of establishing a credit agency, which should serve as a court of arbitration in all business disputes that might hereafter arise.

The Choshun Shimpō of Changchun, Manchuria, has been suppressed by the Japanese Governor-General of Kwantung Province on a charge of having published an article injurious to the public peace. Its proprietor and staff were ordered to leave Manchuria.

DR. SVEN HEDIN.

The celebrated Swedish traveller has arrived at Shanghai, where he was met by Mr. Hori, one of the principal priests of the Hongwan Temple, who was specially despatched by Count Otani for the purpose. He is expected to arrive in Japan on the 14th inst., and preparations to welcome him at Nagasaki have been entrusted to the Faculty of the Normal School there. At Yokohama he will be received by Prof. Omori, on behalf of the Tokyo Geographical Society, which has taken a leading part in inviting him to Japan. It appears that the Society was somewhat perplexed as to the appellation which should be given to this distinguished traveller. The ordinary term used in Japan to designate adventurous travellers is gankensha; but this appellation carries with it a certain sense of reckless adventure, and the Society, at the instance of Prof. Shiga, decided that it would be more becoming to employ the word tosa, which may be translated "explorer." It is expected that the great traveller will give some four or five lectures at the Tokyo University and two or three in Kyoto. One of these lectures will be open to the general public.

THE BIRTHDAY BALL.

The Birthday Ball at the official residence of the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs was as usual a brilliant success. Much admiration was elicited by the decorations—schemes of chrysanthemums and cherry blossoms, representing spring and autumn—and special praise is due to the arrangements, which were quite exceptionally perfect, so that the going and coming of the great crowd of carriages and other vehicles always present on this occasion took place with absolute smoothness from first to last. Count Komura and his daughter received the guests, among whom were Their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Arisugawa, Prince Takeda, Princess Fushimi, Princess Kuni, and Princess Nashimoto. Supper was served in a spacious annex at 11 o'clock and dancing was kept up until 1 a.m. The Maharajah of Sikkim was among those present.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, October 30.

With reference to the Government's declared intention of wiping out the whole of the National Debt of Japan in the course of the next 27 years, the Mainichi Dempo says that the first step of this programme will be taken next year, when the Treasury will redeem 50 million yen worth of bonds as well as 800,000 yen worth of the Formosan Loan. From the year 1909 the redemption will be increased by 2½ million yen annually, namely, the interest at 5 per cent. on the sum redeemed in the previous year.

The Government's intention of changing the present system of telegraphic charges is naturally creating a great deal of discussion. There is no denying the fact that the root of the trouble is the Treasury's inability or unwillingness to devote capital to this eminently profitable enterprise. People desiring to have telephones at once installed in their dwellings or offices have already paid in advance to the Government sums totalling 1½ million yen, and yet it is only to-day that applications received 8 years ago are on the verge of being practically successful. It is said to be the intention of the Department of Communications to devote 4 million yen in the next Budget to purposes of telephone expansion, but out of that total 1½ millions represent payments made by the public in advance; half a million represents the additional income which the proposed new system of charges is expected to bring, and thus the actual sum put up by the Treasury will be only 2 millions. As to this new system, there are a great many complaints and a great many suggestions, but it seems to us that nothing could be more reasonable than to make people pay in the exact ratio of the number of times they employ their instruments daily. It is said that out of the 35,000 telephones installed in Tokyo, 40 per cent. are not used more than once or twice daily, and the owners of the other 60 per cent. are perpetually occupying the attention of the exchanges.

On the 29th inst. 65 representatives of the fishermen engaged in Russian waters held a meeting in Tokyo under the presidency of Captain Gunji and decided to form a union for the purposes of their enterprise. The most interesting feature of the meeting was an address delivered by Mr. Doki, Head of the Marine Products Bureau in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. He urged strongly upon his hearers the vital necessity of adhering strictly to all Russian rules and regulations operative in northern waters.

Saturday, October 31.

With regard to the Government's programme of paying back the National Debts in 27 years, the Shogyo Shimpo observes that the sum to be redeemed in the second year of the programme will be 52½ million yen and in the fifth year it will be 61 millions. The total paid off in the first decade will be 620 millions. The same paper makes the important statement that the railway bonds are included in this programme. It is not true, then, that these bonds will remain unredeemed for five years, as several publicists have supposed. Of course it will be understood that, when we speak of railway bonds, we refer to the price of the nationalized roads. Other bonds issued on account of railway construction or improvement belong to a different category. The Government, in pledging itself not to float any fresh loans, has expressly excluded loans on account of railway construction, for which profitable purpose some 200 millions will be required during the next decade. Such expenditures, however, while on the one hand contributing to the development of the country's prosperity and the increase of its wealth, on the other automatically supply their own interest and sinking fund.

The Tokyo City Council has not yet reconciled itself to all the consequences of postponing the grand Exhibition. One of those consequences is that the sum—1½ million yen—hitherto contributed by the City to the expenses of the enterprise, is lying in the Treasury's hands, and the Government declines to return it to the City, on the ground that the Exhibition is merely postponed, not abandoned, and that the right to fix a date was originally reserved to the Government. This money, as our readers know, was obtained by the imposition of a special tax (called tsuai-zei), and to ordinary onlookers it would seem that the natural course for the City to take would have been to reduce the rate of the tax proportionately to the length of time over which its collection was to be spread, so that the City's contribution to the deferred Exhibition would have been assured. But instead of taking that course the aldermen decided to abolish the tax and to demand that the Government should at once repay the proceeds hitherto lodged in the Treasury. This the city can not ask as a right, so long as its original contract with the Government holds; and to annul that contract the opinion of the City Assembly must be sought. A meeting will soon be convened to discuss the question. Meanwhile it may be hoped that more moderate councils will prevail among the Aldermen. The course they are pursuing at present is calculated to injure the prospects of the Exhibition of 1917.

The failure is announced as imminent of Mr. Takahashi Hambei, who for some years has enjoyed the reputation of being the leading Japanese dealer in woollen cloths. The liabilities of the firm are put at 810,000 yen, and the banks chiefly concerned are the Shoyei, of which Mr. Takahashi is President, the Mitsui and the First. Five foreign firms of Yokohama are also said to be more or less involved. The Mitsui Bank, to which the firm owes yen 160,000, is alleged to be the most unfortunate among the creditors. Of course, more or less security has been given for these loans, but there is a total of 250,000 yen which is said to be wholly unsecured.

In spite of the apparent activity on the Stock Exchange during October, the quantity of shares dealt with on settling day was very small, namely, 45,000 shares representing 2 457,130 yen, being an average price of 54.703 yen per share. This average was 7 yen higher than that for September.

Sunday, November 1.

The Fiji Shimpo quotes Baron Goto, Minister of State for Communications, as saying that the Special Accounts project of the railways must of course receive the Diet's consent before becoming law, but assuming that consent to be given, it may be stated that the sum expended during the next fiscal year on extensions and improvements will not be less than that already fixed by the Railway Law, namely, 30 million yen. As to the method of procuring this money, 10 millions will be furnished by the Deposits Bureau of the Finance Department; six millions will be taken from the profits of the railways, and the remaining 14 millions will be obtained by loan.

Investigations are now in progress pointing to re-organisation of the Railway Bureau, and to a more effective system for the employment of labour, but on these topics the Minister spoke in very general terms.

Baron Goto spoke also about the question of telephones. Referring to the system of payments in advance, which has been in force for some years, he said that undoubtedly cause for complaint exists on the part of people who, although they paid their money long ago, have not yet received telephones. In order to put an end to this state of affairs, it has now been decided to fix a number of minimum applicants for each region, and as soon as that number is reached, the work of installation will immediately commence. His Excellency denies that the introduction of a new scale of charges based upon the number of messages sent by each telephone owner is for revenue purposes. Revenue is quite a secondary consideration in the matter. The system has been successfully practised for some time, and undoubtedly it is consistent with justice, while at the same time it lends itself to better organisation. While, however, everyone must admit that the ends of justice are consulted by making men pay in proportion to the services they receive, there is no denying the fact that the proposed scale of charges will add enormously to the costliness of the telephone for precisely the class of people to whom the instrument is most useful. It appears to us that, on a very moderate calculation, ten messages a day are sent from all houses which may be included in the active circle. But ten messages a day at  $1\frac{1}{2}$  sen per message amount to about 55 yen a year, which means that the cost of the telephone is doubled.

It appears that the fall of the Takahashi Woollen Goods Firm is only one of the group of similar disasters by which four other firms are affected. The next in magnitude is the Nakaya, the property of the Kubota family. Its debts are put at 400,000 yen, and its assets at about one half of that amount. The other firms are Messrs. Nakajima of Nihon-bashi, Sugiura of Kyo-bashi and Miki of the same district. All these have been in a shaky condition for some time. A settlement has been evolved in the case of the Nakajima Firm, but the others seem to be in a hopeless condition.

There are various rumours about the Tokyo Railway Company's affairs, but none of them seems trustworthy, so they need not be repeated in detail here. The gist of them is that much impatience is beginning to be felt in some quarters at the long delay in adjusting the Company's affairs; that there is some talk of a political party taking up the matter; that the present Directors are unwilling to resign until they have arranged for an increase of fares, which they hope to bring about within the present month, or at latest in next March, and that the Cabinet is reluctant to allow any increase of fares lest the citizens should make trouble. This last statement appears to us to be wholly incredible, since it would amount to an admission that the capital of Japan is governed by mob law.

The following companies have declared or are about to declare dividends at the rates indicated, for the current half year:—the Kawagoe Railway Company 10 per cent.; the Narita Railway Company  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; the Hoden Oil Company 36 per cent., and the Shinagawa White-brick Company 10 per cent.

It is stated that the Department of Agriculture and Commerce has finally decided to abandon the timber enterprise hitherto carried on by it, and that, out of its 14 lumber yards (seisai-jo) throughout the Empire, the four principal will be offered for sale in the near future.

It is stated that the fishing operations in northern seas have been very successful this year. The take of salmon and waga has been as follows:—

Mr. Ishiwada, President of the Nishin S.S. Company, is quoted as confirming the views recently attributed to Mr. Nedzu, namely, that trade in the Yangtze valley is about to emerge from its state of depression, and that a new period of prosperity will soon open.

Monday, November 2.

Mr. Okubo, Chief of the Industrial and Commercial Bureau in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, has announced to a member of the Asahi's staff an interesting official departure. He says that the Government has hitherto fallen into the error of giving support only to great manufacturing industries like that of cotton spinning. Such industries, however, though at the outset they needed assistance, have now attained a position of independence, and are able to supply themselves with first class machinery and with all the best modern equipment. The case is very different, however, with small industries of a more or less domestic character. These, in default of capital, are obliged to rely almost entirely upon manual labour, which is gradually growing scarcer and dearer, and thus many small enterprises which, if judiciously fostered, might in time become the embryo of great undertakings, are now threatened with extinction. It is impossible for manual labour to compete successfully against machinery. A striking illustration of this is furnished by the fact that Japanese paper, long a unique article in the market, is now threatened with displacement in Japan itself by machine-made German paper of the same types. The Government therefore contemplates supplying to trustworthy small manufacturers suitable machines of an economical and cheap character. These will be lent for a term of years free of charge, and for the purpose of procuring such machines a Japanese engineer, Mr. Shoji, has already been sent to the West. Another measure taken will be to place in the hands of manufacturers specimens of the best kinds of foreign goods, in order that there may be a clear understanding as to the quality of the articles to be competed with.

It is stated that Formosan sugar is gradually driving the Java product out of the Japanese market. The import of the Java staple during the current year is said to have been a million catties less than the corresponding figure for 1907, and there is now a difference of from 80 or 90 sen per bag in favour of the Formosan sugar in the Japanese market.

There are somewhat conflicting accounts as to the reception given by the public to the shares of the Eastern Development Company. The Shogyo Shimpo, in its issue of the 1st inst., alleges that the stock will not be boomed in the market, and that the applications will not greatly exceed twice the number of shares to be allotted. The Chuo Shimbun, however, in its issue of the 2nd inst., affirms that the stock will be subscribed 20 or 30 times over. We may add that the issue began on the 1st inst. and will terminate on the 10th.

The Mayor of Tokyo has waited upon the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce with reference to the Municipality's proposal for a domestic exhibition in Tokyo in 1911. The Minister flatly refused to entertain the scheme. He took the ground that the great Exhibition, originally planned for 1912, has merely been postponed, and not abandoned. Therefore the Government can not consider any intermediate project. As to the question of refunding the money hitherto put up by the City on account of the Exhibition, the Government can not accede, seeing that these monies have already been applied to purchasing land for the site of the 1917 Exhibition.

Wednesday, November 4.

For the information of our readers we translate the following notification from the office of the Kwansei Railway Company, the document having been placed at our disposal by one of the shareholders to whom it was addressed:—"It has been decided that the amount of the public loan-bonds to be handed to the Company in consideration of the nationalization of its Railway shall be 30,437,350 yen, which represents something over 62.90 yen per share. But inasmuch as, in the sequel of negotiations, the funds reserved up to the time of nationalization for the purpose of repairs to rails, rolling stock, implements and machines are to be substrated from the purchase-price, these reserves have not been added. Further, prior to the promulgation of the Nationalization Law, application had been made for permission to sell some land, of which the company had no need, within the compound of the Amishima Station. Permission has now been given, and the price of the land has been received. Hence, when the accounts are made up, the sum which it will be possible to distribute to the shareholders will not be less than 63 yen per share. Of course we desire it to be understood that as a result of selling the fractional shares more or less difference may arise."

We read in the Asahi that the formation of a trust is contemplated by the three great Japanese firms of Mitsui, Okura and Takata for the purpose of selling arms to China. A very considerable quantity of these commodities is required by the Middle Kingdom for the equipment of the large army which she is now organising, and since the Japanese arsenals have a good deal of spare time available for outside work, the opportunity is favourable for supplying Japanese arms to the neighbouring country. Our contemporary says that the question of douceurs plays an important part in this business, and that the Germans, who know best how to exploit this branch of the trade art, stand first in the Chinese market, while Japan occupies the second place, and England, traditionally averse to such methods, brings up the rear. Hitherto the three Japanese Firms mentioned above have injured each other's chances by competition, and they are now said to have concluded that union is the wisest course.

Renewed talk is heard of opposition to the employment of Japanese labour in the bêche-de-mer fisheries at Thursday Island. The Japanese have long been recognised as the cheapest and best workers in this line, and the Queensland Parliament will soon have to consider a bill for reducing their number by one fourth.

Subscriptions are pouring in fast for the shares of the Eastern Development Company. They are already quoted at a premium of from 3 to 3.50 yen, and the expectation is that they will be subscribed from 10 to 20 times over. This is regarded as a sign of the country's emergence from the depression under which it has laboured for the past 19 months.

The South Manchuria Railway Company is evidently determined to exploit all its op-opportunities. It was recently heard of as having taken measures to supply Dairen with electric light and telephones, and it is now making arrangements to build and operate a system of electric trams in that city, at a cost of a million yen. All the above enterprises are included in the Company's charter, but it has now taken a new departure by adding gas-works to its other projects. Special permission has been obtained for the purpose, and tanks are already in process of erection. This means a new market for the Fushun coal, and a fresh output of coke.

According to the Nippon, a ray of light has at last penetrated the darkness hitherto brooding over Japanese maritime enterprise. The first sign of improvement is shown on the American line of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, where the Iyo Maru recently carried seven hundred tons of goods from Seattle. America having been the first to recover from the commercial panic of last year, it is natural that she should also be the first to show signs of improvement in the marine transport also.

Up to the close of October the number of applicants for payment of the first installment of the War Loan represented an amount of only 7,163,330 yen, whereas it had been expected that the total would be fully ten millions. This leaves some 17 million yen to be redeemed during the present month. Of course the lots are duly drawn, and the holders of the bonds can receive payment at any moment, but they do not seem to be in a great hurry.

The silk market continues to be very active and the prospects are regarded as decidedly good.

Rumours again begin to be current about efforts on the part of the directors of the Tokyo Railway to secure a rational system of fares, namely, charges by distance. The Fiji Shimpō, alluding to this prospect, takes its old line, namely that the Company ought to reorganise its management before asking for any addition to its fares. It is to be wished that the Fiji would frankly say whether it considers the present schedule either fair or sufficient.

Thursday, November 5.

It is reported, with how much truth we are not prepared to say, that a project is mooted among the authorities for reducing the number of race clubs from 20 to about 12 by amalgamation and thereafter granting to each company a yearly subsidy of 100,000 yen. The price of entrance tickets would then be fixed at 1.00 yen for the first class and 50 sen for the second. This of course would deprive horse racing of the great iclat which promised to attend it in Japan, but it would constitute at least a measure of reparation for the Government's precipitate action with regard to the pari-mutuel.

Each day that passes sees an access of opposition to the proposal in the Department of Communications to impose a charge for each telephonic message in addition to the present maintenance charge. The leaders of the Seiyū-kai appear to be taking up the matter and converting it into a party issue. It is alleged that the average number of messages despatched daily over each telephone is 15, and if 1½ sen per message be levied, each subscriber to the telephone would have to pay something like 80 or 90 yen a year in addition to a maintenance charge of from 40 to 50. In fact the present cost would be much more than doubled. The opponents of the measure urge that while the charge by messages may be reasonable enough in itself, to make it supplementary to a maintenance charge would be an extortion. They also point out that if this measure be enforced it will constitute another shock to the security of private property, because telephones which have been purchased by individuals at high prices will surely undergo heavy depreciation. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun and the Shogyō Shimpō write very strongly on the subject, the latter journal insisting that the number of hands now employed at the exchanges is quite insufficient, and that in this fact the source of the trouble is to be found.

The Shogyō Shimpō predicts a temporary depression in the silk market. Its analysis is that the great activity of the past few weeks was due to speculative purchases in anticipation of Mr. Taft's election, and that the latter event being now assured, there will be a re-action until the large stock imported into the States can be digested. Already America has bought 20 or 30 thousand yen more than she had purchased in the corresponding period of last year.

The South Manchuria Railway Company has engaged a German expert to assist in the general management of the line.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun contradicts the rumour recently published by the Fiji Shimpō to the effect that the Government contemplates convening the Diet this year at a date sufficiently early to allow of the discussion of the Budget before the New Year's recess. It is now explained by the former journal that the Budget cannot possibly be ready in time for such a programme, and that the Diet will not be summoned at any unusually early date.

We regret to learn that General Viscount Nishi is dangerously ill. He is suffering from a complication of maladies, and little hope seems to be entertained of his ultimate recovery.

It is reported from Shanghai that the American Consul-General at that place has advised the Chinese Chamber of Commerce to invite a visit from the Business Men of the Pacific slope who are now sojourning in Japan. The Consul-General is said to have pointed out that the coming of these men of affairs to China would undoubtedly conduce not only to strengthen the friendship between the United States and the Middle Kingdom but also to promote their mutual commercial and industrial interests. This advice is said to have been welcomed by the Chamber, and the necessary steps are now being taken.

We regret to have to announce the death of Mr. A. S. Aldrich, for many years in the employment of the Japanese Railway Bureau and subsequently Consul for Japan at Wellington. The fact has been announced by telegraph, and no particulars are to hand, but we gather that Mr. Aldrich's illness can not have been protracted, as a letter, written apparently in the best spirits, was received from him only a few days ago by a friend in Tokyo.

The youthful element of the Kenkyū-kai, headed by Count Hirotsawa and Count Yanagisawa, have withdrawn from that body. The seceders number 7 in all. So far as we can gather there is no radical political principle involved in this dispute. It had its origin originally in the desire of the younger section of the group to exclude Count Okimachi from the Permanent Committee of the Kenkyū-kai and to reconstruct the Committee. Doubtless there is some question more important than a mere point of personality; but the published accounts do not show the back of the picture.

The foreign trade for the last 11 days of October showed an excess of exports amounting to nearly 4½ million yen. The following are the figures:—

Last 11 days of October.	Total up to 31/10.	Comparative figures for 1907
Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
Exports..... 14,440,000	306,735,000	—56,543,000
Imports..... 9,974,000	376,865,000	—41,483,000
Excess of Exports for last 11 days of October .....		4,466,000
Excess of Imports for 10 months ended October 31st .....		70,130,000

Mr. Tang left Tokyo on the 3rd inst., and is now sojourning at the Oriental Hotel in Yokohama, preparatory to embarking on the Mongolia for the purpose of continuing his journey westward. Before leaving Tokyo he conveyed through Mr. Kurosawa, Commissioner of Customs at Dairen, who is now in Tokyo, an expression of hearty thanks for the treatment he had received both officially and privately during his stay in Japan, treatment which, he said, had produced an indelible impression on his mind.

It is stated that Mr. Roosevelt will start for South Africa in March next and that he will travel from America by Colonel Thompson's yacht, which is now being prepared to receive him. Colonel Thompson, it is said, intends to propose that, after the South-African hunting expedition, Mr. Roosevelt should proceed to Japan, but there is no indication as to whether this programme will find favour in the eyes of the ex-President.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, October 31.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange opened briskly on the morning of the 31st ultimo. Buying was the order of the day, and the general impression seemed to be in favour of a boom. The afternoon session saw a slight reaction, which, however, is not regarded seriously.

Monday, November 1.

The market suffered a slight relapse on the morning of the 1st instant owing to profit-taking sales; but the vigour shown by the shares of the Exchange itself had a strengthening effect, and the afternoon session witnessed a recovery and closed strong. It now seems evident that the upward grade has been reached, but there are likely to be many vicissitudes.

Wednesday, November 4.

The 4th was a day of semi-panic on the Stock Exchange. Several causes combined—the trouble in South China, renewed caution on the part of the banks; the depreciation of silver and the haste of holders to realize. Neither the forenoon nor the afternoon session showed any vigour, even though Osaka was reported steady.

Thursday, November 5.

The débâcle which commenced on the 4th instant was continued yesterday (5th), though on a less marked scale. The only extraneous cause, apart from the disturbance in South-China, is the continued depreciation origin originally in the desire of the proper section of the group to exclude the Okimachi from the Permanent Committee. Doubtless there is some person more important than a mere past personality; but the published account does not show the back of the picture.

The foreign trade for the last 11 days of October showed an excess of exports amounting to nearly 4% million yen. The figures are the figures:—

Mr. Tang left Tokyo on the 6th and is now sojourning at the Hotel in Yokohama, preparatory to his starting on the Manchuria for the purpose of continuing his journey westward, leaving Tokyo he conveyed through Kurosawa, Commissioner of Customs, Dairen, who is now in Tokyo, in recognition of hearty thanks for the treatment he had received both officially and personally during his stay in Japan, treatment he said, had produced an indelible impression on his mind.

It is stated that Mr. Roosevelt will start for South Africa in March next and will travel from America by the Thompson's yacht, which is now being repaired to receive him. Colonel Thompson is said, intends to propose that the South-African hunting expedition, which Roosevelt should proceed to Japan, there is no indication as to whether the programme will find favour in the eyes of the ex-President.

The 4th was a day of semi-panic in the Stock Exchange. Several causes combined—the trouble in South China, the depreciation of silver and the late of winter to realize. Neither the former nor the afternoon session showed any signs, but through Osaka was reported steady.

Thursday, November 4th.
The débâcle which commenced on the 4th instant was continued yesterday, though on a less marked scale. The extraneous cause, apart from the disturbance in South China, is the combined depression of silver, which now stands at 22 1/2, an unprecedentedly low price. Probably the white metal and the boycott are only contributory factors. The real explanation is that the rapid rise which immediately preceded this débâcle has tempted speculators to unload, and buyers are wisely holding their hand. This is suggested by the fact that stocks which did not share the sharp appreciation, are now comparatively exempt from the rapid fall. A noticeable point is that the margin of fluctuation is gradually increasing, which feature indicates a growth of speculative attention. We append the quotations for January delivery:—

EMPEROR'S BIRTHDAY IN YOKOHAMA.

Though the weather was cloudy with rain in some localities the Emperor's Birthday was celebrated in fine weather and with gala demonstration in Yokohama. All the streets were decorated with hunting, etc. At the Prefectural Government Office, at 10 a.m. a number of officials and foreign Consuls and their staffs assembled and offered their congratulations on the occasion. Baron Sufu gave a dinner the same evening to a number of leading Japanese and foreigners at his official residence.

In the various schools, the usual celebrations were held at 9 a.m. The masters of the respective institutions delivered congratulatory addresses before the portraits of His Majesty and the Empress after which the pupils sang three times the national anthem. Subsequently athletic sports were held on the various grounds, including jyujitsu performances by Mr. Komine and Miss Noguchi and their pupils.

The Meiji Shotoku kwai, a society celebrating the progress attained in the Meiji era, of which Mr. K. Otani is president, held a meeting at the office of the Daijin-gu shrine on Ise-yama. Having worshiped before the altar, some of them read congratulatory letters and made speeches extolling the national progress and development under the present Emperor. Meanwhile a number of fine fire-works were sent up.

The French gun boat Decidée and foreign and Japanese merchantmen in the harbour were fully dressed. In the evening some of them were illuminated.

YOKOHAMA.

A telegram has been received at the Chief Police Office to the effect that a young woman was crushed to death on Thursday morning on the railway near Oiso. She is believed to have laid herself on the line with the intention of committing suicide.

A Bye-election for a member of the Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly took place on Oct. 28th at Miura-gori, at which Mr. T. Kobayashi was elected with 724 votes.

The Bluff police have arrested a man living in Kitagata on a charge of having practised as a doctor without license.

Early on Saturday morning an attempt at incendiarism was committed at a house in Fukutomi-cho, Yokohama, three straw bags being put against the door and ignited. The fire was discovered by a watchman and put out before the flames got a hold on the building. The Isezaki-cho police have succeeded in tracing the offender, who has been arrested. He was removed to the office of the Public Procurator in the Yokohama District Court.

Mr. Loomis, Chairman of the American Committee for the Tokyo Exhibition, and party will leave Yokohama on Nov. 4th by the Tenyo Maru for home.

Hatsu Taniguchi (43), the wife of a coolie living in Suyeyoshi-cho, Yokohama, attempted to commit suicide by throwing herself into the creek near by on the evening of Oct. 29th. She was saved by a passer-by. Poverty is reported to have been the cause.

A case of hydrophobia is reported in Yokohama. A dog attacked a woman on Oct. 30th in Kumoi-cho, inflicting injuries to her right hand. The Isezaki-cho police killed the dog.

The annual autumn regatta of the Yokohama Commercial School was held on Nov. 1st in the harbour off the Bund. In the last three races, the employees of the Mitsui and Nippon Yusen Kaisha participated. The programme was successfully carried out.

It is reported by a telegram received at the Yokohama Chief Police office that Hagiyo Otsuki (23), the wife of Lieut. Otsuki of the Navy, resident in Dzushi, was found murdered in her house on the morning of Nov. 1st. She had been fatally stabbed in the throat, and her hands were also severely injured, probably in the attempt to protect herself. An amount of money which was believed to have been kept in a cabinet was missing. Mr. Oshima, a police superintendent, and Mr. Machida, a detective of the Chief Police Office, went to the scene on Sunday. The offender is still at large. The husband was absent at Saicho in connexion with the forthcoming manoeuvres.

On the morning of Nov. 1st, a warehouse on lot No. 168, Yamashita-cho, was found to have been visited by a burglar. A quantity of raw silk valued at yen 570 was stolen. It is reported by the Isezaki-cho police that a man has been arrested in connexion with the theft.

In connexion with the unusual temperature experienced since Oct. 31st, the Yokohama Observatory Office says that an area of high pressure has appeared in the north and a few minor depressions in the south, and that the high pressure gradually extended to the main island. On the night of Nov. 1st and 2nd, the temperature became especially low. At 6.10 a.m. on Monday the thermometer recorded 39.6° F.

A farmer named Z. Matsuzawa living in Kamakura has been arrested at Yokosuka on a charge of having counterfeited a number of the shares of the Tokyo Artificial Fertilizer Co. and of having sold them for yen 1,136 at the offices of several share brokers.

The Isezaki-cho police have arrested a coolie living at an inn in Miyoshi-cho in connexion with the theft at a ware-house belonging to Messrs. Vivanti Bros. No. 168, Yamashita-cho, the details of which were already reported in these columns. The man is still undergoing examination at the police office.

Six of twelve business men who were arrested on Sept. 30th at the tea-house Chiyoshi while gambling, were sentenced on Nov. 2nd in the District Court to imprisonment varying between 5 and 6 months.

Mr. K. Nagashima, an official of the Yokohama Tax Superintending Bureau, has been appointed the chief of the branch provided in the Yokohama Customs in connexion with the extraordinary tax.

To-day, Nov. 3th, Viceroy Tang Shaoi will leave Yokohama by the Manchuria for America. He will investigate the financial conditions in the United States and Europe.

An attempt of incendiarism was committed on the night of Nov. 2nd in Kugo, Yokosuka. The flames which broke out in a shed were put out before much damage was done. At the place a quantity of waste cloth soaked in kerosene oil was found.

The dead body of a man, about 40 years old, has been found in the woods of Sensu-hata near Kamakura. He is believed to have died from illness.

On the morning of Nov. 2nd frost was experienced at Totsuka and other districts near Yokohama. The visit is five days earlier than usual.

Viceroy Tang Shaoi, Mr. Loomis, Chief of the American Committee for the Tokyo Exhibition, and a few of the American business men who came to Japan in consequence of invitations from the Tokyo and other prominent Chambers of Commerce, left Yokohama by the Manchuria for home on Nov. 5th. A large number of Japanese officials and merchants were present at the latola and on the steamer to wish them bon voyage.

Mr. K. Saito and Mr. S. Hayakawa, of the Department of Finance, have been appointed appraisers in the Yokohama Customs.

Early on the morning of Nov. 4th a youth, employee of a grog shop in Suyeyoshi-cho, Yokohama, attempted to murder the proprietress of the house by strangling her while she was asleep. On her calling for help, he escaped. In Isezaki-cho, however, he was arrested by a policeman. On Thursday morning he was removed to the Public Procurators' Office in the District Court. It is said that on the previous day the proprietress had blamed him for negligence in work.

Dr. Sven Hedin, the Swedish explorer, is expected to arrive at Yokohama by the Kanaga Maru on Nov. 14th. He will spend some two weeks in Tokyo and Kyoto.

The annual ordinary meeting of the Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly was held on Nov. 5th. A number of bills were handed over to committees, after which the sitting was adjourned.

The Isezaki-cho police have arrested a man in Magane-cho, Yokohama, on a charge of having counterfeited a number of 10-yen notes and circulated them. The forged notes were very ingeniously made.

A gentle shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama at 6 a.m. on Nov. 5th, the duration being 35 seconds.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The Yokohama Literary and Musical Society held its second meeting of the season at Van Schaick Hall on Friday evening. Mr. J. P. Mollison, President, was in the chair and there was a large audience.

The first part of the programme consisted of a lecture on Dante and the Divina Comedia by the Rev. C. F. Sweet. It proved highly interesting and was listened to with the greatest attention, Mr. Sweet being thanked at the close by the Chairman in the name of the Society.

It was intimated that at an extraordinary meeting to be held prior to the lecture on Wednesday Nov. 11th the members would be asked to vote on a proposal to fix the time of the Society's meetings at 8.45 instead of 8.30 p.m. as at present.

The second part of the programme was opened by Mr. Somerton who sang both his songs "Thora" and "Love-Lily" very finely. Mrs. Thom gave excellent renderings of her two songs "I wonder if ever the Roses" and "Invitation." Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Ward who appeared for the first time gave two capital numbers, "I would that my love" and "Wanderer's Night Song." Mr. H. A. Poole gave a viola solo No. 1 of Sir's "Albumblad" and had to return and play No. 4 of the same series. Mrs. Richards, who also made her first appearance, created a good impression with her two songs "Noch sind die Tage der Rosen" and "The Japanese Maiden." Mr. J. W. Brining who was on the programme for a song had to be excused because of a cold.

ORDERS AND TITLES.

IN its last issue "The Christian Movement" in its "General Survey" has the following passage:

The Japanese Government has continued to confer rewards upon those who acted the most prominent and deserving parts in the Russo-Japanese War. The rewards consisted in promotion in rank of nobility, or in granting new patents of nobility, or in conferring decorations, or in making monetary gifts. Sometimes both of the latter forms accompanied either of the two former ones. It is scarcely necessary to print the long list of those thus honored; it may suffice to say that it included hundreds of persons of all professions, from the Elder Statesmen down. Foreign war correspondents and other foreigners were also honored with decorations.

This paragraph induces us to say a word about a subject which we have hitherto shrunk from touching, our belief being that the course of time might render comment unnecessary, though from numerous private letters we gathered that the matter was very widely noticed by foreigners. We refer to the fact that not so much as one title of nobility was conferred on a Japanese man of affairs in connexion with the recent war. Some Orders were given, but not a solitary patent of nobility. Many persons—and we confess ourselves to be of the number—consider that titles are bestowed too readily now-a-days, and that their value is lessened by their multiplicity. But that is a question apart. The point is that whereas many officers in the Army and the Navy and many officials of all Departments of State were deemed worthy to be rewarded with titles, from that of Baron to that of Prince, not one member of the commercial classes was similarly honoured. Yet there can be no second opinion that the services rendered to their country's cause by men of affairs deserve to be bracketted with the services rendered by any officer or official. To mention names may seem in questionable taste, but by way of illustrating the subject we must crave a little license. Take, for example, the case of Baron SHIBUSAWA. Every one knows that had Baron SHIBUSAWA remained in the Government, he would now be among the Elder Statesmen with the title of Marquis. But, thirty years ago, he resigned a fine official position because, as his memoirs show, he saw that the nation had urgent need of men to lead it along the paths of economic and financial reform and to organize systems of joint-stock companies and banks, institutions altogether novel in this country. We may reasonably say that but for Baron SHIBUSAWA and his coöperators, Japan would still be painfully climbing the first slopes of the ascent on whose summit she now stands securely, and that she would have been financially impotent to wage the two great conflicts of her modern career. Yet on the roll of nobility Baron SHIBUSAWA stands precisely where he stood before either of those wars was fought. Consider, again, the case of the President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. After her Army and her Navy, no one factor contributed so materially to Japan's armed triumphs as the great steamship company. Had it not been that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's splendid fleet of vessels were in a perfectly efficient state and available at a moment's notice for purposes of military transport, an over-sea campaign would have been impossible for Japan, and her Army must have remained inactive at home, condemned to the fatally weak role of pure defense. No one, we think—and the thought is shared by many foreign onlookers—no one could have deserved better of his country than the man who throughout a series of years managed the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's affairs so ably that the Government could lay their hand at any moment on this big fleet of steamers and thus indefinitely extend the sphere of the Empire's fighting capacity. Yet Mr. REMPEI KONDO remains plain Mr. REMPEI KONDO still. Mr. K. SONODA's figure presents itself with similar distinctness. He, too, had he remained in the ranks of officialdom, would certainly possess a title of nobility now. But, like Baron SHIBUSAWA, he stepped down from the "seats of power" to assist in the nation's economic education, and the credit belongs to him of having worked with conspicuous zeal and ability in the financing of the war, and of having, by his speeches and his acts, helped materially to raise and support the people's spirit in a season of immense crisis. We mention these three eminent men because their names suggest themselves first, but we desire to deprecate all desire to assert any right of interference in Japan's management of such matters. Our remarks are dictated solely by the reflection that, judging as Englishmen, we can not but feel solicitous about the wisdom of a policy which seems to exclude the mercantile classes from an adequate share in national triumphs which, without their aid, could never have been won.

Club's Autumn Meeting can hardly be said to have been brought off in favourable circumstances. Added to the effect which the recent prohibition of the pari mutuel and the still more recent intimation by the police authorities that all betting of whatever description would be dealt with under the Penal Code could not fail to have upon the interest of a considerable section of the public, were far from agreeable weather conditions. Rain had fallen pretty heavily during the night and even early in the forenoon it was doubtful whether the clearing up that had taken place would last. At any rate when the first race was started there were very few people present, and at no time during the day could the attendance be styled fair. A few ladies graced the proceedings with their presence. The air was positively cold with a rawness that made overcoats an absolute necessity.

There were no fewer than ten events on the card and though the Committee had been impelled by recent developments to effect large reductions in the amounts of the prizes, it need hardly be said that this did not affect the racing on the first day. There were large fields and some good finishes; the starting was good, and the arrangements in general were as usual creditably carried out. In one race—for the Victoria Plate—a record was established, Triumphant beating the time of Hitachi in 1904.

Following were the events:—

1. Class A.—The COLONIAL PLATE.—Value yen 450, the Second to receive yen 100, and the Third yen 50. For N. R. C. Australian Subscription Horses; Weight for Age with 5lbs. deducted; Winners at date of entry to carry 5lbs. extra for each win, not exceeding 27lbs. in all. Distance One Mile.

Mr. Silk's Midzuo, 135lbs. ....(Masajiro) 1
Mr. Sphinx's Bressane, 138lbs. ....(Kashichi) 2
Mr. Snipe's Lady Voyou, 147lbs. ....(Yasu) 3
Mr. News' Radical, 135lbs. ....(Shinnosuke) 0
Mr. N. Kawakita's Tourmaline, 144lbs. ....(Takano) 0
Mr. M. Kimura's Kokuyo, 135lbs. ....(Togawa) 0
Mr. Kanagawa's Avant Garde, 138lbs. ....(Sasaki) 0
Mr. Nanchō's Wakaume, 135lbs. ....(Kawasaki) 0
Mr. Latham's Lady Aberdeen, 135lbs. ....(Tamago) 0
Bressane, in the inside position, and Radical had the best of the start. The latter took first place at the foot of the hill, Wakaume now second, Bressane third. Wakaume took the lead at the half mile, Bressane displacing Radical. In the straight, however, Midzuo came through the field and finished easily three lengths ahead, Bressane second, Lady Voyou third; a length separated second from third. Time 1.49 60/100.

2. Class E.—The FIRST RACE FOR N.R.C. COUNTRY BREED SUBSCRIPTION HORSES OF AUTUMN, 1908, ODD NUMBERS OF DRAWING.—Value yen 200, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50; Weight for Age with 5lbs. deducted. Distance Three Quarters of a Mile.

Mr. Snipe's Ashitaka II., 132lbs. ....(Hansawa) 1
Mr. T. Ishiura's Nezumi, 132lbs. ....(Masajiro) 2
Mr. Shigi's Katsuse, 132lbs. ....(Mima) 3
Mr. Rafale's Gigolo, 132lbs. ....(Torada) 0
Mr. S. Minoda's Koreyoshi, 132lbs. ....(Kisago) 0
Mr. Yodo's Shikuko, 132lbs. ....(Sato) 0
Mr. Latham's Sagiyama, 132lbs. ....(Tamago) 0
Koreyoshi got away with a lead, but had to make room for Katsuse, Shikuko third, with Nezumi coming up fast. They ran in this order past the Shakespeare but as they neared the Trees Ashitaka II. came up and at the turn had passed the leaders. He held the lead to the end and won by three lengths, Nezumi second three lengths in front of Katsuse, third. Time 1.31 1/10.

3. Class B.—The FIRST RACE FOR N.R.C. AUSTRALIAN SUBSCRIPTION HORSES OF AUTUMN 1908, ODD NUMBERS OF DRAWING.—Value yen 450, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50; Weight for Age. Distance three quarters of a Mile.

Mr. Snipe's Sainte Maria, 137lbs. ....(Yasu) 1
Mr. Rafale's Midnette, 132lbs. ....(Sasaki) 2
Mr. Norfolk's Persephone, 132lbs. ....(Fingerall) 3
Mr. R. Loonen's Silencieuse, 132lbs. ....(Kurosaka) 0
Mr. Kimura's Kiozono, 132lbs. ....(Kono) 0
Mr. J. Yasuda's Takau, 132lbs. ....(Saki) 0
Mr. Island's Staffa, 132lbs. ....(Tomonura) 0
Mr. S. Minoda's Kokonoye, 132lbs. ....(Kisago) 0
Mr. K. Matsuyama's Tachimachi, 134lbs. ....(Hakodate) 0

A good start, though Silencieuse was recalcitrant and eventually came home the wrong way. Sainte Maria led at the start and kept in front all the way round, Midnette second and Persephone third.

cordially given. The Norfolk stable's win was most popular, and congratulations were general.

Prince Fushimi arrived before one o'clock and was received at the gate with due respect by the officials, Sir Claude MacDonald, British Ambassador, President of the Club, and members of the Committee escorting him to the Grand Stand. He remained watching the races till about a quarter before three o'clock, witnessing the Emperor's Cup race and descending from his box to be present at the handing over of the prize to the winning owner. He departed under the same conditions as when he arrived driving off amid the strains of "Kimigayo."

The arrangements again worked well, reflecting credit on those in charge of them.

Following were the events:—

Third Extra Race. Class D.—The CHINA DERBY. —Value yen 300, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50. For All China Subscription Ponies; Weight as per scale with 7lbs. deducted; Winners at date of entry to carry 3lbs. extra for each win, not exceeding 18lbs. in all; Winners at the Meeting 7lbs. extra; Maximum weight 165lbs. Distance One Mile and a Half.

Mr. Astral's Smilax, 146lbs.....(Sasaki)	1
Mr. States and Koerting's New Jersey, 16lbs.....
	(Mr. Zahn)
Mr. Canuck's Koenig, 162lbs...(Mr. J. C. Fletcher)	3
Mr. Astral's Cabochon, 147lbs.....(Tomomura)	3
Mr. Nancho's Georgia II, 143lbs.....(Nihonyanagi)	0
Mr. Schwoab's Coot, 156lbs.....(Mr. A. Reim-rs)	0
Mr. Schwoab's HatsuKuma, 144lbs.(Mr. K. Fischer)	0

New Jersey took a momentary lead but was passed by Cabochon, Ontario lying in second place, all close together. They held this order to the bend and past the Stand, Coot, which had been left at the post, trailing behind. At the top of the hill New Jersey again went in front, Ontario second, Smilax third. At the Trees the last named ran into first place, and they finished thus, Smilax winning rather easily by 4 to 6 lengths, a neck between second and third. Time 3.29.

1. Class C.—The YOKOHAMA DERBY.—Value yen 600, the Second to receive Yen 150, and the Third yen 75. For N. R. C. Australian Subscription Horses (Subscription Horses of Autumn, 1908, excluded) and Specially Imported Horses; Australian Subscription Horses, Weight for Age with 15 lbs. deducted; Winners at recognized meetings at date of running to carry 2 lbs. extra for each win, not exceeding 24 lbs. in all; Specially Imported Horses, Weight for Age; Winners at recognized meetings at date of running to carry 3lbs. extra for each win, not exceeding 18lbs. in all. Winners at the Meeting 7lbs. extra. (Should the top weight be more than 160lbs. the weight of all horses will be reduced by the excess number of pounds which the maximum weight of 160lbs. has been exceeded.) Distance one Mile and a Half.

Mr. Canuck's Tonic, 139lbs. ....(Scoville) 1
Mr. Canuck's Triumphant, 146lbs.
(Mr. J. C. Fletcher)

Mr. Latham's North Head, 142lbs. ....	(Coffey)	3
Mr. Snipe's Melbourne II., 153lbs. ....	(Jimba)	0
Mr. Latham's His Grace, 136lbs. ....	(Nihonyanagi)	0

Tonic took the lead after a good start, his Grace, second, Melbourne II. third. The last named ran into first place at the Trees but Tonic and Triumphant passed the stand neck and neck, Melbourne II. close on their quarters. Going up the hill Triumphant went in front. Nearing the Shakespeare North Head drew up on the leaders but got no further than third place and Tonic and Triumphant finished almost together the former getting the verdict by a neck. Public opinion, however, inclined to the judgment that if Triumphant had been ridden out the result would have been different. North Head was third by about three lengths. Time 2.47 - a record, beating the time, 2.47, 37/100, of Hitachi in 1907.

Chief interest, of course, centred in the race for the Emperor's prize, a fine silver cup presented by His Majesty for Australian subscription horses and non-subscription country-breds. Of the thirty-three entries nine faced the tape and after some trouble they were got off to a good start. A fine race resulted in a brilliant finish, Penelope coming up through her horses and winning very cleverly.

2. Class F.—The SECOND RACE FOR JAPAN NON-SUBSCRIPTION COUNTRY BRED HORSES.—Value yen 300, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50; Weight for Age; Winners at recognized meetings at date of running to carry 3 lbs. extra for each win; Maximum weight 16c lbs. Winners at the Meeting excluded. Distance One Mile and a Half.

Mr. K. Matsuyama's Hokuun, 16clbs (Hakodate) 1
Mr. R. Kimura's Shiranui (late Tokachi), 143lbs.
(Mima) 2
Mr. Latham's Sir Mistral, 140lbs. .... (Tamazo) 3
Mr. N. Kawakita's Asukayama, 140lbs.

Mr. Shigi's Katsuhira, 143lbs. ....(Nakazumi) o

Mistral third. They went up the hill in this order but at the top of the hill Asukayama fell back and took third place, Sir Mistral second. They raced in this way to the Straight, Sir Mistral being almost level with the leader at the Trees, but the red and white jacket still kept the lead past the bend. Coming along the Straight Shiranui rushed up on the rails and made a close thing of it for second place with Sir Mistral. Time 3.03 1/2.

3. Class B.—THE THIRD RACE FOR N. R. C. AUSTRALIAN SUBSCRIPTION HORSES OF AUTUMN 1908.—Value yen 450, the Second to receive yen 75, and Third yen 50; Weight for Age. Winners at the Meeting excluded. Distance One Mile.

Mr. Snipe's Sumera, 132lbs.....(Hansawa) 1	Mr. B. Suzuki's Kamikaze, 132lbs.....(Masajiro) 2
Mr. I. Yasuda's Takasu 132lbs.....(Sasaki) 3	Mr. Rafale's Midinette, 132lbs.....(Sasaki) 0
Mr. Hansa's Weser, 132lbs.....(Tomomura) 0	Mr. Silk's Yatsurugi, 134lbs.....(Shibata Kan) 0
Mr. Star's Oite, 132lbs.....(Sato) 0	Mr. R. Loonen's Silencieuse, 131lbs.....(Kurosaka) 0
Mr. R. Loonen's Nebuleuse, 132lbs.....(Hirayama) 0	Mr. Norfolk's Persephone, 132lbs.....(Kashiwaya) 0
Mr. Tatsuta's Nanzan, 132lbs.....(Nihonyanagi) 0	Mr. States' Nevada II, 132lbs.....(Fitzgerald) 0
Mr. K. Matsuyama's Tachimachi, 137lbs.....(Hakodate) 0

Oite went away with the lead, but was displaced in the dip by Takasu, Midinette going into second place and Tachimachi third. Sumera ran first at the top of the hill, Takasu second, Kamikaze third. In the Straight Kamikaze ran into second place and they finished so, a couple of lengths separating first and second and half a length second and third. Time 1.52 1/5.

4. Class A.—THE TASMANIAN PLATE.—Value yen 450, the Second to receive yen 100, and the Third yen 50. For N. R. C. Australian Subscription Horses; Weight for Age with 5lbs. deducted; Winners at date of entry to carry 3lbs. extra for each win, not exceeding 27lbs. in all. Winners at the Meeting excluded. Distance One Mile and a Furlong.

Mr. Kanagawa's Queen Begonia, 141lbs.(Seikichi) 1	Mr. Spipe's Lady Voyou, 147lbs.....(Yasu) 2
Mr. News' Radical 135lbs.....(Sasaki) 3	Mr. N. Kawakita's Tourmaline, 144lbs.(Sugiyama) 0
Mr. Nancho's Amoureuse, 135lbs.....(Kawasaki) 0	Mr. Nancho's Vermont II, 138lbs.....(Nihonyanagi) 0
Mr. Splinx's Bressane, 138lbs.....(Kashichi) 0

After a good start Radical showed in front, Bressane, Queen Begonia third. As they went up the hill, Radical led, Bressane second, Lady Voyou having come into third place. They ran in this fashion to the Trees, where Queen Begonia passed the third and second horses, and challenged the leader at the end. A warm race in resulted in her favour by half a length, one length between Lady Voyou second and Radical third. Time 2.07.

5. Class A. B. F.—THE EMPEROR'S CUP.—Presented by HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR. The Second to receive 150, and the Third yen 75. For N. R. C. Australian Subscription Horses and Japan non-Subscription Country Bred Horses; Winners of 3 Races or less at date of entry. Weight for Age; Winners of more than 3 Races at date of entry 3lbs. extra for each win over 3 wins, not exceeding 15lbs. in all; Australian Subscription Horses in Japan for their Second Meeting 3lbs. allowance; Horses that have started at previous meetings but have not won a race 5lbs. allowance, allowance accumulative; Australian Subscription Griffins 12lbs. allowance; Winners after closing of entries to carry 5lbs. extra cumulative. Previous winners of Emperor's Cup under these conditions excluded. Distance One Mile.

Mr. Norfolk's Penelope, 137lbs.....(Scoville) 1	Mr. Silk's Midzuo, 142lbs.....(Masajiro) 2
Mr. Island's Mindoro, 137lbs.....(Coffey) 3	Mr. Hansa's Elbe, 141lbs.....(Mr. A. L. Mottu) 0
Mr. N. Kawakita's Popinjay II, 143lbs.(Tangawa) 0	Mr. Kanagawa's Avant Garde, 137lbs.....(Sasaki) 0
Mr. Star's Mitsubiki, 143lbs.....(Higaki) 0	Mr. R. Kimura's Asagiri, 139lbs.....(Tsubouchi) 0
Mr. Nancho's Wakaume, 137lbs.....(Kawasaki) 0	Mr. S. Minoda's Bradford, 137lbs.....(Kitago) 0

Wakaume had the best of the start, Penelope taking the lead later, Mindoro second, Avant Garde coming up and running neck and neck with the leader along past the houses. Mindoro now went in front, and Midzuo ran into third place, Penelope falling back. The order at the Shakespeare was Elbe, Avant Garde, Midzuo third. Coming to the bend Penelope on the rails rushed up from the rear and drew to the front, a fine race in resulting in her favour by two lengths, the same distance between Midzuo and Mindoro. Time 1.50 2/5.

The win was most popular and when Mrs. E. C. Davis led in the winning horse there was hearty cheering.

Fourth Extra Race, Class D.—THE MONGOLIAN

STAKES.—Value Yen 200, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third Yen 50. For China Subscription Ponies in Japan for their Second Meeting; Weight as per scale; Winners at date of entry to carry an extra 5lbs. for one win, 7lbs. for two wins and of more than two wins excluded. Winners at the Meeting excluded. Distance One Mile.

Mr. Rafale's All Mine, 152lbs.....(Tsubouchi) 1	Mr. Canuck's Daidai, 147lbs.....(Mr. J. C. Fletcher) 2
Mr. Hiawatha's Mohawk, 158lbs.....(Keishichi) 3	Mr. Rafale's Do Be Quick, 146lbs.....(Torada) 0
Mr. Hansa's Fimsbutel, 153lbs.....(Mr. Mottu) 0	Mr. Pickwick's Mr. Jingle, 153lbs.....(Sasaki) 0
Mr. Schwab's Malvolio, 141lbs.....(Mr. Gaube) 0	Mr. States and K-erting's Florida II, 157lbs.....(Mr. Zahn) 0

Daidai led at the outset but All Mine passed him and kept the lead all round; Mohawk ran second for some time but was ultimately displaced by Daidai. They finished in this order, a length and a half between first and second and three lengths between second and third. Time 2.16 4/5.

6.—Class E.—THE THIRD RACE FOR N. R. C. COUNTRY BRED SUBSCRIPTION HORSES OF AUTUMN 1908.—Value yen 200, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50; Weight for Age with 5lbs. deducted; Winners at the meeting to carry 15lbs. additional. Distance One Mile and a Furlong.

Mr. Geegee's Maskee, 132lbs.....(Sasaki) 1	Mr. Fujikawa's Toyosato, 147lbs.....(Higaki) 2
Mr. Snipe's Ashtawa II, 146lbs.....(Hansawa) 3	Mr. Rafale's Gigolo, 132lbs.....(Asahi) 0
Mr. S. Minoda's Koreyoshi, 131lbs.....(Kitago) 0	Mr. Yodo's Shikuko, 132lbs.....(Sato) 0

Shikuko was away first but at once gave place to Maskee which then led throughout, winning by five lengths, Toyosato second, a head in front of Ashtawa II. Time 2.20.

7. Class B.—THE FOURTH RACE FOR N. R. C. AUSTRALIAN SUBSCRIPTION HORSES OF AUTUMN 1908.—Value yen 450, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50; Weight for Age; Winners at the Meeting to carry 15lbs. additional. Distance One Mile and a Furlong.

Mr. T. Ishiura's Tonami, 147lbs.....(Masajiro) 1	Mr. S. Minoda's Kokonoye, 132lbs.....(Kitago) 2
Mr. Nancho's Ianni, 136lbs.....(Kawasaki) 3	Mr. Snipe's Sainte Marie, 147lbs.....(Yasu) 0
Mr. N. Kawakita's Botan, 132lbs.....(Tugawa) 0	Sir Claude MacDonald's Flip Flap, 132lbs.....(Mr. A. R. Catto) 0

Tonami was first off in a field of nine but soon gave place to Flip Flap; going up the hill Takinogawa went in front, Flip Flap running second. Going along past the houses Flip Flap ran nearly level with the leader. Kokonoye now came up into the second place, Takinogawa falling back to third, and in the straight Tonami went forward and won by five lengths, half a length between Kokonoye second and Bami third. Time 2.07 1/2.

8. Class F.—THE FOURTH RACE FOR N. R. C. COUNTRY BRED SUBSCRIPTION HORSES OF AUTUMN 1908.—Value yen 200, the Second to receive yen 75, and the Third yen 50; Weight for Age with 5lbs. deducted; Winners at the Meeting excluded. Distance One Mile.

Mr. T. Ishiura's Nezumi, 132lbs.....(Masajiro) 1	Mr. Shigi's Katsuse, 132lbs.....(Mima) 2
Mr. N. Kawakita's Seiran, 134lbs.....(Jimba) 3	Mr. R. Loonen's Luteur, 132lbs.....(Kurosaka) 0
Mr. Tatsuta's Hokuzan, 132lbs.....(Nihonyanagi) 0	Mr. Tatsuta's Nile, 132lbs.....(Kitago) 0
Mr. States' Oklahama, 132lbs.....(Fujita) 0	Mr. Latham's Sugiyama, 132lbs.....(Tamazo) 0

Luteur was first off Nile running from second place in the dip to first at the top of the hill, and keeping the lead till displaced by Negumi passing the houses, Luteur third. They ran thus past the Shakespeare and the Trees and as they rounded the bend Katsuse and Seiran came away, the former pushing the leader as they approached the post but without effect, Nezumi winning by a length from Katsuse, six between second and third. Time 2.04 4/5.

INTERPORT ROWING.

We take from the Shanghai Times the following of the first interport event rowed at Shanghai on Saturday October 24th:

EVENT No. 3.—DOUBLE SCULLS

(INTERPORT.)

Distance One Mile.

1.—YOKOHAMA.

(Flag.—Black and Red.)

Bow—H. E. Hayward.....	147 lbs.
Stroke—G. G. Franklin.....	183 „

2.—SHANGHAI.

(Flag.—Blue and Gold.)

Bow—L. P. Dowdall.....	138 lbs.
Stroke—W. O. Kohler.....	174 „

The Interport event was without doubt the best event of the day, despite the fact that Shanghai was defeated. The press were unable to witness the start, and when the boats came in o view the respective teams were rowing level. As the half way line was approached the visitors got a slight lead which they gradually increased until they were some three lengths to the good. They were pulling a beautiful stroke together, and from this point onwards there was hardly any doubt that they would prove successful. The Shanghai representatives tried hard to recover the lost ground but Yokohama were all the way too good for them. The local men tried to take advantage of a mistake on the part of the visitors in steering, but the latter had oceans of time to retrieve their fault, and did so with ease. The spectators cheered the leaders as they approached the winning point and Yokohama passed the post between four and five lengths ahead of the local men. The time was 7 min. 3 secs.

In its description of the second day's racing of the Autumn Regatta at Henli on Oct. 24th the N. C. Daily News said:—

The Interport Fours was rowed over a mile and a quarter, not a mile and a half as stated on the programme, and the general opinion formed the previous day, that Yokohama would win, proved to be correct. To those who were privileged to follow the boats closely all the way down the course, it became evident quite early in the race that the visitors were the better crew. The men pulled together so well that one formed the opinion that they had practised together more than the local men; the boat was well-balanced and the oars swung rhythmically and easily. On the other hand the Shanghai boat looked as if the crew in it could have done with more practice together. Koehler, the stroke, is as fine an oarsman as has been seen in Shanghai for years, and he used his head as well as his muscular body. P. M. Lancaster, always a strong oar, as number three backed up Koehler splendidly and so did Lucas, although the latter seemed to tire towards the finish. Ward, as bow, did his work very well, but if one were asked for the weak spot in the boat one must indicate the bow, while Cox was at fault in taking Yokohama's wash close to the finish; this could scarcely have affected the result, but a race is never finished until the gun has gone. The Shanghai men, however, were honestly and squarely beaten by a better crew and Yokohama deserves the honours won by its representatives.

Describing the event our contemporary said:

Yokohama drew the inside berth. The boats got away well together on gun-fire, Shanghai rowing thirty-six to Yokohama's thirty-four. When the mile flag was reached Shanghai had rather the better position, but the lead was infinitesimal fifty yards beyond the flag. The boats kept very much together, Yokohama waiting upon Shanghai, until the boats' position was reached at which point it was seen that Shanghai was drawing away slightly, and presently had a lead of half a length, but had to take the wider curve in the stream. The crews were rowing well together at this time, the same pace of stroke being maintained. As the two fours came level with the first Chinese gunboat, Yokohama swung into the lead and made the advantage half a length in half a minute. Shanghai was seeming to be falling away almost at every stroke. The boats at this time were well in their places in the middle of the stream and as they entered the line of house-boats Yokohama was two lengths better than the local boat. When Shanghai began to sprint they got on better terms with the visitors, but Yokohama had the race well in hand although still rowing thirty-four. The Shanghai boat was now going behind the Yokohama boat and getting her wash and when the gun was fired Yokohama had won by two lengths. Ward, in the Shanghai boat, collapsed when the crew rested on their oars, and when the boat came alongside the pontoon he had to be lifted out—Time, 7 min., 18 secs.

We are in receipt of notice from the Department of Communications that Fukuse Beacon Light, south of Hirado shima, province of Hizen, which has been under reconstruction (see Notification No. 560 of Department of Communications, September, 1907), will shortly be exhibited. Further notice will be given when the light has been shown.

THE LAW COURTS.

THE JAPAN BREWERY CASE.

A case filed by Mr. J. H. Rosenthal, No. 168, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, against the liquidator of the Japan Brewery Company Ltd., petitioning for cancellation of a resolution passed at a general meeting of shareholders held on Feb. 13th, came up again on Nov. 2nd in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

The Judge passed judgment in favour of Plaintiff.

CLAIM FOR LUMBER.

I. Josho living in the district of Ashigara has lodged a case in the Yokohama District Court against the Director of the Imperial Forestry Bureau claiming yen 85,000.

According to the petition, in 1870 Plaintiff purchased, from a third person, S. Takahashi, an area of forest in the village of Sekimoto, south Ashigara. Later the forest was included in the Imperial forestry lands. Now Plaintiff asked Defendant to hand over to him the whole of the lumber on the land, or in lieu thereof to pay to him yen 85,000, which is an estimate of its value in accordance with the current market price.

The first hearing will take place on Nov. 12th.

CLAIM AGAINST A TRANSPORTATION AGENCY.

A case in which Messrs. Lane Crawford and Co. Ltd. claim yen 2,154.78 from the Mantsu-sha, a transportation agency of which Setsu Oi is the proprietress came up again on Nov. 4th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miake.

The parties' Counsel made further explanations on evidence which they produced at the previous hearing. Subsequently, Defendant's Counsel asked the Judge for leave to examine T. Moroi and T. Ikemasa as witnesses. Counsel added that Moroi made a draft on the articles which Messrs. Lane, Crawford and Co. entrusted to the Mantsu-sha to send them to Kobe. Moroi thus drew the amount described in the draft, at the First Bank while attending to the transportation agency. After a negotiation between the foreign firm and the Japanese, it was agreed between them that Moroi would pay yen 500 of yen 2,154.78 at once and the remainder by monthly instalments. Moroi was unable to execute the agreement and accordingly Messrs. Lane, Crawford & Co. removed the matter to the Public Procurators' office in the Court.

In reply to the Judge, Plaintiffs' Counsel said that his clients entrusted the goods to the transportation agency to send them to Kobe and its employee, Moroi, made a draft on the merchandise drawing the sum at the bank. The action on the part of the Japanese might be regarded as damage or the misappropriation of the money due to Plaintiffs.

Defendant's Counsel stated that unjust action specified in the Penal Code was different from damage referred in the Civil Code and that Plaintiffs' Counsel seemed to have mixed the features of the two laws as to the cause of his claim.

The Judge thereupon decided to examine the two men requested by Defendants' Counsel. The hearing was adjourned till November 27th.

THE NEW "RURIK."

A POWERFUL CRUISER FOR THE CZAR.

The Rurik—designated an armoured cruiser, but in some respects more closely resembling a battleship—built by Messrs. Vickers, Sons and Maxim, Limited, at their Naval Construction Works, Barrow-in-Furness, has concluded, with marked success, probably the most exhaustive series of trials yet specified for any warship, and left this country this week for Russia, to be added to the Navy of His Imperial Majesty the Czar. This vessel, says Engineering, which embodies not only the great experience of the Vickers Company, but also the valuable suggestions of the Russian Admiralty, as an outcome of the recent war, is in many respects as notable a departure from former practice in naval design as was the Dreadnought. Indeed, she is the antithesis of what has been called "a paper ship." In the first place, the Rurik has a very powerful armament, not only for service in the line of battle, but also for repelling torpedo-boat attack. All of the guns have a greater angle of elevation and depression than in previous ships, as well as a large arc of training, and all are operated by electrical mechanism. In the second place, this vessel is specially notable for the effective character of her defence, as she is armoured practically from the keel to the upper deck. In the third place, she has a great reserve of boiler power, the heating surface provided being equal to 2.86 square feet per indicated horsepower at full speed, and, as will presently be explained, was required to maintain full speed for three hours with only three-quarters of this boiler power, so that the full speed of 22 knots is more comparable with the speed attained, even in British practice, with only 75 per cent. of the boiler power. In the fourth place, the vessel carries a greater supply of ammunition than is usually provided, and was loaded down on her speed trials to a displacement exceeding by 3000 tons the correct displacement by the wishes of the Russian Commission. The exhaustive character of the ordnance trials, continues Engineering, is suggested by the fact that 100 rounds of ammunition—full charges—were fired from one of each type of gun, these guns being similar to the ship's guns, and built specially for trial purposes. Following this, thirty rounds were fired from two of the four 10-in. guns and two of the eight 8-in. guns, and fifteen from the other guns at various angles of elevation and depression, and on various bearings in order to test the mountings of the respective guns. The respective gun mountings were worked to give, when firing ten rounds, a rapidity of two rounds per minute from the 10-in. guns, of three rounds from the 8-in. guns, and of eight rounds from the 4.7-in., while the 47-millimetre guns fired at the rate of between twenty and thirty rounds, and the Maxim gun at about 500 rounds per minute. In regard to the defensive qualities of the design, the vessel has a complete belt from end to end extending to a considerable distance below the water-line. A feature is the range finding towers, of which there are two, extending for a considerable height above the upper deck, and constructed of 5-in. specially hardened armour. These, offer, independently of the mast, satisfactory observation stations for the determination of the range for gun-fire. There are protective decks of a combined thickness of 4 in., arranged so as to secure, as far as practicable, that all high explosive shells shall burst outside of the ship. The base of each of the three funnels is protected by armour casing. The whole of the machinery and magazines, which are under the water-line, are surrounded by armoured walls, which extend from the main deck through the protective deck to the bottom of the ship. This is in addition to the usual construction of double skin. Thus all the machinery and vital parts of the vessel are adequately protected by specially hardened armour. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the steam trials, adds Engineering, were those at full power. In the British service the maximum power of the machinery has to be maintained for eight hours. In the case of the Rurik this condition had to be kept up for ten hours, and, in addition, as we have already indicated, the vessel had to run for three hours at 21 knots with one-fourth of the boiler power entirely out of service. Moreover during the usual 24 hours completion trial, made immediately before the acceptance of the ship, and after the opening out of the machinery, it was decided to run the machinery for ten hours at full power. In the British service this commissioning 24 hours' trial very rarely includes more than one hour's run at full power. The Rurik on this trial made a splendid performance as the speed maintained for the ten hours was much more than that required by the contract. The mean indicated horse power was 20,675, as compared with 19,700 horse-power guaranteed, the mean revolutions being 141.6, against the 135 required for 21 knots. An important condition in the contract had reference to stability, and the specified metacentric height result was exceeded by about 10 per cent., with which result the Russian officers were highly pleased. Observation was also taken of the temperatures in various parts of the ship, &c. Indeed, from the first to the last the Russian Commission put the ship through a series of tests of a most searching character, and the result establishes that the severe conditions of the contract have been fulfilled, and that the Rurik is, from every standpoint, a remarkable ship of the line.

CUSTOMS PROTESTS.

Mr. S. Yamazaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs, passed a decision on Oct. 30th on a protest lodged by the China and Japan Trading Company, No. 89, Yamashita-cho. The firm imported "spring seats," "springs for railway carriage seats" and "bed springs," on which the appraisers imposed 30 per cent. ad val. duty in accordance with No. 406 of the general tariff. The importers contended that the goods were regarded as a kind of railway material and the duty should be ad val. 5 per cent. under a conventional tariff corresponding with No. 427 of the general statutory tariff. The Director dismissed the protest on the ground that the springs might be employed for sofas etc., not only for railway carriage seats.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FIVE cases of cholera are reported from Oita prefecture.

Two new cases of cholera were reported on Nov. 2nd, at Nishinomiya near Osaka.

FIRE broke out in South Senju, Tokyo, on the morning of November 2nd and destroying 35 houses.

MR. B. ICHIKAWA of Kofu, Yamanashi prefecture, has been elected a member of the House of Peers.

THE Prince Imperial was present at the graduation ceremony of the Tokyo Marine College which takes place on Nov. 2nd.

FIELD-MARSHAL Prince Yamagata left Tokyo on the evening of Nov. 4th for Kyoto, where he will spend some days for the sake of his health.

"AND WHAT," said the poet, "will you give me for this set of verses?" "Ten seconds' start," replied the editor dourly, laying his watch on the table.

S. SEKI AND K. YENDO, formerly employees of the Military Department, have been arrested on suspicion of having misappropriated an amount of money belonging to some officers while in employment at the office.

BARON MUMM VON SCHWARZENSTEIN, German Ambassador, gave a dinner party and subsequently a Ball this (Nov. 2nd) evening at the Embassy. About 200 Japanese and foreign distinguished persons were present.

NO PROBLEM, says Mr. Asquith, is more urgent than the question of unemployment. The Premier speaks feelingly. With all these curious results at bye-elections, the question of his own unemployment seems to be in the air.

A FOIGNANT CRY is that quarried by the Express from the dark depths of an American country paper. "If," says the editor of the latter, "we could collect all the bad debts owing to us from dead-beat subscribers, we would be rich beyond the dreams of avarice, and would wallow in the lap of luxury, as you might say."

THEY had been brought before the magistrate on a charge of fighting on the public highway. "I found them, your Worship," deposed the constable, "clutching one another and wrestling all over the road." One of the prisoners protested warmly. "Your Worship," he said, "it ain't true. We weren't fightin' when he copped us. We was a-trying to separate each other."

A NEW 442-MILE CANAL.

There is under construction at the present time, says Engineering, a work regarding which little is known by engineers in general or by the public, but which is unquestionably one of the most important pieces of engineering of the times. It comprises the "enlarging" of the existing Erie Canal, owned by the State of New York, which is the only water route, except the St. Lawrence River, between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic. Practically it means the construction of an entirely new system of canals, aggregating 442 miles in length, as the present ones provide a depth of not over 6 ft., while the new ones will have 12 ft., and for the greater portion of the length will be no different locations from the old route. An idea of the magnitude of the work can be gained from the fact that the estimated cost of the work is 101,000,000 dolrs. The engineering problems, owing to the necessity of interfering with private property and with navigation on the present canals as little as possible, and to the considerable depth needed for the navigation, have developed several features of interest. Among these will be a lock of a lift of 40 3/4 ft., with the lower gates of the lift type, as used on the 'Tellow Canal; a system of ten movable dams, with maximum lifts of 15 ft. and maximum depths on the sills of 20 ft.; a fixed dam whose spillway capacity will be automatically adjusted in a flood by siphons in the masonry; a masonry dam 1486 ft. long, with a lift of 30 ft. and a toe dam 316 ft. long, to provide a water-cushion over a soft stratum; another masonry dam 1919 ft. long with a lift of 27 ft.; an aqueduct carrying a prism of water 12 ft. deep, and from 90 ft. to 100 ft. in width, besides many structures of minor interest. The general features comprise the canalisation of three large rivers and three small ones; the provision of three large storage reservoirs for supplying the summit level of the Erie line; embankments and excavation in all classes of material, the former ranging to more than 70 ft. in height, and the latter to 65 ft. in depth; the re-location of parts of railways with bridges of all types.

THE NIPPON RACE CLUB.

We print the following exactly as received from the Jinn Tsushin:

"We have it from the authorities that in newspaper comments concerning the complaints raised by members of the Negishi Horse Race Co., relating to the sending back of the two copies of the programme of the horse race submitted to the Department of Home Affairs are founded upon misinformation. The two copies of the programme were sent to the Department as sample copies, but as the pamphlets lacked the formal application and the name of the publishers and the date of publication, the Home Department sent them back at the same time showing various legal forms connected with the same, but as the modus operandi is now gone through by applicants, the Home Department wrote them for the acceptance of the same and the authorities desired that the misrepresentations should be rectified."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I hope your readers will receive with more than the usual grain of salt the cable despatches, via London, containing an allegation of the existence of wholesale corruption in the recent Canadian elections.

It is not my intention to claim that public opinion in my own country is moulded on stricter lines than in the majority of other countries where responsible government exists, and it is one of the unfortunate associations of political liberty that it is too frequently accompanied with a degree of electoral corruption which all patriots would like to see completely eliminated.

Canada has gone through that fire, the refining influence of which is now reflected in the public and private lives of the leaders of both political parties, and is shown by their personal efforts in aiming at higher ideals of political integrity than perhaps existed in the Dominion twenty or thirty years ago.

As a sign of the times, I may be permitted to point out that in the Federal Parliament, immediately preceding the recent General Elections, the Government introduced legislation by which unusually severe amendments to the Election law were enacted.

Under the law as it now stands, the expenses of candidates are very much restricted,—no agent or representative of a candidate is allowed to receive a subscription towards the election expenses,—all monies must go direct to the candidate and all accounts be paid through his legal representative, and shall appear in his statement of receipts and disbursements,—no company or corporation is allowed to subscribe towards the expenses of a Parliamentary candidate,—and a sworn statement in detail of all expenses must be made by the candidate and his agent, and be published in the local newspapers within a certain period after the election.

The penalty for violation of any one of these clauses, as well as others of a restrictive character, is very severe,—disqualification and disfranchisement, from which there is no escape or appeal beyond the legal tribunals of the land.

It is not improbable that there may be occasional violations of the law, but it is equally certain that these must be, in view of the possible consequences, exceedingly limited. Wholesale corruption is absolutely out of the question.

I am not specially interested in defending either one Canadian political party or the other in addressing you on this question, but I have a vital interest in the reputation of my own country. The cable which is prompting these lines is about as reliable as the information that was recently published throughout the East, that the Foreign Office of Great Britain was preventing a mutual understanding between Turkey and Austria,—a statement which is now officially denied. One cannot avoid expressing regret that in the anxiety of certain cable correspondents to furnish reliable news, they so frequently fail to get beyond the point of simply furnishing sensational reading matter.

Notwithstanding the opinion that has been cabled to the East in regard to the Canadian election, I am satisfied that history will justify my claim that the present elections in Canada have been carried on with as few objectionable electoral methods as in countries where the highest ideals of political life exist, outside of the usual vituperation between the candidates and the press, which is unavoidable when the aims of human ambition are at stake.

Yours very truly,

CANADIAN.

REVIEWS AND REVIEWERS.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have read Mr. Denning's letter in your issue of the 28th instant, and am glad to find that no further words from me are needed to clinch what I urged in my previous letter as to the conspicuous unsuitability of Mr. Denning to be employed in the responsible work of theological reviewing by a paper of the general style and tone of the Japan Mail.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

THE MONTHLY SUMMARIES OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS, ETC.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the letter relating to the Monthly Summaries of the Japanese Religious Press appearing from time to time in the Mail, which you did me the honour to publish on the 26th instant, I incidentally deprecated, in a sentence of less than three lines, sneers at Sir Oliver Lodge from the writer of the Summaries in question. In his reply published in the Mail of to-day, the writer of the Summaries dismisses the principal contention of my letter with the statement that it is merely assertion without proof, just as he would be at liberty to dismiss any other inconvenient and indisputable statement; and he devotes eight-tenths of his letter to Sir Oliver Lodge, thus making it even clearer than before that he is ready to seize upon every opportunity for discrediting in the eyes of the uninformed the distinguished man of science who, while formulating his own creed and holding his own opinions on the subject of church polity, is an undoubted believer in those essential elements of the Christian religion which are the common property of all sections of the church, and a scientist whose powerful intellect is engaged in a splendid endeavour to reconcile the differences, or apparent differences, between religion and science.

With that air of lofty superiority, not to say arrogance, which, in the final analysis, is really accountable for almost everything that is objectionable in his writings, the writer of the Summaries, referring to my own letter, says "Traveller" should read what Professor Ray Lankester and men like him have to say on the line taken up by Sir Oliver." The assumption personal to myself involved in this statement I will pass over, at least for the present; but the implication that the ex-Director of the Museum of Natural History at South Kensington "and men like him" are of higher intellectual eminence than Sir Oliver Lodge (and necessarily than Sir William Crookes also) must be denounced as either the result of unpardonable ignorance or as wholly unworthy of the writer. Distance is usually conducive to accuracy of perspective, but in the case of the writer of these Summaries it is only too plainly the reverse.

Whether the psychical investigations of Sir Oliver Lodge and the criticisms they have evoked from certain men who have made no similar investigation themselves are to be regarded in their proper light or it be conceded for the sake of argument that the contention is merely one between different scientists of equal authority, to be put on the same plane as the dispute between the physicists and the geologists as to the age of the earth or that among bacteriologists as to the transmissibility of bovine tuberculosis: whatever view be taken of it, the fact remains that Sir Oliver's brilliant achievements as a discoverer have stamped him as one of the profoundest thinkers of the age and have entitled him to be listened to with the greatest respect when he places on record the results of his investigations—always stated in the most guarded terms—into the great problem of human personality. The writer of the Summaries will probably say once more that he has not called in question Sir Oliver's greatness as a scientist, but has merely pointed out the unworthiness of scientists in general when dealing with questions far removed from their own special line of inquiry. But he has invoked what he would have your readers believe is a higher scientific authority and he has certainly spoken contemptuously of Sir Oliver's investigations. And yet who shall say how far removed from, or how closely connected with, that mysterious realm in which Sir Oliver has achieved one of his greatest triumphs lies the key to the problem of the continuity of human personality, scientifically considered? What is that invisible sea in which the earth and all the heavenly bodies are swimming, so subtle that to quote Sir Oliver's own words, "It screams through them like wind through a grove of trees," the ether of space? If profound researches into its nature and laws do not add enormously to a man's equipment, both mental and moral, for the consideration of such a question as "If a man die, shall he live again?" then I do not know what would.

Consistently with his criticism of my "dragging in" Sir Oliver Lodge, the writer of the Summaries is careful not to "drag in" Sir William Crookes. He would be only too glad to have it supposed by the uninformed that Sir Oliver stands entirely alone in his little eccentricity, his slight aberration, his little escapade or whatever other name he would give the distinguished scientist's "communication with spirits." But in Sir William Crookes, another of the illustrious scientists of the age, Sir Oliver has an associate of the highest distinction, who stands on almost precisely the same ground as himself as regards the phenomena of human personality and the propriety of everything that can possibly throw light upon them being subjected to impartial scientific tests.

My object in writing the letter published on the 26th instant was not controversial any more than it is to-day in the writing of the present one. It was simply to let it be known that the interpolation of the Summarizer's individual opinions on religious matters in the Monthly Summaries of the Japanese Religious Press was objected to not merely by "clerics," but by at least one layman, and a layman not of strictly orthodox views. It is the unscientific spirit which, not invariably, I am glad to admit, but to a very large extent, animates the writing of the Summaries that renders them so objectionable. I have some acquaintance, and not a very small one, among scientific men on both sides of the Atlantic, and while many of them—probably a majority—are agnostics, their mental attitude towards religion, disclosed alike in their public work, their clubs and the intimacies of private life, affords a striking contrast to that of their would-be imitators in the Far East. Human emotions, human beliefs, the growth of religion in the individual and the race, the possibilities involved in what we call death—these are all eminently proper subjects for reverent scientific investigation and should be approached in that spirit. Apologizing for trespassing upon your space to so great length.

I am, faithfully yours,

TRAVELLER.

Yokohama, October 29.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It would seem after this welcome the American Fleet has received, that if there are any fools left in America who yet believe that Japan wants war with the U.S.A. or any other nation, they ought to be transported to the forefront of the world's next battle and given all of war that they expect.

We who love Japan and believe in her peaceful desires and intentions may be inclined to feel rather sorry for her in her great outlay for dinners, hunting and noise in expressing her welcome to the Fleet: on the other hand is it not a fair question to ask what would have been Japan's position to-day had it not been for the coming of that other fleet 50 years ago? Suppose that no other nation had come and awakened Japan by and to the Occidental touch: suppose that that first coming had been delayed even to years. What would have been Japan's position to-day?

Instead of being one of the strong powers of the world, how would she have met the oncoming encroachments of the paw of the Great Northern Bear?

Would there have been any occasion for General Kuropatkin to write a book and have it forbidden in Russia, and the more widely published to the world by being published in U.S.A. telling why and explaining how Russia was defeated by Japan?

If Japan had remained in her ancient condition even ten years longer, how effectively could the Great Japanese Dragon have wiggled even the tip of its tail as its head went into the Great Bear's mouth? Would there have been any flag of the Rising Sun? and if there were would there have been time for Japan to commit "hara kii" even after it was snatched away from her?—Heaven forgive us if we impute wrong motives to the Great Northern Bear!

But really is not the debt of love Japan owes to the U.S.A. a real one? Surely all this outlay in assurance of friendship was sincere and wise in Japan.

Yours, etc.,

H. F. P.

HAS "B" BEEN JUSTLY TREATED?

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have sent the following correspondence to the Kobe Herald, and as it is only fair to myself and the public that your readers should see it, I beg to enclose you a copy for publication:

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'KOBÉ HERALD'."

SIR,—I am extremely grateful to you for your courtesy and consideration in giving space to my letter of regret sent to you and the other Kobe paper at the time it was dispatched to the Japan Mail, especially as you were kind enough to recognize that in justice to the Japan Mail as its correspondent I could not without grave disservice enclose the usual card of identity. But in your comments on my letter you do me what is perhaps an unintentional injustice in failing to quote from your paper the passage upon which my remarks on the Naniwa races were based, and by suggesting that there was nothing published that would justify my remarks in the letter objected to by Kobe foreigners. Now I venture to maintain that no newspaper man, brought up with proper ideas as to public decorum among ladies and gentlemen, could sit down in his club and read over that report of the races, and then go back to his office and paraphrase the report with less indignation and fervour than my comments manifested. In the Kobe Herald of September 21st last we read: "Of foreigners present there were perhaps three score, including ladies. Despite the rule debarring ladies from entering the Parimutuel buildings the fair sex was just as well represented as on former occasions, and it was interesting to note the eagerness with which commissions to execute purchases were given and received." A little further on the report says: "When the earlier arrivals entered . . . they found notices prohibiting the sale of spirits. We understand these notices were posted up by order of the Basei Kyoku who were probably not aware that it would necessarily offend the majority if not all the foreign members and visitors. Needless to say strong representations were at once made to the Stewards, with the result that the ridiculous prohibition was at once removed. What the idea was we have not been able to ascertain. That it was due to a little excess of zeal to ensure good order is doubtless true, but then the officials when questioned frankly admitted that no trouble or disturbance of any kind had been previously encountered through the unrestricted sale of customary refreshments."

Here is a plain, unvarnished account of what the reporter saw. As it had been many weeks before the public without contradiction, was not any man justified in assuming it true? If he thought it true would he not be further justified in expressing his opinion of it for the sake of the public welfare, as well as an example of what the Japanese might rightly object to as the attitude of foreigners? It is seven years since I was sent to Japan and I presume I may be expected to have by this time grown accustomed to many strange eccentricities of occidental civilization endeavouring to survive on oriental soil, yet, in a moment, the unbringing of my native land revolted. I felt that here was the secret of Japanese aversion to the foreigner. Be patient enough to consider for a moment what the report states. The fair sex was as well represented as on former occasions; they were in the Parimutuel buildings; this was in spite of the rule's debarring them therefrom: i.e. they were defying the rules for regulating and ensuring proper conduct for women in a public place. The behaviour of the men was equally extraordinary. They were offended because notice prohibiting the sale of intoxicants were posted up. They made strong representations about this; they even questioned the officials. The authorities were obliged to remove the notices and provide the "refreshments." If this was not a contemptuous attitude towards authorities who were admittedly bent on securing good order, I should like to know what it is. Is there any important fact involved in my first letter to the Japan Mail that is not stated or implied in the original report itself? I claim that there is not. If the above report quoted verbatim from the newspaper is correct, I claim that I was justified as an Englishman in protesting against it. I did not do so directly, however, but simply used it as an example of the attitude of certain foreigners towards Japan and her laws, which is sure to militate against the freedom of those foreigners who are content with equal treatment with the citizens of this empire.

Now in my letter of apology which I felt justified in sending you on the understanding that the protest signed by certain Kobe gentlemen repudiated the report of the races, I assumed that the conduct alluded to had been denied, because my letter was alleged to be libellous; but in your comments on my letter you seem not to concede this. Am I, and the general public, now to understand that the Kobe business men mean to say that the conduct as reported in the Herald of September 21st did take place, that they approve of it, and regard any one who does not as a malicious libeller? Is this the general opinion of the business men of Kobe? All fair-minded men must agree with me that such an attitude cannot be justly maintained save on the ground that the report of the races in the issue of your paper named, is incorrect. If it is incorrect, I was not justified in using it as an example of what foreigners will do among Japanese, and I do the only thing any man can be expected to do, withdraw all I have said about it with ample and full apology for using it, with the sufficient excuse that, as it was the only full report of the races that appeared, I was justified in assuming its truth. But if the newspaper account which I have quoted above is in accord with the facts, there is not an honest minded man in all Japan who will deny me the same right to express my opinion on it that he must necessarily claim for himself, or to use it in any way legitimate with the wording of the report.

I am sorry to have to confess my conviction that an insufficient spirit of fairness has been marked on the side of my opponents during much of this discussion. As soon as the discussion began and my letter was objected to, a spirit of fairness would have suggested that the only proper course to pursue was to have at once shown the incorrectness of the report and my statement based thereon, and demanded a withdrawal and apology. Without the slightest disposition to do this, a campaign of abuse and calumny was directed at the writer personally; the main thing with the parties most interested was to identify the author rather than to get at the truth. Now everybody knows that the most adequate confession of "no case" is to engage in abuse of your opponent. I think I may honestly claim exemption from this attitude. I can only terminate the discussion by saying that I have tried to be fair to all concerned, and regret that my opponents do not seem to me to have done the same.

Yours, etc.,

"B."

THE BITTER CRY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The tale that I am about to write is from my forthcoming work, "The Bitter Cry of the Outcast Missionary" and you can print it or not as you please. If you do print it, it will be credited in the pages of the work itself, and if you do not print it, I can re-write it and leave it for my sons born in Japan to edit after I have passed over to the great majority. So there.

Once upon a time, when I was engaged in founding Saint Augustines-by-the-Sea, Santa Monica, California, a young man assisted me as a lay-reader with the name of E. F. Gee. He is now the Rector of Saint John's, Oakland, California, in the regular apostolic succession to the Rev. Father Ackerly of blessed memory. This young man had a slight touch of the Roman fever and was very fond of the society of a certain good old man who was the titular Bishop of Joppa. It is a neat little way of shelving Bishops that the Romans have that might be imitated by a certain communion that need not be mentioned at present. The alphabetical sprig of divinity aforesaid repeated to me at the breakfast-table the remark that had fallen from the aforesaid episcopal lips to the effect that "There was just as much evidence for the miracle at Lourdes as there was for the Resurrection of Jesus Christ."

My reply was to advise the young man to go back to the Right Reverend Father, give him my compliments and tell him that he was a very good Roman but a very poor Christian, and I was about to state my reasons when a voice behind me was heard "Egskuse me gentlemen, but dere was some differences in de agounts of dat resurrection."

I said to the person who had interrupted us "What are the differences?" "Oh!" said he, "you come to my library."

I said "Where is your library?" He then pointed a pudgy finger at his waistcoat, and said with dramatic impressiveness, "I am de Rabbi Schreiber!"

"Well," said I, "if you are the Rabbi Schreiber you are an educated man, and if you are an educated man you know the difference between what is subjective and what is objective: now if the miracle at Lourdes had come down and eaten and drunk with people, and had allowed herself to be handled saying—"A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have" there would have been some sense in the good bishop's remark." We sat near each other all summer, we met on the beach and compared our babies, we were the best of friends, but the good Rabbi Schreiber never repeated his invitation for me to visit his library.

Here endeth the lesson,

Your Servant, HENRY SCOTT JEFFERYS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Please allow me to add one item forgotten in the letter last night.

When the Rabbi Schreiber stated that there were some differences in the accounts of the Resurrection I said to him "Mention one difference that amounts to a contradiction." Then he invited me to his library.

Your Servant, HENRY SCOTT JEFFERYS.

"B."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The identity of your correspondent "B" has naturally been the subject of some discussion in Kobe, and it is agreed that the evidence points unmistakably to the one man above all others from whom we have a right to expect better things. Doubtless he flatters himself with the pleasing reflection that like the prophets of old he dares to denounce wickedness even though he himself is resident in its midst. I would suggest to him, however, that the parallel does not hold: the prophets, whose mantle he aspires to wear, were in the habit of delivering their denunciations in person, and did not adopt the cowardly expedient of publishing, by means of anonymous letters, charges which they could not, and did not intend to substantiate. "B" refers to the irritation which his letter has aroused. If he will remember that this irritation is due, rather to the circumstances of his attack than to the attack itself, the feeling of pride and self-satisfaction will give place to one of shame, and self-reproach. Can he wonder that the foreign community are irritated at finding that there is in their midst a man of their own colour, and their own race, so utterly devoid of the attributes of honesty and courage as your correspondent has shown himself to be?

Yours faithfully,

J. CLIFFORD-WILKINSON.

THE JAPAN BREWERY COMPANY CASE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The decision of the Yokohama District Court, published by the Mail this morning, in the suit brought nominally by Mr. Rosenthal against the liquidator of The Japan Brewery Company, Ltd., will doubtless be considered eminently proper by such of your readers as recall the facts of the case.

Since the affair is now open to public expression of opinion, unprejudiced persons may at length be permitted to declare surprise at the position taken up and maintained by the liquidator and his co-directors. It is no doubt true that the shareholders, at the general meeting of 13th February 1907, allowed a vote of sorts to be in a way passed, and this vote, although virtually, if not actually, a proposal of the directors themselves which would never have been adopted but for admitted supineness or fatuity on the part of the shareholders, might in ordinary circumstances have been conclusive. But in such a matter, involving the free gift by one party and acceptance by another of a large sum of money, it is generally considered essential that the act of the giver should, be yond question, be, if not spontaneous, at least whole-hearted. That it was altogether the reverse of this in the Brewery Company's case was shown unmistakably by proceedings which immediately followed, for the shareholders protested in every way they could that they had been taken unawares at the meeting and that they had time for consideration been given them, they would not have allowed the vote to be recorded without great modification. In view of this protest—which further declared the shareholders' unwillingness to make a present of so much hard cash to the directors—and also bearing in mind the very questionable regularity of the vote itself, it was the opinion of many people at the time that the gentlemen on the board might well have consulted their own dignity by relinquishing the hold that had involuntarily been permitted them, and by giving the shareholders an opportunity of announcing their real wishes. The failure of the directors to take this course occasioned the surprise which has been referred to.

It is to be hoped that the decision now given will be accepted as final and that the last has been heard in public of an incident by no means in keeping with the deservedly high reputation which The Japan Brewery Company enjoyed up to the time proceedings for its winding-up were commenced.

Yours, etc., OLD SHAREHOLDER.
Yokohama, 3rd November 1908.

RACE-BOOKS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—With reference to your reprint from the Jiyu Tsushin, I beg to inform you that the matter, unless contradicted, is likely to lead to some misunderstanding.

On Saturday the 24th October a cover containing 2 Race Books, 2 Complimentary Tickets and 2 Ladies' Tickets with a card bearing the words "with the Compliments of the Nippon Race Club," was sent to the Naimusho as is usually done at all Meetings of the Nippon Race Club. On the 29th October the Books, Tickets, etc., were returned through the Post and on the same date a letter was received saying that the Club had not complied with the regulations of the department, and a specimen form of application was enclosed; this matter was promptly attended to. Since then no communication has been received.

As the Race Book, which is nothing more than a Programme of the Meeting, has been issued in a similar form for nearly 43 years without any comment, or instructions, from the Authorities, no change was made in the present instance.

I remain, Dear Sir, Yours faithfully,

GEO. HOOD,
Secretary.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

London, October 29.

The Servian Skupshchina has appealed to the Duma to help to prevent the accomplishment of Austria's aggression against Bosnia.

Austria has completed the evacuation of Novi-bazar.

CRETE.

The protecting Powers in a Note to the Cretan Government intimate that they will benevolently consider Crete's position and treat with Turkey on her behalf, if order is maintained and the Mussulmen protected.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan are afoot from dawn to night, stumping the country preparatory to the Presidential election.

THE INTERVIEW WITH THE KAISER.

Later.

The Telegraph's interview is officially admitted in Berlin to be substantially correct. The Kaiser's statements are universally commented on. It is declared in Paris that the Kaiser himself projected the Franco-Russian intervention at the time of the South African War, but made acceptance conditional on re-ratification of the Frankfort Treaty. It was thus that the projected intervention collapsed.

THE KAISER'S LATEST INDISCRETION.

London, October 30.

The storm raised by the Kaiser's remarks continues. Everybody is irritated by His Majesty's double-edged indiscretions. The English are calm. They regard bygones as bygones, and consider that the Kaiser means well, but that he has missed the mark in attempting to deduce a reason for the necessity of a powerful navy.

The German newspapers are extraordinarily outspoken, condemning the Kaiser's impulsiveness and disregard of his ministers. They deplore the reference to the Yellow Peril, whereby old sores are needlessly reopened.

Lord Roberts declines to say anything concerning the Kaiser's plan of campaign.

Later.

The interest in the Kaiser's utterances is unabated. The German Press is especially angry that a plan of campaign should have been furnished against a kindred people, namely, the Boers.

The papers are full of secret history about the attitude of Europe during the Boer war. They assert that Russia sent 50,000 troops to Kushk, besides concentrating 176,000 in Trans-Caspia, with a view to menacing India. The Boxer outbreak saved the peace of Europe.

THE KAISER'S INTERVIEW.

FRENCH PRESS REMINISCENCES.

London, October 29.

The French press revive the stories of France, Germany, and Russia colloquing (? conspiring) together at the time of the Fashoda incident with a view to expelling the British from Egypt, and recall the German proposals on behalf of the Boers at the time of the Kruger telegram.

ENGLISH PRESS COMMENT.

October 30.

Interest in the Kaiser's interview is unabated. The Chronicle says the moral of the episode is that Germany will have a strong navy. The Daily News says that the Kaiser unconsciously proves the impossibility of England concluding an entente with Germany.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

October 30.

The Bulgarian reply to the Anglo-French-Russian Note promises that Bulgaria will do her utmost to reach an understanding with Turkey.

Prince Ferdinand, in opening the Sobranje, said the Government would indemnify persons affected by the seizure of the railway, and hoped that the good-will of the Powers would be assured. Bulgaria was desirous only of pacific development.

October 30.

The Montenegrins have posted guns on the mountains along the Bosnian frontier. The whole population is in arms.

October 31.

The visit of the Servian Crown Prince to St. Petersburg is stirring up the Slav fraternity. A great pro-Russian demonstration has taken place at Belgrade.

Later.

The Tsar has had an interview with the Crown Prince of Servia lasting for an hour.

Every soldier in Montenegro has received 500 rounds of ammunition.

SHAH RESORTS TO ARMOUR.

October 31.

The Shah has obtained a patent bullet-proof jacket.

TO INCULCATE TEMPERANCE.

Later.

Dr. Alexander Ure, Solicitor-General for Scotland, speaking at Coatbridge, said that if the Licensing Bill is thrown out or mangled by the Lords, the Government will impose a special license duty which would have the effect of closing one-quarter of the total number of public-houses.

TURKISH REGIMENT MUTINIES AND IS FIRED ON.

October 31.

Five reactionary regiments from the garrison of Constantinople have been ordered to Hedjaz. One mutinied and the new troops from Salonika fired upon it, killing and wounding many.

BUELOW ASSUMES RESPONSIBILITY.

Prince Buelow has assumed responsibility for the Kaiser's interview. He offered to resign but the Emperor refused to accept his resignation.

A German semi-official statement has appeared saying that the Kaiser submitted the draft of the interview to Buelow, who passed it on without objection. Buelow admitted that if he had read the interview he would never have permitted its publication.

ROYAL MESSAGE TO INDIA.

London, November 2.

On the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the taking over of the territories of the East India Company King Edward has sent a message to the people of India foreshadowing the earliest possible extension of the principle of representative institutions, promising substantial appreciation of the faithfulness of the Indian troops and announcing remission of all penal sentences.

THE FAMOUS INTERVIEW.

VEHEMENT CRITICISM BY THE GERMAN PRESS.

The German Press is more excited than ever over the now famous interview. It criticizes vehemently the crass blunders which have been committed over great affairs, and suggests that Buelow is too ready to comply with the Emperor's wishes.

MUTINY IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

The Sultan has ordered the death penalty for the leaders of the mutiny, and severe punishment for the others.

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK RESIGNS.

London, November 3.

The Archbishop of York has resigned on account of ill-health.

THE KAISER'S INTERVIEW.

It appears that the Daily Telegraph's Kaiser article was compiled by an Englishman as the result of conversations with the Emperor. Various Englishmen have at different times asked permission to publish similar articles.

The Kaiser has had a two and a half hours' interview with Prince Buelow. Crowds waited outside.

The German papers declare that the Reichstag, assembling on Nov. 4th, will want to know the Emperor's position, and whether Prince Buelow does not read documents merely because they are imperial.

The German Foreign Office, to which Prince Buelow passed on the Kaiser's interview, explains that its officials imagined that publication had already been decided upon, and that they were only required to check its historical accuracy.

Later.

The German Press is clamouring for the retirement of Prince von Buelow.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

The Russian papers are strongly opposing the conference unless it includes territorial compensation to Serbia and Montenegro. Many oppose recognition of the annexation of Bosnia altogether and urge refusal of the conference.

The Servian Government in an official communiqué enumerates the steps taken to avoid provocation.

Austria awaits the result of the conference hopefully.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The betting in regard to the elections is 8 to 1 on Taft and 5 to 4 on Hughes for Governor of New York.

THE EMPEROR'S PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Haldane, Secretary for War, replying to Mr. William Redmond, said the War Office archives do not contain such a document as the Kaiser's plan of campaign.

RUSSIA AND SERBIA.

The Crown Prince of Serbia has left St. Petersburg. - It is officially stated that Russia informed the Crown Prince that she is prepared to give Serbia her moral support on condition that the Servians abstain from acts of provocation. The Servians infer that Russia will not recognize the annexation of Bosnia.

ILLNESS OF GERMAN FOREIGN SECRETARY.

The German Foreign Secretary Schoen has been suddenly taken seriously ill. Pending his recovery Kiderlen Waechter has been transferred from Bukharest to act as locum tenens.

THE NEW TRIPLICE.

M. Clemenceau, in an interview, declared that Great Britain, France and Russia were never so loyally united in the determination to secure the peace of Europe and respect for liberty.

ENGLISH MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

London, November 3. Up to midnight on the 2nd inst., the returns of the Municipal Elections in England and Wales show Conservatives 128 Liberals 31, Labour 11, Socialists 9 gains (?)

THE BALKAN SITUATION.

London, November 4. The Balkan situation is complicated by the announcements, on the one hand, that Russia has submitted to the Powers a programme for the conference and on the other hand that she has intimated that she can not recognize the annexation of Bosnia. It is unquestionable that Austria is steadily pushing forward her military preparations.

THE AMERICAN ELECTIONS.

A notable feature of the American elections is the comparatively small public interest displayed, due to the absence of any novelty in either candidate. Much depends on the vote in New York.

TAFT ELECTED: HEAVIEST VOTE ON RECORD.

Mr. Taft has been elected President. The voting was the heaviest on record.

THE COTTON STRIKE.

Later. After abortive conferences with the employers all the cotton operative organizations have decided to ballot on the question of continuing or ending the struggle.

RUSSIA AND AUSTRIA.

An official note from St. Petersburg says that the Russo-Austrian negotiations are following a passively normal course.

OBITUARY.

Major Sir Edward Fitzgerald Law, K.C.M.G., etc., who has been Financial member of the Council in India, and delegate on the boards of various financial institutions in which British interests are involved, is dead.

INDIA AND TIBET.

London, November 4.

Mr. Morley, Secretary of State for India, say that he has no intention of taking any steps, in existing circumstances, with a view to the establishment of postal telegraph services between India and Lhasa.

RUSSIA'S NOTE TO VIENNA UNFRIENDLY.

A Russian note with regard to the Balkan Crisis has been presented at Vienna where official quarters regard it as distinctly unfriendly. Anxiety is felt as to the next developments at St. Petersburg.

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE IN GERMANY.

The German Federal Council on Foreign Affairs, which meets only with regard to cases of supreme importance, has been summoned to confer with Prince Buelow.

TAFT'S PLURALITIES.

Mr. Taft's plurality in New York State is estimated at 200,000, and he has carried all important doubtful states though his pluralities are considerably below those of Roosevelt in 1904.

THE AMERICAN ELECTIONS.

London, November 5. Hughes has been elected Governor of New York. The composition of Congress will be practically unchanged. Bryan carried the South solid.

THE REICHSTAG MEETS.

The Reichstag has met. Buelow and the other ministers were absent. Interpellations regarding the Kaiser's interview were adjourned.

BELGRADE ALARMED.

There is great excitement and alarm in Belgrade owing to Austria concentrating her forces on the Yovno (?) thirty miles from the Servian capital, entrenching along the frontier, seizing the island in the Danube, and posting six guns there. The Treasury banks are removing their bullion to the interior, and war stores are being hastily imported.

GERMANY CREATES A DIVERSION.

Later. The French Press is excited about the Casa Blanca deadlock. It ascribes Germany's revival of the apology question (apology to the Consul at Casa Blanca) to a desire to divert German attention from the Kaiser's interview.

THE QUESTION OF BUELOW'S RESIGNATION.

The crisis connected with the question of Buelow's resignation is apparently over. The leaders of the bloc party do not desire any change owing to considerations of internal politics.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION: RESULT.

[SPECIAL FROM NEW YORK.]

Taft has been elected President by a large majority.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

THE GERMAN SENSATION.

London, October 29. Considerable stir has been created by the publication of the alleged statements of the German Emperor to the effect that Germany refused to join a Franco-Russian combination against Great Britain at the time of the Boer War, and that Germany must have a powerful fleet because of Japanese power in the Pacific and the possible national awakening of China. Paris thinks that the statements have been published in order to sow dissension in Europe. The Times asks, if the German Navy is intended for use in the Pacific, why the great force accumulated in the Baltic and the North Sea, and why a navy of such small coal capacity?

A WAVE OF SLAVONIC SYMPATHY.

London, October 30.

From St. Petersburg comes the disquieting news that a wave of popular feeling for the Slavs in the Balkans is spreading everywhere. The Servian Crown Prince and Premier are confident that Russia will refuse to sanction the annexation of Bosnia.

The position of M. Iswolsky is difficult, as he has many enemies at Court. If M. Iswolsky's statement of explanation to the Duma be long delayed, he will be compelled to resign.

BULGARIA GIVES PACIFIC ASSURANCES.

A special announcement comes from Sofia to the effect that Bulgaria has promised the Powers that she will not call out her reserves, but will make every effort to attain an understanding with Turkey.

AN EMPEROR CRITICIZED.

Later. In Berlin the Emperor's statements and his British policy are sharply criticized.

M. ISWOLSKY.

London, October 31. As a result of an audience with the Tsar M. Iswolsky has secured himself in his present position.

THE TSAR AND SERVIAN ASPIRATIONS.

The Tsar has received in audience the Servian Crown Prince in the most gracious manner. While expressing sympathy with Servian aspirations the Tsar inculcated the necessity of calmness in view of the impending negotiations.

THE REAL ISSUE IN THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Taft in a special statement to The Times says that the real issue of the campaign is whether the policy wherewith the Republicans have identified themselves shall be continued and whether Roosevelt's work of regeneration shall be clinched, so as neither to cripple nor kill the national industries. Mr. Bryan says the question is, "Shall the people rule?"

THE WESTERN STATES AND THE FLEET'S RECEPTION.

London, November 2.

Washington.—While thanking the Japanese for their lavish hospitality to the Fleet the Western States are somewhat distrustful.

A Californian paper remarks that the immigration problem is still unsettled and the recent courtesies make a settlement more difficult. Perhaps the Japanese recognize that many Americans think it would be a shabby return to exclude the Japanese.

PRINCE VON BUELOW.

London, November 2.

Berlin.—Under the influence of the stormy protest provoked among the public in connexion with the publication of the Kaiser's conversations, Prince von Buelow, the German Chancellor has tendered his resignation. His Majesty, however, refused to accept it. It is rumoured that Herr von Schoen German Minister for Foreign Affairs, has resigned in connexion with the affair. The statement that some of the officials of the Foreign Office erroneously assumed the document to be intended for publication is regarded as of the feeblest. The Times says that by the Imperial admission, a majority of the Germans are unfriendly towards Great Britain and that the British Parliament should immediately announce an intention to build a greater number of battleships.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

London, November 3. Despatches from Vienna report that according to a telegram from St. Petersburg, Russia intends not to recognize the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and that consequently the proposed international conference will not be held. An unpleasant impression is being created, though in official circles it is not regarded as probable that Russia has suddenly assumed this impossible attitude.

THE FAMOUS INTERVIEW.

Vienna.—Though it is suggested in Berlin that the supporters of Prince von Buelow may save him from the apparent necessity of resigning his position, it is widely thought in Vienna that German prestige is badly damaged in consequence of the publication of the Kaiser's interview.

TAFT ELECTED.

London, November 4. New York.—All the papers announce that Taft has been elected. He carried the New England States by larger majorities than Roosevelt.

TURCO-BULGARIAN NEGOTIATIONS.

Constantinople.—The Turco-Bulgarian negotiations have begun.

THE KING'S MESSAGE.

Bombay.—Despite some newspaper carplings the King's message has been received with profound satisfaction and thankfulness, because of its liberal recognition of the hopes and aspirations of intellectual Indians.

THE ANARCHY IN NORTHERN PERSIA.

London, November 5. It is learned on excellent authority that in consequence of the anarchy prevailing in Northern Persia Russian troops may shortly enter. St. Petersburg says that the Russian residents at Tabriz are sending their families home. The Russian Government is unwilling that its actions should be misrepresented. It will doubtless remain passive until a crisis supervenes, or until Great Britain suggests precautionary measures.

BRYAN'S CONSOLATION.

New York.—Bryan confidently expected the landslide. He will probably continue his lecturing, as his lectures produce £100 a night. His newspaper, too, is very profitable.

TROUBLED WATERS.

Berlin.—A communication has appeared in a Frankfurt journal complaining of the attitude of the French Government, and saying that Casa Blanca affairs are becoming very difficult. It is thought that this is connected with a desire on the part of the Government to mobilise, and that it has inspired the Press to bring pressure on France.

Paris.—The conviction is increasing everywhere that, in order to distract public attention from the scandal connected with the Imperial statement, Buelow is assuming an irreconcilable attitude about Morocco and the Casa Blanca affair, in spite of French readiness to submit the whole question to arbitration. The German Government is continually objecting. It proposes as a preliminary an apology to the Consul at Casa Blanca. The French are gravely annoyed. Germany seems to be manoeuvring to reduce the arbitration to a farce.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

IMMIGRANTS INTO CANADA.

With reference to the sum of money carried by immigrants into Canada, the Central Government of that country has issued a new Order revising the regulation hitherto in force, in the sense that from the 1st of January next until the 15th of February, persons of 18 years of age or upwards, whether male or female, must be in possession of at least $50 (gold) at the time of landing. But this does not apply to persons who have certain fixed employment, or who actually have in Canada friends or relatives willing to assist them. From the 15th of February until further orders, the sum to be possessed by each immigrant is fixed at $25 (gold).

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN")

THE FAMOUS INTERVIEW.

Prince Buelow has had a 3 hours' audience of the Kaiser in connexion with the former's proposal to resign on account of the publication of his Sovereign's views. Inasmuch, however, as the Chancellor had no previous knowledge of the intention to make such a publication, the Emperor has declined to sanction his resignation.

The German papers are severely criticising the Foreign Office for incapacity. They claim that the whole staff of that Department should be changed.

THE HONGKONG BOYCOTT.

The boycott in Hongkong is very strong. There is no prospect of any sale of Japanese goods at present, and the Chinese merchants in Nagasaki have received telegrams warning them not to ship any merchandise.

(SPECIAL TO THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

INTERPORT BASEBALL.

Yokohama has won the first game of the Interport Baseball Match by four runs to three, and the second by eight to four.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

TAFT ELECTED.

Mr. Taft has been elected by a large majority.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

It is stated that Mr. Taft's majority in New York was 200,000 and in Illinois 50,000.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

BOYCOTTING IN HONGKONG.

Hongkong, 1st November, 8.50 p.m.

(From the Japanese Consul.)

Of late the promoters of the boycott have developed much strength. Between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. to-day a riot arose. The stores of Chinese dealers in marine products were entered, and over 100 bales were carried off or thrown in the sea. At 4 p.m. I repaired to the scene but things were already quiet. The police had stopped traffic and about 6 of the rioters had been arrested.

2nd November, 3.10 p.m.

The riots re-commenced last night at 7 o'clock. The stores where towels, shoes and other Japanese goods were on sale were invaded and wrecked. On receipt of this news I proceeded at once to the spot—at 10 p.m.—and remained for about one hour. There were many people but things were quite quiet. The places which had suffered were deserted. According to the Sinh China Daily News 4 or 5 stores and warehouses were invaded. It is said that the leaders of the mob came from Canton. Since yesterday about 100 rioters have been arrested.

9.40 p.m., November 2.

From 11 a.m. to-day the boycotters made a violent disturbance and although the police exerted all their strength they could not quell the rioters, who showed great adroitness in evading them. The police being unable to cope with the situation, two companies of troops were called out and by 2 p.m. tranquillity was restored. Precautions are to be adopted this evening also. The number of arrests made reaches 106. The Hongkong authorities state that about 500 loafers arrived in the colony from Canton and that according to the police report the disturbance was caused by these men. No violence has been perpetrated so far towards any Japanese subject. When I passed along the streets there were merely cries of "boycott" "boycott" but there were no hostile acts. Owing to rumours that certain Japanese subjects are projecting armed reprisals to-night, the police officials and the Government have requested that steps may be taken to prevent anything of the kind, and although I do not see any chance of such procedure I have replied that the principal stores have been warned in that sense.

5.40 a.m.

Since last night up to the present time perfect order prevails in Chinese town. The authorities consider that there is no fear of a recurrence. The losses incurred by the Chinese traders are estimated at from thirty to a hundred thousand dollars.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

VLADIVOSTOCK.

St. Petersburg, October 28.

The financial committee of the Duma have considered a bill providing for the abolition of Vladivostock as a free port.

THE DUMA.

The Constitutional Democrats, Popular Party, and October Party have jointly made enquiry, as an urgent motion, of the Minister for Home Affairs, with respect to the allegation that the police interfered with the meeting which some of the parties held on Oct. 27th to discuss the Near Eastern question. The motion was adopted.

M. ISWOLSKY.

It is rumoured that Mr. Iswolsky will resign, and that his resignation is connected with the negotiations in Berlin, which are alleged to have ended unfavourably for Russia.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg, October 29.

The Servian National Assembly has addressed a telegraphic message to the Russian Duma expressing its sincere desire that Russia would save Servia from her threatened fate by disapproving Austria's annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The address added it was the Servians' lot to die for the cause of liberty, they would willingly lay down their lives.

The special Servian Envoy has said to a press representative that Servia has hitherto acted on the advice of the Powers and pursued a peaceful policy. If the international agreement proved to be unreliable and the Powers sympathised with an unjust cause, she would not hesitate to take free action to protect her own interests. On October 29th the Envoy interviewed M. Iswolsky and repaired directly to the Peterhof Palace in company with the Russian Foreign Minister to have audience of the Tsar.

THE AMERICAN FLEET AT AMOY.

Amoy, October 30.
At 7 a.m. on Oct. 30th the American Fleet in one line arrived at Amoy. The Hai Chi and two other warships of the reception squadron received the visitors at the entrance of the harbour. After the American battleships anchored at the positions by the Chinese assigned them the usual salutes were exchanged. The Chinese reception committee visited Rear-Admiral Sperry on his flagship.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

San Francisco, October 31.
All the candidates are in full activity. Mr. Taft Mr. Bryan were in New York on Oct. 29th, and Sherman, Republican candidate for the Vice-Presidency, in Albany, and Mr. Kahn, Democratic candidate for the Vice-Presidency, in Indiana. The members of the Ministry, excepting Mr. Metcalf, Secretary for the Navy, were busily working as supporters of Mr. Taft.

The chief secretary of the House of Representatives has published an estimate as to the number of the Republican and Democratic representatives to be elected. According to the estimate, the Republicans will number 227 and the Democrats 164. This forecast seems to have encouraged the Republicans.

Mr. Woodruff, the Chief of the Republican committee, has declared that Mr. Taft would poll 120,000 votes and Hughes (the candidate for the governorship of New York) 75,000 votes in the State of New York.

Mr. Bryan made a radical speech on Friday in Ohio. Referring to the statement of Mr. Rockefeller, the Kerosene King, that he would support Mr. Taft, the speaker said that the Republicans, sacrificing the welfare of the nation, had joined the trusts and other like associations.

PRINCE VON BUELOW.

San Francisco, October 31.
In connexion with the interview of a representative of the Daily Telegraph with the Kaiser, Prince von Buelow, German Chancellor, has tendered his resignation. His Majesty, it is expected, will not accept it.

MR. METCALF.

It is rumoured that Mr. Metcalf, American Secretary for the Navy, has tendered his resignation because of illness, though probably he will stay on in his position until President Roosevelt's term expires.

THE AMERICAN FLEET AT AMOY.

Discord has risen between the United States and China with regard to the visit of the former's squadron to Amoy. According to one telegram, most of the Chinese officials and citizens in Peking were ignorant of the visit of the Fleet. After the sincere and stately reception accorded to the Fleet in Japan, dissatisfaction is arising in the United States as to the arrangements for the reception at Amoy. Some American newspapers ridicule the Sino-American alliance proposed in a certain quarter.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT,

New York, November 3.

President Roosevelt has decided to leave on March 12th for Africa. Mr. C. Thomson will give the President a passage on one of his steamers and will take part in the African expedition. Mr. Thomson will also convey the President to Japan by the same steamer on the conclusion of the tour.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. Taft has obtained 320 ballots to Mr. Bryan's 163. Mr. Taft was specially successful in New York and Ohio.

MR. HUGHES.

San Francisco, November 4.

It is believed that Mr. Hughes, the present Governor of New York, has been re-elected with a plurality of 57,000 votes.

THE AMERICAN CONGRESS.

A general election for the American Congress took place simultaneously with that for the Presidency. The result was practically the same as before.

(FROM THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

AMERICAN BASEBALL PLAYERS.

San Francisco, November 4.
Mr. Fischer, a baseball player wellknown in the United States, and a party consisting of 26, left San Francisco to-day for Honolulu, Japan, China and Manila. They intend to spend six months in the foregoing cities and countries.

THREATENED WITH LIFE-LONG AGONY

From Dreadful Humour on Face and Scalp—Under Medical Care for Months—Suffered for 3 Years and Despaired of Cure—Now Well.

CALLS THE CUTICURA REMEDIES MARVELLOUS

"I suffered for two and a half, I may say three, years from terrible eruptions of the skin and scalp. My face was so broken out and my head was so bad that I could scarcely wash my face or comb my hair. I went to a doctor in Dublin for about three months. He gave me a lotion and pills, but they proved of no use whatsoever. So I came to the conclusion that I could not be cured when this doctor's remedies were no good."

"About two years and five months after trying his treatment a friend was telling me of the Cuticura Remedies. I got a supply and continued with the treatment for two months when my skin became completely free from any sores. I must say that only for the marvellous Cuticura Remedies I should have been in agony all my life, and I am deeply grateful to Cuticura. I also know friends who have used Cuticura. Mrs. M. #### DR. SVEN HEDIN.

HIS SECOND JOURNEY IN TIBET.
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Simla, September 16.

Dr. Sven Hedin's recent explorations, which began in August, 1906, furnish another proof of the remarkable endurance and endless resource with which he gained his previous successes in Tibet. On his first journey he could only enter Tibet via Chinese Turkestan. He skirted the Aksai Chin desert, explored the unknown triangular tract between the routes of Welby, Bower, and De Rhins, and pushed boldly to the south-east, crossing the gigantic mountain range and reaching Shigatse. Thence he returned towards Ladakh, discovering and examining the sources of the Brahmaputra, the Sutlej, and the Indus. Details of these discoveries have already been published, but the story of his second journey, beginning on December 4, 1907, remains to be told.

THE START FROM KASHMIR.

The Tibetans and Chinese authorities being fully alert, strategy alone could make possible any fresh exploration. An entirely fresh caravan was organized at Leh, in Kashmir, while the traveller halted at Durgu. This prevented any possible recognition by old attendants. The report was industriously spread that the caravan would follow the route to Peking through Bhotan, and the story was believed by the Tibetan spies. The caravan, consisting of 11 men with 40 animals and three months' supply of provisions, started north, but two days short of the Karakoram Pass turned due east.

HARDSHIPS OF THE JOURNEY.

The explorer immediately began to encounter hardships. Snow fell continuously and the animals began to die, but the Aksai Chin Lake was reached in January. There a connexion was established with the observations made for a map on the first journey. Thereafter the difficulties increased; snow fell day and night and the road became obliterated. The caravan was in terrible straits, and it seemed hopeless to expect to survive. The lowest temperature, —39.8 Centigrade, was registered on January 15. Dr. Sven Hedin's feet were partly frozen and all the sheep taken with them for food died. Eventually the party reached Shemanto, where Rawling had been. No sign [of life?] had been seen for 64 days, but friendly nomad hunters now provided the expedition with antelope and sheep.

A march of 20 days to the east-south-east followed, Lemchang Lake being passed. Several gold-fields were seen on this section of the route, but they were deserted, as the miners only work during the summer. Evidence of water channels for washing the gold out of the earth proved that the industry was carried on on a fairly large scale between latitudes 32 and 34. It is reported that a regular staff of Tibetan officials controls the mines.

INTO THE UNKNOWN.

A point had now been reached where a plunge into the unknown had to be made. Dr. Sven Hedin had so far travelled in European dress and furs, but at this stage everything indicating the nationality of the wearer was burned with the boxes containing the observation instruments. The latter, with the money, were hidden in bags of rice. The traveller assumed the guise of a common Ladakhi, painted his hands and face daily a dark colour, and whenever nomads were met drove the baggage and sheep as the inferior servant of the nominal head of the caravan, Abdul Karim, a trustworthy man familiar with Tibet. Dr. Sven Hedin assumed the name of Haji Baba. The appearance of Ladakhis in the winter aroused constant suspicion, but the story was told that a Ladakh chief wished to buy wool in the summer and send thousands of sheep to the grazing grounds. The nomads frequently asserted that a European was in the caravan, but discovery was always prevented.

From the middle of February a furious south-west gale set in and lasted two months, carrying with it sand and small stones, which made exposure to the full blast impossible, and the tents could not be pitched. Once Dr. Sven Hedin and two others got separated from the caravan and were lost in the storm, but succeeded in rejoining the route south-east. The storm was in one sense favourable, as it obliterated all tracks.

The unknown tract ended at Tongtso, just north of latitude 32, where the routes of Nain Singh, Littledale, and Sven Hedin himself in 1901 crossed, thus establishing fresh connexion with past mapping. But for the prohibition of the Tibetan authorities, Tongtso could have been reached in two months direct from Gaskok, but Dr. Sven Hedin said that his détour was valuable, as an unexplored region was crossed, while experience was gained of winter climatic conditions.

On March 8 he suddenly came across stone houses, the residence of the local chief, but only a high lama from Lhasa was present, living in a great tent, which was a movable temple, similar to that of the Kalmucks on the Volga. Religious rites are thus performed among the nomads.

Dr. Sven Hedin then went along the northern edge of the great tract between latitudes 30 and 32, stretching from his old route to the Brahmaputra, which was the great object of his journey. He marched due south, crossing several ranges, all running east and west. The country was bare, and he obtained food from the nomads. He passed the enormous ice mountain of Shakangsham on the east, from which flowed the big river. Thence he went over the Ladang pass into the open valley, and the Bonga province, which no European has ever entered, and whose name is almost unknown lay open before him.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DETECTION.

Precautions were here redoubled, as the encampments were constantly watched by Tibetans, who were always spying. Dr. Sven Hedin, dressed as a sheep driver, evaded suspicion, but his position became suddenly critical as a rich old merchant from Lhasa, who controls the whole of the wool trade, grew suspicious and sent word to the Governor. Dr. Sven Hedin was nearly detected making barometric observations, but he saved himself by running towards the hills, pretending to search for a strayed caravan of animals. The Governor failed to appear, and the march was diverted to the mountainous country.

Dr. Sven Hedin then discovered Lake Chunitso, following the west shore for a whole day. There he saw caravans of sheep carrying salt, and first heard of the great salt lake of Tabia Tsakha, which is a source of considerable wealth to the Government, the salt being exported in large quantities east and south, also into Nepal.

A GREAT MOUNTAIN RANGE.

Two more ranges were crossed, and then the open plain was reached, bounded southwards by that great mountain range, 2,000 miles long, which stretches east and west. It is the grandest physical feature north of the Brahmaputra Valley. Snow and glaciers everywhere bounded the horizon.

Dr. Sven Hedin was rewarded by discovering the continuity of the chain. Nain Singh in 1865, Rawling and Ryder in 1903, and Dr. Sven Hedin himself in 1906 had seen some of these lofty peaks, but no one had approached them from the north between longitudes 84 and 85. The pass called Samyela, 18,000 ft. high, gave approach to the watershed between Central Tibet and the Brahmaputra. This was the eighth time Dr. Sven Hedin had crossed this great range at various points, naming it originally Ninchantangla, after the high peak of 23,900 ft. which springs up from the southern shore of the Lake of Tengri, not far distant to the eastwards.

When leaving Ladakh the explorer thought that he would be satisfied with exploring Bonga and testing the continuity of the range, afterwards reaching India via Nepal or Shigatse, but the success gained stimulated him to solve the problem of Chaitansango, a big affluent of the Brahmaputra. He found that its course had been wrongly marked on the maps. Chaitansango is fed from the huge snow peaks, a lake being formed whence the river reaches the Brahmaputra.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERIES

Journeying onwards, Dr. Sven Hedin found himself at last involved in difficulties with the Tibetan officials. Passing through a nomad encampment, he refused the offer of guides, though heavy snow was falling, wishing to avoid Raga, above the Brahmaputra valley. While he was making the usual daily observations, a party of chiefs with an armed escort appeared. They had orders, they said, to search the caravan. The usual story about their being Ladakhi traders was rejected contemptuously.

"Hedin Sahib, who was sent back last year, is in your caravan. He has come back to do what he was forbidden to do last year. Write and sign a statement that no European is with you and take the responsibility." Those were the curt replies given to Abdul Kaim's protestations. The Tibetans were encamped within a few yards of Dr. Sven Hedin's tent. The Ladakhis expressed a fear that he would be killed and suggested an escape with the instruments and records, in the darkness.

A panic threatened, and Dr. Sven Hedin realized that the time had come boldly to declare himself. He went straight to the Tibetan camp fire and seated himself between two chiefs whom he knew, asking whether they recognized him. Surprise kept them silent for a moment, but soon the chiefs, polite but shy, insisted that he must go and see the Governor at Sakadong. Dr. Sven Hedin refused, saying that he had accomplished the object of his journey in spite of the prohibition of the previous year, and he would proceed to Darjiling.

A mutual agreement was reached, that he should meet the Governor at Semokun. All proceeded there next day, April 24. Dr. Sven Hedin felt scarcely sure of freedom, as he had openly avowed himself a European. The Governor inquired the object of his return contrary to orders, and suggested that Europeans visited Tibet in search of gold, though the country was poor. He knew Dr. Sven Hedin was a friend of the Tashi Lama, and therefore welcomed him, but the standing instructions of Lhasa had to be obeyed.

It appeared that the Chinese mandarin stationed at Mingri, on the Nepal frontier, with 200 soldiers, had orders not only to forbid Europeans to enter Tibet, but to stop Gurkhas and other persons, and in case of refusal or resistance the Chinese soldiers would turn them out. Dr. Sven Hedin saw the significance of these orders, for Mingri was the scene of a battle in which the Chinese had defeated the Gurkhas and invaded Nepal. Now they evidently regard it as the principal entrance from Nepal to Tibet. Further conversation showed that the Chinese and Lhasa are more than ever determined to keep Tibet closed, especially to Europeans. The Tibetans are compelled to yield obedience to this policy of exclusion.

Dr. Sven Hedin resolutely refused to retrace his steps or to travel by the trade road to Ladakh. If he were killed, the Governor, he said, would suffer afterwards. The negotiations ended in a compromise, the caravan being split up, on the understanding that the parties should meet again.

DISCOVERIES IN BONGBA PROVINCE.

Dr. Sven Hedin left Bis on May 5, with his attendants and an armed escort, on thoroughly good terms. The caravan having been provisioned, he saw a chance of further exploration in the Bonga province. He travelled due north, crossing a pass of 19,000 feet in the Great Range, and made for Lake Tederam, the existence of which Nain Singh reported in 1873, its real name being Terenam. He found the lake to be long, narrow, and salt, and entirely different from its representation on the map.

He then turned westward and visited the Mending temple, situated on the bank of the Somathangpo, the largest river in Tibet, without outlet to the ocean. He failed to meet the main body of the caravan, but travelled in Tibetan dress, quite unmolested, by a route west-south-west. Crossing a range 20,000 feet high, he reached Khala, shown on the maps as a great peak, but really a pass in a high range running from the main system. He then came to Ghalaringtso, which is described in the maps as containing a monastery on an island. Its real name is Nguanglaingtso, and there are five islands. The shape given in the maps is wrong, as it runs east and west and is intersected by three rivers. The explorer crossed the Great Range for the tenth time, and reached Mansarwar on July 26, and thence by known roads made his way to Simla.

GEOGRAPHICAL RESULTS.

Geographically the two explorations are of the highest value. The blank space north and south of the inland lake region has been traversed, and the mystery of Bonga has been solved. Bonga, though one of the greatest provinces of Tibet, has never before been visited by Europeans.

The new map of Tibet will be of 900 sheets, which proves the extent of the exploration. All the heights of the passes, the river crossings, and the encampments are recorded; a hundred astronomical points have been fixed; several thousand panoramas have been taken, with compass bearings and names. Dr. Sven Hedin has brought back photographs, pencil drawings, and water colours. Meteorological observations were made three times daily, and the explorer has geological specimens, with the dip and fall of the rocks, from 1,200 different points. The total length of his journeys was 4,000 miles. There are practically now no fresh discoveries left in the heart of Tibet.

THE EXPLORER ON HIS ACHIEVEMENTS.

Dr. Sven Hedin sums up the results of his explorations as follows:—

"My great discoveries are:—First, the true sources of the Brahmaputra and Indus, and the genetic source of the Sutlej east of Mansarwar Lake.

"Secondly, the exploration of Bonga, which I traversed twice by different routes.

"But the greatest of all is the discovery of that continuous mountain chain which, taken as a whole is the most massive range on the crust of the earth, its average height above sea level being greater than that of the Himalayas. Its peaks are 4,000 ft. to 5,000 ft. lower than Everest, but its passes average 3,000 ft. higher than the Himalayan passes. The eastern and western parts were known before, but the central and highest part is in Bonga, which was previously unexplored. Not a tree or a bush covers it; there are no deep-cut valleys, as in the Himalayas, for rain is scanty. The absolute heights remain to be calculated from observations made on the ten passes which I crossed."

There is no doubt that this is a correct estimate of Dr. Sven Hedin's greatest discovery, which will excite the highest interest of geographers. He proposes calling the chain the Trans-Himalaya Range, a name which meets with the approval of the Viceroy, as one of the first to hear the extent of the discovery.

DR. SVEN HEDIN'S LATEST JOURNAY.

We publish this morning the first portion of a long despatch describing Dr. Sven Hedin's latest expedition in Tibet. It will be read with the keenest interest, as embodying the great explorer's first account of a memorable exploit, which called for the highest endurance and intrepidity. For the past two years Dr. Hedin has been once more engaged, with little intermission, in the task of penetrating into the unknown recesses of Tibet. The first year's exploration, of which the results were made known last year, resulted in many valuable additions to our knowledge of Central Asian geography, and, in particular, to the discovery of the true sources of the Brahmaputra and Indus. In December last, as he now informs us, Dr. Hedin started from Leh, in Kashmir, on a second journey, which for romantic interest, for the magnitude of the hardships overcome, as well as for the extent of its addition to geographical knowledge, must be awarded a brilliant place in the annals of adventurous exploration. Since, in 1890, Dr. Hedin first applied himself to the solution of the geographical problems of Central Asia by his journey through Khorassan and Turkestan, he has secured a world-wide reputation as one of the most adventurous and successful of explorers. None of his former travels, however, surpass in the variety of their perils the story of the journey which has just reached its last stage at Simla, after the prolonged absence of news had begun to cause keen anxiety for Dr. Hedin's safety.

The traveller in the wilds of Central Asia, and especially in Tibet, has, perhaps, to reckon with a more daunting combination of difficulties interposed by men and by Nature than is now to be found in any other quarter of the globe, with the possible exception of the interior of Arabia. The traditional exclusiveness of that Tibetan character now shows some signs of relaxation, in virtue of that contact with the outer world which even the Lamas, in their remote and wintry highlands, have not wholly been able to prevent. It is gratifying for Englishmen to recall that Dr. Hedin has borne special testimony to the far more cordial treatment which he experienced on his journey in 1907 than during its predecessors, and that he attributes this welcome change of attitude to the excellent understanding established by Sir Frank Younghusband at Lhasa four years ago. But the difficulties of this latest expedition consisted no less in eluding the vigilance and suspicion of the inhabitants than in sustaining health or bare life in the members of the expedition, in face of the terrible ordeals of storm, cold, and hunger which were experienced throughout a great part of the journey. Explorers of Arctic latitudes experience, as a rule, some compensation for climatic rigours in the inoffensiveness of the population, when there is any; while the explorer who penetrates among headhunters or anthropophagi may frequently be cheered by delightful weather. Dr. Hedin, on the other hand, must surely sometimes reflect that on his own most characteristic excursions no prospects please, while both nature and man are vile. The ordinary European, in whom the primal Aryan passion for exploration has long been atrophied by civilization, may well feel the keenest admiration for such feats of courage, ingenuity, and endurance as have been once more displayed since December last, in a new quarter of his own familiar field, by the famous Swedish explorer.

By the British people, who owe a considerable part of their mingled blood and traditions to the migratory impulses of the ancient Scandinavian rovers, the brilliant achievements of living Scandinavians are regarded with a near and special sympathy. Though the names of Hedin and Nansen have been thrown into a certain opposition by the recent political history of the Scandinavian peninsula, both are honoured in this country with equal and undiminished regard. Dr. Nansen's residence among us as Norwegian Minister served to increase the friendly feeling which had been exhibited in no scanty measure on his previous visits to our shores. When Dr. Hedin arrives in England, as the guest of the Royal Geographical Society, there is no doubt that he will be welcomed in a manner which will fully express the admiration in which he has long been held, not only by men of science and wide knowledge, but by every class of our people. By an unfortunate political necessity the authorities of the India Office were compelled, with great reluctance, to refuse, in 1906, the request of Dr. Hedin to be allowed to enter Tibet from British territory. Even in the case of so illustrious a traveller it proved impracticable to relax a decision which was adopted after careful consideration and for strong reasons of policy. But, when it was announced that the course of Dr. Hedin's journey had led him from British India into Chinese Turkestan, and that, after some study of that interesting region, he had prolonged his

MARRIAGE.

On the 14th inst. at the British Consulate-General, Yokohama, by J. Carey Hall, Esq., I.S.O., Consul-General, WILLIAM BENJAMIN MASON, Jr., to OSHINO ICHISE.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FIRE broke out on the night of Nov. 14th in Chiba, destroying 20 houses.

ON Nov. 15th, the Emperor left Nara for Maiko, where he will embark by a warship in order to review the fleet at Kobe.

THE Hibiya Library which has been established by the Tokyo City Office in Hibiya Park will be opened on Nov. 21st for public use.

THE funeral of Princess Dowager Kwacho will take place on Nov. 21st at the Toyashima-oka cemetery, the cortege leaving her residence at 9 a.m.

HIS Majesty King Edward has been pleased to give and grant unto Mr. Charles Vincent Sale, his Royal licence and authority to accept and wear the Insignia of the Fourth Class of the Order of the Sacred Treasure, conferred upon him by His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, in recognition of valuable services rendered by him.

THE Demio says that Mr. C. Koike, Japanese Consul General in San Francisco, now in Tokyo on leave, will be appointed to a similar position in Mukden.

A NEW case of cholera is reported in Shinjuku, Tokyo. Another case of the same disease is reported in Hiroshima. The latter patient died on Nov. 13th.

THE construction of a floating dock has been completed at the Wada-Misaki Iron Works, in Kobe. The launch which was fixed to take place on Nov. 15th was postponed.

THE Asahi says that Count Okuma intends to purchase the Tokyo Mainichi Shinbun of which Shimada Saburo is proprietor. Negotiations are being conducted between the parties.

EARLY on the morning of Nov. 13th, fire broke out in the well-known Kinkwa Hall of the West Hongwanji Temple, Kyoto. The flames were put out before much damage was done.

MR. MIURA, an official of the Horse Breeding Office, arrived at Tsuruga on Nov. 18th from his visit in Europe. He has purchased several hundred horses in France, England and Hungary.

ACCORDING to a telegram received at the Yokohama Central Police Office, a case of hydrophobia appeared in Yokosuka on Nov. 15th. A mad dog attacked a young woman inflicting severe injuries.

FIRE broke out at 3.40 p.m. on Nov. 16th in a warehouse belonging to the Third Division, in Nagoya, destroying the building and seven other houses. Tobacco ashes are reported to have been the cause.

ON Saturday afternoon an annual festival in memory of the policemen of Kanagawa prefecture who died on duty was held at the Daijingu Shrine on Ise-yama. Fencing and jiu-jitsu were exhibited.

A KYOTO telegram says that Dr. Sun Yatsen, leader of the Chinese revolutionaries, arrived in that city on the night of Nov. 16th. While the police were trying to ascertain his whereabouts, he disappeared.

A SAN FRANCISCO telegram says that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has lowered the freight on flour to $3 per ton, in order to compete with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. It is said that rates for other merchandise will also be lowered.

A RUSSIA telegram says that on Nov. 17th, says the Asahi, that Dr. Sun Yatsen, the leader of the Chinese revolutionaries, has received a telegram from a high official in Peking and left "a certain place" on Nov. 14th by a German steamer for the North.

THE Isezaki-cho police have arrested a foreigner and sentenced him to ten days' detention. It appears that he called himself an Italian and an employee of the Italian Consulate and that he attempted to obtain by fraud various articles at Japanese shops.

THE Yokohama Electric Railway Company, which intends to reclaim a portion of the creek along Horai-cho, Chioja-machi, Kumoi-cho, and Suruga-cho and to lay a line thereon, has applied to Baron Suifu for permission. Recently the Governor submitted the application to the City Assembly asking them to look into the project. Some of the members of the City Assembly opposed the enterprise on the ground that the reclamation will injure the business of people who use the creek. On Nov. 13th eight men representing people living near the creek in question visited the Departments of Home Affairs, Communications, and Agriculture and Commerce and petitioned them not to grant the application of the railway company.

At the annual meeting of the Yokohama Kirg's Daughters' Circle, held on Friday, the following officers were elected:—Leader, Mrs. Lowder; Vice-Leader, Mrs. E. S. Booth; Hon. Treasurer, Mrs. J. Macbeth; Hon. Secretary, Mrs. H. J. Neville; Advisory Committee—Mrs. Hubbard, Mrs. Clausen, and Mrs. Bunting.

WHILE a party of ladies were walking from the American Hatoba to Sannomiji Station at Kobe on Thursday evening, a man approached one of them in Koikawa-suji and snatched her handbag, with which he succeeded in making away. The bag contained an English £5 note and some other money. The police were at once informed of the theft, but the culprit, has not yet been secured.

THE Yokohama City Office, on behalf of the Kyobashi Urban Division Office, has seized yen 157.60 at the office of Messrs. Mendelson Bros. It is alleged that the firm was doing business for some years past in Akashi-cho, Kyobashi, Tokyo, which is a place not included in the foreign perpetual leases. The Kyobashi Urban Division Office, therefore, ordered the firm to pay a supplementary business tax. It had suspended payment some months previously.

THE business men from the Pacific slope who have been on a visit to this country left Yokohama for home on Nov. 14th by the Temjo Maru. A large number of business men from Tokyo and other places were present on the steamer and the hatoba to bid the party farewell, prominent among them being Baron Shibusawa, Baron Suifu, Governor of Kanagawa Prefecture, Mr. Mitsuhashi, Mayor, and the representatives of various public commercial bodies.

IN connexion with the prohibition of the pari mutuel at race clubs in general, and with the consequent complaints by the clubs, the Nichi Nichi says that General Terauchi, Minister for the Army, and Director of the Horse Breeding Office in addition, has decided not to grant the petition of the various race clubs asking for licensing of the betting or to take special steps with a view to protecting clubs to an extent enabling them to continue their existence. The Minister, adds the paper, is of the opinion that no harm has been caused to the horse breeding enterprise throughout the country in consequence of the prohibition of the pari mutuel. The business at the breeding farms became rather more active and the prices of horses to be employed for military purposes advanced.

THE Hirano Maru sister ship to the Kamo Maru, of 8,600 tons gross, built at the Mitsui Bishi Dockyard at Nagasaki for the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and launched on the 21st April of this year, is the second of the six steamers to be added to the fleet of that company. This vessel leaves the Customs pier, on her maiden trip, as an extra steamer for Europe, via ports, in the middle part of December, under the command of Captain H. Fraser. The steamer was built in accordance with the Imperial Japanese Government Shipbuilding Encouragement Law and classed 100 A.1. in British Lloyd's, modelled on modern principles with every convenience necessary for a first class ship. The general comfort of passengers has been well thought out, and she should prove a great favourite with the travelling public between the Orient and Europe.

IMPERIAL TRAGEDY IN CHINA.

Saturday, November 14.

There are various disquieting rumours from Peking. All agree that the Emperor of China is dead, though the date of his demise is differently stated, some naming the night of the 12th, and others the morning of the 13th. The Mainichi Dempo affirms that the physicians in attendance on his Majesty have been punished for false diagnosis, some being fined, and others bamboozed. The Jiji Shimpō's report is quite positive. It gives the date as the afternoon of the 13th instant, and asserts that Prince Pu-yi, grandson of the Seventh Prince (Ch'un), has been named Prince Imperial. This is a child of five years of age, and his father, Prince Ch'un (Tsai Feng), is to be Regent, according to our contemporary. There is also a rumour that the Empress Dowager is dangerously, if not fatally, ill, and much excitement prevails in the Chinese capital. Of course, so long as her Majesty is alive, there need be no uneasiness about the administration of affairs, but her decease at this juncture would be likely to throw things into considerable confusion. It is stated that Prince Ching, who recently went on a tour of inspection to the Imperial Tombs, has returned precipitately to Peking. It is not usual in China to announce the deaths of great people until after all arrangements have been made to prevent disorder, and thus the uncertainty which exists on this occasion outside the Palace is easily explained. There has been much talk recently of meetings of high statesmen and Princes of the Blood for the purpose of discussing the succession problem, and a Chinese newspaper was fined 300 dollars for publishing a statement to that effect. The obvious inference is that his Majesty's condition has for some days been considered hopeless. Rumour has it that the cause of death was melancholia combined with chronic disease of the kidneys. Thus far there does not seem to have been any official intelligence, but that is not significant, inasmuch as even though such intelligence were received, it would necessarily be concealed until public notification was made by the Peking Government. One thing certain is that the new Japanese Representative, Mr. Ijūin, had audience of the Emperor less than a fortnight ago, and that his Majesty, though much emaciated, did not then seem to be in a dangerous condition.

Sunday, November 15.

On the 14th inst. there was published in Peking an Imperial decree which will probably go down in the pages of history as an utterance from the grave. It detailed the sufferings of his Imperial Majesty and was written in the first person. The Emperor said that, although he had been taking medicine for some time, no good effect had been produced; he was suffering from pains all over his body; from a feeling of distension in the bosom; from grave stomachic trouble; from pains in the loins; from loss of appetite; from cold perspirations, fever or cough produced by the slightest movement; and from absolute sleeplessness. After this detail of his grievous sufferings, the unfortunate Sovereign called upon his statesmen to find a physician capable of restoring his shattered health, and promised large rewards in case of success.

The Asahi Shimbun, from which the above is taken, adds that, while admitting the gravity of his Majesty's illness, the Court officials and the Government deny that he is dead, and our Tokyo contemporary withdraws its previous announcement in that sense.

The rescript of the 14th, however, was preceded by one issued on the night of the 13th in the name of the Empress Dowager. This document nominated Prince Ch'un Regent, and ordered that his son, Pu-yi, should be taken into the Palace to be brought up there. This means of course that the young Prince is to be heir to the Throne, although the fact is not yet announced.

In the presence of the above facts there is of course a great difference of opinion as to whether his Majesty is dead or still survives. Shanghai thinks that he is merely in a critical condition, and apparently no definite news has been received at the Legation in Tokyo or at the Foreign Office; but the general impression is that the end has come.

There is another rumour of an even more disquieting nature. It is to the effect that the troubles menacing the Empire in connexion with the succession to the Throne have affected the mind of the Empress Dowager, and that she is in a demented condition, one symptom being that she beats her physicians.

The latest intelligence on this subject is a telegram to the Mainichi Dempo dated from Peking at 11 a.m. on the 14th inst., which says that the commotion in the Palace and the carrying in of wood to make a coffin are connected really with the condition of the Empress Dowager, whose recent illness has suddenly terminated fatally.

There are various statements as to the age of Prince Pu-yi, some putting it at 3 years and others at 8.

The Hochi Shimbun's Peking correspondent adduces an interesting evidence of His Majesty's death. Our contemporary says that the custom in China is to imprison the chief Court Physician immediately on the demise of a Sovereign, until it can be fully ascertained that the physician's diagnosis was correct. This measure has already been taken, and may be assumed to prove the Emperor's decease.

Naturally there are rumours of disputes about the succession to the Throne. It is stated that the original idea was to appoint Prince Ching to be Regent and a son of Prince Pu-lun to be Prince Imperial. This would have placed the regency in the hands of a direct descendant of the great Emperor Chien-lung, and the succession to the Throne in the hands of a grandson of the Emperor Tao-kuang.

It should be noted as a point of great interest that Prince Ch'un, who is now said to have been appointed Regent, is the same Prince that was sent to Germany eight years ago to expiate the assassination of the German Minister in the streets of Peking. Quite an excitement was created at the time by the Prince's refusal to perform the kow-tow when he was presented at the German Court, his argument being that this was a form of ceremony limited to the Chinese themselves, and that no foreign representative was ever required to comply with it on the occasion of his presentation at the Chinese Court. The Kaiser eventually waived the point, and Prince Ch'un acquired some reputation. He is said to be a man of great resolution and ability, and, being now in only his 28th year, while his son, the newly appointed Prince Imperial, is a mere infant, he may have before him a long period of supreme power. The Hochi Shimbun publishes a photograph of him, showing a fine, intelligent face.

Of course these momentous incidents have given rise to all sorts of conjectures and forebodings in Japan. The general opinion, however, seems to be that, if the Empress Dowager is spared, there will be no disturbance; but that, if Her Majesty's life also is in danger, the situation must be regarded as decidedly grave. Some publicists, who have the reputation of being well versed in Chinese affairs, are quoted as saying that the choice of Pu-yi to be Prince Imperial is a heavy blow to His Excellency Yuan Shihkai, who favoured the appointment of Prince Pu-lun's son.

Monday, November 16

The news of the Emperor of China's death is confirmed but there is still some doubt as to the exact time when it took place. Some accounts say 7 p.m. on the 14th, and others, the 15th at 2 p.m. At all events the fact is beyond all question. One Tokyo journal states that an official telegram has reached the Chinese Legation in Tokyo for transmission to the Foreign Office and that the latter has received the news independently. A telegram to the Jiji Shimpō from Peking says that Prince Pu-yi has been duly proclaimed Heir Apparent, and that the steps customary in China on the occasion of the Sovereign's death have been duly taken.

In the Mainichi Dempo's telegrams we read that an Imperial Decree has been issued appointing Prince Ch'un Regent during the Heir Apparent's minority and directing that he should carry out his duties under instructions from the Empress Dowager. If the Decree be rightly quoted, Prince Pu-yi is nominated successor to the Emperor Tung-chih; a statement which we do not understand, as it passes over Kuang-hsi, the Sovereign just deceased. Doubtless it is connected with the rigid rules of China as to the imperative necessity of a male descendant in every family. The Emperor Tung-chih died in 1875 without issue, and has ever since remained without anyone to worship at his tomb. Prince Pu-yi is now appointed to this office, and probably we shall soon hear that the scion of another princely house has been chosen to perform the same rites for the Emperor Kuang-hsi.

Another Imperial Decree directs that Prince Pu-yi shall be educated for the high office to which he is now called, in order that in due time he may be able to take the reins of government into his own hands, Prince Ch'un carrying on the duties of Regent in the meantime under the direction of the Empress Dowager. Yet another decree nominates the members of the obsequies committee; a long list of most distinguished men.

There has further been published in Peking a document which purports to be last will and testament of the deceased Emperor. His Majesty speaks of having occupied the Throne for over 30 years, during which time he endeavoured to take the principles of mercy and benevolence as guides in administering the affairs of the nation, but ill health greatly impeded the consummation of his wishes. Prince Pu-yi is now appointed to succeed to the Throne, and His Majesty does not doubt that the child will prove obedient to his parents, diligent in his studies and sensible of the great trust reposed in him. His Majesty further speaks of the administrative reforms which occupied the final years of his reign. He is pained to think that his life is not prolonged sufficiently to witness their consummation, but he bequeathes to his successor the solemn duty of carrying them to completion within the appointed time.

The most conclusive telegram is one published by the Asahi Shimbun, which says that at 1.45 p.m. on the 14th inst. the Official Gazette announced the demise of the Emperor and the appointment of Prince Pu-yi to be Heir Apparent.

With regard to the Empress Dowager, two telegrams are published in Tokyo, one by the Hochi Shimbun and the other by the Mainichi Shimbun. Both agree in stating that the Empress Dowager expired on the 15th inst., but whereas one telegram gives the hour of decease as 3.40 p.m., the other names 3.45. The Jiji Shimpō's telegrams say that Her Majesty's malady is dysentery and that her condition is dangerous; but the Asahi's correspondent, though admitting that Her Majesty is very ill, alleges that her malady is not serious. The latest telegrams, however, are conclusive as to her death.

The views of the Tokyo press with regard to the above momentous incidents are partly optimistic and partly pessimistic. Representatives of the latter class express the opinion that if the Empress Dowager survives, the affairs of the State may perhaps be administered peacefully, but that if she too has died, grave commotions are almost certain to ensue. The lessons of history are recalled in this context as showing that, whenever China has been ruled by a great female sovereign, the latter's demise has invariably been followed by a period of anarchy. They point out that the conflict between the Manchus and the Chinese has grown more and more acute during recent years, and has barely been kept, by the strong hand of the Empress Dowager, from growing into actual collision. A majority of the standing army consists of pure Chinese, and if any competent man raises the banner of anti-Manchu revolt he will be sure of obtaining a large following in military circles. According to these views everything depends upon the Empress Dowager. On the other hand, the representatives of the optimistic side argue that China's foreign relations constitute a steady force which has not existed at any period of her past career. Foreign nations will not stand idle in the presence of any commotion which threatens to disturb their peaceful relations with China. As for insurrections, the newly organised Divisions in the provinces have ample strength to deal with them effectually. Even though a rebellion similar to that of the Taipings were to break out, foreign Governments would take care that it did not invade the precincts of their Legations or of the Treaty ports. In such circumstances the success of a revolt against the Manchus would be very problematical. In the eyes of foreign Governments nothing could warrant such a revolt except the plea of fighting for constitutional government, and that the Manchus are pledged to give with all possible celerity. Pessimists and optimists, however, are all agreed that the death of the Empress Dowager would probably be followed by a dispute amongst the various branches of the Imperial Family for the succession to the Throne, and that contingency is regarded as much graver than the danger of a domestic insurrection.

It need hardly be said that the columns of the Tokyo newspapers are virtually filled with comments on the affairs of the neighbouring Empire. The opinions of many men more or less notable are quoted, but they do not add much to the materials available for forecasting the situation. Of course in present circumstances all the negotiations between Japan and China for the settlement of outstanding questions will have to be interrupted.

Tuesday, November 17.

The Empress Dowager's last will and testament is published at length by the Asahi Shimbun, but as we shall have a verbatim translation, made from the original Chinese, of this important document in a few days, it seems useless to lay before our readers an English translation of a Japanese version. The gist is that Her Majesty recounts the difficulties with which she had to contend during her tenure of office as Regent and the earnest efforts that she made to grapple with them. As is the Chinese custom in drafting documents of such a character, Her Majesty depreciates her own ability and makes a species of apology for want of success in administering State affairs. She then passes on to speak of her broken health and of the impossibility of taking the rest prescribed by her physicians but forbidden by the multiplicity of State business. She alludes in confident terms to the achievement of the reforms recently inaugurated, and she expresses a hope that the newly nominated Heir Apparent will prove docile and receptive of instruction as a child and sagacious as a ruler.

The last will of the deceased Emperor is also published in Tokyo. Its main features have already been transmitted by the telegraph, but the detailed version makes His Majesty allude at some length to the efforts made and the labours discharged by him during his reign of over 30 years in behalf of the welfare of the people and the safety of the country. He speaks of the greatly broken state of his health, of the wise counsels he always received from the Empress Dowager, and of the necessity of appointing a successor and a Regent without loss of time. The document concludes with a reference to the reforms recently inaugurated and with an expression of confidence that they will be carried to completion.

The first decree of the boy Emperor who now sits upon the Throne laments that the lives of the Empress Dowager and the Emperor Kuang hsu were not spared to instruct their youthful successor, but it calls upon the statesmen and people of the Empire to render loyal assistance to the Throne at this juncture. It enacts that the ideograph for "great" shall forever stand before the name of the Empress Dowager; it gives directions about the period of mourning and the funeral rites, and it exempts the provincial Viceroys and Governors from the duty of visiting the capital to burn incense before the coffin of the dead.

In deference to the memory of the late Emperor the year-name "Kuang hsu" is not to be changed until next year.

Meanwhile very disquieting rumours come from Peking. Two eunuchs are said to have been arrested by order of Prince Ching and to have been handed over to the police on a grave charge. This event falls in with various sensational talk as to the use of poison within the Palace. A report has been spread that the consort of the deceased Emperor has been poisoned, and it is now stated that Her Majesty committed suicide by drinking poison on the 16th inst.

A state of the greatest alarm and excitement is said to prevail in Peking. There has been a general run upon the banks, and several of them—"some hundreds" is the exact language of the telegram—have been obliged to close their doors. An official order has been issued exempting all banks from the obligation of making payments during a period of five days, and troops have been posted at the premises of the banks as a precaution against rioting.

Prince Ching appears to be taking the lead at this crisis. He has placed several hundreds of troops on guard at the Palace, and he is said to be giving counsel to the new Regent, Prince Ch'un, who is disposed to rely strongly upon the aged statesman's sagacity. Nothing could be more reassuring than to learn that Prince Ching has taken the direction of affairs. Ever since he succeeded the late Prince Kung in 1884, he has been the main pillar of the State.

What rumour chiefly busies itself about is the fate of the late Emperor. Shanghai reports, and several Japanese papers seem to credit, that the Empress Dowager's demise preceded that of the Emperor, and that His Majesty's death was not immediately due to natural causes. This means, of course, that, inasmuch as had the Emperor survived the Empress Dowager, an intolerable situation might have been created for the statesmen responsible for the Kang Yuwei failure in 1888, these statesmen resorted to the nefarious expedient of making away with His Majesty, and changing the order of the dates of death. This theory is perhaps based on no better evidence than the apprehension of the two eunuchs mentioned above. It involves the idea of a conspiracy of the most extensive and heinous character, and as such stories are commonly bruited abroad in connexion with every crisis in China, no one will be disposed to give easy credit to this new history.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun has a telegram from Peking which predicts widespread disturbances next spring, but this seems to be merely an echo of the excitement which naturally prevails in the streets of the City.

It is, of course, quite possible that the deaths of the two Sovereigns took place several days, if not weeks, ago, but that the fact was concealed in order to make due arrangements for the succession to the Throne and for the Regency. There would be nothing either wonderful or reprehensible in that procedure, for veracity in such a small matter as announcing the date of the death can not be weighed in the balance against the interests of an immense Empire. We have to suppose one of two things; either that all the arrangements for the succession and the Regency were made with a degree of celerity unusual in any country and unprecedented in China, or else that the actual times of the deaths were considerably earlier than the dates announced.

Mr. Uchida Ryohei, who enjoys the reputation of being deeply versed in Chinese politics, is quoted by the Hochi Shimbun as predicting that a great rupture must soon take place amongst the Peking statesmen. His analysis may be very briefly stated. It is that the present Minister of War, Chieh Liang, is on the one hand strongly Lié with Prince Ch'un, and on the other strongly antagonistic to Yuan Shihkai. A vehement effort will therefore be made to efface Yuan, and he is not the sort of person to submit tamely to effacement. It has to be remembered, however, that upon Yuan's side are ranged Prince Ching, Na Tung, Hsu (Viceroy of Manchuria), Tang Shaoi and many other prominent men. It appears to us that, if the direction of affairs has really fallen into Prince Ching's hands as the telegraph suggests, and if the new Regent, Ch'un, is really taking counsel of Ching, then Yuan's position is secure.

The Tokyo newspapers are practically unanimous in their moderate and sympathetic treatment of these incidents. They sincerely condole with the troubles into which the neighbouring country has fallen, and they express an earnest hope that she will extricate herself without disturbance or loss. The Chuo Shinbun is the only one which allows any suspicious language to appear in its editorial columns.

Meanwhile, Major-General Aoki has been ordered to return to his post in Peking immediately, and it is said that the removal of the Japanese troops from the metropolitan province has been suspended.

Wednesday, November 18.

There is a telegram to the effect that the coronation ceremony of the new Sovereign Pu-yi is to take place on the 20th inst. Already some ceremonial has been gone through, but the exact nature of it is not plain.

It is now emphatically denied that the Consort of the late Emperor Kuang-hsü has taken poison. The story is described as a pure fiction.

Another story of poisoning relates to the celebrated eunuch Li Lien-ying. He is said to have taken poison on the day of the Empress Dowager's demise, but the dose proved insufficient. This official occupied a prominent position in public attention for many years. He was said to have earned the unlimited confidence of the Empress Dowager, and his influence ranked almost with that of any leading statesman. Ultimately, for some reason never fully explained, the Empress Dowager dispensed with his services and sent him back to his native place. But after a time he was recalled to Court, and there he seems to have wielded much of his old power. If it be true that he attempted to commit suicide, the explanation may possibly be that he feared to be involved in the crime which led to the recent arrest of the present Chief Eunuch, Tsai.

There is yet another story to the effect that the late Emperor's favourite consort has committed suicide. That would be a not unlikely event, in view of Chinese ethics.

Apparently the order of the ceremonial in connexion with the sepulture of His Majesty will be as follows:—On the 21st inst. the body will be encased in two coffins of pure gold and carried to the Great Hall of Government, where it will lie in State for 27 days, 108 Buddhist priests and an equal number from the Lama Temple, attending day and night to intone litanies. All the high officials will visit the Hall and make obeisance before the coffin. The 27 days having expired, an interval of 5 days will be suffered to elapse, after which the decree of threnody will be issued, and five days later the decree of felicitation. All the deceased Sovereign's personal attendants will then receive a step of rank and a general amnesty will be proclaimed. Thereafter the funeral rites will be performed.

It will be observed that the above refers to the obsequies of the Emperor alone. Nothing is said about those of the Empress Dowager. In accordance with Chinese etiquette she, who was the real ruler of the country for nearly 50 years, will not be honoured with any commensurate ceremony.

The latest rumour from Peking is that Prince Ching was not privy to the nomination of Prince Pu-yi as Heir apparent. The comp was made by the party of Prince Ch'ün during the absence of Prince Ching, who had proceeded to the Imperial Tombs to worship, and although he hastened back to the capital immediately on receipt of the news, he was too late to interfere successfully. We attach little credit to this story. It is certainly true that Prince Ching abbreviated his visit to the Tombs, but the strong probability is that he did so on receipt of intelligence as to the Empress Dowager's critical condition or, perhaps, her demise. It is not unlikely, indeed, that the date of the Prince's hurried return to the capital was that of her Majesty's death, and that the fact was not published until all arrangements had been made with Prince Ching's full acquiescence.

The Mainichi Dempo says that an influential Chinese subject residing in Japan has received a telegram from Peking to the effect that when the Empress Dowager's state became hopeless, Prince Ch'ün prompted two of the Emperor's physicians to administer a fatal drug to His Majesty, and that these two physicians, not two eunuchs, have been arrested by order of Prince Ching. It will be observed that this story, which is doubtless a mere canard, represents Prince Ching as master of the situation, and thus conflicts with the tale of His Highness' absence during the cardinal arrangements and his dissent from them.

The fact is that Peking seems to be busily engaged concocting stories. The city is buzzing like a hive of bees, some householders preparing for flight, some taking precautions against incendiarism, and some keeping their shops closed through dread of burglars. Several days will probably pass before this seething mass of humanity settles down into a state of quiescence, and in the meanwhile the world's ears will doubtless be regaled with all sorts of fictions.

The general opinion in Japanese official circles appears to be distinctly optimistic. The gravity of recent events is not underrated, but it is believed that unanimity exists among the leading statesmen, and that so long as they hold together, they will easily retain control of the situation.

The Fiji Shimpō has an important telegram from Peking which represents things as having nearly quieted down. It adds that the Minister of War, Tieh Li ang, and Prince Su have given to the foreign Representatives solemn assurances that there will be no disturbance.

The opinion prevailing in Government circles in Tokyo with regard to the Peking Crisis, is given as follows by the Japanese press:—

Though the death of the Empress-Dowager, following that of the Emperor, is a very serious matter for China, that country is greatly to be congratulated on having succeeded in settling so expeditiously the question of the succession to the Throne without the misfortune of exciting any disturbance. Doubtless the celerity shown in solving this problem satisfactorily is due in part to the importance attaching to the wishes of the deceased Empress-Dowager; but it must also be regarded as an evidence of the genuine respect paid to those wishes by Chinese officials, and to the earnestness shown by them in combining to preserve the situation. By taking careful thought for all emergencies, and by the appropriate measures which they are actually adopting to maintain good order, it may be affirmed that they have proved their indifference to petty considerations in a season of national emergency and have demonstrated their genuine desire to achieve the reality of harmonious coöperation. For the rest, everything being quite calm in political circles in Peking and no reason being apparent for apprehending any serious occurrence, it may be concluded that unless some unforeseeable incident supervenes the present crisis will pass safely.

Thursday, November 19.

The latest report from Peking is that the Imperial Princes have decided to revive what is known as the shiren system of government. This word, literally translated, means with "lowered curtain," and may perhaps be rendered into English by "camera." It will be remembered that in the last will and testament of the late Empress-Dowager there was a clause providing that in all difficult affairs of State the Regent, Prince Ch'ün, should consult the present Empress-Dowager, that is to say, the widow of Kuang-hsü. The idea now attributed to the Imperial Princes in conclave is that this clause should be made to apply to the Regent's administration in general, since it would not be wholesome that he should wield anything like autocratic power. Prince Ch'ün will therefore be expected to consult the Imperial Lady behind the curtain on all administrative affairs, and China will enter another period of female government, probably more nominal in this case than it was in the case of the great Lady who has just passed into the shadow. It is interesting to reflect on the signal difference between China and Japan in this respect. In the latter country the framers of the Law of the Imperial Household, after careful reading of their nation's history, came to the conclusion that the interest of the country would be best consulted by debarring female sovereigns altogether.

It is observed in Peking with much interest that Prince Ching's name does not appear among those who had been appointed to various offices in connexion with the obsequies of the late Emperor. This omission is attributed by some—rightly we imagine—to the Prince's great age, and by others to a supposed estrangement between him and the Regent Prince Ch'ün. They are said to have been on bad terms for many years, though considering Prince Ch'ün's youth, it is not easy to endorse this second theory.

It was stated in a recent telegram from Peking that a decision had been arrived at not to change the year-name until next spring, in deference to the memory of the deceased Emperor. This information seems to have been incorrect, for we now learn that the year-name has been already changed from Kuanghsü to Hsuanlung. The new year-name means "extended unity."

The threatened financial panic in Peking appears to have been averted. The Government has taken steps to prevent the withdrawal of exchange-merchants who were threatened with ruin, and has lent a sum of one million taels in silver and two million strings of cash to the banks. These measures are said to have restored confidence and things are now quiet.

Shanghai is as usual distinguishing itself as a hotbed of canards. Its latest stories are that H. E. Yuan Shih-kai has fled to the British Legation for protection; that Prince Ching is in extremis and that the infant Emperor has been assassinated. Side by side with these tales may be placed a telegram to the Mainichi Dempo which says that the Peking statesmen are managing matters with much adroitness and efficiency.

The Hochi Shinbun's correspondent in Peking seems to be something of an alarmist. He wires that Prince Ching is confined to the house by sickness—which is not at all improbable considering that this aged Prince's health has been broken for some time back,—but he adds that Yuan Shih kai is taking a very prominent part; and is going about with a strong guard of soldiers so that some trouble may be expected.

It appears that the Peking correspondent of the New York Herald wired to that journal in the sense that there was a heavy run upon the Specie Bank, but this is positively denied, nothing of the kind having taken place.

It need scarcely be said that the foreign Representatives in Peking are duly discharging all the duties of condolence which devolve on them at this crisis.

THE BALKAN COMPLICATION.

Friday, November 18.

The settlement of the Casablanca affair seems to have given universal satisfaction, a fact which constitutes strong testimony to the spirit of moderation and fairness which animated Paris and Berlin in elaborating a compromise. Meanwhile things look more hopeful in the Balkan complication. Thus Turkey is said to be disbanding the reserves recently called out by her, and the Austrian Government has appealed to Russia, France and England to counsel Serbia as to the advisability of abandoning her warlike demonstrations. In all probability this suggestion will be adopted and the Serbs can scarcely fail to appreciate the force of the warning. Of course it is a mere truism to say that every day that passes without an appeal to arms represents so much additional time for calm reflection.

Saturday, November 14.

The telegrams this morning indicate that the negotiations between Turkey and Bulgaria are proceeding favourably and that the two Parties are now separated only by a question of the amount of compensation due to Turkey. In consequence of this favourable prospect the Ambassadors of France, Russia and England are said to have reported that there is now no obstacle in the way of holding a conference of the nations. On the other hand, a radical difference of opinion seems to exist as to the matters which would come before the conference. The King of Italy is said to have officially informed the Emperor of Austria-Hungary that, inasmuch as the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina is an accomplished fact, it can not be submitted for discussion at the conference. We doubt whether this telegram is correct, for the King of Italy is scarcely likely to have propounded the strange doctrine that a violation of a Treaty is legalised by accomplishment.

There is another rumour that France and England have agreed to delimit the spheres of their conciliatory efforts, England undertaking to exert her influence in the Turko-Bulgarian part of the complication, and France accepting a similar obligation with regard to Austria and Serbia. Serbia is said to have welcomed this arrangement.

Meanwhile the Austrian Representative at the Porte is said to have informed the Turkish Government that his country can not possibly agree to submit the Bosnia-Herzegovina question to the Conference. If that resolve be adhered to, it is scarcely probable that England will agree to enter the Conference at all. All parties in the State have explicitly announced their conviction that they can not possibly recognise the right of one signatory of a treaty to set its provisions at naught without in any way consulting the other signatories.

There has been some outcry against Austria for arbitrarily annexing Bosnia and Herzegovina, so that it is interesting to hear what an observer like Mr. Geoffrey Drage—personally known to many in Japan—has to say on the subject in a letter to The Times:—

Sir.—Having just returned from Bosnia and the Herzegovina, I should like most emphatically to endorse the testimony given by Mr. Hope and the Duke of Sutherland to the general excellence of the Austro-Hungarian administration and also to the progress made in recent years.

My first visit to Bosnia was paid in 1894, and since that time the literature, both official and unofficial, with regard to the administration, has been familiar to me. For the last four years, as part of the economic system of Austria-Hungary, it has been the object of my special study, and several of the statements to which Mr. Hope gives a general denial were the object of my inquiries during the last few weeks. So far from there being any ground for these reckless attacks, one can only say that the administration of Baron Blümler seems likely to rank as high as that of his well-known predecessor, Herr von Kallay.

It should be added that enlightened criticism of the administration of Bosnia and the Herzegovina is not wanting at the hands of Austrian statesmen. For instance, the well-known ex-Minister of Justice, Dr. Baernreither, has recently published in the columns of the Pesther Lloyd some constructive suggestions, admirable alike in tone and temper, but searching in character. Whatever Englishmen may think of the policy and the methods of the Austro-Hungarian Government during the last few weeks, they are not likely to withhold their sympathy from a work which may fairly be said to rival that of the reforms they have carried out in Egypt, nor will they be led astray by attacks as groundless as those to which the administration of Lord Cromer was subjected.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, November 13.

On the 12th inst., according to Tokyo journals, the Convention relating to the Kilin-Changchun Railway was duly signed in Peking, Japan being represented for the purpose by Mr. Abe, Secretary of Legation. The particulars given show that the methods of financing the two roads, namely the Hsinmintun-Mukden and the Kilin-Changchun, are defined in the same Convention. The amount to be lent by Japan on account of the Kilin-Changchun line is 2,150,000 yen, and the amount on account of the Hsinmintun-Mukden line, 320,000 yen. The rate of interest is to be 5 per cent., the sum received by China per bond is to be 93, and the periods during which the loans will remain unredeemed are 17 years in the case of the Hsinmintun-Mukden Road and 25 years in the case of the Changchun-Kilin. The roads themselves and their rolling stock will constitute the security. As to the appointment of principal officials, all accounts now agree that the engineering chief is to be a Japanese subject, chosen by China and approved by Japan, and all accounts further agree that the chief accountant also is to be a Japanese subject, but they differ as to the manner of his appointment. Of course this Convention does not possess operative force until it has received the approval of the two Governments, and the detailed regulations for giving effect to it will have to be discussed by the South Manchuria Railway Company and the Chinese Department of Communications in consultation.

Saturday, November 14.

The Asahi Shimbun's Dairen correspondent wires that Japan's conciliatory policy towards China has been decidedly mischievous so far as South Manchuria is concerned. It has resulted in invigorating the rights-recovery spirit, and there is now talk of an agitation to effect some radical measures with regard to the Leased Territory. This rumour sounds very apocryphal, for although it is not very difficult to understand that the existence of the Leased Territory and the exercise of Japanese jurisdiction within its borders are facts very irksome to the Chinese, there is no possible remedy without a radical revision of the Treaty of 1905.

It is stated that the Viceroy of Manchuria has rejected the application for a charter to build a railway from Kaiyuan to Hailungchen. His Excellency's alleged reasons are that, as there are no great towns along the route of such a line, and as its functions would therefore be limited to the carriage of agricultural products, it could not possibly pay; that there would be great difficulty in raising the necessary capital; that a staff of competent experts could not be obtained, and that the line would interfere with the South Manchuria Road. Another account, however, does not assign to the Viceroy such explicit reasoning. It represents him as merely saying that, although the proposed line would be very desirable, it has such important relations that its construction had better be deferred for a time.

The details of the Convention concluded in Peking on the 12th inst. with reference to the Kilin-Changchun and Hsinmintun-Mukden Railways have now been published. One or two hitherto doubtful points are cleared up. Thus it appears that the Engineer-in-Chief on the latter road is to be the same Japanese subject who is now engaged in that capacity, while as to the question of an accountant, since the whole of the line from Peking to Mukden is included in one account by the Chinese, and since to place the Hsinmintun-Mukden section in Japanese hands would therefore create much confusion, there is consequently to be no such alteration in the present system, but, on the other hand, the amount of the principal and of the sinking fund due to Japan will be accurately calculated, and paid over every month by the Chinese. With regard to the Kilin-Changchun Railway, both the Engineer-in-Chief and the Chief Accountant are to be Japanese subjects, but the former will be chosen by the Chinese Authorities and approved by the Japanese, whereas the latter will be chosen by the Japanese and approved by the Chinese.

THE BUDGET.

A correspondent asks a question which has probably suggested itself to others also among our readers, as it did to ourselves, though we were unable to answer until an opportunity offered of examining a statement more detailed than the original outline. The question relates to the fact that at two different places in the accounts two different sums appear under the same heading, namely, "surplus from last year." The two sums are 25,730,000 yen and 52,240,000 yen. They seem to be independent, but in reality the latter includes the former. Thus:—

Works under the Extraordinary War Fund .....	11,910,000
Works under funds carried over from the year 1908-9 .....	14,600,000
Total .....	26,500,000
Surplus of last year .....	25,730,000
Grand total .....	52,240,000

DR. SVEN HEDIN.

A banquet was given at the Legation of Sweden on the 13th inst. in honour of the distinguished traveller, Dr. Sven Hedin. Many Japanese of prominence in the world of letters were present, and the great traveller is said to have made an interesting speech in response to the toast of his health.

On the afternoon of the 15th inst. Dr. Hedin arrived in Tokyo and proceeded to the hall of the Geographical Association, where a reception was given in his honour.

On the 14th inst., Dr. Sven Hedin, accompanied by the Minister of Sweden, arrived in Tokyo and proceeded to the rooms of the Geographical Society, where he was formally presented with the Society's medal. The presentation was made by Baron Kikuchi, on behalf of the President of the Society. He complimented the great traveller in the warmest terms on his achievements, and stated that the Society felt proud to be able to invite him to become an honorary member. The medal presented to the Doctor was of pure gold, bearing a suitable inscription and having on one face a beautifully engraved map of Asia. Dr. Hedin, in acknowledging the honour done to him by the Society, made only a passing allusion to his own travels, but explained that from his childhood he had taken a deep interest in the map of Asia, and that his ambition had been fired by the successes which his great fellow-countryman Nordenskiöld had achieved. The Geographical Society of Japan had presented a silver medal to Nordenskiöld, and a copper medal to Baron Fukushima and had now presented to him, the speaker, a gold medal, which he regarded as the summit of his ambition. He spoke with generous appreciation of General Fukushima's ride across Asia, and of the travels made by Messrs. Narita and Kawaguchi.

In the evening the members of the Society entertained Dr. Hedin and the Swedish Minister at a banquet in the Nobles Club. The health of the King of Sweden was proposed by Count Komura; that of the Emperor of Japan by the Swedish Minister, and that of the guest of the evening by Baron Kikuchi.

The first of Dr. Sven Hedin's series of lectures was delivered on Monday evening in one of the lecture rooms of the Law College, in the Imperial University. Baron Hamano, President of the University, occupied the chair and in addition to a crowd of students, who practically filled the place, there was a large company of leading Japanese and foreigners. Introduced by the Chairman in a few well-chosen words, the distinguished explorer and traveller spoke for two hours on his journeys in Persia, Turkestan and Central Asia generally, reserving for his second lecture on Tuesday an account of his last visit to, and discoveries in, Tibet. The lecture was listened to with rapt attention and continued cheering rewarded Dr. Sven Hedin at its close.

On the 16th inst. Count Komura gave a banquet at the Foreign Office to Dr. Sven Hedin and a number of the leading Japanese men of science. There do not appear to have been any speeches, which must have been an agreeable respite to the great Swedish explorer.

On the evening of the 17th inst. a banquet followed by a reception was given at the British Embassy in honour of Dr. Sven Hedin. About 30 covers were laid, and among the guests were the Ambassadors of Germany, France and the United States, the Ministers of Belgium and Sweden, Count Hayashi, Barons Goto, Kikuchi, Hanau, Mitsui, Prof. Takakusu and many other distinguished men. Sir Claude MacDonald proposed the health of the guest of the evening, and Dr. Hedin acknowledged the honour in an eloquent speech, showing that his command of the English language is not less complete than his command of mountains. He said, among other things, that he felt quite at home in an English house, such kindness and hospitality had he always received at the hands of Englishmen. It had ever been his abiding desire to visit Japan, and it was indeed a pleasure to him and an inestimable honour that the delight of coming to this beautiful country should have been supplemented by the gift of a gold medal from the Japanese Geographical Society, which distinction he reckoned among the greatest honours of his whole career.

After the banquet a large number of visitors, Japanese and various nationalities, thronged the salons of the Embassy. Dr. Hedin probably felt that a heartier reception has not been accorded to him in any country.

MARQUIS KATSURA ON THE SITUATION.

Interviewed in the course of his return journey from the south, Marquis Katsura is reported by a representative of the Asahi Shimbun to have strongly condemned the circulation of disquieting rumours in Japan or any fomenting of excitement in connexion with Chinese affairs. It is perfectly natural, his Excellency said, that China should be more or less perturbed by such an extraordinary event as the decease of two Sovereigns almost simultaneously. Any nation in the world would be disturbed by such a catastrophe. But the statesmen of China are evidently managing affairs with much ability, and there are no evidences whatever of anything like disturbance. The proper and indeed the only wise attitude for the Japanese people is to keep silent, and not to lend themselves to the cultivation of any wild rumours. They can be much better employed in many ways than in circulating or crediting stories calculated to give a setback to the financial recovery which has happily manifested itself in Japan. Official telegrams from Peking show indeed that the people are more or less excited, as is inevitable, and that there is more or less run upon the exchange shops. But these things are mere temporary phenomena, and are not to be regarded with serious misgivings. The Chinese Government is taking strenuous and adequate precautions to meet the situation, and Japan's business is to refrain from every thing calculated to accentuate the crisis. As for the question of reducing the Japanese force in Pechili, notice of that intention having been duly conveyed to the Chinese Government, and there being no sign of any commotion such as would militate against the carrying out of the programme, the Government's resolve is to proceed with the operation. China has troops enough of her own to deal with any disturbance, and a recurrence of such events as those of 1900 can not and need not be expected. For the rest, if any occasion should arise for the employment of foreign troops, Japan has forces in Manchuria and Korea which would be available at any moment. Things may safely be entrusted to the Government's discretion.

KOREA.

Friday, November 13.

The exceedingly unwise interference of the Government in the matter of queues appears to be producing disastrous effects in Korea. Why on earth the people of Korea should not wear top knots if that style of coiffure pleases them, it passes the wit of man to understand, but that the law should meddle with such matters is about as sane as would be an act of parliament ordering the universal use of silk hats. The effect of this piece of sumptuary silliness is that the Korean peasants are afraid to come to market lest they should suffer for not obeying the edict, and many persons residing in the neighbourhood of foreign settlements are retiring to remote places in the interior, where they will be able to nourish their queues without official molestation.

Telegram from Seoul state that the organisation of a special police corps is now to be given up. This corps was used wholly for the purpose of dealing with the insurgents. Its disbandment does not mean that the constables of whom it is formed are to be dismissed, but merely that they will return to their normal duties. Neither does it mean that the insurrection requires no further subjugation: the special police force is not needed any longer because its place is to be taken by the assistant gendarmes which has been under organisation for some months.

Monday, November 16.

It is stated that owing to the disturbed condition of Korea the collection of the land tax was considerably impeded up to the last few months, but there is now a marked improvement, and it is thought that the diminution will not exceed 800,000 yen. On the other hand, the remaining taxes have proved exceptionally prolific, so that the total income will probably be in excess of the normal amount. The actual sum of land tax collected up to the end of October has been 4,756,000 yen, and the proceeds of other taxes 3,284,000 yen.

We take the following from the Seoul Press of the 12th instant:—

The Korean Fishery Law was published in the Official Gazette of yesterday. It consists of sixteen articles in all. According to the definition given in Article 1, the catching and gathering or cultivation of marine animals and vegetables, carried on as a business, is the fishing industry in the sense of the Code. Fishing rights are to be of five kinds. They are to be established on the sanction of the Minister of Agriculture, Commerce and Industry. They can be made subjects of assignment by inheritance, transfer, joint possession, mortgage or lease, but these transactions do not become valid until they have been duly registered in the Agricultural, Commercial, and Industrial Department. Those rights may be pronounced null and void by the Minister of Agriculture, Commerce and Industry, for several stated reasons, one of which is, when without reasonable cause, the business is not in working operation within one year from the date of the receipt of the necessary sanction, or when the business is suspended for two years continuously. The Minister of Agriculture, Commerce and Industry will be the one, who on application of the parties concerned, will arbitrate in the case of disputes arising over fishing districts or methods and over any matters within the domain of fishing rights. People contravening the provisions of the present law are liable to a fine not exceeding 100 yen. The date of the enforcement of the law will be named by an Imperial Ordinance to be issued in the future. Those who have secured the necessary permission for, or have been engaging in the fishery business in accordance with established custom at the time of the law, are required to apply for permission or ratification in conformity with the provisions of the law within a certain stipulated time.

A CORRESPONDENT who writes about a £25 aeroplane is informed that we have no other particulars.

THE CAMPHOR MONOPOLY.

In the Asahi Shinbun of the 15th instant the following note appears under the title of "Taking the Bones out of the Camphor Monopoly":—"Last February, the Mitsui Firm, by a large expenditure of money and by the aid of Marquis Inouye and Baron Goto, succeeded in getting out of the hands of Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company the privilege of selling the monopoly camphor. Thereafter, however, owing to the keen competition of the natural camphor of China and the artificial camphor of Germany, the expected profit could not be realized, and the Firm conceived the desire of contriving to have the article placed in their own accounts as an ordinary staple of commerce, so that they might be able to control the foreign market. To that end they saw that the only thing to be done was to get rid of the monopoly altogether, and now at length they are in a fair way to attain their object, while, at the same time, the internal conditions of the monopoly have undergone a complete change and no longer exist in anything but form. The particulars are these:—The Mitsui have, on the whole, more intimate relations with the members of the present Cabinet than they had with those of the Saionji Ministry. Mr. Azabuki Yeiji, for example, had the entrée of the Prime Minister's house and worked hard to establish a connexion. Now it is not to be gainsaid that, from the time when the camphor question came upon the tapis, Baron Goto was brought into close contact with the Mitsui through Marquis Inouye, and, just then, Japanese camphor began to fall steadily in the markets of Europe and America. (At that time Mr. Iwahara, manager of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, attacked the Government's methods in the columns of the Tokyo Keizai Zasshi—Tokyo Economist—and other journals with unwonted vigour, and his articles, being translated in Germany, are said to have influenced the market). The monopoly officials of the Viceroyalty who were abroad became alarmed, and the sharp Mitsui folk seizing this occasion, used it as an illustration to show that in such circumstances the monopoly system could not rule the market. Mr. Asabuki and his fellow-directors explained the conditions fully, and in October, in the sequel of close conference, Marquis Katsura, Minister of Finance, was induced to summon suddenly to Tokyo Mr. Miyano Shinji, Head of the Monopoly Bureau in Formosa. After much discussion the proposals of the Mitsui were entertained. The Minister of Finance entrusted to the Viceroy of Formosa the power of fixing the selling rate of the camphor, and the Viceroy made an amendment in the sense of entrusting that power to Masuzawa Yu, the Monopoly Agent in London, and Mr. Tani Kintaro, the Agent in New York. Thus these two agents became competent, from November, to alter the price freely within fixed limits, and, Mr. Masuzawa establishing his quarters daily in the Mitsui's rooms in London, while Mr. Tani does the same in New York, the two are carrying on the business. According to the plan hitherto pursued in fixing the price of the staple, the orders of the Viceroy had to be sought on each occasion, and the Viceroy, in turn, had to obtain the sanction of the Minister of Finance, with the result, doubtless, that opportunities of doing business were often lost. Nevertheless under the amended system there is no telling what connivance may not take place between the officials abroad and the Mitsui, who have to do the selling.

THE GERMAN EPISODE.

According to Asahi telegrams from Berlin the press of Germany is practically unanimous in its approval of the tone adopted by the Chancellor in the debate on the Interview incident. It now appears, and the fact will go far towards reconciling English public opinion, that whatever may have been the Kaiser's intention in sending his celebrated Kruger telegram, the German Government at all events acted a perfectly straightforward part in dealing with the Boers. It has also been elicited that the plan of campaign alluded to by the Kaiser in the Interview was purely theoretical and did not go into practical details. It is not at all unlikely that the Queen conveyed to Lord Roberts the sense of His Majesty's suggestions. That measure of interference would be simply a mark of friendship and could not give any offence to the British Army. It is stated that the Conservatives, the Centre and the Clerical Party united in opposing the measure proposed in the Reichstag for an amendment of the Constitution.

San Francisco sends to the Asahi Shinbun a telegram which we trust is purely sensational. It is to the effect that Prince Buelow was to tender his resignation on the 16th inst. and that the Emperor would accept it. The reason assigned is that His Majesty disapproves of the statement made by the Chancellor in the Reichstag to the effect that the Emperor would not hereafter interfere in the conduct of the country's foreign affairs without previously consulting his Ministers. His Majesty, according to this telegram, repudiates such an idea. He avers that he is in no sense required to receive instructions from the Reichstag, and that he will exercise his own judgment independently on all occasions which seem to call for such action. These declarations are said to have created much excitement in Germany, but we are not disposed to place much faith in the telegram until the receipt of news direct from Berlin. Certainly the Kaiser is placed in a very difficult situation, but it is plain that the responsibility for recent events must be borne by His Majesty or placed on the shoulders of his Ministers. The latter course would have been feasible at the outset, but it can scarcely be followed now. The Sovereign has himself to bear the full brunt of the episode, and it appears to us that the best method of lightening the load is to make a substantial concession to the natural anxiety of his people.

General satisfaction will be derived from the news received on Wednesday in Tokyo that the anxiously awaited interview between the Kaiser and his Chancellor has been thoroughly propitious. His Majesty is said to have frankly approved the statement made by Prince Bülow in the Reichstag, and to have declared his desire that the able statesman should remain at the head of affairs. The telegram adds that the uneasiness prevailing in Germany during the past few weeks has been entirely dispelled. It will be universally agreed, we think, that the Emperor has shown profound wisdom in his attitude towards the last phase of this unfortunate affair.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

The intelligence published in Tokyo on Tuesday morning to the effect that Mr. Secretary Root was about to open negotiations with Japan on the subject of the preservation of China's integrity and the maintenance of the open door in Manchuria, appears to have been derived solely from newspaper rumours. At all events the Fiji Shimpō has a telegram from Washington which contradicts this news in the most emphatic terms. The telegram quotes Mr. Root as declaring that he has not in any way approached Japan on such a subject, nor does he intend to approach her. The United States Government is entirely satisfied with the policy declared by Japan in her treaties with Great Britain, France and Russia. That policy is identical with the policy of the United States, and it needs neither repetition nor consummation.

It would seem that some busybodies in the United States have found a fresh opportunity in the recent startling events at the Chinese capital. They are raising a cry that the line taken by Japan in connexion with these events may be startling, and that the Washington Government should seek from Tokyo some assurances, especially with regard to Japan's policy in Manchuria. Mr. Secretary Root and the President himself are both quoted as denying that there is the least necessity for such a course, and as affirming that a complete understanding exists between Tokyo and Washington.

Japan must reconcile herself to being an object of suspicion since she has become great in the eyes of the world. It is the old story embodied in her own proverb, "the storm strikes the mountain and leaves the valley unaffected." For many a year Russia was the perpetual butt of European, especially English, suspicion, and Japan is evidently destined to pass through a similar ordeal.

SCIENCE HONOURED.

We note with unfeigned pleasure that His Majesty the King has honoured science, in the person of Dr. A. R. Wallace, by conferring upon that eminent scientist the Order of Merit. Dr. Wallace now joins the small but distinguished company of those who have received that signal distinction.

It would have required no prophet to foretell that the Japan Herald and its Kobe colleague would endeavour to make capital—or, shall we say, to grind their respective axes—out of this event in connection with our criticism of Dr. Wallace's recent incursion into the field of politics. These German apologists were of course delighted with Dr. Wallace's suggestion of giving away the British Empire and of abandoning the two-power naval standard which is England's sole security; and they would now be happy if they could get their readers to believe that the honour conferred on the great scientist implies approval of his political vapourings. Well informed people, of course, know that it means nothing of the kind. There are very few men who have not committed a faux pas at some period of their lives; and we would be the last to suggest that Dr. Wallace's magnificent services to science should be overlooked on that account. To take another case—the Kobe morning journal, like its German confrère (which is so obsessed with a certain idea as to talk, in its issue of the 6th, of "French shocks of earthquake in central Germany") is suffered to exist despite its little vices: but it is nevertheless desirable in the interests of public polity that these should be brought home to both journals from time to time.

RACE CLUBS.

In an article on horse-racing in Japan and the Government's procedure toward it, the Japan Herald, after condemning the attempts hitherto made to reduce the sport of racing to a thing of rule and regulation, says:—

Better still would it have been to have taken no official steps in the matter, and to have left the formation of race clubs entirely to private enterprise. Any clubs founded would then have been based on the Nippon Race Club, purely as sporting concerns, and not as money-making enterprises. But the difficulty is that clubs based on the Nippon Race Club would have had the pari-mutuel as an item in their "make up," and the pari-mutuel is the very fons et origo mali. We are well aware that the pari-mutuel at the meetings of the Nippon Race Club was never disfigured by any scandal whatever. No one need do violence to his instinct of truth by pretending to think that all the folks who staked money in the pari-mutuel at Negishi were influenced by the love of sport, pure and simple. Their motive was less respectable. But being, in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, ladies and gentlemen with due respect for the convenances, they behaved in a seemly manner. A very different record was achieved by the pari-mutuel on Japanese race courses. It very soon developed a character which effectually deterred ladies and gentlemen, and made it a rendezvous for gamblers who staked sums amounting in the aggregate to something enormous. The Government did well, we think, to put an end to it, though as to the method pursued there is room for criticism. The question now is, can there be race-clubs in Japan without the pari-mutuel? Will they receive sufficient support from the public? Apparently both questions must be answered in the negative. As to "leaving the formation of race-clubs entirely to private enterprise," experience has amply shown what such a plan means. The course at Negishi has been in existence for over 40 years, and throughout the whole of that time no year has been without race-meetings. But the example of Negishi was never successfully followed elsewhere in Japan. A fitful attempt, made at some time in the eighties, proved a conspicuous failure, and nothing is more certain, apparently, than that the country never would have had race-clubs at all had the matter been left to private enterprise. The military authorities wanted race-clubs and the only way to have them was the way adopted by the Government, albeit the same Government has now dealt a mortal blow to its own creations. There remains always the great query, are race-clubs necessary at all in Japan?

THE AUTUMN MANŒUVRES.

The autumn military manœuvres came to an end on the 13th inst. and the march past took place on the 14th, in most beautiful weather. At 3 p.m. on the 14th the usual audience and luncheon were given. The number of persons present is said to have been about 3000.

The naval review is to be held on the 16th inst. at Kobe. The number of ships participating will be unprecedented in Japan, namely, 124, with a total displacement of 380,000 tons. In order to attend this review the Emperor left Nara on the 15th inst. and proceeded to the Detached Palace of Prince Arisugawa at Maiko.

The Naval Review, which was to have been held on the 17th inst., had to be postponed till the 18th in consequence of inclement weather. The morning of the 17th was ushered in by a strong westerly wind which brought up heavy rain, and, though the sky subsequently cleared, such seas were running that it would have been out of the question for His Majesty to embark. Postponement therefore became inevitable. A serious accident was barely avoided. It appears that a number of sailing boats carrying about 700 students left the harbour of Sakai in the morning and put to sea, towed by a steamer. On getting outside, such a fierce wind was encountered that the tow-ropes parted, and for a period five or six of the boats were in imminent danger of being upset. Happily the water police came to the rescue in time. One torpedo-boat was blown against the landing jetty at Maiko, and suffered some injury. Admiral Togo conveyed to His Majesty a statement as to the condition of the weather and advised that the Review should be postponed for one day.

The naval manœuvres passed off on the 18th inst. with great eclat, everything taking place exactly as planned. After the manœuvres His Majesty, who was on board the Asama, gave audience to about 500 Princes, statesmen and officers, and subsequently a banquet was served on board the Asama, the Tsukuba and the Ikoma. His Majesty issued a short rescript, which was read on board all the vessels of the Fleet immediately after the Imperial inspection. It said that three years had elapsed since the last review by the Emperor in person, and that on learning the results of the manœuvres and on inspecting the ships, His Majesty found evidence of good progress. This was attributable to the earnest assiduity of the officers and the men, and they were exhorted to continue their diligence and sincerity.

A GREAT INJUSTICE.

It will be remembered that the revival of the boycott in Hongkong was attributed by a paragraph in the Asahi Shimbun to a lecture delivered by Mr. Murai in the Law College on his recent travels in China. The Asahi, quoting Chinese newspapers, attributed to Mr. Murai statements so offensive that they could scarcely fail to arouse Chinese ire, and the theory was that these statements, having been taken down and transmitted to China by Chinese students among the audience, were instrumental in bringing about a revival of the boycott. It would now seem that this story had no basis in fact, and that a grave injustice has been done to Mr. Murai. He has sent to the Asahi Shimbun a verbatim copy of his lecture, and close examination of it shows that it does not contain anything answering to the description given by Chinese newspapers. An English correspondent writing to us on the subject says:—"The lecture was delivered some time ago, and the numerous Chinese students in Mr. Murai's audience made no remarks at the time, and remained on perfectly friendly terms with him. Since the appearance of the shamefully distorted report in the Asahi, however, he has been subject to constant insults and threats. He sent the manuscript of his lecture to the Asahi Shimbun and it appeared in that paper on Sunday last. I may add that the lecture, which was delivered in English, was read over to me beforehand, and certainly there was nothing to offend the dignity of any Chinese man."

A STRANGE TELEGRAM.

San Francisco wires a strange and scarcely credible piece of news to the Kokumin Shimbun. It is to the effect that Mr. Miyaoka, Councillor of Embassy, contemplates inviting 100 of the American press representatives to Japan, for the purpose of enabling them to post themselves accurately in the conditions existing in this country. The telegram further quotes Mr. Miyaoka as saying that this project has already received Imperial approval, since nothing could conduce more fully to the peace of neighbouring countries than that their peoples should understand each other thoroughly. One of the difficulties in crediting this story is that Mr. Miyaoka is now in Tokyo. Of course the name given in the telegram may be erroneous, though the facts related are correct. But it appears to us that the statement is merely an exaggerated account of the intelligence recently published in Japan to the effect that there is to be, next year, an interchange of visits between Japanese and American press-men. After all, it must appear to outsiders that Japan has pretty well done her part in showing a friendly demeanour towards her great neighbour, and perhaps it would be as well now to avoid anything in the nature of an anti-climax.

PROFESSOR AYRTON.

The Japanese press announces the death of Professor Ayrton but gives no particulars. It is to be feared, however, that the sad news is true. Professor Ayrton served for several years in Japan at the former College of Engineering, where he filled the chair of physical science and where he commenced the discoveries which culminated in the successful application of electricity to purposes of traction. Professor Perry, also of the Engineering College, where his specialty was mathematics, worked always in conjunction with Professor Ayrton, and both men subsequently became famous in the world of science, both also receiving the blue ribbon by becoming Fellows of the Royal Society. It suffices to mention the names of Dyer, Milne, Ayrton, Perry, Alexander and Conder if one desires to learn what great advantages the Engineering College enjoyed so far as its Faculty was concerned. During recent years, the bruit of Mr. Ayrton's fame has reached the Far East only fitfully, but that his career was one of the highest distinction there can be no question. We have no record of his age, but it can not have been much over 65, so that, in the ordinary course of nature, several years of usefulness should still have remained to him.

OPINIONS.

Mr. Midzuno, Japanese Consul in New York, is reported to have delivered a lecture in that city the gist of which was that peace is the most valuable asset that Japan can possess. Her whole energies will be devoted to preserving the tranquillity of the Orient. She regards the Pacific Ocean as the great tradal basin of the world, and she considers that her own part will be to take advantage of the opportunities of her geographical position and to act as a medium of communication between the East and the West. This is telegraphed to the Fiji Shimpō from Washington, and is accompanied by another item of intelligence, namely, that a newspaper correspondent whose name appears to be Richard Harley, has responded to the above lecture by producing a statement attributed to General Viscount Torio, who is quoted as saying that war between China and Japan is inevitable, and that it will last for thirty years when once it commences. Viscount Torio died several years ago, and it is therefore possible to attribute to him any utterances whatsoever. He did not even live to see the Russo-Japanese War, and, for the rest, from our own personal acquaintance with him we find it quite incredible that he ever used the statements now attributed to him.

BUSINESS NOTES.

The number of shares applied for in the case of the Oriental Development Company is now definitely ascertained to have been 4,792,489, being very nearly 35 times the number to be allotted. The Imperial Household of Japan subscribes for 5,000 shares; Prince Nashimoto for 1,300, and the Emperor and ex-Emperor of Korea for 1,000 each. Of course this result does not bear comparison with the singular extravagance shown by the nation just two years ago in applying for shares in the South Manchuria Railway Company. The latter incident may be supposed to have taught a lesson to speculators, and the present volume of subscriptions, large as it is, seems to be regarded simply as an evidence of reasonable business enterprise. Deducting the shares applied for by Imperial personages, which will doubtless be allotted in full, the remainder will have to be distributed in due proportion, and as there will thus remain only 3,700 to be distributed, it follows that each applicant will receive one share for every 36 applied for. The Tokyo newspapers concur in regarding this event as a sure sign of the revival of business enterprise. They note that the applications in the case of the South Manchuria Railway were 1900 times greater than the number of shares for allotment, but that extraordinary fever was due mainly to the administration of stimulants by the Government, whereas the authorities on this occasion have done everything in their power to exhibit a sedative. On the whole therefore it is confidently judged that the era of reaction has set in. We may mention that the payment of the first installment on the shares has to be made by the 10th of December, and the organisation of the Company is expected to be completed by the 20th of that month. Lieut.-General Baron Usagawa is confidently spoken of as the first President. The actual work of the Company will commence about February or March next.

There is a great deal of talk about the organisation of the new Railway Bureau. It will be one of the most important sections of the Government, since it will practically have complete control of the entire railway system throughout the Empire. The present expectation is that it will be attached direct to the Cabinet and that its name will be Tetsudo-In, the nearest English equivalent of which is "Railway Board." There has always been much talk of abuses in connexion with railway administration, and the present occasion is regarded as quite unique for purposes of reorganisation. Tokyo papers discuss the matter in various tones, being evidently influenced more or less by political bias; but, on the whole, the impression seems to be that Baron Goto is just the man for the task and that he will grapple with it in a thoroughly courageous spirit of reform. The Baron himself is spoken of as likely to be the first President of the Board, but only as locum tenens.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun quotes the Minister of Communications as saying that the idea of a message charge for telephones has not been abandoned by any means. It was felt from the first that such a change ought not to be sprung upon the people unawares, and that ample opportunity should be given for discussion. Thus far the opponents of the measure have made their voices heard most distinctly, but that fact will not induce the Government to abandon the project, unless the opposition be found to have good reason on its side. Meanwhile the Department of Communications has submitted the question, together with full statistics, to the various chambers of commerce throughout the country, so that it may be discussed by the United Chambers when they hold their next session, namely, in December. We (Japan Mail) are inclined to think that the change will be postponed until public opinion becomes better reconciled to it, which will probably be the case in Japan as it has been in Occidental countries already.

According to the Shogyo Shimpō, there is a project on foot to organise what appears to be a new Government bank for receiving fixed deposits and applying the interest to the purchase of bonds. We are aware that this is a very vague statement, but so is the rumour now in circulation and we can only reproduce the story for what it may be worth.

The forests on Mt. Ari, as well as the mines, are to be taken over, it is said, from the Fujita family and worked by the State. This is the property acquired in the sequel of the recent operations of the Aiyu in Formosa. No reasons are publicly assigned for the contemplated step, and certainly it has nothing to recommend it on the face of the matter. The State's hands are full enough already, one would think.

The Aomori Commercial Bank is said to be in a precarious condition. It is a small concern with a capital of 400,000 yen, of which 370,000 is paid up. One of the directors seems to have become honestly or dishonestly responsible for a sum of 80,000 yen, only about  $\frac{1}{4}$  of which can be recovered. The other banks have turned their backs upon the Aomori concern, and its embarrassments are pressing.

The habutae weavers of Fukui continue to vehemently oppose the scheme of the prefectural authorities to organise a conditioning house under official auspices. The reasons advanced by the prefectural authorities have already been explained, and certainly they commend themselves to thoughtful people. The reasons of the weavers remain to be stated.

We read in the Jiji Shimpō that the Dai Nihon Sugar Refining Company is expected to declare a dividend of 15 per cent for the current half year. Its business has not been eminently prosperous, but it was able to carry over a large sum from last year's accounts, and a part of this is now available. The same authority says that unfavourable as are the conditions of the maritime carrying trade in general, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha has not fared so ill. It will be able to declare a dividend of 12 per cent by taking only 100,000 yen from its reserves for the equalization of dividends. On the other hand, the Nisshin S.S. Company must again refrain this half year from paying any dividend, its operations on the Yangtze not having yet realized any considerable profit. As for the Fuji Gass Spinning Company, its actual earnings during the half year are not likely to warrant more than a 12 per cent dividend, though recourse may possibly be had to the reserves. But the Kanegafuchi Company's affairs have prospered better than was expected, and it will probably declare a dividend of 15 per cent.

Saturday, November 14.

It is stated that the Governor-General of Formosa has decided upon sending a strong exploration force from the mountain called Banshorei to Taito. This movement is not directed simply against the aborigines: it is also intended to open up regions which are supposed to be exceptionally rich in camphor forests.

It appears that, abounding as Formosa does in forests, it has hitherto been drawing the main part of its supplies of timber from Japan. There is a timber enterprise carried on by the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha at Ulai in the Shinko region, but only a small quantity of Hinoki timber has hitherto been obtained there. Ample forests exist on Mt. Ari, which has lately been recovered from the aborigines. There the Fujita firm has been laying a temporary railway to facilitate the carriage of logs, but the work is still in its infancy. It is for these reasons that the Formosa Government has decided to interest itself directly in the timber enterprise.

Probably the above place-names being unfamiliar to our readers, the situation in Formosa will prove more or less perplexing. Simply stated, the facts are that the Aiyu lines now form an extensive loop, concave towards the eastern coast of the Island, and that this arc of advance is being gradually pushed forward until its extremities debouch upon the sea-shore. Roughly speaking, the location of the operation is the centre of the Island, and the route taken by the exploration force mentioned above will be from a point on the south-west coast diagonally across the Island in a north-easterly direction. We may mention that the length of the arc formed by the Aiyu lines is about 400 miles.

It appears that great pains have been taken by the Japanese authorities to dispel all misunderstandings among the people of Korea as to the purposes of the Oriental Development Company. There had been many suspicions that this enterprise was merely a pretext for Japanese aggressive purposes, and consequently the people in the interior showed considerable reluctance to apply for shares. Evidently, however, these suspicions have been dispersed, for, although not a single application for shares has been received from the province of Hamiyong, the applications from other quarters in Korea, independently of the Imperial Household, aggregate 48,073.

Baron Matsuo, Governor of the Bank of Japan, is quoted by the Chuo Shimbun with reference to the subscriptions for the above Company's shares. The Baron gives an interesting opinion as to the reason of Tokyo's singular backwardness in subscribing. Our readers are aware that, among the four great cities, namely, Tokyo, Osaka, Kyoto and Nagoya, Osaka stood first on the list of subscribers and Tokyo last. The difference is enormous: Tokyo's applications amounted to only 350,000 shares, whereas Osaka's aggregated 2½ millions. Baron Matsuo's theory is that Tokyo was harder hit than any of the four cities by the depression which followed the great post bellum boom, and that the citizens are still conspicuously feeling the effects of the blow. He also doubts whether the results of the subscriptions may be taken as a conclusive proof of the financial situation. If they be so accepted, it would follow that the country is now in a position to fix capital totalling more than 200 million yen without any special inconvenience. Such a state of affairs is scarcely credible. In short, the Governor is evidently disposed to warn people against attempting to float new enterprises on the strength of this experience alone.

The Fiji Shimpō continues its analysis of the dividends which the various companies are likely to pay this half year. Coming to the Tanko S.S. Company, our contemporary observes that, by using the entire sum of 300,000 yen carried over from its previous accounts, the Company was able to pay a dividend of 14 per cent. last year and to carry forward 310,000 yen. Hence by utilising the latter it will be able to pay the same rate of dividend this term. With regard to the Tokyo Railway, its income up to the end of October showed an increase of 100,000 yen as compared with the corresponding period of last year, but, on the other hand, as heavy expenses have to be incurred on account of renewals and repairs, the dividend will remain 7 per cent as before. The Tokyo Electric Light Company's returns show no special change as compared with the preceding term, but as it will be necessary to devote a part of the profits to works connected with the supply of power, the dividend will be only 11 per cent.

The Dai Nihon Beer Company has a much better record than that for the first half of the year though not so good as that for the last half of 1907. It will be easily able, however, to pay a dividend of 15 per cent.

The appreciation which has taken place in the share market during the past two months has greatly improved the situation of the Imperial Bank of Commerce. The market value of its securities has increased to the total extent of 1,300,000 yen.

Figures relating to the traffic returns of the South Manchuria Railway have been published, namely:—

	Total for the month. yen .	Average per day. yen .
April .....	1,023,162	34,005
May .....	658,905	21,255
June .....	656,228	22,784
July .....	569,742	18,378
August .....	603,934	19,481
September .....	710,488	23,583
Total .....	4,249,461	23,221

The total figure is 275,392 yen (0.539 yen per diem) greater than that for the first half of 1907, but is 1,257,245 yen less than that for the second half—i.e., the corresponding period—of 1907. No explanation of this decrease has yet been published, neither are the operating expenses shown.

Sunday, November 15.

The financial trouble at Hankow is reported to have involved six banks with total liabilities of over 4 million taels. The panic is said to be increasing. This event is said to have given a great blow to the trade recovery of which signs were just beginning to be apparent.

With regard to the leading officers of the Oriental Development Company, the names now confidently indicated are those of Lt.-General Baron Usagawa for President, of Mr. Yoshiwara, formerly Vice Minister of Home Affairs, for Japanese Vice-President, and of Mr. Min Yong-hwi, formerly Minister of Finance in Seoul, for Korean Vice-President. Of course these names have still to receive Imperial sanction.

The Asahi says that, according to the views of the authorities, there was only a very small element of speculation in the large volume of applications made for shares of the Oriental Development Company. Three banks alone, namely, the Toyokuni, the Tokai and the Kitahama, encouraged their clients to make application. All the other banks maintained an absolutely neutral demeanour. To us it appears that the shares of a company which is not likely to call up more than 2½ millions of its capital, and which is to receive from the Government a yearly subsidy of 300,000 yen, ought to attract investors whether the money market be depressed or otherwise.

Certain leading foreign merchants of Yokohama and several of their prominent Japanese confreres are said to have addressed a memorial to the Prefect of Fukui urging that his plan with regard to the conditioning of habutaye should be resolutely carried out. The memorialists say that Fukui is the only place in Japan where the manufacturers are their own conditioners, and that the consequence is that, in respect of weight and quality alike, great irregularities occur in the Fukui product, whereby the dealers in Yokohama suffer much loss and the reputation of habutaye is greatly impaired.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that, while the recent appreciation of State securities is doubtless largely due to the success of the Government's financial policy, something must also be attributed to the orders now coming from abroad.

Tuesday, November 17.

There has been a small panic at Hongkong, apparently as a result of the boycott. Four Chinese banks are said to have closed their doors, and the principal sufferers are reported to be the Hongkong Shanghai Bank to the extent of 150,000 yen, and the Specie Bank to the extent of 120,000. We are in some doubt whether this news refers to Hongkong or to Hankow, one journal dating it from the latter place, another from the former. The reference to marine products would seem to indicate Hongkong, but other details point to Hankow.

The Shogyo Shimpō alleges that the incidents in Peking are not regarded with disquiet by the Chinese merchants in Japan, but the Nippon quotes the officials of the Specie Bank as saying that whatever may be the ultimate outcome, the immediate effect will be to give a heavy blow to trade. Shanghai and Tientsin, which had just begun to recover from the depression, are now again confronted by something like a crisis, and it is quite possible that the banks may feel themselves obliged to decline the discounting of all bills drawn upon China. The Mainichi Dempo justly points out that even though Peking may not be the scene of any commotion, the Chinese nation's demand for goods of all descriptions will be largely lessened during the period of mourning, and thus in any event trade must suffer.

A telephonic message from Osaka says that the Cotton Spinners Union has effected with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha a new agreement for the carriage of cotton during the approaching year. The Steamship Company is said to have consented to lower its rate from 11¼ rupees per ton to 10 rupees. There are other conditions attached to the agreement, but their gist is simply that the cotton spinners have obtained greatly improved terms.

The new racing regulations just issued seem to have deepened rather than lessened the discontent. They contain a provision that the Chief of the Basei Kyoku may assist race clubs to pay the expenses of meetings and may give prizes to winning horses, but inquiry is said to have elicited the fact that the funds available for these purposes will be altogether petty. The various race clubs are said to be consulting as to the advisability of taking legal proceedings against the Government.

Wednesday, November 18.

Mr. Iwanaga of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and Mr. Yamamoto of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha are quoted as saying that they do not anticipate any serious trade effects from the Chinese incident. There may be some small diminution of demand in consequence of the period of mourning, but it will not be considerable or lasting.

The new Fishing Convention between Japan and Korea was duly published in the Official Gazette of the 18th inst. Its provisions are identical with those already described in these columns.

The Specie Bank is said to have received from its branches in China reports that they are fully on their guard in view of recent events in Peking, and the Bank itself is exercising due caution in dealing with bills on China.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun has an inconclusive paragraph saying that the Tokyo Railway Company is working with much ability to obtain permission for raising its fares, and that the authorities will probably give their consent after the conclusion of the autumn manoeuvres.

Thursday, November 19.

The united business associations of Tokyo held a meeting on the 18th inst. in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce and adopted a resolution for presentation to the City Assembly. This resolution asserts that a great blow to progress and industry was given by the postponement of the Exhibition originally planned for 1912, and that in the country's material interest some remedial measure is imperatively necessary. Several years have passed since a competitive exhibition was held in Japan, and as it is unquestionable that such exhibitions contribute largely to stimulate industry and to promote prosperity, the business men are persuaded that the best plan is to open a domestic exhibition in Tokyo in 1912. They have therefore petitioned the City Assembly to take the necessary steps.

On the 18th inst. there was a rumour in Tokyo that the Bank of Japan was about to lower its rate of discount. This is denied. One of the directors, whose name is not given, is quoted by Tokyo newspapers as saying that the duty of the Central Bank is to take the lead in imposing caution and to bring up the rear in relaxing caution. It is true that the money market is much easier than it was some time ago, but at the same time the horizon is not perfectly clear, for the Balkan complication and the calamities in China have to be considered, and moreover the period for the annual settlement of accounts is approaching. With regard to the question of when a reduction of rate may be expected, this authority is quoted as indicating next spring, namely, February. He says that the final redemption of the first installment of Treasury bonds and the payment of interest on the National Debt must both be consummated before the rate of discount can be lowered. Present appearances indicate that the settlement of accounts at the New Year will pass quietly, and the probability is that money will be very plentiful from the month of January onwards. That therefore will be the time to look for a reduction of rate.

A banquet was given at the Bankers Club on the 8th inst. by way of welcome to Baron Sakatani, Mr. Wakatsuki and Mr. Mizumachi. All the leading bankers were present. In the speeches delivered the only point worthy of special notice was a statement made by Baron Sakatani to the effect that many representations had been made to him by Englishmen as to the expediency of opening an Anglo-Japanese exhibition in London. The Anglo-French Exhibition has proved a great success and has contributed materially to draw the two countries closer together. It is thought in London that an Anglo-Japanese exhibition would have a similar effect, and that it would foster not only the trade between the two countries but also the friendship. Baron Sakatani commended the idea to the attention of his hearers.

On the 18th inst. Mr. Inouye Kakugoro assembled the shareholders of the Tanko S.S. Company and delivered a speech in commemoration of the completion of the 15th year of his service as a director of the Company. When he took charge of its affairs 15 years ago, it had been a comparatively small concern, engaged merely in mining coal for the railway. From the time of his assuming charge the sale of coal was extended to the general public; the mining operations were increased on a large scale; the railway was extended; a line of steamers was established; the manufacture of coke was commenced; the Company undertook the enterprise of electric lighting; timber-felling work was inaugurated and brick making was undertaken. Now finally a combination has been effected with two great English Companies and large steel works are about to be opened. Fifteen years ago the Company's capital was only 6½ million yen; now it is 27 millions with debentures amounting to more than 6 millions. Very soon the shareholders will receive the face value of their railway scrip and the Company will further be able to pay a dividend of some 9 per cent. These fine results are due mainly to the exertions of the directors and employees, but there is still a great deal to be done. The Company's coal fields extend to 100 square miles, its forests to over 500,000 acres and its iron mines are stretched over an area of 87 miles. The development of this great property is a big task and will demand all the energies of the directors and shareholders. Mr. Inouye alluded also to the steel works which he said bear the character of a national enterprise rather than that of a purely private concern.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, November 13.

The 13th was a day of depression on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. No cause was apparent except that the further fall of silver produced uneasiness, and sales were the order of the day. It is almost comical to observe the divergence between actualities and newspaper predictions. So sure as the latter are roseate—and they were distinctly so on the morning of the 13th—the results are precisely the opposite. Folks appear to be still too timid to resist any temptation of making an immediate profit, however small.

Saturday, November 14.

The news from China has naturally produced a depressing effect on the Stock market. This was evidently responsible for the fall of prices witnessed on the 13th inst., and for the stronger decline which took place on the 14th in the forenoon. A slightly better feeling was apparent in the afternoon session, but it must be anticipated that until light is shed upon Peking affairs there will be no recovery. In the case of the Yusen Kaisha's shares there was talk of competition with the Pacific Mail S. S. Company, and the cottons were of course specially affected. No explanation is yet forthcoming, however, as to the sharp decline in the oils.

Monday, November 16.

The 16th instant witnessed a veritable débacle on the Stock Exchange owing to the news from China. The death of the Emperor and the nomination of an heir had already created uneasiness which was intensified into a panic when the telegraph announced the demise of the Empress Dowager. It would seem that the bottom has dropped completely out of the market, and the quotations recall the evil time in 1907.

Tuesday, November 17.

On the 17th instant in the forenoon session there was a continuance of the débacle which commenced on the 14th, when Tokyo received the news of the catastrophe in the Chinese capital. In the afternoon, however, some recovery was witnessed, though it did not develop much strength. There is little likelihood of a permanent restoration of healthy feeling until the Chinese crisis is over. It has given, and is still giving, a great shock to Japan.

Wednesday, November 18.

The Chinese complication having ceased to be regarded with extreme nervousness, the stock market on the 18th instant recovered its tone and there was a general upward movement. The point from which the débacle commenced has not yet been recovered, however.

Thursday, November 19.

On the whole the tone of the Stock Exchange on the 19th instant was healthy, though some shares showed fractional depression. The Takarada Oil leaped up no less than 9½ points, by way of reaction from the extravagant fall which the shares of this Company underwent during the past few days. This is the period in each month when weak holders generally realize, and that fact probably accounts for the decline shown in some cases. We append the figures for January delivery:—

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The weather this year is prematurely cold. Heavy snowfalls are reported from the districts north of Tokyo. Aomori has naturally had the worst experience. News comes that the Chief Judge of the District Court there and several men who were accompanying him to make some investigation into matters connected with a theft of timber, were caught in a snow storm and nearly lost their lives. These are the kind of climatic conditions which, in the ordinary course of events, might be expected about the second week in December, so that winter has anticipated its season by nearly a month. Of course these snowfalls are late enough not to do any harm to the crops.

The person against whom we warned residents in a note in these columns the other day has favoured our office in Yokohama with a visit. Unfortunately he came at a very busy time, and as soon as he disclosed himself was discouragingly treated. He contrived, however, between interruptions, to say that our remarks about him were "too bad," and that as he could not get anything to do he felt quite justified in living by his wits. Perhaps if allowed time he might have put it that he is too lazy to work, and therefore obtains money by promising—among other things—to do work.

The editor of the Seoul Press recently paid a visit to Japan, and he records his experiences and observations in the following note:

During our recent trip in the rural districts of Southern Japan we were pleased to notice everywhere unmistakable signs of content and prosperity among our farming population. The year has been unusually good, and it was a gladdening sight to see merry groups of villagers, men and women, old and young, out in the fields gathering in the rich harvest of rice, evidently well satisfied with the result of their year's labour. Prosperity was also evidenced by newly built houses and barns which greeted our eyes on all sides. During our stay of several days we had constant opportunity to talk with farmers and peasants, and it was remarkable that from none of them came the faintest complaint on the score of taxes or, indeed, on any matter whatever. There was, on the other hand, much talk on various schemes of agricultural improvements, all requiring considerable outlays, such as drainage, introduction of American apples and Shanghai peaches, re-arrangement of rice fields, planting of trees for timber, and so forth. The economic situation in the rural districts we lately visited was thus decidedly good and encouraging, and all accounts from home lead us to conclude that what we observed there holds good for the rest of the country. The returning prosperity of the farming class, which constitutes the largest portion of the people, is already producing its salutary effect upon the domestic trade, and this, together with the slow but steady revival of our commerce with the outside world, seems to justify the hope that we are now entering upon a period of economic expansion the like of which has not been witnessed in our past history.

The great firm of art publishers Raphael Tuck and Sons send out a veritable treasure-box for the Christmas and New Year now coming into sight. Greeting cards, calendars, diaries—the portfolio comprises everything that one could desire for oneself or wish to confer on one's friends. The wealth of designs seems inexhaustible, and the beauty of the workmanship tells eloquently of the perfection which has been achieved in this branch of manufacture. There is such a varied choice that one is perplexed to make a selection—each object appears more attractive than its fellow. One finds no difficulty in understanding the mania for collecting picture-post-cards when one encounters such specimens as those of Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons, for a collection made on these lines ranks next to, and not much below, a gallery of genuine pictures. Those that can afford to own or to bestow this box of treasures will themselves enjoy, or enable their friends to enjoy, a lasting delight. We can conceive no more delectable and instructive gift at Christmas or New Year, for the best poets and authors have been levied upon for contributions to the letter-press, which is thus well worthy of its delightful setting.

The Graphic seems to grow more and more enterprising each Christmas. Its number for this year is really an admirable production—excellent letter-press and beautiful pictures. All the stories are good, and they have the additional merit of being entirely out of the common. It is certainly a triumph of organization that such an object can be produced for one shilling. Not the least valuable part of the periodical is the supplement, which consists of two pictures, exact reproductions of "Lazy Bones" by Miss Helm Hindley, which was exhibited at the Royal Academy, and "The Last Match" by Mr. William Small, which was shown in the National Gallery. These two charming pictures alone are quite sufficient to make a valuable Christmas number.

It is necessary to notify correspondents that we can not possibly undertake to publish letters which come written lightly with pencil on thin Japanese paper. Such missives are nearly impossible to decipher. One of our correspondents makes quite a habit of sending manuscript in that form, and we are compelled reluctantly to consign it to the waste-paper basket, a fate not at all warranted by the contents of the letters, so far as we can judge from their legible portions.

A Japanese addresses to the Kobe Herald a complaint to the effect that a letter of his sent to this journal in the name of "Japanese Horse-Race Admirer" was not given the hospitality of our columns. We have failed to trace any such letter. It seems to have been lost. It would certainly have been published had it reached us.

On the 14th inst. Prince Ito left his villa at Oiso en route for Seoul to resume his post as Resident-General. This is in accordance with the programme originally announced. The date invariably named for His Excellency's return to the Korean capital has been the middle of November.

It appears that some opposition has been encountered in the Duma to the passage of the Government Bill for closing Vladivostok. The delegates from Siberia have ranged themselves against the measure, and, according to present appearances, there is no chance of its becoming law before next summer at soonest.

The Imperial Chrysanthemum Party took place on the 14th inst. in most favourable weather. The Emperor, being absent at the manoeuvres, was of course prevented from attending, but the Empress was present. The display of flowers was remarkable for profusion and beauty.

A telegram to the Asahi Shimbun from Shanghai says that the trial of Mr. Henry O'Shea, editor of the China Gazette, for libelling the American Consul-General, has ended in a sentence of two months major imprisonment.

It is reported from America that Mr. Secretary Root will be probably chosen Senator for New York when he resigns the office of Secretary of State.

The President has invited the leaders of the labour movement to the White House on the 17th inst. for the purpose of consulting about the best means of dealing with the labour question. The name of Mr. Gompers is said to have been omitted from the invitation, and this arch demagogue is reported to be much incensed at the omission.

While the electric trams in Tokyo are struggling against one of the most obstinate difficulties to be encountered in Japan, namely, official procrastination, which cripples the means of communication in a city of a million and a half of inhabitants by hesitating to allow a reasonable price to be charged for a valuable service, it may interest the Directors to read the following note from The Times—

The members of the Municipal Tramways Association appear to have been somewhat surprised and disconcerted by the presentation of the paper by Messrs. R. G. and S. G. Cunliffe, criticized as "technical" and academic, but in reality calling attention to a number of points of very practical importance in tramway management. The present condition of the industry undoubtedly deserves close study of the questions dealt with in the paper, the basis of which is the utilization of every opportunity of reducing energy consumption, and particularly by scrupulous attention to the efficient maintenance of rolling stock. The authors claim that in Manchester, where they are engaged in the tramway engineering department, the difference between watchfulness and carelessness in regard to such matters as bent axles, gearing maintenance, and electrical equipment would be represented by an additional cost of many thousands of pounds annually. One of their methods is to keep down the maximum current demand of a car, by obtaining greater acceleration with the motor in series. Again, they favour the use of a larger trolley wire, which they contend is a source of economy. The conclusions may be appreciated even if they are not accepted in their entirety, and the paper might well start a revival of technical research for the financial benefit of tramway undertakings.

The news sent by Reuter that Bishop Awdry's medical advisers have forbidden his return to Japan, will give great pain to his many friends in this country. We presume the interpretation to be that the climate of Japan is considered unsuitable, though we trust that the veto means nothing more than that Bishop Awdry must desist, for a time, at all events, from the self-sacrificing work to which his life is devoted in the cause of humanity. The Japanese, no less than his own countrymen, will not easily abandon hope of seeing him once more in Tokyo.

The Copyright Council now sitting in London appears to be making important amendments in the law bearing upon that subject. We gather from telegrams published by the Fiji Shimpō under date of the 14th inst. that the amendments are all in favour of extending the rights of authors. For example, translations of foreign works have hitherto received protection for only 10 years, but the Council advocates that they shall be placed on the same basis as original works. A very important regulation is also proposed with regard to journalistic work. The idea is that everything which is marked "Reproduction forbidden" shall be absolutely protected against being copied into the columns of other papers, and that matter not thus distinguished must, if reproduced, be fully acknowledged.

It is stated that the Government intends to issue Treasury bills to the amount of 20 million yen at the close of this month, and that the rate of interest will be 17 sen per diem. This transaction is expected to have a very bad effect upon the money market, the rate of interest being disproportionately high, and the issue coming at a time when large sums will be flowing from the hands of the people into the Treasury.

The surrender is reported of the leaders of the aborigines in the Taikakhan region of Formosa. This is regarded as an important event in the subjugation of the island, for these Taikakan insurgents have hitherto caused much trouble.

In Japan, where so many victims are yearly claimed by tuberculosis, the following telegram from the Paris correspondent of The Times is full of interest—

Professor Lannelongue has communicated to the Academy of Sciences the results of the researches which he has been making for the past three years into the treatment of tuberculosis. With a caution worthy of all praise, he had arrived at the conclusion of four well-known medical men, who have been experimenting with his method on children and adult patients, both in the Paris hospitals and at the sanatorium of Augicourt. In the course of an interview published in the Matin this morning, Professor Lannelongue explains that the serum which he employs is derived from horses or donkeys which have been submitted to the action of a toxin extracted from tuberculous matter by treatment in water, followed by precipitation by acetic acid, and redissolution in carbonate of soda. The serum used in the treatment of human beings is exclusively derived from donkeys, the doses varying from 5 cubic centimetres to 10 and 15 cubic centimetres a week. Very remarkable results have been obtained in cases of tuberculosis, even in the third stage. One of the medical men reports that in 11 cases the serum appears to have had a satisfactory effect. Of ten patients in the second stage, all were either partially or entirely cured. A tenth died suddenly after an improvement in health. The serum does not give rise to fever. The director of the Augicourt sanatorium similarly affirms that the serum gives excellent results. In view of this testimony, Professor Lannelongue believes it to be established that under the influence of the serum the bacilli diminish in number and sometimes disappear altogether.

Several leading men of science in Japan, headed by Baron Kikuchi and Baron Hamano, met at the Imperial University on the 15th inst. and decided that on the 29th inst. a Buddhist ceremonial should be performed at the Temple Kanyei ji in Ueno in memory of the late Prof. Fenollosa. On the afternoon of the same day all the friends and admirers of the deceased will assemble at the Seiyoken in Ueno, when the various writings of the late Professor on the subject of Japanese art will be exhibited. A telegram of condolence will be sent to his widow, and his bust will be placed in the school of art.

CUSTOMS APPEAL.

A decision has been given by the Minister for Finance on an appeal lodged by the Kobe branch of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha. The Japanese firm imported 13 cases of "bent nails" on which the Kobe Customs appraisers imposed 30 per cent. ad val. duty in accordance with No. 406 of the tariff. When the importers lodged a protest at the Kobe Customs contending that the goods should be dealt with under No. 388 of the tariff, the Director dismissed it. The appeal was also dismissed on the ground that the "bent nails" were different from "jacks" or "brads" in their form.

CHINA.

EVER since the Emperor HSIEN-FENG died in 1861 at the place to which he had fled on the approach of the allied forces to Peking, the succession to the Chinese Throne has inspired misgivings. HSIEN FENG, before his demise, appointed a regency to administer affairs during the minority of his only son TUNG-CHIH, but by a coup d'état, the true inwardness of which has never been fully revealed, the three male members of the Regency lost their lives, and the power which they would have exercised fell into the hands of the deceased Sovereign's widow, mother of TUNG CHIH, and known in contemporary history as the EMPRESS DOWAGER. For many years her MAJESTY had the assistance of the great statesman Prince KUNG, by whom the coup d'état had been planned and engineered; and for many years the world, choosing to detect heinous crimes in the back-ground of her accession to supremacy, made a habit of alluding to her in terms of obloquy. The EMPEROR was only 12 years of age when he succeeded to the Throne, and it has never been disputed that the affairs of his country were wisely administered during his minority. In 1873 he attained his eighteenth year and his majority, an event which created at the time something like a sensation among the nations. But he died within the year, and immediately the question of a successor presented itself vividly. Ominous predictions of disturbance appeared in the leading London journals and people prepared to witness an exciting spectacle. There was no disturbance. One night in January, 1875, the baby son of Prince CH'UN was taken from his bed, conveyed to the Palace, and proclaimed Emperor the following morning. Had the order of consanguinity been strictly followed, the scions of two families would have stood between this infant and the purple. But KUANG-HSÜ—as the new Sovereign was thenceforth called—had two recommendations: he was a child, and his mother was a sister of the EMPRESS DOWAGER. Thus to the latter was assured not merely a renewed lease, but also a long lease, of supreme power. If any voices of protest were raised, they never made themselves audible to the world. In 1889, the new Emperor attained his majority, and not many years had passed before it became known that all hope of a direct heir must be abandoned, and that his Majesty was not endowed with qualities such as make great monarchs. Again the problem of the succession presented itself, but the EMPRESS DOWAGER and her councillors hesitated strangely to solve it—so strangely that their improvidence provoked wide comment and much conjecture. Then for just one moment the EMPEROR himself suddenly stepped into the blaze of publicity in the rôle of wholesale reformer. In 1898, he listened to the promptings of a Cantonese named KANG YU-WEI, who seemed to represent the growing volume of Chinese resentment against the humiliations the country had suffered and was still suffering as a consequence of its unprogressive conservatism. A series of edicts were promulgated under authority of the Sovereign, but without the impress of the Vermilion Seal, of which the EMPRESS DOWAGER had retained possession. These edicts were of a nature so radical as to be almost revolutionary. It was afterwards said that they formed part of a programme intended to culminate in the "removal" of the EMPRESS DOWAGER, and that the plot was revealed by the future Viceroy, YUAN SHIHKAI, who had been made privy to it for the sake of the military aid at his command. However that may be, KANG YU-WEI and his brother-reformers were adjudged rebels, and such of them as failed to fly in season were decapitated or sent to work on the post-roads, while the EMPEROR, stripped of all administrative power, became, in effect, a State prisoner. This commotion had another consequence. It precipitated the nomination of an Heir Apparent, and in January, 1900, the choice fell upon a grandson of Prince TUN. This was a reversion to the legitimate sequence of consanguinity, for Prince TUN's family had stood first in the line of succession after the death of TUNG CHIH, and had been unlawfully passed over in favour of KUANG-HSÜ. The young prince thus selected need not be suffered to complicate the record, for, after a brief interval, his evil conduct led to his final rejection, and thenceforth the EMPRESS DOWAGER reverted to her demeanour of hesitancy in the matter of the succession problem. It would seem now that events have moved too fast for her MAJESTY, and that a sudden choice has had to be made in the presence of the shadow of death. At this moment of writing (15th) we are forbidden to allege publicly that the EMPEROR has passed away, but the recently issued bulletin of his pitiful sufferings gives us a right to hope that he has found happy release. The young prince PU-YI, nominated Heir Apparent, has just the same right to the purple as his MAJESTY KUANG-HSÜ possessed at the time of his election in 1875. He is the son of KUANG-HSÜ's younger brother, and his grandfather, Prince CH'UN, is preceded by Prince TUN and Prince KUNG in the order of succession. It is possible, however, and not at all improbable, that a scion of the TUN family having been tried and found wanting, the claims of the house have been satisfied in the sight of Chinese ethics. There would then remain only the KUNG family to placate, and as they acquiesced quietly in 1875, they are not likely to rebel now. But in 1875 the strong hand of the EMPRESS DOWAGER was at the helm. It does not hold the wheel to-day. We have little knowledge of Prince CH'UN, who becomes Regent in virtue of his parental relation to the new Heir Apparent. His father, the Seventh Prince, occupied a prominent place on the political stage between 1884 and 1890, but his son, the present Prince CH'UN, has never been much heard of. Curiously enough, the position now created is almost identical with that which existed in Peking prior to 1884. The then head of the CH'UN family—commonly known as the Seventh Prince—was father of the young Sovereign, and was thus precluded by Chinese etiquette from occupying a position of responsibility, since a son may not place a father under discipline. The present head of the CH'UN family stands in the same relation to the Heir Apparent, and will therefore be obliged to discharge through nominees the executive functions of Regent.

THE EMPRESS DOWAGER.

THE great lady who has just passed away in Peking may be said to have practically ruled China for nearly fifty years. There was a time when the outer world showed some unanimity in attributing to her certain evil and unbridled qualities, nor does the ethical history of other distinguished potentates justify us in denying that there may have been a measure of truth in these accusations. But when we consider the position in which she was placed, the forces she had to control and the prejudices arrayed against her, we are compelled to admit that without a very exceptional character she could not have succeeded, and that unless human nature had eschewed all its habits she could not have escaped slander. She certainly appreciated with unerring instinct the nature of the surpassingly difficult problems offering constantly for her solution, and if in her methods she occasionally trampled upon canons which inspire academical respect, so did CATHERINE the Great, so did NAPOLEON and so did ALEXANDER. The objects of her life having been essentially mundane, she freely used mundane instruments to compass them, and that by so doing she secured a maximum of tranquillity to some three hundred millions of human beings during the long space of nearly half a century, will surely be counted by history a magnificent achievement. An impermeable screen hides from the general public the main part of the happenings within the precincts of the Imperial Palace in Peking, and thus it results that the best informed observers have always been conspicuously diffident in pronouncing opinions on the acts and incidents in the immediate vicinity of the Dragon Throne. But none will be now found to deny to the EMPRESS DOWAGER extraordinary clearness of purpose, adamant resolution, conspicuous genius in adapting means to ends, and marked freedom from the bigoted conservatism which it was once the fashion to ascribe to her. She always recognised the inevitable when it presented itself, and thus it falls out that she will go down in her country's annals as the moving spirit of reforms which, if her successors bring to their consummation even a fraction of the strength she devoted to their initiation, will raise China to a worthy position among the nations, and materially promote the prosperity of its people. Success is its own measure. Some, in appraising the EMPRESS DOWAGER's career, will set down as her greatest achievement that, in a country eminently submissive to tradition, she wielded supreme authority in defiance of all tradition, and, among people the most conventional in the world, she held an altogether anomalous position of power. But a juster tribute to her greatness will be that she steered the Chinese Empire intact through dangers and difficulties which must inevitably have wrecked any less ably directed barque of State, and that she leaves it on the threshold of a career to be achieved only by obedience to her example. The absorbing question is whether any will be found to take her place. One of the drawbacks that nature associates with her exceptional creations is the vacuum left by their removal. The EMPRESS DOWAGER will have a follower, but will she have a successor? The almost simultaneous removal of herself and her Imperial nephew looks like a shocking catastrophe, calculated to shake the Manchu Dynasty to its foundations, if not to cast it in ruins. Prince CH'UN, the new Regent, is still a comparatively young and untried man. Besides, Chinese filial etiquette requires that he shall carry on the administration by proxy. If he can secure the whole-hearted assistance of men like Prince CHING, CHANG CHIH-TUNG and YUAN SHIH-KAI, things are likely to move smoothly, for these three statesmen, in addition to their own well proved ability, have a large following among the rising generation of reformers. But the Middle Kingdom is certainly threatened with a serious crisis. No better tribute could be paid to the EMPRESS DOWAGER than the now universal wish that she might have been spared for a few years longer.

"A CLERGYMAN" addresses to the Kobe Herald a suggestion that the "B" incident had better be consigned to oblivion. We most heartily endorse the suggestion, for not only does it seem to us that the matter has received more than ample attention, but also we are constrained to think that "B" has been harried far beyond the limits of justice. After all, there is no denying that the two main charges preferred by "B." were partly warranted by the race report which appeared in the Kobe Herald itself. We too read the report as showing, first, that foreign ladies had entered the pari-mutuel booth, in spite of the regulation to the contrary; and that foreign gentlemen had persuaded the caterers to sell spirituous liquors, equally in spite of the regulation to the contrary. Certainly we did not attach much importance to the statements. Our interpretation was that the ladies and gentlemen in question had regarded these particular regulations as a subject of jest and had treated them trivially, which would not have been a very heinous sin. But as for the two basic facts, we venture to affirm that ninety-nine out of every hundred persons reading the newspaper's report, would have gathered the same impression as we did. "B" has publicly declared that he did not speak as an actual eye-witness, his facts having been taken from the columns of the Kobe Herald. What then is the measure of "B's" offence? Is it not simply that he formed an exaggerated view; and that, being evidently a man of very strict morals, he considered it his bounden duty to denounce practices which, in his eyes, took the form of pernicious gambling and indulgence in spirituous liquors. The gravamen of an offence lies in its intention. No one can pretend to think for one little moment that "B." deliberately set out to libel a section of the foreign community of Kobe, his own fellow-countrymen and fellow-countrywomen, or that his words were prompted by malice of any kind. He believed that the efforts of Japanese officialdom to check certain forms of vice were likely to be partially frustrated by the acts of certain foreigners from whom a better example might have been expected, and he therefore raised his voice in protest. His purpose was eminently good and his fault was simply excess of zeal. Is such a man to be hounded out of the community for such an offence? Truly, as "A clergyman" says, it is time that the incident was consigned to oblivion.

CANADA AND JAPAN.

MR. PERSTON certainly stands to his guns. He has the courage of his opinions, and that is a quality which Englishmen everywhere respect. Sent to Japan by the Department of Trade and Commerce in Ottawa expressly for the purpose — as we understand the case — of investigating whether there exists in this country a better opening for Canadian trade than that hitherto exploited, it is his plain and imperative duty to look things full in the face, and to report to his Government without favour or affection the results of his inquiries. The text of his reports has not yet been published, but in the meanwhile certain articles written and speeches made by him have afforded a tolerably clear indication of his views, and have induced the Kobe Foreign Chamber of Commerce to address a memorial to the Canadian Government, traversing his opinions and charging him with "animosity to the foreign mercantile community of Japan." To that memorial Mr. PERSTON has replied in a letter which may be described as "open," since it was communicated to a Yokohama journal simultaneously with its despatch to the addressee, Mr. A. WOOLLEY, Chairman of the Kobe Chamber. Mr. PERSTON protests strongly against being described as harbouring "animosity to the foreign mercantile community of Japan," and we are bound to say that, so far as we can see, his complaint seems to have justification. That he should describe things precisely as he thinks they are ought not to be regarded as an evidence of animosity, or of any other mood or pre-conception. We are compelled to assume, however, that a body of sober business-men like the members of the Kobe Chamber would not have used such language without justification, real or apparent, and it is only fair to await the Chamber's reply before passing judgment. For the rest, however, the case seems quite clear. Mr. PERSTON advocates what is called "direct trade" between Canada and Japan; in other words, he advocates the elimination of the foreign resident middle-man. In support of that advice he advances three reasons. The first is that, as the middleman's commission enhances the cost of an article to consumers, the removal of that commission would improve the chances of Canadian produce in competition. Such a proposition is scarcely open to dispute. But does it not amount to a frank admission that Canadian goods are unable to compete with their rivals on equal terms? At present, all alike pass through the hands of the same middlemen and are thus subject to the same charges. Mr. PERSTON wants his countrymen to get one stage closer to Japanese consumers. It is an old, old ambition. If the Canadians choose to try the experiment, let them do so by all means. But it is right to warn them that very scant success has hitherto attended such excursions beyond the lines which have been drawn after long experience and keen observation.

Mr. PERSTON's second reason is that Japanese traders are "anxious to do business direct, instead of through foreign commission houses." Certainly they are. They would not be human if they were not. In their eyes it is a reproach to Japan that she can not manage her own over-sea commerce without alien assistance, and besides there is the further inducement that whatever the foreign middleman earns might just as well go into Japanese pockets. But not all Japanese take that view: by no means all. Indeed we doubt whether such an opinion can be justly ascribed even to a majority. This is necessarily a point to be treated with reserve, for no one person can claim more than a very limited knowledge. But within our circle of acquaintances there is not one Japanese who fails to recognise that by supplying the large amount of capital necessary for financing the country's over-sea trade, and by practically taking, as he does, nearly all the risks incidental to the business, the foreign middleman's services are of the highest benefit to Japan, and his elimination would be a national calamity. As for his reward, well, we estimate it by recalling the fact that during our long experience in this country we can not count more than three or four foreigners who made anything like a fortune. Ninety-nine out of every hundred toil on from year's end to year's end, spending practically the whole of their scanty earnings in the country, and sending home nothing except what may be needed for the education of their children, several of whom are destined in turn to restore that small sum many times over by themselves serving Japan as their fathers did. We believe that all these things are fully recognised by the great majority of educated Japanese.

There remains one other point to be noted, and it is a point which has probably caused the greater part of the friction unfortunately developed in the course of this affair. Mr. PRESTON thinks that the uniformly hostile tone of a section of the foreign local press has created, and is creating, among the Japanese a degree of resentment which may ultimately compromise the position of the foreign community and "hopelessly endanger its commercial future." He therefore advises that Canadian trade should be carried on independently. He does not himself associate the community with this unfriendly journalism. "My opinion is," he writes, "that the majority of the foreign mercantile community of Japan have long since indulged in the hope that this never-ending fault-finding, mingled with cynical sneers and carping criticism at everything Japanese, from its Government to the action of the lowest classes, would come to an end." In that estimate of the community's moral attitude Mr. PRESTON is doubtless right. The anti-Japanese section of the local foreign press is no more representative of the community's sentiment as a whole than the writings of the Yellow Press in America reflect the mood of the citizens of the United States. How then, it will be asked, do these journals find an audience, and why are they permitted to run their mischievous course unchecked? As to the latter query, we would answer, how are they to be prevented? And as to the former, the reply is that they themselves create the atmosphere upon which they batten. They are, in fact, an evil remnant of an evil past. In the days when treaty revision held the field, there was a battle to be fought; a battle with large issues. Certain journals then championed the foreign community, and their excesses were extenuated by their desire to be serviceable. But to-day they have nothing to champion unless they manufacture material, and they do manufacture it, to the obscuring of some readers' minds and to their own profit. Perhaps in a homogeneous community they might be restrained, but, in such a community as that existing in the Japanese treaty-ports, what is everybody's business is essentially no man's business, and these riders of an old hobby go on tilting in imaginary lists, unchecked. Unhappily the Japanese can not be expected to recognise all this, but it is reasonable to hope that the plague will be cured, or at any rate largely mitigated, before it works the mischief anticipated by Mr. PRESTON.

We learn that the American Consulate General is in receipt of the following telegram from the Governor General of the Philippine Islands at Manila: "No cases cholera yesterday. Smith."

A CRITIC OF JAPAN'S FOREIGN POLICY.

AS an illustration of the spirit in which Japan is criticized by a section of the local foreign press, a leading article in the Japan Gazette of the 13th instant is worthy of reference. The text taken by the writer is Count HAYASHI's reply to comments made by General AOKI, sometime commandant of the Japanese troops in Pehchili, and by Mr. TANG SHAO I—whom our contemporary calls "YANG SHAO-YI." These comments may be summed up very briefly, as they are not specially germane to our immediate subject. They plead for a policy of extreme friendliness on Japan's part towards her neighbour—a policy which would exceed in benevolence any standard hitherto recognised in the intercourse of States that do not occupy towards each other the relation of allies. The Japan Gazette refers to the matter in the following terms:—

Japan's name became, while Count Hayashi presided over the Foreign Office, much disliked abroad and is only now beginning to recover its former favour under Count K. mura's guidance.

These utterances merit analysis. They set out, it will be observed, by assuming that the unpopularity which has unfortunately been shown towards Japan in recent years by foreign countries is entirely her own fault, speaking generally, and Count HAYASHI's fault, speaking particularly. As to the former contention, it has hitherto been universally conceded that the animosity which began to be displayed towards this country some years ago, should be regarded in the main as a not unnatural reaction from the fever of exaggerated panegyric that preceded it. As to the latter contention, it is historically wrong, for the alteration in European and American sentiment began to be marked before Count HAYASHI assumed the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. It was reserved for the Japan Gazette to impose on Japan and her Foreign Minister the sole responsibility for this change of mood on the Occident's part, though if there be one thing which has been more conclusively proved than another, it is that during the past few years Japan has been again and again most harshly and most unjustly attacked by foreign publicists who seemed to have deliberately espoused the rôle of unfounded aspersion. The Japan Gazette has not one word to say about that crusade of prejudice. It practically endorses the whole by alleging that the entire fault lies with Japan and her Foreign Minister.

The Japan Gazette then proceeds thus:—

In foreign spheres assertion became the leading characteristic, and Japan soon had on her hands the school question in San Francisco, immigration troubles in Seattle and Honolulu, difficulties in Korea, and innumerable contentions in China.

This is even a more prejudiced indictment than the preceding charge. It explicitly ascribes to Japan's spirit of self-assertion the school question in San Francisco, the immigration troubles in Seattle and Honolulu, the difficulties in Korea and the innumerable contentions in China. In short, whatever has happened, the blame and the responsibility rest on Japan's shoulders.

It was Japan's fault that the San Francisco authorities, instigated by the labour leaders, excluded her children from their schools; it was Japan's fault that the workmen of British Columbia combined to foment a racial prejudice against her too-industrious people; it was Japan's fault that her nationals, in the exercise of the personal liberty granted by the laws of America, crossed from Hawaii to the United States; it was Japan's fault that the Koreans resisted reform and clung to their old grooves of corruption and intrigue, and it was Japan's fault that she inherited in Manchuria a position beset with difficult problems. In short, in the eyes of the Japan Gazette, everything is Japan's fault; Japan can not possibly be right. We pass over our local contemporary's comments on the Tatsu-Maru affair, which it calls the "climax," and which, as history amply shows, would have been dealt with by Great Britain in a still more peremptory manner than it was dealt with by Japan. We pass over these comments, however, and confine ourselves to repeating a statement which has now become a truism, namely, that nothing like genuine friendship can exist between the Japanese nation and the foreign community so long as a section of the local foreign press continues to display this inveterately hostile spirit toward the country whose hospitality we all enjoy.

SEQUEL TO THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

PERMANENT SUSPENSION OF J. C. CARPENTER.

The following announcement appeared in The Times of Oct. 9th:—

At a general committee meeting of the Amateur Athletic Association, at Birmingham, on Saturday, after consideration of the judges' report on the running of the American, J. C. Carpenter, in the 400 metres race at the Olympic Games, it was decided that Mr. Carpenter be permanently suspended.

This decision will cause no surprise in view of the clearly ascertained facts, which were as follow:—

At the previous Olympic games in the very same event the incident complained of also took place. That is a curious and significant fact. There was a suspicion abroad that something similar would occur on this occasion; for that reason officials were specially placed at the corner, where alone a malpractice was even colorably possible. The crowd had massed at this particular point, so that what occurred was done immediately under the eyes of hundreds, and thus the possibility of error is entirely negated. Carpenter was on the inside, and he and Halswell had pulled clear of the others. Coming to the corner Halswell made his effort to go past and if the race was to be saved to America Carpenter was obliged to "bore" right here under the eyes of the officials and within a dozen feet of hundreds. He did bore Halswell, and the roar that went up in protest was recognized even by Taylor, who on the authority of the American papers slowed, up "knowing the race was off." Infinitely beyond this as proof two facts stand out. Before a soul was permitted to set foot on the course photographers were brought upon the scene and they photographed the actual spot. These photographs were reproduced in the great illustrated papers and circulated by hundreds of thousands, and they show as clear as noonday where Carpenter ran right across to collide with Halswell, and the latter's stagger as a result.

In the face of the photographs no explanation is possible. The American explanation of this as "pocketing" is wholly impossible. Immediately after the incident Halswell, by request, agreed to submit himself to medical examination to see whether or not there was any evidence of the elbow-blow by Carpenter. Not one but two livid marks were found upon him, and the medical men stated emphatically that only a violent blow could have produced these marks. These two damning facts have been studiously suppressed from American readers.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE
CURRENT LITERATURE.

"The Triumph of Despotism in a Constitutional Country" is the title of an editorial appearing in the October Taiyō which well deserves the attention of anybody who is interested in the progress of constitutional government in Japan. Since the essay, which no doubt is from the pen of Mr. Toyabe Shuntei, runs into 14 closely printed pages, it is by no means an easy task to do justice to it in this Summary, but we will endeavour to give our readers some idea of the conclusions reached by a very keen and impartial Japanese observer of the trend of politics in this country. Despotism in modern Japan is discussed under five headings as follows:—(1) The Despotism of the Katsura Cabinet. (2) The Despotism of the Diet. (3) The Despotism of Political Parties. (4) The Decline or devolution of the Constitution. (5) Increase in the Authority of the Government. We will take up these points in order. (1) The Despotism of the Katsura Cabinet. No more striking example of the existence of this despotism could be cited than the manner in which the postponement of the Exhibition was decided. The action of the Cabinet was an open violation of the Constitution. The matter should of course have been submitted to the Diet. The holding of an Exhibition in 1912 had already been sanctioned by the Diet, and there was no call for a resort to an Imperial Ordinance in determining the time at which it was to be held. An Exhibition concerns the whole nation far more intimately than it does the Government, and its success must necessarily depend on the hearty support it receives from the people. Art IX. of the Constitution sanctions the issuing of Imperial Ordinances for the promotion of the welfare of the subjects, but the action of the Katsura Cabinet can not be defended on this plea. The Katsura Cabinet in this matter ignored public opinion, and defied the Diet and the Tōkyō Municipal Assembly. In the whole affair connected with the postponement the Government's attitude to foreign countries alone was constitutionally correct. Their treatment of the nation was a violation of the letter and the spirit of the constitution. As to the postponement itself, it is not a matter that assumes vital importance, but the way in which it was effected furnishes an object-lesson as to the nature of our administration to-day of which it is most important we should take notice. There is a section of the Yamagata politicians which holds that Government is all-sufficient in itself without the Diet, but that in order to make it appear as though the Cabinet were governing constitutionally the Diet should be used as an instrument for carrying out Government measures. Marquis Katsura is of this opinion. His assertion that he is a man "of action rather than of words" is to be interpreted to mean that he refuses to enter into any discussion with the public or to consult them in reference to the measures arbitrarily determined on by himself. He not only keeps aloof from all political parties, but he regards himself as under no obligation to bow to public opinion. (Shikōshite karera no chōsen shugi, seito seiji ni chōsen taru no i nitarazushite, kōgi yoron ni chōsen tari; seido (義道), jinshin ni chōsen taru no i nari. Sono fugen jikkō wa rinki no seisaku ni arazu shite, tami wo shite yorashimubeku, shirashimubekarazu to suru sensei budan shugi no kokuhaku nariki)* He would have no hesitation in repeatedly dissolving Diets rather than bow to the will of the nation. Let anyone who is well acquainted with the course of political events in this country look back over the history of our administration during the past

* "The superiority he assumes is not to be understood as superiority to government by political party, but as superiority to public opinion, as superiority to the ways of the world and the minds of men. His 'action but no words' policy is not a mere temporary expedient, but is to be regarded as a confession of his adhesion to that despotic military policy which aims at making people obey while keeping them in ignorance." "Yorashimubeku, shirashimubekarazu" is a Confucian saying much used as an embodiment of Chinese and Japanese despotism.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

25 years. He will find that Yamagata and Katsura have always acted in one way, and that has been a despotic way. Neither of them has ever shown the slightest inclination to increase the power of the people to further popular government in any one particular. This is the plain unvarnished truth which nobody can deny. The surprise caused in some quarters by the action of the Katsura Cabinet in the matter of the postponement of the Exhibition was no surprise at all to those who have keenly observed Marquis Katsura's political life and invariable attitude to constitutional government. The fact is that the restoration of Katsura to power was nothing else than the triumph of despotism in a nominally constitutional country, and the sooner this fact is recognized by the nation the better.

(2) Despotism in the Diet. In our Diet in recent years power has been passing into the hands of Committees and especially of Chairmen of Committees at an alarming rate. The same kind of thing has been going on in America; which though nominally a Republic, is actually governed by an oligarchy consisting of the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Treasury, the President of the House of Representatives, the Chairman of the Budget Committee and the Chairman of the Finance Committee. In this country the power wielded by the Chairman of the Budget Committee is so enormous that the fate of the Diet often depends solely on his individual or combined action. What is decided by Committees is decided by the whole Diet. The Diet as a separate organization to Committees exists only in form. (Kono baitai ni oite iinkai wa honkaigi tari. Gijō wa tada keishiki no giketsu kikwan taru ni sugiaru nomi. Honmatsu mattaku tendō su.) [The whole thing has been turned upside down.] Now one very important difference between the discussion that goes on in Committee rooms and that which takes place in the Diet is that the latter only is public. The former is kept so private that according to the rules of the Diet even members of the House can be refused admittance to the Committee rooms when discussions are going on. Though it is a fact that newspaper reporters are occasionally allowed to be present at the meetings of Committees of the Lower House, this is only when the discussion going on is of a very ordinary kind. When delicate matters are discussed the reporters are excluded; and in the House of Peers no outsider is allowed to attend Committee meetings. Thus it will be seen that one of the principal objects that constitutional government sets before it, the provision for the public discussion of public affairs, is frustrated by the manner in which business is carried on in our Diet. Our Diet is actually governed by three persons in each House, the President of the whole House, the leader of the Political party which has a majority and the Chairman of the Budget Committee. The despotism witnessed in this country is to be seen to a greater or less extent in all countries constitutionally governed. As democratic institutions, parliaments are in bad repute everywhere to-day, owing to the fact that they afford comparatively few facilities for enabling the masses to make their opinions known.

(3) The Despotism of Political Parties. Just as parliaments have drifted helplessly into despotism, political parties, which are miniature parliaments, have discovered that only on one condition can they avoid disintegration—they must bow to the will of the President in all things. The Presidents of parties are bound to rule despotically and the members of parties feel themselves to be under a solemn obligation to obey their leaders. In Western countries the most successful leaders of parties have been those who have ruled most despotically. Gladstone was a man who in his palmy days as a party leader never brooked opposition to his policy, his methods or his procedure. When Prince Itō founded the Seiyūkai he made it quite clear to everybody that he did not intend to share power with anybody. He alone drafted the rules of association for the Party. He appointed and dismissed officers at will. He never concealed the fact that he was opposed to what is known as gōgisetsu, government by a council. His despotism was most pronounced. When the Party came into conflict with Marquis Katsura, Prince Itō without consulting the Party at all, gave in to the Marquis, caring not a straw what offence this might cause to his followers. Marquis Saionji has always governed the Party in the same despotic manner, disregarding altogether applications for high posts in the Government. He only selected two members of the Party when forming his Cabinet, and when subsequently the hopes of the Party were again raised by the resignation of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Communications, they were a second time doomed to frustration. In no single particular has the Party ever been able to control its President or modify a policy which he had decided to pursue. At times there have been current rumours of dissatisfaction among the Party managers with the action of the President, but these men have no business to be dissatisfied. Strict obedience or secession is the only alternative open to such people. The right of the President to govern arbitrarily can not be called into question. The nation is content with the arrangement. In this despotically governed Seiyūkai members go on increasing at a rapid rate. At the last Election the Seiyūkai commanded a bigger majority than has ever before been obtained by any Party. The despotism with which the Party is ruled frightens nobody. Rather does it seem to possess attractions for many minds. Turning to the Shimpōtō, we find that its lack of despotic government has all along been the chief cause of its weakness. Though when in office Count Ōkuma has been known to act despotically, when out of office, in the management of his Party he has always shown a strong tendency towards liberal government. His attempt to establish despotic rule within the Party a few years ago led to his resignation of the Presidency. Since he resigned the Presidency the Party has been split up into factions. Mr. Inukai is in favour of despotic rule, but he is opposed by a number of members who desire Government by a council. In the past history of the Party it is true to affirm that its most prosperous days have been those when it was despotically ruled. It would seem, then, that there is no getting rid of despotism in the modern political party.

(4). *Decline or devolution* of the Constitution.* An eminent German jurist, Herrn Jellineck, in a work entitled "Revision of and Changes in the Constitution" demonstrates very clearly that, though the wording of a Constitution may not be altered, it may be interpreted and applied in an exactly opposite way to that intended by its original framers. The Government, Law Courts, public necessity, Diets or Parliaments, new habits, separately or combined, may and constantly do effect this. Herrn Jellineck gives numerous examples of cases of this kind in Germany. Most of the changes in the German Constitution which he notes are changes for the worse, if they are to be judged by the object which the framers of the Constitution had in view when compiling it. Jellineck contends that there are three reasons for the existing loss of confidence in representative assemblies. (a) These assemblies do not actually represent public opinion. The decisions come to by the assemblies are only those of the majority of the members. To render Diets and Parliaments actually representative is an impossibility. (b) The power wielded by the political party that has a majority in the Diet is such that it can afford to disregard altogether the interests of the nation at large and consult its own interests; and this it habitually does. (c) A Diet is ill suited for the discharge of all the business and legislative functions expected of it. It superintends legislation and public expenditure only in a very imperfect manner. In complicated questions where expert knowledge is indispensable for their elucidation and settlement Diets are very useless. Jellineck does not despair however of the future of representative institutions, but holds that it is necessary to devise measures for rendering them more effective. They have been diverted from the course they were designed to take and so interpreted and applied as to subvert the principles which they were intended to maintain. Look at our own Constitution. Has it not always been interpreted in a way that precludes the idea of Ministerial responsibility to the Diet? When Art. LV. of the Constitution says:—"The respective Ministers of State shall give their advice to the Emperor, and be responsible for it" it is quite plain that it is to the Diet as representing the nation that these ministers are to be responsible; for as regards their responsibility to the Sovereign, that in the very nature of things has always existed apart altogether from the Constitution. Yet ministers have invariably acted towards the Diet in a manner that shows most plainly that they acknowledge no responsibility towards it. Votes of want of confidence in this country are practically useless, as they are habitually ignored by Ministers of State. No minister has ever publicly acknowledged that he is responsible to the Diet in any way whatever. Neither has our Diet ever insisted on its rights in this respect. So we find ourselves to-day with a Constitution on paper that is never carried into practice. The Constitution that was intended to be a safeguard against despotism has entirely failed to fulfil this function. Our old feudal ways are still followed. The Constitution which political evolution gave us is speedily undergoing a process of devolution. Its strength is rapidly on the decline. In the very place where a stand for liberty is made in every country if it is made at all, in our very House of Representatives, despotism is allowed to have full sway.

(5) The Growth of the Power of the Government. From the general increase of despotism throughout our political world the Government obtains the most benefit. Think of all the attacks that have been made on Governments as a whole or on individual ministers since the opening of the Diet. What have they effected? Absolutely nothing worthy of note. The Government has shown itself to be capable of keeping the Diet under its finger and thumb. Opposition has been again and again suppressed by appeals to the pockets of members in some form or other. Parties that have commanded a majority have been used as Government tools repeatedly. And this will go on still. We see no signs of change. The power of the Government has never been greater than it is to-day. People talk about the power of public opinion as represented in the press. What notice has our Government taken of the expression of public opinion in the country during the past few years? It nationalized the Railways despite what was written against it. Public opinion agitated for a rise in the tram fares. It has not yet been sanctioned. In the Hibiya affair no notice was taken of public opinion. The Exhibition was postponed against the wishes of the nation, and so we might go on. But in the usurpation of the power that is supposed to lie with Representative Assemblies by Cabinets, our Government does not stand alone. The same thing is seen to a greater or less degree through out the whole world in every country that possesses a Constitution. The devices used by Governments for wresting the power from those to whom it has been legally given are multifarious, and many of them are glaringly unscrupulous. The whole political world seems drifting back to despotism in one form or another. By appeals to men's private interests Governments succeed in overcoming all formidable opposition and in reducing what were intended to be bulwarks of liberty and correctors of abuses into instruments for enforcing their own arbitrary decisions.

The character sketches which appear in various magazines seem to be much appreciated by Japanese readers, judging from the prominence given to them. For many months past the Chūōkōron has been devoting 30 or 40 pages each month to the publication of comments and criticisms on the careers and views of prominent persons written as a rule by men of some note. The adoption of this plan necessarily means a certain amount of repetition, but, on the other hand, it is possible by comparing the opinions of seven or eight writers to obtain a tolerably correct estimate of the general character of the subject of analysis.

In the October number of the magazine Baron Hirata, the new Home Minister becomes the centre of interest. To Mr. Shimada Saburō, the first writer in the long list of contributors, Baron Hirata's appointment to succeed Mr. Hara gave considerable satisfaction, he tells us, though he is by no means sure that he will eventually prove to be the right man in the right place. From Mr. Shimada's remarks on Baron Hirata's character and official career we make the following extracts. Baron Hirata is a Yonezawa man. He was educated according to the old style, having been taught that a life of simplicity and economy is the highest kind of life that a man can live. In politics he belongs to the Yamagata clique. He is an official of the conservative type, and he may be described as an extremely sincere, steady-going administrator, who if he accomplishes nothing brilliant will never do anything at all risky. In a great many particulars he constitutes a striking contrast to Mr. Hara, whose doings at times could only be described as most hazardous (Kiwamete hiken na tokoro ga ōi). But Baron Hirata is rather too much of an idealist to suit the position he has been called on to fill. He is one of those men who think it their duty to correct what they think to be wrong. His action in the horse-racing and pari-mutuel affair and his attitude to socialists were both the result of a certain narrow-mindedness combined with a reforming spirit. A more liberal-minded man would not have gone to the extremes that he has in respect to gambling at horse-races. Baron Hirata is a student and a theorist. He lacks a minute knowledge of general public opinion, and he is one of those officials who has kept aloof from the people and who lacks sympathy with their aspirations. The great test of his suitability for the office he fills will be his manner of dealing with the Diet. The relations of the Home Minister to the Lower House have always been of a very intimate kind. The control exercised by the Home Office over the elections and its action in numerous matters that come up for discussion in the Diet call for an immense amount of tact in a Home Minister. Will Baron Hirata prove himself to be equal to the occasion?

The other opinions stated to a large extent confirm what has been given above. The Japanese are rather fond of Ministers who are bent on effecting reforms, and seem invariably to expect great things from them. Concerning Baron Hirata's conservatism there is only one opinion. At his age it is quite incurable.

In the Bunshō Sekai (October number) Dr. Y. Haga writes on the many difficulties to be overcome in the preparation of class-books for Primary Schools in this country. From the year 1910 a new set of class-books are to be used and Dr. Haga is a member of the Committee appointed to compile these books. As regards kana spelling the old system will be followed.* None of the changes based on euphonic rules and principles recommended by the Committee over which Dr. Katō presided for so many years are to be adopted. The Conservatives have carried the day in this matter. There are people, Dr. Haga tells us, who would abolish the Gembun-itchi style of writing altogether, but this the learned Doctor declares to be an impossibility. The nation would never consent to this. The semi-colloquial and semi-classical style has come to stay. It suits the age and fulfils the objects writers have in view far better than any style hitherto practised in this country. Dr. Haga says that heretofore in the Primary Schools the first six months of a boy's or girl's attendance has been occupied in learning how to read and write the katakana only. He thinks this is a waste of time; that the hiragana might be taught as well during this period. He informs us that the compilers of the new text-books for the schools have found it no easy matter to decide on the colloquial language to be taught in schools. In this country the language used in families differs very much according to classes. In titles of address when speaking to people this difference manifests itself very conspicuously. Many of the text-books hitherto in use consist of literal translations of foreign books. The unsuitability of these is now generally felt. Violence has been done to the Japanese language by the translators. In Japan men and women do not as a rule use the same language in addressing each other. The text-books now in use have made them do so. This undesirable change will be remedied in the new books, Dr. Haga tells us (Josei wa yahari Josei no kotoba, dansei wa dansei to kubetsu sentaba naranu to omoi).

* The system followed in the Primary schools to-day is to mark long vowels by strokes only thus いー うー えー おー. The Middle Schools have always kept to the traditional method, spelling Ōsaka オサカ, and not オーサカ. (WRITER OF SUMMARY)

The practice of introducing a large number of foreign words in writing and speaking is condemned as unnecessary and savouring of pedantry by a great many Japanese. We are surprised to find such a good writer as Mr. Natsume Sōseki resorting to this habit in the pages of the October Waseda-Bungaku, as he would be the last to affirm that there are no good Japanese equivalents for the words he uses. Here is one of his sentences with the kana spelling of the English words omitted. Mibun no inferiority ni shita-gatte okoru jijitsu-yō no ingorance to ka brutality to ka matakku neglect sarete oru. The English words are all murdered by the kana spelling. Brutality becomes (ブーリテイ) and neglect becomes (ネグレクト), and so on. In seven or eight pages of print this kind of composition is seen. We read Tare mo anna development wo create suru koto wa dekinai. Omoshiromi wa extension ni ari, and the like. The article to which we refer is on novels and novel writing.

In the same number of the Waseda Bungaku we find an account of Mr. Tokutomi Kenjiro's country life, furnished by himself to an interviewer. Mr. Tokutomi, the younger brother of the well known editor and proprietor of the Kokumin Shimbun, has retired from the literary world and taken to farming. He has for the last 18 months been residing in Musashino. He says that he finds country life very delightful and that he realizes how much people miss who always reside in big towns. He seems to have taken to farming only in an amateurish way. It is the quiet surroundings and the simple life of hard work in the day and sound sleep at night that have so refreshed the jaded spirits of this literary man, as they have done in many other cases. He speaks thus of the life he is now living *Watakushi nado no nōmin seikatsu wa itasura-goto no yō de wa arimasu keredo, su-ashi de tsuchi wo fumu toki, no kokoromochi wa nani mono ni mo kuraderarenai. Sono tokoro ni chikara ga shōjimasu. Chi ni mottomo shitsushii mono ga Ten ni mottomo chikai mono da to omowaremasu.** If it is possible for human beings to commune with God, farmers are of all people the most likely to enjoy this intercourse with Divinity, says Mr. Tokutomi. For some years Mr. K. Tokutomi has written little and he seems doubtful now whether to go back to his old life or not. Poor health is one of the chief reasons for his living the life of a rustic.

The October number of the Kyōikukai (Educational World) has an article entitled "Education and Men of Talent" of which the substance is as follows:—"That school teaching is being given up in favour of other pursuits by a large number of men in every part of Japan is an undeniable fact. It is not necessary of course to conclude that the men who give up teaching and take to something else are invariably good teachers, but it seems to be true to say that among the men who have turned their backs on the Department of Education and found lucrative employment elsewhere there are a great many talented men. These men have in most cases not given up the profession of a teacher because they dislike it or because they feel they are not cut out for this kind of work, but solely on account of the many disadvantages under which a school teacher has to struggle throughout life. In the first place the salaries paid to teachers are so small that it is quite impossible for a man to provide for a family on the pittance he receives. If he has children he can't afford to educate them properly. And as for his own pleasures, these he has to forego if he is to keep out of debt. He finds in the commercial or industrial world men of less education than he possesses in receipt of salaries twice as big as his, and he naturally asks why he should go on living a life of privation, pecuniary embarrassment and gloom in the cause of education. The Government could pay their teachers higher salaries if they wished to do so. If they refuse to adopt this course it is only natural that they should lose good men and have to put up with men who have not sufficient talent to carve out a career for themselves in the business world. Pecuniary considerations drive some very good men out of the teaching profession. Others are repelled by the enormous amount of red-tapeism that characterizes all Government schools in this country. There are in modern Japan thousands of young men who value liberty and freedom of action above everything and to them it is very irksome to have to conform to a large number of petty rules and regulations month after month. Compared with schools and Government offices of all sorts business houses leave much to the common-sense of employees. Certain methods of procedure are of course insisted on, but there is no attempt to prescribe every minute detail to be followed in the discharge of business in the way that officials are wont to do.

* "For a man like me to be living the life of a peasant may seem a very profitless affair. But I know of nothing to compare to what I feel when treading the ground bare-footed. Here it is that a man gets strength. It seems to me that those who are nearest to the earth are nearest to Heaven." (SUMMARY OF NEWS.)

The Kyōiku-kai says that the Mombushō officials mostly consist of men who lack practical knowledge of the state of the educational world. They have never taught in schools. Few of them know anything more about education than what they have derived from the few treatises they have perused. Consequently it happens that they frequently draw up rules to which teachers in schools strongly object. It is only people who have been engaged in teaching for some time that know how it can be most efficiently carried on. These teachers are seldom consulted at all by the Mombushō, and the Department issues order after order in defiance of their opinions. No business could succeed if it were conducted in this way. The heads of firms possess an intimate practical knowledge of their businesses. Hence the rules they make usually commend themselves to all employees as wise and necessary. Moreover, these heads of firms are men who have begun at the bottom of the ladder and who are thus in possession of a minute practical knowledge of the businesses they superintend. The Mombushō officials, school inspectors and the like are not chosen from the ranks of teachers. They consist of men who have never had to run a school or deal directly with students. Is it any wonder then that what they order and what they forbid should only excite wonder in the minds of school teachers? If from the ranks of Mombushō officials in Tōkyō we extend our observation to provincial School inspectors and controllers of education, we find that the situation is still worse, men who know much of education are hard to find. Is it cause for surprise that men of talent should object to serve under officials whom they recognize to be their inferiors in everything but rank? The treatment which school teachers receive throughout the country at the hands of officials compares badly with that accorded to private business men by their employers. There is a feeling throughout the educational world that there is no future worth toiling for or waiting for in Government employ, and so men of capacity are rapidly turning to more promising fields of enterprise. Nothing but radical change in the method of treating school teachers and in the remuneration granted to them can alter the existing situation.

The Emperor will return to Tokyo on Nov. 20th arriving at Shimbashi at 1.30 p.m. from Kobe.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

A General Meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held in the Society's Room at No. 1, Shichome, Ginza, Tokyo, at 4 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 28. Mr. J. McD. Gardiner, Vice-President for Tokyo, occupied the chair, in the absence of the President, H. E. Sir Claude Macdonald. The minutes of the last meeting, having been printed, were taken as read. The Recording Secretary announced the election of the following persons as members of the Society: Mr. F. G. Sale, of Yokohama; Mr. J. M. Davis, of Nagasaki; Mr. Jamshedji Edalji, of Tokyo, and Rev. J. H. Lloyd, of Tokyo.

The Recording Secretary then read selections from a paper by Mr. Walter Dening, of Sendai, on "Confucian Philosophy in Japan." As portions of this paper have already appeared in print, the usual summary is omitted from these minutes. After the Chairman had expressed the thanks of the Society for the valuable paper, he invited discussion thereof.

Mr. J. C. Hall said:—There can be little doubt Mr. Dening's introductory account of the present condition of philosophic thought in Japan is substantially correct, and that the causes he has mentioned are partly responsible for so backward a state of affairs. But his analysis did not go far enough, for there is another cause which, to my mind, lies at the root of all the others, and is more important than all the rest of them put together; and that is the influence of the Imperial Rescript on Education. This is a very delicate subject for any one, be he Japanese or foreigner, to discuss with entire sincerity and frankness, and the few remarks I now venture to offer touching on the fringe of this wide topic are submitted with all due consideration and respect.

That the influence of the Imperial Rescript of eighteen years ago has been unfavourable to the progress of philosophy in this country cannot, I think, be contested. The moral precepts which it inculcates are altogether excellent; but there are one or two expressions in the introductory and in the concluding portions of it which are open to serious criticism from the philosophic point of view. The existence of the State and the observance of morality by the people are therein made to rest exclusively on the work and on the infallible teachings of the Imperial Ancestors; and this unique foundation is declared to be coeval with heaven and earth, and to be a basis broad and everlasting.

Now these high claims are very hard to reconcile with philosophy in general, and especially with that highest of all the branches of philosophy, the philosophy of history. Both history and philosophy concur in showing that the course of civilization in Japan has not been essentially different from its course in other parts of this planet of ours. That some of the early Mikados in the Hei-an epoch exercised an immense influence in promoting throughout the empire the Buddhist religion and the ethics and culture of China, is unquestionable. But surely the Buddhist clergy and the Confucianist literati of Japan, to say nothing of their foreign antecessors, had also a noteworthy share in the beneficent work? The impartial historian cannot allow the exclusive claim made by implication in the Rescript for the Imperial Ancestors.

Sociology teaches us that the ever increasing influence of the work of past generations pressing on each succeeding generation is the great driving force of human progress. Now when two separate streams of progress meet and commingle, the then contemporary and all subsequent generations on both sides have an interest in tracing reciprocally the upper courses of the confluent streams. In our own day Western and Eastern civilizations have irrevocably come into contact and interaction with each other, and are destined to commingle more and more. Hence it follows that the history of every people is part of the heritage of Humanity at large, and no one nation can claim an exclusive right to the interpretation of its own historical records. That is why foreign students of Japanese sociology will not feel called upon to offer any apology for judging on its merits any version or view of the national history resting mainly on official authority.

Passing now from Mr. Dening's introduction to the substance of his paper, I think the Society is to be congratulated on the opportunity of having it included in its Transactions. For the English general reader it has no doubt skimmed much of the cream of Dr. Inouye's three valuable works on the respective philosophic schools. More than that could not reasonably be expected; but it would have been interesting if Mr. Dening had told us which of the three he himself most approves of. He seems to have, for the nonce, followed the example of the Japanese students of philosophy in not hoisting his philosophic colours. But he has furnished materials enough for adherents of foreign schools of philosophy to make their own choice. For my own part, as a Positivist, I must avow a strong preference for the latest of the three schools, that of the Kogakusha, in which Ogiu Sorai and Dazai Shuntai are, as I think, the two foremost names. Dr. Inouye has claimed for some of the Tokugawa Confucianists that they were not mere disciples and disseminators of Chinese ideas: that there were able, original thinkers amongst them. That claim I hold to be perfectly sound; and, as regards the Kogakusha, or "Back to Antiquity" party, one may even go further and assert that, by rejecting the Taoist and Buddhist admixtures of the Sung schoolmen and reverting to the primitive sources, they effected a reformation of Confucian doctrine similar in principle to the Protestant reform of Christian doctrine. Indeed they did more than that; for one great result of the work of those independent Japanese thinkers has been to enable us of the present day to see in clearer light the essential identity of the Confucian standpoint with that of the culminating development of Western philosophy, which takes reality and the sciences for its basis instead of metaphysical abstractions, and so lays the necessary foundation for the final religion.

Mr. Reischauer asked if there was any possibility that Dr. Inouye's three volumes on the three schools of Confucian philosophy (a review of which, with an Introduction, constituted Mr. Dening's paper) would be translated into English. No one was able to answer this question; but Mr. Galen M. Fisher stated that he intended to furnish translations of some of the works of the Yōmei School, and that he was already at work on a paper on the life and works of Kusanaga Banzan.

Mr. Fisher added:—In his introduction Mr. Dening attributes the exclusive adoption of the Shushi school by the Tokugawa to its balanced ethics as compared with the extreme tendencies of the other schools. No doubt for lack of space he omitted another reason which scholars consider to have influenced the Shogunate to favour Shushi, namely, the recognition by Yōmei of the right of the people to hold their rulers to account and in case of flagrant misrule to rise in rebellion, whereas Shushi counselled submission to the powers that be.

In this connection the revival of interest in Confucianism among thoughtful Japanese is indicated by the revival in 1907 of the festival in honour of Confucius, which had been allowed to lapse since the Restoration. The celebration of the festival, both last year and this, called forth addresses from a number of eminent men. This revival is reflected in the magazines. And in the September, 1908, issue of the "Seiyu Rinrikai" magazine there is an address by Mr. T. Yokoi, advocating the systematic use of extracts from Confucius and Mencius in the public schools to supplement the confessedly inadequate ethical instruction now based almost exclusively on the Imperial Rescript on Education. Mr. Yokoi's address called forth sharp criticism from Prof. T. Inouye, who held that Confucianism was unsuited to the purpose, because it is not in accord with the principles of modern physical science, nor with the accepted views as to the individual's rights, duties and value. The same conclusion is reached from a Christian point of view by Rev. T. Miyagawa in the "Kirisutokyo Sekai" for October 15, 1908.

That this revival is not confined to scholars may be seen in the fact that an ethical society has been formed by such men of affairs as Baron Shibusawa and Yano Suneta for the purpose of elevating the morality of the commercial class by the inculcation of Confucian principles.

A general meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held in the Society's Rooms, No. 1, Shichome, Ginza, Tokyo, at 4 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 4th. In the absence of H.E. Sir Claude MacDonald, President of the Society, Mr. J. McD. Gardiner, Vice-President for Tokyo, occupied the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were taken as read. The Chairman then called on Dr. M. W. de Visser, of the Dutch Legation, to read selections from his paper on "The Fox and the Badger in Japanese Folklore." At the close of the reading, the Chairman expressed the thanks of the Society for the very interesting paper and inquired the reason for the large number of red torii leading to the Inari Shrine at Fushimi, near Kyoto. The Lecturer replied that he did not know positively, but he presumed that a large number of torii made the shrine more efficacious.

Mr. E. W. Clement then read from the Japan Evangelist of May, 1909, extracts from an account of an interesting case of "fox-possession" (kitsune-tsuki) in Chofu early in that year.

In closing, the Chairman announced that the next general meeting, to be held in December, would be the Annual Meeting, at which the annual reports would be presented and officers elected for the coming year.

The following is a summary of Dr. de Visser's paper:—

After several references to old and modern Japanese works, containing legends or essays on foxes and badgers, Dagini Ten, Izuna, and Inari, the conclusions are drawn up in the following way.

A long, winding road of superstition and quaint belief lies behind us—superstition, as far as foxes and badgers were feared as bad forbodings or haunting and possessing beings; belief, in regard to their worship as gods, parts of the numberless Shinto Pantheon. On looking back upon this road of twelve centuries we see China's influence entirely dominating the field of divination, transformation and possession, the latter as far as it was due to human witchcraft. Japan itself was perhaps responsible for the fox-sorcery which was afterwards compounded with Indian magic; as to the cult of the fox as the spirit of the rice, this was certainly pure Japanese conception and growth.

In the eighth century we saw the Japanese legislator menacing those who smoked foxes or mujina out of graves, a proof that the superstitious Chinese custom had spread even then in this country, otherwise it would have been omitted in the Japanese version of the Chinese law. Further also the Chinese ideas of foreboding in connection with the appearance of white or black foxes and of foxes in general appeared to be prevalent in Japan, as they still were centuries afterwards. And not only their appearance, but their howling, copulating, or soiling places were all considered as ominous, mostly portending evil. That they were also known at that time as haunting beasts, is proved by the passage of the Shoku Nihongi which tells us that a god subdued a spook, whose vulpine head was found in the garden. Further we have read in the Rei-i-ki a tale about a fox who took the shape of a charming maid and married a man, with whom she lived a long time. She gave birth to a strong, agile son, whose descendants even up to the fourth generation excelled in strength. But dogs, the deadly enemies of foxes, always scent their real nature, so that the transformed fox fled away, even from a puppy.

The tanuki was not yet mentioned in these days, although a calendar of the fourteenth century showed us that this animal's crying was feared as a foreboding of death and quarrel. As to the mujina, the mysterious pearl found in its stomach was apparently believed to have supernatural power, just as that of the Chinese were-foxes, for it was presented to the Emperor and preserved in a shrine. That at that time the mujina was believed to have the power of changing itself into a man, we learned from another passage of the Nihongi. After the eighth century, however, the mujina disappeared from the stage of literature for a long time, and it was not before the eighteenth century that it appeared again.

In the ninth century we read of Celestial Foxes flying over the Palace, and of ominous appearances of ordinary wild foxes, while the beginning of the tenth century brought an interesting legend about foxes who took human shape and deluded a man in a remarkable way. So popular was that story, that it was told in detail in four different works of the tenth, eleventh and fourteenth centuries, while it inspired an author of the Muromachi period in writing a similar tale in different form.

The eleventh century spoke for the first time of fox-possession and of foxes, worshipped in Shinto temples. It seems to have been a magic cult which the Virgin Princess at Ise established, for the sorceresses of the capital followed her example, much to the indignation of their contemporaries, who considered the matter as a scandal on the great gods of Ise, for under their names the foxes were worshipped. Both fox-magic and fox-cult (of the spirits of the rice) must have prevailed in Japan from older times, so that the only new and appalling fact in the matter was that the cult took place in abuse of the holy name of Ise's deities. It is, however, quite possible that there existed an old fox cult in Ise, as was the case on Mount Inari, an old slumbering worship of vulpine-shaped rice spirits. Was not Toyo-uke-Gime, the goddess of the Outer Temple at Ise, the great spender of food, identified with Uga no mitama, the Lord of the Rice, who reigned on Inari's slopes? Moreover, a severe punishment was received in the eleventh century by one of the Fujiwara who had killed a divine fox at Ise, while in the following century the court was twice discussing the same crime, which was considered to be as severe as killing a divine spirit. This seems to indicate that there really existed an old connection between Ise and foxes.

Further foxes transformed themselves into beautiful women in order to seduce men, who were sure to die if they had sexual intercourse with them, unless the foxes themselves died in their place. Or they haunted men by appearing as the double of a woman, or as a tree or a mysterious glittering being and possessed people in order to get food or to convey some communication by mouth. Their tricks were mischievous, but more intended to frighten mankind than to do harm.

The haunting foxes were always old, according to the Chinese conception that the vital spirit (tsing) of all beings is steadily strengthened by old age, so that it becomes able to take human shape and haunt. In one virtue foxes surpassed men, namely in keeping their word when they once had promised to protect and help somebody who had spared their life or restored them their soul in the form of a precious gem.

The twelfth century shows us the capital a prey to haunting foxes who regaled the people with sumptuous meals of horse dung and cow bones transformed into delicious dishes. The Sujaku gate especially was the favourite spot of the beasts, which did not even respect His Imperial Majesty, nor his officials, in whose carriages they drove away, nor Buddhist high priests whom they caused to come to the Sujaku road and pray before the altars of phantom houses, nor private persons whom they deceived by paying with old sandals and clogs, tiles and pebbles, bones and horns, temporarily transformed into gold, silver and silk. They even played tricks in the Palace, where they appeared as young women in order to tempt young men. On the other hand they protected a house against fire, where the deity of an shrine, probably the Rice Spirit, caused them to appear, and were considered so divine that the Emperor banished a distinguished nobleman for having killed a fox in the neighbourhood of the Saigū's place at Ise, while twice afterwards the Court seriously discussed a similar case. So the haunting demon of China and the fox god of Japan appeared side by side.

The thirteenth century brought a good deal of new information. There was a fox carrying fire in its mouth and in human shape burning down the house of a man who had hit it with an arrow. This reminds us partly of the fox-fire (kitsune-bi), partly of the Tengu who set houses on fire and on the other hand protected them against conflagration. As to possession, we find the motives of practising this quite different. Sometimes it was only hunger or a turn for epicurism in the matter of food which made a fox possess a man, but on other occasions nothing less than divine worship was the animal's aim. At the same time their appearance was still considered as portending evil or good luck. When their haunting assumed too large proportions, they were menaced with a battle, whereupon one of them appeared in a dream, promising protection and prediction of luck, if the threat of punishment was withdrawn.

In the meantime Indian influence had come into play in the fox cults of old Japan. Dagini Ten, in reality a numberless crowd of Dakini, Indian female divinities bestowing magical knowledge upon men, was identified with Ben'en, the Goddess of Wealth, on the one hand, and with magical Japanese fox gods on the other. She was also called the "Deva-King, the Venerable Fox" and the "Bodhisattva, the White Fox-King," and Ben'en herself was believed to come out of her temple in the shape of a white fox. Dagini Ten appeared as a supernatural woman in a dream, but left her hair in the hands of the sleeper in the form of a fox tail, while she ate her offerings in vulpine shape. We need not ask how strongly the fox cult and fox sorcery must have been prevailing in those days, when we see how the Shingon priests degraded their Dagini, nay even their Ben'en, to the rank of foxes in order to get hold of that part of the Japanese religion and magic.

In this century the tanuki appeared for the first time, alone or combined with the fox in the term "kori" (狐狸), "foxes and tanuki." The same term occurs sometimes in old Chinese books in the sense of "foxes" only, and even the character 狸 alone was used for fox. But in Japanese literature the term "kori" always means "foxes and tanuki." The latter animal was in those early days not the rather harmless spook beast as in later times. On the contrary, it drowned the hunters who dared hunt birds on a mountain lake, appearing as an old hag, who arose from the midst of the lake in a dazzling light and flew through the air to attack whoever approached the lake. Or the tanuki appeared as a pitch-black, gigantic Buddhist priest in an old chapel and was believed to devour men. A common trick of the tanuki was throwing pebbles and potsherds into houses. As remarked in my treatise on the Tengu, the "Tengu-tsutube" or Tengu-pebbles were well-known, and as early as 778 a shower of tiles, pebbles and earth clods came down during twenty nights upon different houses in the capital, thrown by an invisible hand.

And this was not the only thing which the tanuki had in common with the Tengu. They both liked to appear as Buddhas or Bodhisattvas in order to deceive devout priests and hermits. For being worshipped by mankind was their delight, as well as that of foxes, so that they were even thought capable of abusing the name of a deceased Emperor in possessing several persons and requiring worship in his name. But the power of transformation of both foxes and tanuki came to an end as soon as they were killed. Then their powerful and majestic appearance shrunk to its original size, and the mighty giants or Bodhisattvas lay down as miserable beasts.

The fourteenth century did not bring much information, except that we read for the first time about a special way of making out whether somebody was a transformed fox or a man, namely by driving smoke into his nose. Even the Emperor was so afraid of haunting foxes that he left a house where they exhibited their magical power, and preferred to run the risk of being attacked by Hiyoshi, the Shinto god of Heizen, whose sacred sedan chair was left in the Palace by the angry monks. But not always did those beasts succeed in deluding mankind, for if they were not sufficiently experienced in that difficult art, they were discovered at once and became the laughing-stock of those whom they would deceive. Old tanuki and old foxes were mentioned side by side as taking divine or human shape.

In the fifteenth century the old fox-sorcery broke forth in mighty waves and even penetrated the walls of the Shogun's palace. It was then for the first time that we found the term "kitsune-tsuki," or "employment of foxes," a magic art practised even by such high personages as the Chief-Diviner and the Shogun's physician. Yet it was deemed a very wicked art and punished with exile. Some later Japanese authors referred to an older passage where they believed they had discovered a trace of the same kind of sorcery, namely the legend of the abbot So-o, found in the Fuso-ryakki (12th century). But there is not a single proof that this abbot, who in the year 888 exorcised by means of incantations a fox which possessed the Empress, and compelled the beast to leave the shakui palace, was himself the culprit who had caused the fox to possess Her Majesty in order to obtain praise and honour by driving the animal out. The author of the Fuso-ryakki apparently did not think of such roguery on the part of the devout abbot.

The famous legend of the transformed fox Tamamo-no-mae, the favourite concubine of the Emperor Konoe, showed us the nine-tailed white fox in India, China and Japan, at every time having a very bad influence on King or Emperor as consort or concubine. Probably this legend did not date from very olden times, because in China as well as in Japan the appearance of a nine-tailed or a white fox was originally considered as a very good foreboding. Indian influence may have caused this difference with the old belief, for it is characteristic that in the legend itself India is pointed out as the original field where the fox played her tricks, and that the power of Buddhism against this deadly enemy of mankind is intentionally put in a strong light. And it was a very efficacious means of propaganda indeed, for both in literature and on the stage the legend obtained the utmost popularity. Of Indian origin seems also to have been the word "yakan," which sometimes occurs in the Rei-i-ki (8th century), Konjaku Monogatari (11th century), Mizu kagami (12th century), and Zoku Kojidan (13th century), side by side with the word "kitsune," as having the same meaning. An old Chinese work, quoted in the Wanyosho (10th century), said that the yakan was different from the fox, namely a smaller animal with a big tail, which could climb upon trees, and that the Chinese by mistake had applied its name to the fox. Other Chinese books teach us that it was an anthropophagous animal, resembling a blue-dog, which was mentioned in Buddhist sutras. So we arrive at the conclusion that the yakan, although originally different from the fox, was introduced in Japanese folklore when it had already lost its primary Indian meaning in China, and was simply thought to be identical with the fox.

The worship of female fox-deities, probably spirits of the rice, was prevalent in those days, as it must have been from olden times. At least the encyclopedical work Ainoshō (1446) mentioned them in connection with the name myōbu (Court lady) for fox. The same work spoke of fox-fire, which was believed to be made by means of burning horse bones, carried in the mouth by foxes; but we see in later works, that according to other explanations it was the breath of the beasts, or a shining pearl at the end of their tail, or burning horse hoops, which made those ignes fatui.

The sixteenth century brought only old tales in a somewhat different form, namely the well-known legends of the man who was lying under his own godown, and of the transformed fox who was married to a man but at last fled away from a little dog. The only interesting passage we found was about the fox whose appearance was considered to be a bad omen because it happened in summer time, and who was killed by the power of a poem.

Just as was the case with the Tengu, after the silence of the sixteenth century followed a torrent of legends in the seventeenth. At that time Inari conquered the field. The slumbering fox cult on Mount Inari subdued by the anthropomorphic goddess,* who was worshipped on the same mountain, at once appeared on the scene. The foxes, themselves spirits of the rice, were now messengers of the rice goddess, but they were not only sacred but received worship in shrines as representatives of Inari herself. Their shrines were demolished when a fox had done any wrong and built up again if the culprit was punished by the fox-god of the shrine himself. At the same time old stories were told about Inari's connection with the fox, as for example that of the small fox who appeared above the hilt of a sword as a sign of Inari's presence in the Palace. The Inari temple at Kyōto had become the centre of all for cults throughout the Empire, and in the same way Inari of Oji near Yedo was the head of all foxes in the eight provinces of Kwanto. On New-Year's eve they assembled at the foot of a tree near by in order to go up to the temple and pay reverence to their divine Mistress. The more fox-fire was seen there at that time and the more light it spread, the better would be the rice crop of that year. Could there be better evidence of the nature of the fox-gods as spirits of the rice? But the foxes were not always thought to have connection with Inari. Sometimes they transformed themselves as in former days, only for the pleasure of deluding men. So did also the tanuki, who even chose the Buddhist temples as a field for their tricks and made an image preach to the devout believers.

Fox possession was very common in those days, as well as later, and madness, melancholy. Hysteria and so on were all ascribed to the same cause. Women, weak men and children were in general the victims of this special kind of disease, which was cured in different ways. The patient was forced to snuff up smoke of burning wolf dung, or to drink thin tea or to swallow roasted leaves of the shikimi filicium religiosum, all things which foxes were believed to detest. If there was doubt whether somebody was possessed by a fox or was taken by an ordinary illness, no better trial could be made than by making him take the last mentioned medicine, because the fox-possessed patient would flatly refuse it. But there was still another way of driving the fox out, namely pricking the tumour, made by him under the skin of the possessed person, with a needle, mostly taken from the tail of an eel fish.

It was often by human sorcery that a fox was caused to possess somebody. From very olden times this fox-magic existed in Japan, and instead of decreasing under Buddhist influence it spread more and more under the name of "Dagini doctrine." There was one mountain especially where it flourished for many centuries, namely Mount Izuna in Shinano province. "Izuna doctrine" being a combination of the old fox-magic, practiced on the mountain, with the cult of a Great Tengu, was already mentioned in a work of the fifteenth century, but did not reach the summit of its fame before the seventeenth. Since that time it was well-known as a powerful magic, by means of which the sorcerer caused the fox he had in his service to possess

* It was certainly a female deity in spite of Kobo Daishi's legend, where apparently the male mountain god and not the female Rice Spirit is spoken of, somebody or to tell him everything he wanted to know.

Next to this magical use of foxes we find them still considered as forebodings, for, just as in olden times, their howling was believed to be a forerunner of luck or calamity. Yet, in spite of their power as divine, magical and ominous beings, they did not escape the cruel hand of man, who used their livers and fat in preparing medicine and unguents, and caught them in traps by means of their favourite food, rats fried in oil.

The eighteenth century speaks of Inari's revenge when fox shrines were neglected or sacred trees cut down. Madness, suicide and death by lightning fell upon the unhappy culprit and his family. But protecting fox-gods were sent by the goddess to monasteries or temples in reward of devout worship, while often great wealth was bestowed upon men by divine foxes which they had saved or assisted. More than ever the temple on Mount Inari was the centre of all fox cults in Japan, and its priests were the chief mediators between fox deities and men. The divine foxes kept watch by turns on the holy mountain, and even the "Venerable Fox God," Kiho myōjin, identified with Dagini Ten, was nothing but a messenger of Inari. At the same time the Goddess felt herself responsible for the mischief her subjects did and punished them severely. She gave them also different ranks which they could buy for money, picked up at the offering boxes of temples. The divine foxes who lived in Buddhist temples not only protected these buildings against fire and other calamities, but were also guardian gods of the priests and gave oral and written oracles to the believers.

It needs hardly be said, that side by side with the cult of Inari and her vulpine rice spirits the magical Izuna doctrine flourished with redoubled vigour. It was practiced by both Buddhist priests and laymen, but in some cases, if a priest went too far in this heterodox behaviour and took a good deal of profit from the fame he obtained by exorcising the fox which he himself had made possess a person, the authorities intervened and banished him to another province. In Lumo province especially the so-called kitsune-mochi or "fox-keeping," was very common, as much as the dog-sorcery in Kyushū. It is remarkable that the influence of the latter was believed to be checked by the tooth of a fox, the dog's deadly enemy, although in fox-lore it is always the fox who flees as soon as he is aware of the presence of a dog.* Except in causing people to be possessed, predicting the future and showing an amazing knowledge of all kinds of things, the fox-sorcerers gave performances with "spiritual foxes" (ki-ko, 狐火), making for example two persons from one, which reminds us of the old stories of foxes acting as the doubles of women and men. Others deluded the people by means of the magic power of their foxes in showing them a mock shape instead of their own, as the man in Osaka did who offered his body as a target to those who liked to shoot at it.

But also apart from human influence foxes were still believed to possess and haunt mankind and change themselves into men. Sometimes they were dangerous especially in their revenge, sometimes harmless, when they discussed Buddhist topics in the shape of priests or appeared as ghosts of the dead. But they soon resumed their unkind shape when fumigated or bathed or attacked by dogs. Sometimes they amused the people by fata morgana, showing castles and horsemen in battle array and long processions of daimyō.

Next to foxes the old tanuki had become very popular figures of Japanese folklore. They took the shape of one-eyed spooks or hags, or appeared as gigantic women or black priests in the dead of night, amidst lightning and earthquake. They flew as dazzling comets through the air, or fell as flaming human heads before bewildered men, whose feet they burned and whom they made ill by their pestilential breath. They knocked at the gate in the midst of the night and made their victims go to haunted houses, where they frightened them to death by their tricks. They buried their dead with Buddhist funeral rites and asked assistance of the priest of the monastery they had haunted the night before. Not always, however, were the tanuki so dangerous or troublesome to men. Often in clear moonlight nights, they amused the people by playing the belly-drum or they appeared in their dreams in the shape of children, asking their permission to live under their houses, announcing a belly-drum concert beforehand, or predicting that they, the tanuki, would be killed the next day by a dog. For they knew the past and the future, this life as well as former existences. On rainy nights they and the myūna appeared as ignes fatui.

* On Mitsu-mine, a mountain in Musashi province, sacred dogs were kept in the temple of Mitsu-mine Gongen from remote ages up to the present day and on the 19th of every month an offering of cleaned rice was made to them. From all sides the pilgrims flock there together in order to "borrow a dog" as they call it, that is to obtain a charm which cures fox possession. An invisible dog is believed to follow the charm and drive the fox out. Comp. Yoshida Togo's geographical lexicon "Dai Nihon Chimei Jishū," p. 3054.

After an absence of a thousand years the myūna had returned to life in popular superstition. They haunted and predicted death to the people in the shape of boys or black lay-bonzes or old witches, lived during hundreds of years as monks in Buddhist monasteries, eagerly accumulating money and giving examples of their queer handwriting till they were killed by a simple dog. Even after death they brought a curse upon those who spent the money which they, the myūna, had collected during their long life, or caused the death of the daimyō man who had killed them. As priests they discussed Buddhist sutras, as old scholars the Chinese classics. So much did they resemble the tanuki, that their belly-drum and ignes fatui, their human shapes and ways of haunting were all the same, as well as their old age, which gave animals and plants supernatural power.

In the nineteenth century fox possession was not less common than before, but was mostly ascribed to human sorcery. Yet we also read about foxes who possessed persons and made them ill in revenge for some evil, or gave them power to work much more than ordinarily in gratitude for being allowed to stay in the house of their master. Another time they pretended to be the ghost of a deceased bishop and made the possessed girl write Amida's holy name, at the same time taking care to avoid Amida's anger by wrong characters which made it something different from the real name. Needles and moxa were the means of curing such patients, or old precious swords which had killed some haunting fox long ago and were laid upon the heads of the possessed. The fox was also transferred into a medium by means of Buddhist incantations, as in the days of old, and then driven out by still more tantra and questions as to his origin, reasons and aim; or the possessed were taken to some Buddhist temple, famous for its powerful influence in such cases. The old legends of foxes, married to men during a long time, and of others feasting men on mock meals of dirty stuff, were told in slightly different form, while in the same time new elements had found their way into fox-lore, as for example the hypnotic power of old haunting foxes and their capacity of quickly changing bright moonshine into the utmost darkness, just as the Tengu did in their sacred valleys. They still showed their revengeful nature by annoying those who had insulted them, by means of long daimyō's processions and useless errands in the night, and as in olden times their mysterious lights glowed on field and moor when darkness fell on wet and dreary nights.

Fox-sorcery had reached its highest point. Izuna Gongen had his temples on the tops of many mountains, where Tengu cult and fox-magic went hand in hand. Shinano, Kōzuke, Izumo and other provinces abounded with families who were believed to have osaki—, kuda or man-foxes (jinko) in their service, which they caused to possess and haunt their enemies or rich people from whom they wished to obtain something. It is no wonder, that such families were feared and shunned, and that nobody would allow his son or daughter to intermarry with them. The sudden rise and fall of poor and rich, theft, illness and inexplicable events were all ascribed to their influence. In short, the magic power, as well as the divination, which they obtained from their supernatural foxes, was believed to be unlimited.

In the mean time the tanuki had become more harmless than before. In Shikoku, where foxes were, they had taken the place of those animals, playing many a trick on the simple country folks, and also elsewhere they sometimes deceived young men and girls by taking the shape of pretty maids or handsome lovers, or deluded devout priests by appearing as Amida riding on a purple cloud. But in general they helped and amused mankind more than they annoyed them. Sometimes they lent them money, picked up from ditches and valleys, or gave them presents or precious swords; sometimes they amused them by fata morgana, making appear before their eyes enormous castles or busy market scenes. They lived as monks in monasteries and sold their drawings to the peasants, who liked them very much. They lived above the ceiling of private houses, where they caused paper and pencil to fly up to them and proceeded to write. But at last they were mostly killed by dogs, their natural enemies, and funeral services were held on behalf of their souls. To-day the old superstitions are still in full vigour, as the Japanese newspapers teach us by their daily accounts. The sacred sword in Fudo's temple at Narita, as well as * Comp. the Tsūfuki, Fujiwara no Tamejima's diary, where we read sub dato Kōwa 5 (1103), 8th month, 27th day: "The Crownprince (a little child) moved to Takamatsu palace. When he went out, Mumi-michi wrote him the character 犬 (dog) on the forehead. Some days before a Court lady had done the same."

Hommyoji, the Nichiren temple at Kumamoto, attract crowds of pilgrims who believe themselves possessed by foxes and are sure to be cured at those holy places. The character 犬 (dog) traced on the forehead of a child protects it against foxes and badgers, as in olden times, so great is the fear of the spook-beasts for dogs; and the bone of a tortoise's foot held in the left hand is considered as an excellent talisman against their bewitching power. The fabulous teapot which changes into a badger, and the tanuki-fire on rainy nights are known to old and young. Fox cult and fox magic do not yet belong to the past, and the former especially will not disappear as long as Shinto lives. For even if all superstitions, borrowed centuries ago from China, die out, the fox, the spirit of the rice, will retain his fame as the sacred messenger of Inari, and will be seen before her shines throughout Japan.

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Within the walls of the Forbidden City, and for the most part behind closed doors, one of the greatest dramas of modern history is being enacted. Of what has actually been taking place during the past ten days the outside world at present knows but little, but enough has already leaked out to enable a fairly plausible story to be constructed. But to understand the present it is first necessary to glance at the dramatic personae and note a few facts about them. First there is the Empress Dowager, the great central personage about whom the whole Chinese political world has revolved for years. Next, the Emperor Kuang Hsu, for ten long years the prisoner of the astute Empress Dowager, who by changing his guards regularly twice a month effectually prevented that unhappy young man from forming any connections or links with possible friends. Then follow Prince Wang, Manchu, one of the great personages at court, and lately made head of the Board of War, and with him Yuan Shihkai, Chinese, the renowned progressive leader, but fifty years of age, who has already held most of the positions of authority in the North. Fong Tsan, Manchu now in Japan, Commander-in-Chief of the Northern forces, and Yang Hsi Hsiang, Chinese, Viceroy of Chihli, are also supposed to be followers of the above two chief actors. On the other side we have Chang Chih Tung, the very embodiment of "China for the Chinese," a great scholar, and yet withal alive to the need of radical changes all round if the empire is to continue. Till recently he held the control of Central China in his hand; latterly he has held important offices in Peking. With him is Tieh Liang, Manchu, formerly Commander of the Army, and now holding important posts. And last, but not least, the heirs to the throne, Pu Lun, a young man of twenty-five, now in America with Tang Shao i, Yuan Shihkai's henchman, and Pu Yi, the son of Prince Chun. Both these heirs seem to have equal right to the throne.

Now with the way prepared we can better appreciate what has been taking place in Peking.

On Nov. 8th, Sunday, (or Nov. 9th) the Empress Dowager, having eaten too freely of melon as a cure for fever, according to report, was seized with violent dysentery. Feeling that her end was near she gave orders that the Emperor Kuang Hsu should be put out of the way, and that Prince Chun's son Pu Yi should succeed to the throne. These orders were carried out and she then died. Another report says that her end came suddenly before arrangements could be made, and that the party of Yuan Shihkai immediately made an end of the Emperor, who from a Chinese point of view would most certainly have repaid Yuan Shihkai to the full for having so basely betrayed him ten years ago. This much is certain, that both the Empress Dowager and the Emperor departed this life within a short time of one another.

What happened next it is difficult to tell, for on the one hand we have Prince Ching bringing four hundred soldiers into the palace, and this in conjunction with Yuan Shihkai. On the other, we have Prince Chun's son, Pu Yi, proclaimed Emperor, with his father as Regent, supported by Chang Chih Tung and Tieh Liang. Which party has therefore really got the upper hand it is too soon to tell, but that events are following hard after one another is shown by the report that two eunuchs have been executed for murdering the late Emperor, possibly by the very instigators of the murder. This is a typically Chinese way of doing things. Then it is reported that the infamous eunuch Li Lien Yin, the evil genius of the Empress Dowager, has committed suicide, or a tempted to commit suicide, according to another account. And finally comes the startling news that Yuan Shihkai himself has been poisoned. But this likewise is contradicted. Besides this, it is officially announced that the Empress has followed her consort to the next world.

Thus, ends as far as is known at present, the series of tragic events at Peking. The situation is truly critical for if the opposing factions within the palace and court carry on their fightings to the bitter end no power can prevent similar things from happening in the provinces. For the sake of the peace of the world it is devoutly to be hoped that some form of compromise will be acceptable to the chief contestants, and that both Chang Chih Tung and Yuan Shihkai with their respective followings, for China needs both at this time, will sink their differences and strive together for the true reformation of their country.

RACE CLUB REGULATIONS.

The Race Club Regulations were promulgated in the Official Gazette of Nov. 16th as below.

Art. 1.—Horse Races shall not be permitted to be carried on unless they are promoted by race clubs established in accordance with Art. 34 of the Civil Code. Races which have been promoted only for amusement at festivals or similar occasions are excepted.

Art. 2.—Race Clubs shall hold their meetings twice a year and each meeting shall not last more than 4 days. For extraordinary meetings, if any, special permission must be obtained.

Art. 3.—There shall be two kinds of race:—ordinary and obstacle.

Art. 4.—The courses shall not be less than one mile in length and 24 yards in width.

Art. 5.—The construction of the course, stands and other auxiliary buildings must be perfect so as to maintain general order and to evade danger to persons or horses.

Art. 6.—Permission for each race meeting must be obtained from the Director of the Horse Breeding Office, application being made two months prior to the meeting. The following items must be described in the application: (1) The date when the meeting is to be held; (2) programme; (3) the kinds of horses; (4) the prizes to winners; and (5) the estimate of the income and expenses. The number of races per day, and the number of horses partaking in each race, as well as the distance of each race must be stated in the programme.

Art. 7.—The distance of each race shall be over 1 mile. Distance for griffins or for consolation races may sometimes be made less than 1 mile on permission of the Director of the Horse Breeding Office.

Art. 8.—Horses used in races shall be country bred and foreign mares with ages of over 4 years.

Art. 9.—Horses which are not beneficial for the purpose of horse improvement shall not be permitted to be employed at races.

Art. 10.—All the race clubs must employ over 10 new country breeds at every meeting. The age of the domestic griffins referred to above shall not be over 8 years.

Art. 11.—All race clubs must establish by-laws and appoint scale examiners, starters, judges, jockeys, etc., and must place the foregoing details before the Directors of the Horse Breeding Office.

Art. 12.—The Director of the Horse Breeding Office shall send his staff to the race meetings to exercise supervision whenever necessary.

Art. 13.—Within one month of the conclusion of the race meeting, the clubs must inform the Director of the Horse Breeding Office, of the following:—(1) The number of the horses partaking in the races; (2) the names, kinds, qualities, colours, ages, height and length, and character of the winners and the countries where they were bred, names of the owners, the kinds of races, distances and speed; (3) the expenses and incomes; (4) the number of the visitors; and (5) the general conditions of the meeting.

Art. 14.—The amounts of prizes shall be fixed in accordance with the distances assigned to the various races.

Art. 15.—The amounts of the prizes shall be offered in part for country bred horses.

Art. 16.—Prizes—money or articles—presented by individuals which were included in the programme are to be referred in the foregoing two articles.

Art. 17.—The Director of the Horse Breeding Office may make a preference in the programmes at each meeting and assign prizes to the winners.

Art. 18.—The Director of the Horse Breeding Office will at times present special prizes to the winners at union races appointed by him.

Art. 19.—The Director of the Horse Breeding Office will on occasion present a portion of the expenses needed for instituting the race meetings where there is necessity to promote horse improvement.

Art. 20.—For maintaining order at the meetings, the governors of the prefectures concerned—and the Chief of Metropolitan Police Office in Tokyo—shall take all necessary steps.

Art. 21.—The Governors and the Chief of the Metropolitan Police Office may prohibit a race meeting or take suitable steps in the following case: (1) when clubs infringe the present regulations or commit unjust and improper action; (2) when conditions appear dangerous; and (3) when necessity arises for maintaining order at the meetings. The government officials who are present at the meetings must at once inform the local governors or the Chief of the Metropolitan Police Office of the details of the prohibition.

Art. 22.—Besides the present regulations, the Director of the Horse Breeding Office may impose upon race clubs any conditions he deems to be necessary.

Supplementary.—The foregoing regulations shall be enforced on the day when they were promulgated. Races, the programmes of which were intimated to the Horse Breeding Office, shall not be dealt with under Art. 6 of the present regulations.

TRADE-MARK DECISION.

Mr. Geo. B. Heart, representative of the Stanley Works, Connecticut, U.S.A., lodged, through Mr. Matsumoto of Tokyo, a protest with the Patent Bureau against S. Yuasa, a hardware merchant of Kyoto. The protestor stated that his clients registered on July 26th, 1905, a trade-mark showing "S.W." in heart form and were using it attached to various hardware articles manufactured by them. The Japanese registered on Aug. 13th, 1907, a trade-mark the design of which is "H.Y." in heart form. As the Japanese trader's mark was very similar to that of the American traders, the public were unable to discriminate between the mark. In consequence the business of the American firm in Japan was much injured. The Japanese patentee's representative held that his client used the letter "H.Y." while the Americans employed "S.W." They were clearly different. Mr. V. Hirayama, the Chief Examiner of the Bureau, admitted the protest of the American firm and ordered the Japanese not to employ his trade-mark on such hardware.

Mr. Y. Hirayama, the Chief Examiner of the Patent Bureau, has passed a decision on a protest filed by Messrs Wellsbach Company of Philadelphia against R. Tanaka of Osaka. The foreign firm registered, on Oct. 26th, 1908, at the bureau, a trade-mark showing the word "Apollo" and the Japanese also registered a trade-mark which shows a similar word "Apollo" though the form of the design is different from that of Messrs. Wellsbach Company. The foreign firm contended that the mark of the Japanese should be taken as an infringement of Art. 8 of the Trade-marks Law. They asked the bureau to take the Japanese mark as null and void. The Chief Examiner allowed the petition.

A LITERARY MISCELLANY—II.

The Autumn has brought its usual rich harvest of books—fiction, travel, literature, art—no theme under the sun seems to escape the myriad-mind of thinking humanity. Truly, as said the Preacher, "of making of books there is no end," while the readers who would assimilate at least a fraction of their good things despair of finding the necessary time. Or, as Mr. A. C. Benson in his new discourse "At Large" (Smith, Elder) would put it—the air is full of song. In criticising his generation and preaching his gentle philosophy of life, he compares himself with justice to "a bird singing the same song over and over again; a new book is only a new bush." And in such vein "with all his old picturesqueness and chastity of diction" he protests against the doctrine of self-assertion and praises individuality and the solitary life.

"Verse," says Professor Saintsbury in his masterly History of English Prose of which the second volume (from Shakespeare to Crabbe) has just appeared, "is not a game nor a mere ornamental kind of prose, but a means of expression which has been developed in the effort to say what cannot be said in prose." To avoid the pitfall of sacrificing sense to sound is the great desideratum. Discussing the conflict between emotion and reason which marked the poetry of the seventeenth century, the Times reviewer of Professor Saintsbury's work says:—

It was the aim of Donne and the other fantastic poets to enlarge the scope of poetry by infusing passion with reason; and in their versification one can see how far they succeeded and how far they failed. Professor Saintsbury often refers to the matchless cadences of seventeenth century verse, as in this of Marvell's:—

My love is of a birth as rare
As 'tis, for object, strange and high;
It is begotten of Despair,
Upon impossibility.

These cadences are conclusive, like a sound argument. Reason puts a period to passion, and the process is perfectly expressed in the compass of the verse. But verse itself such as this "is of a birth as rare as 'tis, for object, strange and high"; and it was achieved at the cost of many metrical failures. The fantastic poets were bewildered about the subject matter of poetry, and their bewilderment expressed itself in blind experiments of versification. These experiments produced a reaction with regard both to matter and to form. All through the seventeenth century there was a conflict between emotion and reason; and the final victory of reason was expressed in the supremacy of the heroic couplet.

The expedition sent by the British Museum to Central Africa for the purpose of examining and collecting flora and fauna has had its notably successful work embodied in a handsome volume "From Ruwenzori to the Congo" (John Murray) compiled by Mr. A. F. R. Wollaston, who was attached to the party as medical officer, botanist and entomologist. At the time of the Duke of the Abruzzi's expedition to the heights of Stanley's "Cloud-King," the British Museum party were at work in the same region, and some of its naturalists were in fact prevented only by adverse weather conditions from forestalling the royal Italian explorer. Mr. Wollaston's book is beautified by a number of excellent illustrations from photographs, some of which—that of the Semliki River and Lake Kivu, for example—possess high artistic merit. The expedition kept clear of hairbreadth adventures, and Mr. Wollaston avoids "the tendency to sensation-mongering which besets every traveller to some extent." Truth is stranger than fiction, especially in Central Africa, but remarks a critic:—

Surely that hippopotamus must have been a very small or a very emaciated one which, together with three antelopes, was consumed by fifteen porters in two days, skin and all. A wretched hippopotamus will feed a caravan of a hundred for that length of time without great difficulty, and, enormous as the capacity of the caravan-porter unquestionably is, these fifteen must have had Gargantuan appetites indeed.

Mr. Wollaston's book does not pretend to be the scientific record of the Expedition, and would therefore probably possess more interest for the general reader.

Mr. A. C. Swinburne, who is admittedly factile princeps among the poets of to-day, has just published a series of critical essays on "The Age of Shakespeare." The distinguished litterateur and critic was born a few weeks before Queen Victoria ascended the Throne; and it is nearly half a century since he published his first work, "The Queen Mother and Rosamond," which preceded "Atalanta in Calydon" by four years. It was with the publication of "Songs Before Sunrise" more than a generation back that Mr. Swinburne established his reputation as a poet of the first rank. In him romanticism found unexpected and triumphant expression for the last time. He showed himself master of a wonderful power of perceiving the possibilities of new metrical forms admirably suited to the genius of the language, and the frequency with which some of his lyrics have been parodied is proof of their instant appeal to the public mind.

Mr. Swinburne's criticisms are sometimes severe, not to say, crushing. Said he of a certain book (whose title, out of consideration for its author, we will refrain from mentioning).—

"This abortion of letters is such a very mooncalf, begotten in malice or idiocy, that no human creature above the intellectual level of its author will ever dream of attempting to decipher the insignificant significance which may possibly—though improbably—lie latent under the opaque veil of its inarticulate virulence."

It is nearly half a century since Miss Braddon (Mrs. John Maxwell), who has just celebrated her 71st birthday, published the novel which first brought her fame. The magazine in which "Lady Audley's Secret" appeared has long since been forgotten—who nowadays remembers its title, "Robin Goodfellow?"—but the novel, which has been dramatised in various shapes, has been read by millions, and is still being sold. Some may say that she is now representative of an old school of fiction writers, but her art lives again in her sons, of whom Mr. W. B. Maxwell is one of the ablest alike in literary skill and method of our latter-day novelists. It is indeed a far cry from "Lady Audley's Secret" of the mother to "The Guarded Flame" of the son.

Speaking of style, especially in fiction, the writer who is for ever seeking to impress the reader with his cleverness in expression, whose meaning one has to hunt for, so deeply is it hidden beneath abstruse terms and quasi epigrammatic forms, usually comes to grief. Two notable offenders in this respect are Mr. Bernard Capes and Mr. Maurice Hewlett. Those who struggled with the former's Jay of Italy and the earlier portions of Mr. Hewlett's Half Way House will be disposed to endorse the following criticism of Mr. Capes' new novel The Green Parrot. The principal character therein is a genius who has burnt his manuscripts and retired from literature because nobody wants what he has to give them—"style." "The public and, for the most part, the critics, wanted neither art nor stories.....One thing they seldom regarded was style; or, if they did mention it, it was with some impatient disparagement, as a thing bothering and unnecessary." He attributes this decay of sensibility to progress in science and the mechanical arts. "He observed, as time passed, the critical creed to establish itself more and more on the contention that it did not much matter how you said a thing, so long as you had something to say. That seemed to him a tub-thumper's motto."

"It would be affectation" continues the reviewer in The Times, "to seem not to understand that John Wisdom's grievance with his generation is his creator's. Mr. Capes is discontented with us. The grievance is not a new one; there are always 'stylists' complaining of the decay of appreciation, because their 'style' is not held to excuse their general want of merit. The analogy of the plastic arts is misleading. Literature is all material or all workmanship, whichever way you like to look at it. Style is fine detail. We appreciate it in George Meredith or Henry James. But fine detail is of no value on a bad mass; nor is really fine detail ever found there: for the good artist works well in the large as well as in the small; and a sculptor would be ridiculous who made his figures ugly and out of proportion and sought to justify them by the fineness of their surface. We grant Mr. Capes the merit of ingenious expression; though "wryed meanness" and "slumberous pulchritude" have a certain affection about them; but no amount of verbal ingenuity can recommend a story of people who are all either vulgar or sentimental, enacting incidents which are insincerely imagined and told without a grain of humour."

The result of the competition for the First Novel Prize of 100 guineas offered by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, the well-known London publisher, has just been announced. The winner is Mr. Rupert Lorraine and the picturesque name he has adopted for his story is "The Woman and the Sword." The sword, it may be said at once, plays no little part in the story: never was a story perhaps in which there was more swordplay. The circumstances of the tale largely account for this, for its action mostly takes place in Germany during the grim and turbulent period of the Thirty Years' War, in which Gilbert Charrington, the hero, has when the reader first meets him already seen long service. A soldier of fortune in the Protestant cause, he has been in the service of half the captains of Europe. The abducted heroine of the story, the "Woman" of the title, is the young, charming, though hot-tempered Mistress Hilary Page, only daughter of one Sir Mortimer Page. The violent historic background of the story is presented with dignity and knowledge, but what will probably astonish the reader most is the number and variety of the thrills the book has given him. Yet on recalling them, he will see that these were, so to speak, legitimate thrills, due to the natural evolution of a powerful story, in which, if the characters have often to pass through scenes more than usually appalling, the terror of them is founded on historical fact and is no mere invention of the author. Readers, however, need not fear a sombre book; they will undoubtedly find "The Woman and the Sword" exciting to an usual degree. The book will shortly appear in Unwin's Colonial library.

HEAVY SNOWFALL.

On the afternoon of Nov. 12th snow fell in Utsunomiya and the temperature dropped to 45°F. In Itamuro and other districts near Utsunomiya, snow has continued falling since Nov. 9th, with the result that communication with other places has been stopped. A similar visitation was experienced in Kashiwazaki, Nagaoaka and districts in Niigata prefecture. Traffic on the railway was impeded. On the same day a snow storm was experienced in Aomori and the adjoining districts, snow falling to the depth of a foot.

A telegram from Yamagata says that snow has been falling for some days past, principally in the district of Mogami. On Nov. 15th the average depth was about 5 feet. An old man was frozen to death. In the districts of Iiwa and Yonezawa the depth of the snow was a little over 3 feet.

On the morning of Nov. 15th snow fell at Saseho.

It is reported from Fukushima that owing to the recent heavy snow four persons have been frozen to death in the district of Date.

THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGE.

A case in which Messrs. Albert Haim & Co. claim yen 792.83 from M. Shibata, a merchant of Benten-dori, came up again on Nov. 18th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

H. Mita, a merchant dealing in woven goods, Ota-machi, was examined as an expert witness. The Judge having shown him a sample of fancy shirtings which were in question in the present case asked some questions as to the quality, price, etc. Witness replied that he could not give a definite opinion on the material as to the quality, etc., as he did not attend to business in that line last year.

Parties' Counsel summarized their evidence and spoke briefly. Subsequently the Judge declared that the hearing was concluded and decision would be given on Nov. 25th.

YOKOHAMA.

A Chinese boy on the French gunboat Décide now in Yokohama harbour, has been arrested by the Kaga cho police at a Chinese house, No. 139, Yamashita-cho. It appears that on Nov. 9th he stole money belonging to an officer of the ship. When arrested he had taken off his queue and attired himself in Japanese costume.

On the evening of Nov. 13th fire broke out on the premises of the Continental Hotel, No. 123, Yamashitacho. The flames were put out before much damage was done.

The body of a woman was discovered drifting off the Bund about 7.30 p.m. on Nov. 13th. The deceased was identified as Hana Sudzuki, sister of a carpenter living in Shin-machi, Kanagawa.

A youth employed at the Hodogaya Station was run over by a wagon on Nov. 14th while attempting to connect it with a train. His feet were severely injured.

On the afternoon of Nov. 13th a car on the Keihin Electric Railway collided with a cart in Shinmei-cho, Kanagawa, while the latter was trying to cross the line. The driver of the wagon sustained severe injuries.

About 8 a.m. on Nov. 15th fire occurred on a lighter which was lying off Kaigan-dori. A portion of the cargo consisting of raw-cotton was damaged.

On Sunday evening an outbreak of fire occurred in a house at No. 135, Yamashita cho. The flames were put out before much damage was done. A defective stove is reported to have been the cause.

About 5 p.m. on Nov. 16th a child was struck by a train while playing near the railway at Takashima-cho. He was severely injured on the head.

On the evening of Nov. 15th an infant wrapped in a blanket was found in the grounds of the Buddhist temple Yakuoji, South Ota-machi. The foundling was handed over to the City Office by the Tobe police as the parents are not known.

Owing to a land-slide, a coolie was crushed to death on Nov. 15th while working at the foot of a hill in Nakamura-machi.

The Chinese Consul-General in Yokohama has issued a warning to the Chinese residents in connexion with the serious rumours afloat in consequence of recent mournful events in Peking. The Consul-General said that the residents should not be moved by mere rumours.

Mr. T. Nishimaki, the manager of the London branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank, has been removed to the head office, and Mr. K. Tatsumi, vice-manager of the Yokohama office, is appointed to the London branch.

The Yokohama City Assembly held a meeting at 3.30 p.m. on Nov. 17th. Mr. Mitsuhashi, Mayor, made an explanation as to the Central Government's proposal to defer, for two years, the improvement works of the harbour and the construction of various buildings on the reclaimed land, which works have been hitherto fixed to be completed in 1912. On a motion by Mr. Saito, a decision was come to that should the Government not further defer the works, the present proposal would be adopted.

Mr. M. Odagiri, one of the directors of the Yokohama Specie Bank, will shortly leave for Europe and America to investigate financial conditions.

About 6.30 p.m. on Nov. 18th fire broke out in a barber shop in Matsugai-cho, destroying four houses. A lamp is reported to have been the cause. During the fire a collision took place between a number of soldiers and police. The trouble, however, was settled amicably later at the Isezaki-cho Police Office.

While working on the Nippon Maru in the Yokohama harbour on Nov. 16th a coolie fell to the bottom of the third hold. He sustained severe injuries on the head, etc. He was removed to the Noge Hospital.

At 1 p.m. on Nov. 21st the Yokohama branch of the Nippon Pharmaceutical Society will hold a meeting at the Yokohama Pharmaceutical School. Professor K. Ikeguchi will speak on the progress and development of medical science.

Tomo Watanabe (25), younger sister of a doctor living in Sugita near Hommoku, committed suicide on Nov. 17th by drinking morphine. She had been suffering from an illness for some years past.

The baseball team of the Reach-all American Club is expected to arrive in Yokohama on Nov. 21st by the China. They will play matches with the Waseda and Keio Gijiku Colleges and various other Clubs.

On Nov. 18th the Chinese of Yokohama performed funeral rites at their Club in connexion with the demise of the Empress Dowager and the Emperor of China. Most of the offices were closed.

About 8.10 a.m. on Thursday fire broke out in a house in Chitose cho. The flames were put out before much damage was done. Sparks from a chimney are reported to have been the cause.

CRIME.

On the evening of Nov. 12th a youth attempted to murder a woman by injuring her throat with a knife at a public house in Yoshiwara, Tokyo. Subsequently he attempted to commit suicide with the same weapon. There is no report as to the cause.

On the following morning a man and a girl attempted to commit suicide at a licensed house in the same locality by drinking poison. The man died and the woman was at once removed to a hospital near by. According to letters left by them, the cause seems to have been heavy debts.

An old man living in Kiou-cho, Tokyo, committed suicide on Nov. 13th by drinking poison. Poverty was the cause.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

Notice is given by the Department of Communications that the provisional light at Bentsen-jima, the entrance to Nemoro Harbour, Hokkaido, which has been shown since the rebuilding of Bentsen-jima Staff Light was commenced (Notification No. 767 of Department of Communications, August, 1908), will be discontinued on November 10th, 1908, and the following permanent light will be exhibited on and after the same day:—

Name of lighthouse:—Bentsen-jima Lighthouse, Construction and painting:—iron pillar, painted white. Height of light:—21 feet from the base, and 56 feet above the water. Character of light:—alternating red and white of 10 seconds each by acetylene gas. Candle power:—white light, 200 and red light, 80. Distance visible:—white light, 13 nautical miles and red light, 8 nautical miles, in clear weather. No change as to the position, illuminating arc and suspension period of light.

Notice is also given that Fuku-se Beacon Light south of Hirado-shima, province of Hizen (see Notification No. 1,022 of Department of Communications, October, 1908), has been shown, and is as follows:—Position:—Lat No. 33° 4' 40", Long. E. 129° 26' 28" (according to the Japanese Admiralty Chart No. 198). Construction and painting:—Circular concrete tower, painted red and black in horizontal bands. ## SVEN HEDIN MEETS ANNIE BESANT.

The Theosophist quotes the following item which was contained some time ago in the Neue Metaphysische Rundschau (Berlin):

"In letters to his relatives, Sven Hedin, who is already walking towards Lhasa again, reports on a meeting with Annie Besant in Srinagar. He was living there incognito, in order to escape the abounding amiability of the Indians. 'Only one guest,' he writes, 'did meet me, one, but a lion—or rather a lioness—Annie Besant. She was once sitting near me, at the table of the Viceroy, but there she was so much engaged by a conversation with the land lord—and I still more by a dialogue with a lady,—that we did not exchange ten words. Now she came to see me here instead, and we had many an interesting conversation. She is an elderly lady with a penetrating look, a deep earnestness in her entire appearance, and of splendid eloquence. The day before yesterday she gave a lecture, in the Maharaja's garden, belonging to the most splendid and most suggesting I ever heard, a comparison between the fundamental truths of the great, dominating religions, and a fortunate attempt at reconciling them. It is singular to see the deep, undefined awe shown to her by the Hindus."

BIRTHDAY RECEPTION.

A birthday reception of the most informal kind was held on Wednesday at 12.15 on the lawn at the residence on the Bluff of Mr. and Mrs. James Walter in celebration of Mr. Walter's attainment of his 62nd birthday. The affair was only thought of the day before, owing to Mr. Walter's health, and at once decided on. As many friends as possible were spoken to, and they in turn spoke to others, but necessarily many people, not only in Yokohama but in Tokyo, including Mr. and Mrs. Walter's many Japanese friends, were unaware of the event. A large company came, however. Mr. Healing gave the toast "Best congratulations to Mr. Walter upon his birthday," and the son of the house, Mr. J. Hebben Walter, replied: "My father asks me to thank you all for coming here to-day and for your kind congratulations." The weather was fine and very favourable to the reception.

HOME NEWS AND OPINION.

THE KING AS A CONGRATULATOR.

Mr. Stead in the October Review of Reviews declares that King Edward utilised his first evening in London after his return from Marienbad by going to see Mr. Jerome K. Jerome's "The Passing of the Third Back Floor." As the motif of that play is the conversion of all the reprobate lodgers in turn by the simple expedient of telling them what saints they were, Mr. Stead suggests that the King's telegram of felicitation to him who was once generally known as Abdul the Damned might have been written in the Royal Box between the second and third acts. The message ran as follows:—

I beg your Majesty to accept my warm congratulations on the occasion of the first anniversary of your accession since the promulgation of the Constitution. There is every reason to hope that under the able direction of so eminent a Grand Vizier, your Majesty's Empire will have a peaceful and prosperous future, and that the veneration of posterity will be secured for your Majesty.

Mr. Stead suggests that other monarchs may stand in need of treatment on similar lines. Here is a sample which might do for the Kaiser:—

I beg your Majesty, my illustrious nephew, to accept my most warm congratulations on the occasion of the anniversary of your accession. There is every reason to hope that under the able direction of so eminent a Chancellor as Prince von Billow your Majesty's Empire will have a peaceful and prosperous future. And the veneration of posterity will be secured for your Majesty now that you have learned that if speech is silver, silence is golden.

This was, of course, before the news of the famous Interview had caused Europe to stir uneasily in its bed. It would be even more appropriate now.

THE GREAT NAVAL COMPETITION.

Thus the Saturday Review (which all will acquit of Teuto-phobe tendencies) on the great naval competition, a propos of an interview with the German Chancellor which appeared some weeks ago in the Standard:—

Prince Billow, whose good faith, we think, is unimpeachable, made another of his bad slips when he sought to laugh away the naval competition of the two nations. To pretend that the German fleets have not been brought within measurable distance of our own is to trifle with broad facts which anybody may roughly test for himself. The British Admiralty, of course, cannot hope to provide such security as the naval alarmists demand, but it does try to meet the strain imposed upon its resources throughout the last ten years by German emulation. Here, however, we have the true prophylactic against the danger which Prince Billow and all sane English politicians wish to avert. We may be careless of enmity, whether natural or cultivated, as soon as we have made ourselves unassailable. If we intend to enjoy a deep and lasting peace with Germany (and other European or Asiatic States), all we have to do is to maintain the two-Power standard—with something in hand.

Mr. Lewis Harcourt, in an address to his East Lancashire constituents, discussed the subject less temperately. Though he began by admitting that, in order to avoid being organised as a great military nation with a people in arms, it was essential for our shores to be secure against invasion, that we were determined to maintain in the future the security we had got now, and that "so long as the world remained what it was," he for one would not offer to other nations "the temptation which would be afforded by a defenceless England," he went on to rave about the "footpads of politics" and "yapping pariah curs," by which polite terms he intended to indicate those who, with the best of intentions, if not in the best of ways, persisted in drawing the attention of their fellow-countrymen to the clear facts of the situation. Mr. Harcourt's remarks, says the Spectator, go far to discount and stultify his excellent advice that we should keep our heads cool, our Fleet ready, and our tongues civil. Violent optimism is almost as dangerous as the "blatant sensationalism" he so bitterly condemns.

THE WAY OF THE OFFICIAL APOLOGIST.

The instinct of self-defence in controversy leads sometimes to strange distortions of facts. More especially is this noticeable in the case of the official apologist. Mr. McKenna, the First Lord of the Admiralty, in parrying the charge advanced in the House that the Liberal Government, during their tenure of office, had provided for less tonnage in new construction than Germany, took into his reckoning more than 10,000 tons of warships which belonged to the programmes of the Unionist Government. The vessels which Mr. McKenna thus glibly accredited to his own party were the Lord Nelson, the three Invincibles and the three cruisers of the Defence Class.

The following table sets forth the Liberal Government's account:—

Year.	Programme.	Tons.
1906-3	Bellerophon .....	18,600
	Téméraire .....	18,600
	Superb .....	18,600
1907-8	St. Vincent .....	19,250
	Collingwood .....	19,250
	Vanguard .....	19,260
1908-9	Foudroyant .....	19,250
	Cruiser "A" .....	17,250?

Total.....150,050

During the same years the German Government made provision for 180,000 tons of new construction, which include the Blucher, Nassau, Sachsen, Baden, Württemberg, Fritzof, Hildebrand, Hindall and the great cruisers "F" and "H." All except the first three of these are "capital" ships, with displacements in the neighbourhood of 19,000 tons, while the Nassau and Sachsen are cruisers corresponding to our Invincibles. Thus it follows that, in spite of the First Lord's official platitudes to the effect that he did not think Mr. Bellairs' statement "could be regarded as accurate," the Liberal Government has, during its tenure of office, laid down some 40,000 tons less than the German Government—with all the latter's disclaimers of competition.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL BOY.

"The public school boy does not shine conspicuously as a citizen." So said Sir Arthur F. Hott, of Harrow, at the International Conference on Moral Education. He learns the importance of himself and often imbibes the curious idea that nobody but a public school boy is "any good," but "why is it that when that boy leaves school and university he does not become a more enthusiastic citizen of the great body politic?" Some people would reply that his interest is too much centred in sport and athletics, and that he gives to shooting and cricket an enthusiastic attention which he does not devote to the more serious subjects pertaining to his future duties as a citizen. And the speaker told an anecdote which has a bearing on this point of view. A small boy was once overheard on the cricket field asking a friend's advice in a dilemma. He had been told to go to one of the masters at a certain time, but at the same time his presence was required by the cricket captain. Which authority was he to obey? The friend's answer was that he had certainly better obey the cricket captain and cut the master, who could not make it so unpleasant for him as the other authority. The incident is not only piquant but full of significance. Sport in all very well in its ways, pace the saying which some inventive mind has attributed to Wellington—but success in this very modern world calls for some more solid and enduring foundation than (with all its benefits) the cult and worship of athletics.

A RECORD OCT. 1 IN LONDON.

Thursday was the hottest October 1 for twenty-two years. The maximum in London, 77 deg., was 9 deg. above the average for the month. The day, barring Wednesday, when the temperature was 79 deg., was the warmest since August 3. An examination of the Greenwich records, which go back to the year 1841, shows that there have only been nine years—1843, 1861, 1865, 1873, 1882, 1886, 1895, 1901, and 1906—in which a maximum above 70 deg. has been recorded on October 1, 1886 taking first place with a reading of 77.7.

The first day of October found London under a blazing sun, overflowing with visitors, a city of colour and pulsing life. All the country has for days been pouring people into the capital. Returning from summer resorts, those who have their home in London have found a busy autumn season such as has never before been known. The streets, especially in the West End, are thronged by pedestrians. Sightseers and people with money to spend are everywhere to be found. Hotels, restaurants, theatres, and shops are all doing as well as in the height of the season. Several fatalities from the heat are announced from the provinces.

LORD MILNER ON PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Lord Milner, who is now on a lecturing tour in Canada, discusses in the October number of the "Nineteenth Century and After" whether or not Canadian Preference is of value to British trade. He writes:—

"My contention is, that since the introduction of Preference we have been gaining ground in that competition, whereas before the introduction of Preference we were losing ground."

It is no doubt true that when all the imports of Canada are considered the proportion derived from Great Britain has shown a steady decline both before and after the grant of Preference. But this is due to the fact that Canada imports every year an increasing quantity of goods which for various excellent and obvious reasons we do not attempt to supply. As an instance Lord Milner cites the case of turbines and other machinery intended for the control of water-power. The provision of such machinery is naturally easier for a United States manufacturer who produces it both for his own and for the Canadian market than for a British manufacturer who has practically no other than the Canadian market for this description of goods. Lord Milner then gives a table of imports for the years 1890, 1898, and 1906, which shows conclusively that when those goods only are considered which we make some pretence of supplying, the imports from Great Britain, which were declining in 1898, the year in which Preference was granted, have since steadily improved. In conclusion Lord Milner maintains:—

"Experience in the case of Canada shows—and this experience is not confined to Canada—that Preference is capable of effecting what I claim for it. When British goods are competing with foreign goods in any part of the Empire on more or less equal terms, even a moderate Preference on British goods will turn the scale in their favour. Where they are competing at a slight but decided disadvantage, Preference can neutralise that disadvantage. But where the disadvantage is very great owing to distance or other natural causes of a preponderating character, or even to the settled habits or customs of the importing community, no Preference that I either expect or desire to see imposed can wholly counteract that disadvantage."

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

At 9 p.m. on Nov. 11th a freight train from Shidzuoka collided with four empty wagons at the Tenryugawa Station, derailling them. Further the train collided with a building, destroying it. Negligence on the part of a pointsman was the cause.

A passenger train was overturned while running between the Kabuto Tunnel and Kabuto Station on the Kwansei Railway on the morning of Nov. 12th. A number of the passengers, including Mr. S. Tsunekawa, the manager of the Nippon Sugar Refining Co., and Colonel T. Otsu were more or less injured.

Owing to a land-slide, the locomotive and two wagons of a freight train were derailed on Nov. 12th at a point near Naoetsu on the Hokuyetsu Railway causing damage to the line. Traffic was stopped for several hours.

A telegram from Morioka reports that the locomotive and a car of a passenger train were derailed at 3 p.m. on Nov. 13th at Hiraidzumi on its way from Aomori to Tokyo. The passengers are safe. The cause is reported to have been negligence on the part of a pointsman.

At 5.40 a.m. on Nov. 13th a freight train collided with a passenger train at Tanakawa between Hino and Tateyama. The locomotive and three wagons of the freight train were seriously damaged and one of the conductors was injured.

THE IMPERIAL UNIVERSITY.

The annual autumn athletic sports of the Imperial University, Tokyo, were held on Nov. 14th on its ground. A large crowd of spectators including some foreigners were present. The programme was as follows:—

1. 100 metres Race.
2. Spelling Race.
3. Putting the Shot.
4. 100 metres Winners' Race.
5. 200 metres Race.
6. Throwing the Cricket Ball.
7. Long Jump.
8. 200 metres Winners' Race.
9. Throwing the Hammer.
10. 400 metres Race.
11. Pole Jump.
12. 400 metres Winners' Race.
13. 600 metres Race.
14. Middle School Students' Champion Race.
15. Government School Students' Race.
16. 600 metres Winners' Race.
17. 1,000 metres Race.
18. High Jump.
19. Graduates' Race.
20. 1,000 metres Winners' Race.
21. Party Race of the Colleges.
22. Obstacles Race.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THREE cases of cholera are reported in Shimomatsu cho, Tokuyama.

PRINCE ITO, Resident-General in Seoul, left Oiso on Nov. 14th for Seoul.

THE Prince Imperial will return on Nov. 20th from Gumma prefecture where he was present at the manoeuvres of the Emperor's Body Guards.

THE Prince Imperial returned on the morning of Nov. 19th from Maebashi, where he was present at the manoeuvres of the Emperor's Body Guards.

Two clerks of the Osaka Tobacco Monopoly Office were arrested on Nov. 14th on a charge of having received bribes from some merchants patronized by the office.

A KANAZAWA telegram says that on the evening of Nov. 13th the steamer Noto Maru II went ashore off the village of Namboku. The ship sustained slight damage but the passengers and cargo were safe.

Two cars of a passenger train were derailed on the evening of Nov. 17th at the Hidzume Station near Morioka through negligence on the part of a pointsman. Damage was caused to the cars and to the permanent way.

On the night of Nov. 16th a workman attacked his comrade with a large knife in Atago-machi, near Shimbashi, inflicting severe injuries on the head. The assailant was arrested on the spot. A slight dispute was the cause.

GENERAL FENGSAH, of the Chinese Army, who was present at the recent Manoeuvres in the west left Kobe on Nov. 18th by the Tetsu-Rei Maru for home in connexion with the death of the Emperor and Empress Dowager.

PRINCESS DOWAGER KWACHO who was suffering from meningitis for some months past died on Nov. 14th. She was 56 years of age. On the same day Mrs. Sudzuki, elder sister of the late Viscount Enomoto, died at the age of 80 years.

AN outbreak of fire occurred about noon on Nov. 16th in Hashimoto-cho, Kanada, Tokyo, destroying three houses and damaging three. On the same evening another fire broke out in the house of a share broker in Shinjuku, burning down the building.

THE opening of the King Edward VII. Secondary School at Lytham, Lancashire, marks the latest phase in the development of the Lytham Charities, which have a romantic history. Two centuries ago £5 was bequeathed for the education of the poor children of Lytham. The fund grew to nearly £500, which the trustees invested in land which now forms the centre of Blackpool. The Corporation of Blackpool has paid nearly £100,000 for the freehold rights of small sections of the Charities estate, and it is confidently asserted that the Charities ultimately will be worth £500,000.

A HIROSHIMA telegram says that on the night of Nov. 15th two children were killed by fire at Hatsuka-machi in that city. A report from Chiba is that a woman and her two children were killed by fire on the same night in the district of Katori.

A GERMAN ENGINEER announces that £25 inclusive will be the cost of the aeroplane which he has invented. The sum is a moderate one, and shows us that whatever the machines are going to do, the price, at any rate, is coming down.

THEY have rickshas in Uganda, it appears, and people noted for their wonderful stamina. The men frequently run twenty five miles pulling rickshas without a stop. On the king's birthday a Marathon Race was organised by the Governor or the natives.

THE bicycle thief does not always meet so tragic a fate as befell Mr. Godden, a glover of Woodstock, who, seeing a cycle in a gateway at Cheltenham, mounted and rode off. In descending a steep hill he lost control of the machine, dashed into a tree, and was killed.

Two submarines, Nos. 6 and 7, encountered a heavy sea off Awaji Island on their way from Kure to Kobe on Nov. 12th. The boats took shelter at Koadzuki where they underwent repairs for damage, the nature of which was slight. On the following day they left for their destination.

It is on hygienic grounds, we believe, that children in America now and then have on their hats an inscription, "Do not kiss me." And there is also in America an anti kissing society!—but where, one naturally enquires, was the A-K. society in the days of Hobson and the Merrimac?

ON Nov. 17th, fire broke out in the Noro Brick Factory, Sapporo, destroying 40 houses. A woman was killed. On the same day another outbreak of fire occurred in the district of Inba, Chiba prefecture, burning down 85 buildings. Sparks from the locomotive of a passing train were the cause.

HAWKSHED Grammar School, near Ambleside, where Wordsworth was educated and which was founded in 1585 by Edwyne Sandays, Archbishop of York, will, it is stated, shortly be closed. The Board of Education are understood to have under consideration a scheme whereby the foundation of the school will be devoted to scholarships for boys and girls resident in the parish of Hawkshead.

SPEAKING of the importance of the implements in billiard-playing, Mr. S. A. Mussabini says that, as with the cues, there is not a professional player worthy the name who does not carry a set of billiard balls about with him. Intimacy with the weight, the density, the "feel," and the angle of a true-running set of ivories counts for more than many may imagine. Every set of balls possesses its own characteristics.

THE philosophical man does not believe in meeting troubles half way, but that evidently was not the creed of Mr. Barrett, a prominent British publican. Worry over the Confiscation Bill was the only reason put forward at an inquest to explain his suicide. His widow stated that the Bill caused him a great deal of anxiety, and he had expressed him a opinion that if it passed there was nothing but ruin for him and his family.

THE examination of the Mauretania in dry dock at Liverpool after her recent eventful voyage proves that the sensational reports which appeared in the American press were without the slightest foundation. There is not the least damage to the hull. The after-starboard propeller, from which one blade was ripped during the storm on the last outward run, probably by submerged wreckage, is to be completely removed, as the dislodged blade struck the other two, to judge from the pieces chipped out of them. The work of fixing three blades, each of which weighs 3½ tons, will be completed by Wednesday, and the Mauretania will keep her scheduled sailing to New York on Saturday next.

THE Nagasaki Press states that shortly before the Hirano Maru left the harbour on the morning of Nov. 14th at 7 o'clock, for coal consumption trial, five engineers and draughtsmen were in a boat near the vessel's rudder, recording her draught, when the engines were suddenly set in motion and the wash from the screws threw two assistant draughtsmen, an apprentice and the boatman into the water. The sendo was drowned and his body had not been recovered at the time of going to press. The three other men were rescued but are badly injured, chiefly in the legs, the apprentice having one leg severed at the knee.

WESTWARD the Star of Empire continues to take its way, says the Boston Courier. About 800,000 acres, constituting the Rosebud Indian Reservation of South Dakota, are to be opened for settlement next Monday, and another of these rushes of would-be settlers which many think scarcely compatible with civilised methods, but which preceded the settlement of Oklahoma and other Reservations in days past, is expected—it is understood that at least 100,000 people are waiting for the chance to get the fine agricultural land comprised in the tract of 1,250 square miles. There is little wild land left in the United States on which the Indian could exist long in his wild state.

THE COLOSSAL STATUE of Mr. Rhodes, by Mr. Henry Pegram, A.R.A., which is to be erected in Adderley-street, Cape Town, is now being cast in bronze, and the memorial will probably be ready for shipment to its destination within the next two months. The statue, which is nine feet high, is to be erected at the upper end of the well-known thoroughfare, which already contains a fine statue of Van Rebeck, the first Dutch Governor of Cape Town. This, of course, is not the only Rhodes memorial which has been erected in South Africa as, in addition to statues at Bulawayo and elsewhere, there is the imposing monument that is being prepared for the summit of Table Mountain.

UNDER construction in the United Kingdom there were at the end of September 66 warships, of 251,138 tons. Of this amount, tonnage aggregating 199,632 tons was for the British Navy. There were four first-class battleships building in Government dockyards, and seven in private yards; two first-class armoured cruisers in Government and three in private yards; four third-class cruisers—two in Government and two in private yards; eight torpedo-boat destroyers, in private yards; fifteen first-class torpedo-boats, in private yards; while four submarines are building at Chatham and fifteen in private yards. Of vessels building in private yards for countries other than British, two are first-class battleships, two scouts, two gunboats, nine torpedo-boat destroyers, and one shallow draught gunboat.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE OPINIONS OF THE WRITER OF THE SUMMARIES OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL")

SIR,—The letter signed "Layman" which was published in Saturday's issue of your paper is of considerable interest. Had it not appeared, I should have refrained from commenting further on the position taken up by Mr. Woodd and "Traveller" in reference to the occasional statement of my opinions in the Summaries in question. I now take this opportunity of saying that during the 12 years I have been writing these Summaries I have received scores of letters referring to their contents and to the way they are compiled. Most of the correspondents have not only approved of my giving my own opinion as to the state of religious thought in Japan: they have expressed the wish that I should do so more than has been my practice hitherto. Some of these correspondents are scholars of high repute in their own lines and what they say is this: We recognize that you have made a very special study of the subjects discussed in your Summaries. It is known to us that the preparation of those Summaries has involved an enormous amount of reading and very wide observation in the fields of modern Japanese literature. We desire to know to what conclusions your study has led you. So we hope you will take no notice whatever of anything that super-sensitive, narrow-minded people may say and give us, whenever you feel so disposed or think it necessary, your own honest opinions on the subjects you are treating. Most of the letters to which I refer have been destroyed, and I should not be at liberty to use the names of the writers publicly even were they in my possession. But one that was received only last week, after stating that the reading of the Summaries has given "extraordinary pleasure" to the writer and to others, goes on to say:—"Concerning the present question as to whether you are entitled or not to express your own opinions occasionally in your reviews, the situation here in Japan is peculiarly unfavourable, inasmuch as many of your most assiduous readers are ardent sectarians who regard it as an act of merit to proclaim their own beliefs and convictions and as rank impertinence for anyone to address to them the expression of a difference of opinion. Some of those readers, perceiving the learning, sense and ability of your articles, jump to the conclusion that you must share their beliefs. This explains the indignation of some good people. Others, more acute, have long wished for an opportunity to attack you personally. Allow us to express the hope that you will not be too painfully affected by either public or private animadversions and that you may long continue to write freely in the manner of a thinking person of the present time." This puts the case in a nutshell, and the sentiments expressed are those of a great many readers of the Japan Mail. You, sir, have enough common-sense to know that no experienced writer, writing on subjects to the study of which he has given over 30 years of his life, would ever submit to be dictated to as to how he should write. What such a writer says to such cavillers as Mr. Woodd and "Traveller" is, "Pass over the Summaries if you don't like them; but don't be impertinent enough to try and dictate to the man who writes them as to how the work is to be done." As to personal opinions, nobody's opinion is invariably reliable. We human beings are feeling about for the truth on all manner of subjects. In a grandiloquent way Mr. Woodd talks about people who only utter "half truths;" let me tell the reverend gentleman that some people do not get thus far. They stop at the quarter or even the eighth part of a truth. The notion that anybody knows or can state the whole truth on numerous subjects is of course quite absurd. I do not claim any authority for my opinions beyond that which fair-minded scholars, foreign and Japanese, accord to them. To Mr. Woodd and "Traveller" the opinion of a man of 62 who has spent his life in studying special subjects appears contemptible. Why not treat it with the silent contempt it deserves? With "Traveller" I am not going to enter into a lengthy discussion about Sir Oliver Lodge. I have no time for that. He attacked me on the writing of the Summaries. I asked courteously for proof of his assertions, wanting to see of what passages in the Summaries he was thinking. He gives no proof of any kind. Mr. Woodd tried to make out that a tip-top scholarly work like "Supernatural Religion," which was so well written from the point of view of theologians that its authorship was attributed to a Bishop, is quite trustworthy, and he had the impudence to suggest to you, sir, that you should refuse to publish anything from my pen on Christian Theology, a subject which I have studied for at least 40 years. He has backed out of the controversy without either withdrawing or making good a single one of his original statements. The notion that an editor of a newspaper will submit to be dictated to by a correspondent as to what he shall publish and what he shall suppress shows with what a modicum of common-sense some religious people are endowed. The last thing that a newspaper editor wants to do is to suppress opinions that are contrary to his own. Popes of Rome perhaps can do that, and the Salisbury Square Evangelical popes seem also to be able to do it, but a paper run on the lines suggested by Mr. Woodd would obtain no subscribers in this progressive age of ours. It is, Sir, distasteful to me to occupy space in your paper in mere self-defence, but it seems to me that the subject discussed by Mr. Woodd, "Traveller" and "Layman" is many-sided, and that the majority of common-sense readers of the Summaries, realizing how enormous is the labour their preparation involves, do not sympathize with the captiousness shown by persons whose real grievance is the fact that the writer of the Summaries holds diametrically opposite opinions to their own. In the time of Charles I. Mr. Woodd's plan of suppressing adverse opinion was followed all over Europe. But, fortunately, we live in an age in which intolerant people like Mr. Woodd do no more than excite a smile of pity among educated men and women. I am, yours, etc.,

THE WRITER OF THE SUMMARIES IN QUESTION.

April 8th, 1908.

AN IMPOSSIBLE POSITION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—One cannot but be amazed at the following statement published in a letter signed "Layman," recently contributed to the Japan Mail: "A man whose living depends on the advocacy of certain teachings, cannot be depended upon. In no court of law could so obviously biased a witness be regarded as reliable." This statement is far too sweeping to be justified. Were it true, no man could be an authority on matters connected with the source of his livelihood. The judge upon the bench would no longer be an authority on law, because therefrom he draws his income. The doctor's advice would be absolutely worthless, not to say dangerous, to the patient, because he must only be expected to suggest what it would enhance his fee. Even the man of Science would be excluded from an authoritative opinion, because, forsooth, he draws salary as a teacher of Science in a University. To what extremes of argument will the advocates of a prejudiced and indefensible theory descend, if thereby they can only deny to the representative of Christianity that right to honesty and common sense which they concede to the representative of any other cause.

Yours, etc.,

RELIGION AND MORALS IN FRANCE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—For twenty-five years now France has been engaged in the vast educational experiment of doing without religion in education. The exclusion of Christianity and all other forms of religion from State schools, and the substitution of a formal and impersonal system of moral teaching, have been in progress since 1882. It has recently been intensified by the exclusion of the Kantian religious premises which might have appeared tolerable to a nation of philosophers. What the actual results of the experiment are may be read in the report on "Moral Instruction and Training in School," recently issued by the Committee of International Inquiry in two volumes.

"In fifty years criminality in France increased threefold, although there was scarcely any increase of population. This enormous increase in crime was particularly noticeable among the young. . . . France has passed, too, from being one of the soberest of the nations, to being one of the least sober." We infer from the report that the consumption of alcohol has increased threefold, the sale of opium has also increased enormously. Again we quote from the report: "The pornographic press . . . pours its obscenities into every hamlet of the land."

To many this will seem but the natural result of a system that encourages atheism of the grossest kind. The population is also retrograde in number. Those who deny that the increase of immorality in France has anything to do with the absence of religion, will have some difficulty in accounting for the fact that the experiment of doing without religion has not checked the rate of national decadence. Yet no one can deny that it is the fundamental business of the state to provide its subjects with the highest moral education available, and to give it a higher moral sanction than the changing whims of a government, or the prejudices and vapourings of a degenerate press.

I am, Sir, Yours, etc.,

PHILO.

THE KNELL OF DOGMA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your issue of Nov. 7th I observe a well-written letter on the subject of "The Summaries of the Religious Press" signed "A Layman."

Every one whose thought and reason are free must agree with the writer, especially in his concluding paragraph commencing "The knell of dogma is sounded," where he says "The truth is gradually coming out, and the efforts of salaried ecclesiastics cannot prevent it. And in the new order of things that is approaching, if the real truths of Christianity are to be saved from the general wreck of priestcraft and sectarianism, it will be by those who not only refuse to make a living by it, but who would not accept a cent for spiritual teaching—not even to save themselves from starvation, etc., etc."

But before that desirable millennium can arrive there is one sentence in the Bible that would need to be expunged; which is—"The labourer is worthy of his hire"—for it is upon that text that the whole fabric of ecclesiastical teaching rests, from the Archbishop of Canterbury downwards. That is the text which brings our armies of missionaries into the field from England and America, Germany and Scandinavia. How many missionary "teachers of the truth" would the poor benighted heathen Chinese and Japanese get, if it were not that the "labourer is worthy of his hire," which is always hurled at the heads of those who think and feel as "A Layman" writes. How many "propagators of the Gospel" would there be if the "hire" was subtracted from the "propagation"?—So long as the clergy and the missionaries take money for their work, they are on no higher level than any other men or women who work for their living, and it is time they should realize that they are so regarded.

Yours, etc.,

PLAIN SPEAKER.

THE LICENSING BILL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your issue of the 22nd of Oct. I notice an article which I think ought not to pass without comment. It is entitled, "The Principle of the Licensing Bill," and without discussing the bill, or even stating what its main features are, proceeds to sneer at it and the government which introduced it in a most contemptuous way. Claiming to give a "Colonial estimate" though a "London Review," the writer proceeds to bring out the old stock arguments, which have done duty for the past thirty years at least, and which have been answered a hundred times, "vested interests," "legitimate business," "a tax-paying class," and especially the impossibility of making tipplers sober by legislation. What the "Review" is, and who the reviewer, we are not told, but perhaps it might be well for one or both of them to propose some way by which the women and children could be kept out of the bar-rooms and thus decrease for the future, if not for the present, the enormous number of drunkards, especially women, who disgrace the land. As the reviewer, claiming to speak from the standpoint of common sense, cries down this and all such legislation as a complete failure, perhaps he might turn with profit to old belated China, where we are informed the production of opium has been reduced by thirty per cent in five years. It really seems that there is a hope within a few years of driving that giant evil from the Middle Kingdom, or at least reducing it to a mere fraction of what it has been. And does this writer think that England is less capable of raising in her might and shaking off a giant evil than phlegmatic old China is? If so, there is one colonial at least who hopes he is greatly mistaken.

But the statement to which I specially take exception is that this is a "colonial view" or the view of a "trans-oceanic Briton." Of course the colonies are many and their inhabitants are varied, but I have reason to believe this so-called 'colonial view' is by no means a prevalent view, certainly not in the Dominion of Canada. Indeed I feel quite safe in saying that legislation for the suppression of evil was never in better favour than at present. Perhaps there never was so much territory in America under prohibitory law as at present, and the tendency seems to increase rather than to decrease.

Thanking you for your courtesy in inserting the above, I am, sincerely,

COLONIAL.

[The article in question, which purported to be no more than a "colonial view of the Licensing Bill," was communicated as such to the columns of the London Outlook and was reproduced as such by us. The main contention of the writer was that the principle of inducing temperance simply by reducing the number of public-houses was fundamentally unsound. The futility of any attempt to reduce drunkenness among women so long as the licenses of grocers are untouched is equally apparent. It is indeed hard to acquit the present Liberal Government of being guided in this matter, to a large extent, by political considerations. But we may refer "Colonial" to a further article on the subject in our issue of the 13th inst.—ED. J.M.]

A VERY OBVIOUS POSITION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In a letter appearing in your issue of the 16th inst. "Justice" compares paid advocates of religious teachings with doctors and scientists. The comparison as to reliability is unfortunate. The scientist or the doctor who makes a discovery, even one which completely upsets past theories and teachings, is not confronted by the loss of his income, by a trial for heresy, by censure of superiors, or dismissal from his office. If it were so—human nature being what it is at present—the reliability as an unbiased witness of either of these might, and undoubtedly would, be called in question. But it is not. On the contrary, the discoverer is honoured. If the discovery of radium or the germ theory of disease conflict with past "teachings," so much the worse for the latter. All honour to the man who thus extends the boundary of human knowledge. But how is it with the creed-bound theologian? How about those who become advocates of Baptism, Presbyterianism, Roman Catholicism, Methodism and the various other more or less conflicting creeds? They can't all be right; but what happens when one of these teachers changes his views, or makes a discovery that is unwelcome to his church? There is no honour, no premium on revolutionary discoveries here:—but there is a premium on leaving the various dogmas as they are. Hence an enormous obstacle to the spread of Truth.

I will speak for myself and say what I should be tempted to do in such a case, were I of the "Brahmin caste." About 25 years ago I was a member of the Presbyterian church, and believed in the Presbyterian creed. My first doubt was about the dogma of hell, of eternal punishment. Other doubts followed, until at length the creed formerly held became untenable. But if it had so happened that I had entered the Presbyterian ministry, with a wife and three or four children dependent on me; and if, subsequent to this doubts had intruded, should I have treated them in the same way? Or should I have inclined to the welcome view held by many good Christians that doubt is a sin; and then filled my time with the details of church work etc., and crowded out the unwelcome questions? Instead of three, four or five hundred a year with comfort and a high social position, and the immediate and obvious welfare of my family, there would confront me the cheerless prospect of disgrace, poverty and, possibly, the workhouse.

Of course I, might not put the issue to myself so bluntly. I should perhaps prefer to think of the effect on the good souls in the congregation spiritually dependent on me. Give a shock to their belief and what might become of them? Very easy to find "exalted" reasons for leaving things as they are. This applies to all the details of the creeds, and this is one of the reasons why there is a conspiracy of silence. I have mentioned but one case to show what inducement there is for paid professional Christians to keep things as they are. There are many other reasons: I frankly admit that if I were in the position described, the strong temptation would be to leave doubts and doubt-producing books alone; and to do as Mr. Spurgeon advised and "just swallow it all." That there are men who believe implicitly in the creed of their Church I do not doubt, and that there are others who believe less but keep silent, and still others who are influenced by other considerations, also I do not doubt. And the reason why the paid advocate of religion is biased as a witness is just this: that he is called upon to testify to something which his living depends on his supporting. If he testifies against it, his living stops; but if he testifies for it, his financial and other support goes on. This is where the bias comes in, and as to whether or not it would be regarded as such in a witness, I leave to practical, common-sense people to decide.

Yours faithfully,
November 16th, 1908.

LAYMAN.

RELIGION AND MORALS IN FRANCE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your correspondent "Philo" attempts to convey the impression that secular education in France has been the cause of an increase of crime in that country. The "Literary Guide" of October 1st has an interesting article on the subject from the pen of Mr. Joseph McCabe, from which I quote the following:—

"The Minister of Justice insists everywhere (in his report) that an increase of alcoholic consumption is the main cause of the increase of certain crimes, and he precisely singles out Brittany, Normandy (quoted by the religionists as exceptions) and other districts in the Catholic south and west as the very worst districts in France for drunkenness."

"The full number of plaintes entered in 1905 was 546,257. . . . But when one learns that the number had gone up from 300,000 to 500,000 between 1875 and 1892, the increase does not look alarming. It is testimony to the increased alertness of the police. Further, the Minister of Justice analyses the increase by districts. In Paris the increase (1904-1905) was 1.9 per cent, the second lowest on the list. In more Catholic districts it was 4.3 (Montpellier), 4.7 (Douai), 5.8 (Rennes—the heart of Catholic Brittany—and Poitou) and 6.9 (Nîmes) but instead of attributing this to Catholic influence, I will be more honest than our critics and recognize that the prosaic cause was, in the Minister's words, "the cheapness and abundance of cider and brandy in 1904."

"There is no ground whatever for speaking of general deterioration of the French character. The sincere social student will ask how France compares with other countries in the last decade or so, and he will find this result: in Austria serious crime has gone up by 25 per cent in 12 years, and other crime 50 per cent; in Germany the convictions went up from 119 per 10,000 inhabitants to 127 between 1892 and 1902; in England and Wales the convictions of criminal offenders went up from 9882 to 10,831 between 1903 and 1906; and in Scotland and Ireland the increase was still greater. So much for the ethical code of religious educationists.

"But if any reader is really disturbed by the newspaper-scares about bands of young Paris apaches, let him study the Annuaire statistique, the official report on Paris, from 1902 to 1905. He will find that arrests of minors in that city have gone down in the 3 years from 6249 to 4706!"

Yours truly,

RATIONALIST.

Yokohama, November 17th, 1908.

THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS.

TO THE PEOPLE OF JAPAN:

Before returning to our country we, the Honorary Commercial Commissioners Representing Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast of the United States of America, desire to express our heartfelt gratitude and the appreciation for the innumerable courtesies and abundant hospitality extended by the Chambers of Commerce of Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, Kobe and Yokohama, and to all who have contributed in making our stay in Japan so delightful, and to thank you for your expressions of good will and your generous entertainment.

We feel that you have, by your wonderful reception of the American Fleet and of the Honorary Commercial Commissioners, given expression in the clearest and sincerest way possible to your desire for the friendship and good will of the American people, and we have no doubt but that the effect will be to bring the people of the two nations closer together.

Through the kindness of your commercial bodies, we have been given the opportunity to visit most of your important industries and cities and to see the agricultural and industrial enterprises and also observe the commercial opportunities which your country possesses.

The Commissioners have viewed with astonishment the proficiency you have attained in bringing the land under the best cultivation for agricultural purposes. As we passed through your country, we observed that you had even utilized the upper hill slopes for the production of rice and tea and mulberry plants. Every little patch of ground shows the intense care and attention which your people have bestowed upon it.

We were amazed at the rapidity with which the manufacturing life of your country has sprung into being. We have seen in every direction the smoke of great manufacturing enterprises curling skyward and it is very difficult to realize that these industries date back only a comparatively few years.

We were afforded the opportunity for visiting several large cotton spinning plants and it was indeed a revelation to note the perfection to which this industry has been brought.

We were particularly pleased to find the very latest methods as regards houses, food, hospitals, schools and amusements for the employees carried out to such a degree. Many of our manufacturers could study your methods with profit.

Our party enjoyed visiting your shops and seeing specimens of your industries and much regret that our stay was so limited that it was impossible to devote much more time to this purpose.

Through the exceeding kindness and courtesy of your Minister of Communications and the managements of your electric railways who furnished private trains and every comfort that thoughtfulness could suggest, the Commission was enabled to reach distant points of your country and enjoy some of your beautiful scenery.

We visited the workshops where are manufactured the embroideries, porcelains, bronzes and lacquer ware for which your country is so famous. We were given every opportunity to observe this work as it progressed, step by step, up to the time of its completion. It is well known that, for artistic ability and workmanship, the Japanese as a nation are without rivals in these lines.

We had not realized, however, the length of time and painstaking care necessary to bring this kind of work to such artistic perfection.

At Nikko, we verified your proverb, "Do not use the word magnificent till you have seen Nikko." We will never forget the gorgeousness of the coloring around Nikko, brought into beautiful contrast by the intense green of the cryptomeria trees.

On the trip south, Fuji-San showed its magnificent head through the clouds. Your country combines the grandeur of mighty mountains with the loveliness of plains and valleys.

The excursion down the Hodzuga Rapids in boats decorated with garlands will long remain in our memories. The delicacy of the feathery bamboo, blended with the beautiful foliage of the various trees on the slopes of the hills and valleys past which we were borne by the rushing stream, offers a softness and richness in the landscape that reminds us of the Italian valleys.

On every hand we found that nature and man had worked hand in hand for the good of all. On the slopes of the hills there were evidences that forestry is not the least among your sciences.

We look prophetically into the future and firmly believe that the progress of Japan in the past is but a trifle compared with the progress in manufacture and commerce which is before you as gradually you apply all the resources and advantages at your command.

We leave with regret this land which has united closely art and nature and will ever cherish in our memories these pleasant days among you which have passed only too quickly.

We assure you that we will never be satisfied until we have had the opportunity to entertain a similar Commission from Japan to the United States.

We know that, owing to our want of knowledge of your language and customs, we must have violated at least some of your social usages and have at times failed to fully realize the courtesies extended. If any such cases should come under your notice, we trust that you will understand that all of our shortcomings, be they omissions or commissions, were of the head and not of the heart.

The Honorary Commercial Commissioners Representing the Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast of the United States of America.

F. W. DOHRMAN,
Chairman.

Tokyo, November 5th, 1908.

The American businessmen forwarded the following preliminary report to the Pacific Coast Chambers of Commerce, with those members who left Yokohama recently:—

Yokohama, Nov. 9th, 1908.

The entertainment accorded the Pacific Coast Business Men Representing Chambers of Commerce of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Portland, Oakland, Spokane, Tacoma, San Diego, Eureka and Honolulu throughout Japan partook of an ovation.

There is no doubt but that the Government of Japan and the Chambers of Commerce of Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, Yokohama and Kobe intended that no attention or expense should be spared that the American Commissioners might be received, entertained and shown the country and its conditions in a manner never before undertaken.

Their earnestness and enthusiasm became contagious, and the Japanese people, without regard to rank, vied with each other that the Commissioners might know and feel that Japan is the sincere friend of the United States. Everywhere we journeyed in the villages and towns, as well as in the cities, delegations of prominent officials and business men met and delivered addresses to us, a number of them being in English.

School children were at the depots and lined the passage ways and, in many places, sang to us our national airs and waved flags and banners, every other one of which was emblematic of the United States.

It would absurd and wrong after the manifestations of affection which were accorded us by the Japanese people, to question the sincerity of their friendship.

Every member of the Commission realized that it was not the Commissioners whom the Japanese sought to compliment, but that through them they were seeking to reach the hearts of the people of the United States.

At first, we were under the impression that the elaborate preparations were chiefly intended for the reception of the American Fleet. But when we visited the villages, towns and cities where the men of the Fleet did not go, we found preparations on an elaborate scale made in our honor and the people lacked nothing in their enthusiasm.

No member of the Commission can ever forget the hundreds of thousands of faces, radiant with smiles, which everywhere greeted us.

Before visiting the Empire of Japan, none of us had the slightest conception of the sentiments which the people of that country bear to the people of the United States. Commodore Perry's memory is as much revered as that of almost any patriot who has died for Japan. The people of that Empire feel that the United States has dealt fairly with them and has given them advice which was not in any way tinged by selfish interest.

They declare that the moral support of the American people and our sympathy during the war with Russia, assured them that they would be successful. They constantly spoke of the friendship manifested by our country when President Roosevelt suggested that hostilities between Japan and Russia should cease and an honorable peace be concluded.

We were all impressed with beautiful scenery, the fine climate and the fertile soil of Japan.

The people of Japan are clean in their persons and in their homes, and are the most orderly we have ever met. According to the report of the different members of the Commission, only two drunken men were observed and not an incivility was offered to any of us. This is a remarkable fact as, in many of the cities, the crowds which cheered us were so dense that the passage ways for our jinrikisha were almost blocked.

We realize that owing to the short period we were in Japan and so much of our time being taken up by the entertainments given us, our opportunity for close study was very limited and some of our observations may be erroneous.

In Japan we found many things that were crude and many of these were pointed out to us by the Japanese themselves. Through us they sought a remedy and we were invited by them to criticise whatever, in our judgment, appeared wrong, and for us to suggest reformation.

Bearing in mind that only fifty-five years ago Japan was a hermit nation and that to-day she is a world power, realizing to what extent they have developed their natural resources and, through their Emperor, changed their form of Government, established educational institutions, and performed a work more gigantic than has before been undertaken by any other people, we deem any such criticism at this time improper.

There is no mistaking the onward and upward trend of commerce, manufacturing, and education in Japan. She has within her the elements of a high civilization and her people are not blind to these factors.

The commerce of Japan has had a rapidity of growth unequalled by any other modern nation. The Japanese build, man and navigate their own ships and they have built ships which seem equal to the best that ply the Pacific Ocean.

Many of their manufacturing plants are on a large scale and in conformity with the latest models of either Germany, England or the United States. In one of the cotton spinning factories which we visited, the sanitary arrangements were nearly perfect. There was a school for the employees, a theatre, tea house, hospital, boarding house, sleeping apartments and such employees as were furnished food were given it at less than one half of its actual cost. We were advised that there were many other manufacturing institutions adopting like measures for the comfort and benefit of their employees.

While we found the wages paid in the factories small as compared with wages in America, they were sufficient to enable the employees to accumulate savings, as the cost of living in Japan is extremely low.

It is a mistaken idea to believe that the Japanese are an under-fed people. Their diet, while simple, is wholesome and well prepared. The Japanese people as a rule, do not wear the heavy clothes of the Caucasians. They are, however, gradually adopting the dress of the Western nations.

In almost every instance where the school children met us, the boys were clothed in uniforms of blue with caps to match and they all wore shoes and impressed us by their very orderly appearance.

Years ago, Japan borrowed from the United States our school system, and education is compulsory. The school house there has become a sight as common as in America. The eagerness of the ordinary Japanese children to gain an education is remarkable and they seem to learn readily. Thus far, those who are educated in modern ways seem to co-operate in the advancement of everything that benefits their country, to a degree surprising to foreigners.

Owing to the country being mountainous and having a heavy rainfall, there is almost an incalculable amount of water power that can be developed. Already there are numerous electrical plants receiving their power from this source.

The mines of coal and copper and oil fields are being developed. In fact, the people seem alive to all the things which make towards the higher civilization of man and they have the daring and the ability to put their thoughts into action.

Their banking system is thoroughly organized and is a great aid in the support and development of the industries of the country. In fact, Japan's awakening is such and her geographical location is so favourable to trade and commerce, that it is probable that there is as little danger of migration from that country to other parts of the world as there is from either France or England.

That the Japanese are going to become a great trading nation is apparent. That the material development of the Empire is going to make a great demand for all the labor of their people is quite evident.

We were impressed with the idea that Japan has a great future. The people of the United States ought to be proud of the friends which they have in the Far East. The co-operation of Japan and America is essential to the uplifting of Asia.

There is more in the Orient than both of these nations can do and they can afford to encourage the awakening of China and extend to her a helping hand.

Our visit to Japan, while important, can be made doubly so, if at no distant date, a similar visit is paid to the United States by a body of representative men of that country.

Before leaving the Empire we presented to the five Chambers of Commerce through whom we received our invitation to visit Japan, the following resolution signed by all the thirty members of the Commission:

"The Honorary Commercial Commissioners Representing Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast of the United States of America, appreciate the sentiments which actuated the Chambers of Commerce of Japan in extending an invitation to us to visit Japan and realizing that we have met with a reception in this Empire from the highest official to the humblest person which has touched us so keenly that we are without words to express the sentiments within us, do respectfully request the high officers of state who have received us, the commercial bodies which have instructed us, the clubs which have entertained us, and the ladies and gentlemen who have opened their homes for our pleasure, to accept a resolution passed at a meeting of our Commission November 4th, 1908, as follows:

"That the friendship and good will of the people of the Empire of Japan towards the citizens of the United States of America is unquestioned.

"That the trade relations between the two countries can and ought to be strengthened.

"That a plan should be adopted by which the commerce between the two countries may be increased and the friendship between the two nations perpetuated."

NOTES BY M. J. H. BLACKBURN.

(a) This constitutes the MacCutcheon defence. It is no better than some of the older defences. Tarrasch, however, appears to believe in it.

(b) In two of the previous games Lasker played at this game he, for some reason, fell back upon a move adopted by him in the match with Marshall.

(c) This is premature: Kt — K 5 or Q Kt — Q 2 would have been stronger.

(d) If his intentions were to take the Kt, then certainly it would have been better to do so before taking B on the previous move.

(e) Almost compulsory now to defend the weak pawns.

(f) Black has already the interior position, and perhaps castling, dangerous as it looks, would have been slightly better.

(g) A needless waste of time; caution carried to extremes; it may be he wished to move the Kt, but was afraid of the check at Kt 5; there was, however, nothing in that move for suppose Black moved his Kt—B 4 (which was probably the best) the game might have proceeded as follows:—4. B—Kt 5, ch. K—K 2; 15. Castles, B—Q 2: 16 BxB, Q R—Q sq; and although there are one or two weak spots in his game the position can be defended.

(4) Apparently Kt—B sq was quite safe.

(5) Again Kt—B sq, or even B 3 would have been preferable. Black's defence—if it can be called a defence—was very feeble; in fact, the whole scheme from the sixth move was faulty.

(7) An embarrassing move for Black, to which there is no valid defence.

(8) Immediately fatal, but his moves were somewhat limited. Kt—K 5 appears to be the only alternative.

(9) Played in Lasker's best style.

END GAME.—No. 2.
Black, 3 pieces.

White, 2 pieces.
White to play, and draw.

In this position, by Sam Loyd, White draws by grounding his play on the fact of the invariability of the Knight's move. By the timely sacrifice of the Bishop, he brings about a situation essentially similar to that of Salvo, in which the lone King draws against Knight and Pawn:—

WHITE.	BLACK.
1 B—Q 7	P—R 7
2 B—B 6 ch	K—Kt 8
3 B—R!	K x B

4 K—B 2, and will hold Black King in the corner, drawing. The latter must take the Bishop at Rook's square some time to have even a chance of queening. When he does so, White has simply to play K—B 2 or K B sq, according to the position of the Knight, to make a drawn game.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL TO THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SUCCESSFUL JAPANESE LOAN.

Received 7.30 a.m., Nov. 20.

The issue of £2,000,000 5 per cent. bonds on the Industrial Bank at 97, has been closed after two hours. The loan was subscribed five times over.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

THE REICHSTAG AND THE INTERVIEW.

London, November 12.

In the Reichstag Herr Kiderlen Waechter, acting Foreign Secretary, made his maiden speech, defending the overworked foreign office. He was jeered at and shouted down. Radicals and Socialists were not called to order for speeches declaring that the Imperial superlatives were imperilling the Empire. The Admiral of the Atlantic, they said, must now be styled the Admiral of the Pacific. They denounced the insane cult of a Kaiser who was allowed to pose as an authority on science, art and religion, claiming special personal relations with the Almighty. The Kaiser was the recreator of national unity, but a unity of indignation.

THE TWO-POWER STANDARD.

A NOTABLE ANNOUNCEMENT.

London, November 13.

Mr. Asquith in the House of Commons has definitely accepted the two-Power standard in British naval policy with a ten per cent. margin of superiority over the next two strongest Powers. This declaration, it is believed, foreshadows the immediate laying down of six Dreadnoughts.

THE ANNEXATION RATIFIED.

Bills were introduced yesterday at Vienna and Buda Pesth ratifying the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

COLLIERY DISASTER IN PRUSSIA.

Later.

A colliery explosion has taken place at Hann in Westphalia. Some 360 were entombed, 37 bodies have been found, and 36 injured miners have been taken out. There is no hope of rescuing the remainder, and it has been decided to flood the mine.

A LABOUR CABINET.

The Hon. A. Fisher has formed a Labour Cabinet in Melbourne.

THE GERMAN SITUATION.

London, November 12.

The German press is disappointed at the failure of the Reichstag to rise to the occasion and enforce the principle of ministerial responsibility, during the debate on the interview. The papers apprehend that the Kaiser's impulsiveness may accentuate a crisis, and assert that His Majesty was not previously informed of the nature of Prince Buelow's statement.

The resignation of the Imperial Chancellor is regarded as inevitable.

THE OPIUM COMMISSION.

London, November 13.

Sir Clementi Smith, P.C., formerly administering the government of the Straits Settlements, Sir Alexander Hosie, F.R.G.S., Consul-General for the province of Szechuan, Mr. Mackenzie King, C.M.G., Deputy Minister of Labour of Canada, Mr. W. E. Brunyate, C.M.G., Khedivial counsellor, Cairo, and Mr. Robert Laidlaw, M. P., F.R.G.S., senior partner of Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., China merchants, have been appointed delegates to the opium commission assembling at Shanghai on the first of January.

THE GERMAN FEDERAL COUNCIL.

London, November 14.

The Federal Foreign Council had a four hours' session yesterday. Buelow made a detailed statement as to the political situation at home and abroad. The Council expressed itself as entirely in accord with Buelow's assurances to the Reichstag.

THE DEATH ROLL IN WESTPHALIA.

The total number of killed in the colliery disaster at Hamm in Westphalia is 360.

BISHOP AWDRY.

Later.

Bishop Awdry has been forbidden by his doctors to return to Tokyo.

AFFAIRS IN BERLIN.

Berlin.—The Socialists have proposed in the Reichstag to amend the Constitution, making the consent of the Reichstag necessary to a declaration of war.

The topic in Berlin is the Koelnische Zeitung's severe condemnation of the Emperor's absence from Berlin at the present crisis and his apparent indifference to the situation.

SECRETARY METCALF RESIGNS.

Washington.—Mr. Secretary Metcalf has resigned and will be succeeded by Mr. Newberry, Assistant Secretary.

CALIFORNIAN PUBLIC OFFICIAL SHOT.

San Francisco.—District Attorney Heney, public prosecutor in the Municipal corruption scandals, was shot during the trial of Abraham Ruef on a charge of bribery. He is dying. His assailant, an ex-convict, has been arrested.

THE KAISER AND BUELOW.

The Kaiser receives Prince Buelow at Kiel on Monday. The result is anxiously awaited. It is beginning to be understood that Buelow's assurances for the future given in the Reichstag were made without consultation with the Emperor, whose approval is doubtful. The country strongly supports Buelow.

THE KAISER'S MOVEMENTS.

London, November 16.

Owing to the sudden death of Count Huelsen Haefeler, the principal aide-de-camp of the Kaiser, His Majesty has abandoned his trip to Kiel, and will return on Tuesday to Berlin, where he will give audience to Prince Bülow.

THE SAN FRANCISCO OUTRAGE.

Henry's assailant committed suicide on the 15th.

THE NEAR EAST.

The Eastern Question is slumbering, pending negotiations at Constantinople regarding which there are contradictory reports current, but it is believed that the negotiations are progressing favourably.

Montenegro has protested to Austria against the violation of the frontier by Austrian guards, one of whom was captured, his companions escaping. Austria denies that the frontier was crossed. There is excitement at Cetinje.

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP.

London, November 17.

The Rt. Rev. C. G. Lang, Bishop of Stepney, has been appointed Archbishop of York.

THE KAISER AND THE HAMM DISASTER.

The Kaiser has contributed $25,000 marks for the relief of sufferers from the Hamm disaster. Prince Eitel Fritz visited the scene, but was greeted in a most hostile manner. Prolonged uproar prevailed till the Prince promised to ask the Kaiser to take steps to reduce the number of accidents.

THE COTTON DISPUTE.

Mr. Churchill has invited the parties in the cotton dispute to a conference at the Board of Trade, with a view to the conclusion of an agreement for the prevention of disputes. The expense of any enquiry resulting from the conference will be borne by the State.

THE CHINESE PROBLEM.

London, November 17.

Chinese reformers in Australia have received telegrams suggesting foul play in connection with the death of the Emperor. The newspapers earnestly hope that the dynastic changes will not affect the tranquillity of China and emphasize the responsibility of the Regent. The Times remarks that the death of the Empress-Dowager implies necessarily some modification of policy. Although the promise of constitutional government remains embalmed in an imperial edict, the reforming spirit is working in many ways. Whether under the new regime the court will be less reactionary, is a problem the solution of which will be awaited with intense interest.

JAPAN AND INDO-CHINA.

In the course of a debate on the estimates for the colonial forces, in the French Chamber, Admiral Frenaim denounced the Japanese anti-French propaganda in Indo-China.

The Ministers for Education and for the Colonies declared that there was no cause for uneasiness. The population were rejoicing at the civilization brought from France. The Franco-Japanese agreement had been a happy event for Indo-China.

KAISER AND CHANCELLOR: STRONG POPULAR FEELING.

London, November 17.
Feverish suspense is being displayed in Germany on the eve of the interview between the Kaiser and von Bülow. The papers in a final warning urge the Chancellor to insist on unconditional surrender. The utmost pressure is being brought to bear on his Majesty. It is stated that the Kaiser went to Baden on Sunday, at the request of his grand-aunt the Dowager-Duchess, who dwelt upon the gravity of the popular feeling and urged that he should retain Bülow as Chancellor.

TROOPS MOVING IN THE BALKANS.

In view of the movements of troops in Serbia and Montenegro, the Porte has decided on the adoption of military measures in the districts bordering on those frontiers. Austria is also moving troops.

THE DEAD AIDE-DE-CAMP.

The Kaiser is deeply affected by the death of Haseler, who was one of his most intimate friends. The papers assert that Haseler on the morning of his death was very outspoken on matters arising out of the celebrated interview. The violent scene which ensued is believed to have hastened his decease.

LORD LUCAS.

Lord Lucas has been appointed Chief of the new Territorial Department of the War Office.

THE KAISER AND PRINCE BÜLOW. Later.

The Kaiser and Prince Bülow had a two hours conference at Potsdam. It is officially announced that the Emperor listened with the gravest attention to the Chancellor's report as to public feeling. He replied that his foremost duty was to uphold the consistency of the Empire's policy, and he added that he approved of Prince Bülow's statements in the Reichstag and assured him of his continued confidence.

Stocks have jumped up in Berlin.

PORTUGAL AND CHINA.

Lisbon.—Stories that in consequence of troubles in China, Portugal will despatch a squadron to Macao are unfounded. The two countries are now negotiating for the delimitation of Macao.

PHILIPPINES RAILWAY LOAN.

The Philippines Railway four per cent. loan for four million dollars has been issued at 95 in London.

SERVIA.

London, November 18.
Serbia has withdrawn her guards from the frontier and has disbanded her reserves.

RUSSIAN GENERALS RETIRED.

St. Petersburg.—In connexion with the army reforms, sixty-three generals will shortly be retired.

THE TRANSVAAL.

Colonel Seely, Under Secretary for the Colonies, speaking at the new Reform Club, said the Transvaal's policy for the exclusion of Asiatics was right. The two races would not mix, and difficulties would disappear if countries like the Transvaal only admitted those to whom they could ultimately grant citizenship.

PERSIA.

St. Petersburg.—The papers report that

Colonel Liakhoff's cossacks have joined the revolutionaries at Tabriz.

THE BALKANS.

Austria has increased her troops on the Bosnia and Herzegovina frontiers by six thousand men.

The Servian and Montenegrin envoy has left Constantinople, having failed to arrange an alliance against Austria.

GERMAN PRESS RELIEVED.

London, November 19.
The German press seems relieved at the termination of the crisis, and comments in generally favourable terms on the settlement. It is urged that a law should be passed fixing ministerial responsibility and controlling the actions of the sovereign.

A NEW JAPANESE LOAN.

Negotiations are in progress in London and Paris for the issue of a Japanese 5 per cent. loan of £2,000,000 in debentures on the Industrial Bank. Half will be issued in London to-morrow at 97, and half in Paris on the 23rd. The object in view is the development of Korea.

JAPAN AND CHINA.

Count Hayashi declares, in a statement made to Reuter's representative in Tokyo, that Japan never had the slightest intention of landing a single soldier in China without the consent and mandate of the Powers.

NEW ZEALAND ELECTIONS.

Later.
In the New Zealand elections Ward's Government have been successful. The prohibition vote has been largely increased and, it is estimated, will result in the closing of 148 public houses, besides the cancelling of a number of wholesale licenses.

THE EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

The recent conference between Nonconformists and Anglicans has resulted on practical agreement, involving a compromise, on the Educational Bill, but a fresh hitch has arisen owing to a new point raised by the Archbishop of Canterbury, threatening an Imperial (?) Bill.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

ADVICE TO THE SHAH.

London, November 13.
Teheran.—The British and Russian Ministers at a special audience advised the Shah that he had better keep his pledge and promulgate a Constitution.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, November 13.
There is a steady demand for Japanese stocks. Chinese securities are strong.

BRITISH NAVAL STANDARD DEFINED.

The British Premier has announced in the House of Commons that the Government's definition of the two-Power standard is a preponderance of 10 per cent. over the combined strengths in "capital" ships of the two next strongest Powers. This announcement was received with general cheers.

JAPAN'S FINANCIAL CONDITION.

The papers publish a large-type interview with Mr. Hara, who says that everywhere in Japan the people are much improved. If this continues as it is hoped, Japan will not find much difficulty in bringing her finances into the most satisfactory state, and national securities will rank among the best investments. Mr. Hara visits Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham and the Continent.

THE FRENCH NAVY.

London, November 14.
Paris.—The Report on the navy gives a gloomy account of the position. Only 12 first rate battleships exist and many cruisers are in a dreadful condition. Scouts and mining vessels are wanting. The crews are short. The complete renewal of guns, projectiles and powder is desirable. The Report contends that fundamental reforms are necessary.

THE KAISER.

Berlin.—The Imperial Chancellor goes to Kiel on Monday to see the Emperor. The Federal Council has unanimously objected to the Emperor speaking on foreign affairs without previously consulting his Ministers. The Conservatives' manifesto appeals to the Emperor to realise that his place is beside his Ministers in Berlin, not with his friends elsewhere.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION IN MANCHURIA.

Washington, November 16.
It is reported that the State Department is keenly investigating numerous complaints of alleged discrimination on the part of Japan against foreigners, especially in Manchuria. It is believed that Secretary Root intends as far as possible to insist upon the open door. A treaty upon these lines is not contemplated, but a clearer understanding is desired with Japan as to her intentions in Manchuria.

THE KAISER AND PRINCE VON BUELOW.

London, November 17.
Berlin.—Prince von Buelow, German Chancellor, will have an interview with the Kaiser on Nov. 16th. The Chancellor is widely urged to speak plainly to his Majesty, and to impress upon him the demand of the people that it be allowed to control its own destinies. Some apprehension is being entertained as to the possible recurrence of a crisis unless the Kaiser agrees to modify his position.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

It is reported from Berlin that there are signs menacing the strained relations already between Austria and Serbia. The representatives of the Powers have assembled at Belgrade and unanimously agreed to advise Serbia against continuance of her military preparations.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

Washington, November 17.
Negotiations are probable between the United States and Japan with regard to their relations in the Far East. Apparently the main object is to define, by interchange of notes, the subjects whereon both are in accord and thus to dissipate any doubts as to the cordiality of the relations between the parties. Japan seems to have initiated the negotiations. Mr. Root, American Secretary of State, has declared that the relations between the two countries are perfectly cordial.

PERSIA.

London, November 18.
Teheran.—The Shah, in reply to the Anglo-Russian representation, has answered in an unsatisfactory manner. He declares that personally his tendencies are constitutional, but he regrets that the nation is not ready for a constitution.

"THE TIMES" ON THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

London, November 18.
The Times expresses satisfaction at the peaceful installation of the new régime. It eulogises and felicitates Prince Chun. With the example of Japan before it, China may expand more energetically in the direction of economic development.

THE KAISER GIVES ASSURANCES.

Berlin.—It is officially announced that the Emperor gives the Chancellor the necessary assurances for the future. Admiration is generally expressed at the extraordinary skill and tact manifested by the Chancellor in extricating himself from his difficult situation to the satisfaction of Parliament and the nation without alienating the Emperor.

THE CRISIS IN THE BALKANS.

Vienna.—Measures are announced with the design of strengthening the military position with reference to Serbia and Montenegro. The army corps stationed on the Bosnia-Herzegovina frontier have been strengthened by 6,000 men.

JAPANESE BONDS.

London, November 19.

Applications have been invited for the issue of £2,000,000 5 per cent. bonds on the Industrial Bank of Japan at 97, with a million reserve issue.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS IN MONTENEGRO.

Vienna.—A telegram from Cattaro on the Dalmatian frontier details the Montenegrin preparations for war. Families and officials have left, the archives and ecclesiastical treasures have been removed. Guns command the town.

TURKEY AND PERSIA.

St. Petersburg.—A sensational telegram received from Tabriz via Teheran insinuates that Turkey's proposal of intervening in Persia was intended to be used as counteracting recent Russian action in the Balkans. The Government, however, has intended to abstain from intervention.

(ISSUED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE) GERMAN AFFAIRS.

CASABLANCA AND THE INTERVIEW.

Germany and France, regretting the occurrence of the Casablanca affair, have determined to submit the whole dispute to arbitration, with a view to its solution. The Governments of the two countries have also agreed to abide by whatever judgment the tribunal formulates in matters of fact and law, and to exchange expressions of regret as to the conduct of their respective officials. The above agreement was signed at the Foreign Office of Germany on the 10th instant by the German Minister of Foreign Affairs and the French Ambassador.

In the Reichstag questions were put by members on the 10th instant and were answered by the Chancellor with reference to the Emperor's interview. The part referring to the Far East was as follows:—Herr Basserman, leader of the Liberal Party, said that the Emperor's language as to the marshalling of the German Fleet against incidents on the Pacific Ocean had caused much commotion in the three countries of Japan, America and China, and that no Japanese journal had failed to express indignation. Thus a blow had been given to the relations with Japan, which had just begun to assume a really friendly character, and the indication was that they had been radically disturbed. This was all the more regrettable, having regard to the situation of Germany who found herself in competition with, and an object of dislike to, foreign Powers. It was impossible not to condemn statements such as that the object of the German Fleet was to serve a world-policy in the Pacific. When the question of ship-building was before the House some time ago, there had been a solemn assurance that not one of the members entertained such an idea, and that the purpose of the Fleet was to serve solely for purposes of coast defence.

The Chancellor replied that it was incorrect to interpret as a declaration of hostility to Japan the Emperor's references to the Pacific Ocean. Germany had no other object in the Far East than to extend the profits derived from trade. Her Fleet was not destined to be employed for any aggressive purpose either in Europe or in the Orient. The Emperor and the Chancellor alike recognised the high political position that the Japanese nation had won for itself by its activity and ability, and the German Government entertained no intention whatsoever of interfering with the maintenance or development of Japan's acquired rights.

THE CHINESE SITUATION.

London.

The Times says that it is a grave question for the world what new policy will result from the death of the Empress Dowager or from what side a movement may be made. There is no disputing that the power of the Emperor of China has declined more or less, and that various new factors have developed and are actually developing. Whether the new Court is or is not progressive, compared with the old, is a problem deserving earnest attention. But, on the whole, there is not likely to be any disruption of the Empire. China has many deficiencies, but in spite of them she will progress steadily; that is unavoidable.

Peking, November 17.

No sign of change in the political circle is observable, and the Government officials seem to be exerting themselves to the utmost to meet the situation and preserve order. The public is tranquil except that there are calls on the native money-shops for the cashing of the paper-notes, resulting in a few bankruptcies, while some demands for cashing bank-notes at the foreign banks also are taking place, and there is consequent stringency in the Metropolitan money-market. Otherwise no extraordinary sign is discernible. Various rumours circulated are naturally causing more or less uneasiness among the masses, but, on the whole, the situation is quiet and reassuring.

Tientsin, November 17.

The news of the demise of the Emperor reaching Tientsin, Viceroy Yang immediately ordered a strict patrol of the streets with a police force of 3,500 men, and for the present no sign of agitation is observable.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

THE INTERVIEW.

During the debate in the Reichstag on questions relating to the Kaiser's interview, members of the different parties delivered speeches one after the other. In every case the gist was that they traversed the Emperor's explanations, severely criticised the abuse of his Majesty's personal interference in administration and foreign affairs, and, at the same time, required that assurances should be given against any repetition of such procedure. The Chancellor, in replying, said, that, in publishing the interview, the Emperor had expected to produce a good effect in England. Not only, however, had things eventuated in a sense opposite to his wishes, but also needless excitement had been caused in Germany itself and feelings of regret had been inspired. In consideration of these events, the Chancellor did not hesitate to express his conviction that even in granting audience to individuals his Majesty would henceforth maintain a circumspect attitude such as was essential to the dignity of the Throne and the interests of the Empire. The Chancellor concluded by saying that in this difficult situation his mind was quite made up and that otherwise it would be impossible for him to discharge the duties or accept the responsibilities of his office.

The debate on this affair ended on the 11th instant.

THE EMPRESS-DOWAGER.

The Empress-Dowager of China died on the 15th instant at 3.20 p.m.

In her last will and testament she alludes to her own dangerous condition, nominates Prince Ch'un to be Regent, and directs that the present Empress Dowager (widow of Kuang-hsü) shall be consulted in all difficult cases.

THE BOYCOTT.

With regard to the rumour that Messrs. Jardine Matheson and Messrs. Butterfield and Swire are encouraging the boycott, news has been received that, in the sequel of investigation, nothing of the kind has taken place.

CHINA.

The papers of all nationalities having suspended publication in Peking and Tientsin for a few days as a mark of respect towards the deceased Sovereigns, rumour has the field to itself, and is making the most of the opportunity.

THE JAPANESE LOAN.

The following are the particulars of the Japanese loan just issued for the development of Korea:—

Amount	2 million sterling.
Issue Price	97.
Interest	4 per cent.
Redemption Period	25 years.
Unredeemed Period	10 years.

In England the issuing banks are the Specie Bank, Parr's Bank and the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. In France, the bank is the Société Generale.

THE CHINESE CRISIS.

Peking, November 16.

Rumours are current that a Chinese statesman has been poisoned. Some say that Yuan Shihkai is dead.

Since yesterday the Chinese city guards have been increased threefold.

Since yesterday the people have been withdrawing their money from the banks, and are now busily making preparations for flight.

This morning the French newspaper published in Tientsin alleged that when the Empress-Dowager's illness became hopeless, the Emperor was poisoned. People are much excited.

The Empress-Dowager suffered so much from fever and thirst that she ate a large quantity of water-melon and thus brought on dysentery. That was the cause of death.

The Empress (consort of the deceased Kuanhsü) took poison yesterday and died.

THE DEBATE IN THE REICHSTAG.

Berlin, November 12.

The Conservative, Centre, and National Liberal Parties, at to-day's meeting of the Reichstag, refused to debate an address to the Kaiser. Prince Bülow deliberately avoided giving a new declaration.

After the sitting of the Reichstag a Council of Ministers of State took place, at which Prince Bülow secured the consent of the Ministers to all further steps to be taken by the Government.

Prince Bülow will visit the Kaiser, who is now staying at Donaueschingen, on Saturday next, in order to report the whole situation to him.

At to-day's meeting of the Committee of the Bundesrat, Prince Bülow will give an exposé of foreign affairs and the situation of Germany.

MARITIME LAW CONFERENCE.

The International Conference on Maritime Law, which had been summoned in London for December 1st, has been postponed to January 1st.

TSAR PLEADS FOR PEACE.

A telegram from the Tsar, directed to the King of Servia, pleads for the maintenance of peace.

PRINCE BUELOW AND THE BUNDESRAT.

Berlin, November 13.

The meeting of the Committee of the Bundesrat, which took place yesterday, lasted for four hours.

Prince Bülow gave a long explanation of the situation.

The Chancellor will not report to the Kaiser till Monday next at Kiel.

A FRIENDLY ANSWER.

A dispatch from Vienna says that Emperor Francis Joseph has answered the personal letter of the Tsar in a very friendly manner.

Austria will shortly give a favourable answer to Russia concerning the Orient Conference.

DISASTROUS COLLIERY EXPLOSION.

At the "Radbod" colliery in Westphalia an explosion has taken place by which 300 workmen have been killed.

THE MEETING OF THE BUNDESRAT.

Berlin, November 14.

At yesterday's meeting of the Committee of the Bundesrat Prince Bülow, in a long explanation of the situation, spoke in detail as to recent events.

Freiherr von Podewils, the representative of Bavaria in the Bundesrat, expressed his consent to the foreign policy as laid down by Prince Bülow, but demanded very earnestly that recent events may not be repeated in the future. He also thanked Prince Bülow for persevering at his post.

The representatives of all the other States present at the meeting of the Committee of the Bundesrat, adopted without condition the declaration of Freiherr von Podewils.

Berlin, November 15.

The Kaiser will return to Berlin directly from Kiel. On Tuesday Prince Bülow will report to him on the situation.

THE COLLIERY DISASTER.

Berlin, November 14.

President Fallières has sent a telegram to the Kaiser expressing his deep sympathy at the colliery disaster at Radbod. Subscriptions have been opened in France for the families of the 300 dead workmen.

Prince Eitel Fritz of Prussia has visited the injured and received deputations of the workmen, in order to bring their wishes before the Kaiser.

Subscription lists have been opened everywhere. The Kaiser has subscribed 25,000 mark.

Berlin, November 15.

The whole Press of France expresses the greatest sympathy with the bereaved in the colliery disaster at Radbod. This sympathy is favourably noticed in Germany.

SPECIAL ENVOY FROM THE KAISER.

Berlin, November 14.

The Pope has expressed very cordially the special envoy of the Kaiser, Herr von Schorlemer, who carried a special letter from the Kaiser expressing his warm congratulations on the occasion of the Pope's jubilee. The Pope expressed himself as very delighted and emphasized the liberty Catholics are enjoying in Germany.

OBITUARY.

Berlin, November 15.

Grand Duke Alexis and Count Huelsen-Haeseler, the Chief of the Military Cabinet, are dead.

THE DEATH OF THE EMPEROR.

The news of the death of the Emperor of China and the reported illness of the Empress-Dowager have been received with much sympathy at Berlin.

The appointment of Prince Chun as Prince Regent of China is very favourably received.

ATTITUDE OF THE KAISER.

Berlin, November 16.

The Kaiser during his sojourn at Donaueschingen is said to have been very much affected by recent events.

Confidence is growing in the report of the Chancellor to the Kaiser, which is to be made on Tuesday, having a favourable result.

The Kaiser has expressed his sympathy with the Government as to the events of the last few days.

THE NEW PRINCE REGENT.

The German Press continues to discuss favourably the declaration of Prince Chun as Prince Regent of China.

RECOGNITION OF THE NEW SULTAN.

The recognition of Muley Hafid as Sultan of Morocco by the Powers in a joint Note is declared to be imminent.

OBITUARY.

The death of Count Huelsen-Haeseler, chief Aide-de-camp of the Kaiser, took place without any preceding symptoms in the middle of an evening party.

LATEST DELIVERY.

The Siberian Mail, with Yokohama dates of 30th October, arrived at Berlin on the 16th inst.

PRINCE BUELOW AND THE KAISER.

Berlin, November 17.

Prince Bülow, in a conference of several hours with the Kaiser, reported to him the situation and explained the cause of the excited state of public feeling.

The Kaiser said it was the principal duty of the Chancellor to ascertain the continuity of the policy of the Empire respecting his constitutional responsibility.

The Kaiser therefore approved the declarations given by the Chancellor and assured him of the continuance of his confidence in him.

Prince Bülow immediately communicated the success of this audience to the Ministry of State and later received the President of the Reichstag.

Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, Secretary of State for Home Affairs and Vice-President of the Ministry, a member of the Bundesrat, reported the result of the audience to the Bundesrat.

The favourable solution of the affair was duly accorded to the ability of Prince Bülow, who was congratulated by the Bundesrat on his success.

CELEBRATION OF POPE'S JUBILEE.

The festivities on the occasion of the Pope's Jubilee at Rome have terminated with a grand illumination of the city.

THE INTERVENTION OF RUSSIA.

A strong military movement prevails at St. Petersburg for an advance of the Russian troops to Tabriz, in spite of the reassuring announcement of M. Iswolski, the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Negotiations as to the dynastic changes in China and the Manchurian question are taking place at New York between Mr. Root, the Secretary of State, and Mr. Takahira, the Japanese Ambassador to the United States.

THE KAISER'S DECLARATION.

Berlin, November 18.

The papers representing the political parties, which have a majority in the Reichstag, express themselves as fully satisfied with the declarations of the Kaiser and with the retention in office of Prince Bülow, and offer to them both the thanks of the parties.

THE EUROPEAN BOURSES.

The tone of the principal European exchanges in favourable.

CHIEF OF GERMAN MILITARY CABINET.

Lieutenant-General Freiherr von Lyncker has been nominated as chief of the Military Cabinet in succession to Count Haeseler.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

MR. ROOT.

New York, November 11.

Mr. Root, American Secretary of State, will become a member of the Senate after resigning his present position next year.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND THE LABOURITES.

President Roosevelt will entertain the leaders of various labourers' unions on Nov. 18th at the White House. On that occasion he will discuss the labour question with the representatives. As the president of the Central Labour Union, has not received an invitation indignation is being shown in some circles.

POST AND TELEGRAPH CHARGES.

In consideration of the fact that the postal rate between Great Britain and the United States has been lowered to 2 cents, negotiations are being conducted between Great Britain and Germany to lower similarly the rates between those two countries.

There is also a proposal to lower telegraphic charges between Great Britain and the United States to 2 cents per word.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND THE ELECTION.

On Nov. 12th the President will entertain at the White House the various committees who rendered services in the election.

GENERALS GRANT AND WOOD.

General Grant, Commander-in-Chief of the defences in the Eastern States, has been appointed to superintend defensive measures in the Central zone. General Wood has been appointed to the East.

MR. METCALF.

San Francisco, November 13.

Mr. Metcalf, American Secretary for the Navy, has tendered his resignation on account of illness. Probably he will retire on Dec. 1st. Mr. Newberry, Vice-Secretary of the same office, will succeed him.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION QUESTION.

In an interview with Mr. Roosevelt on Nov. 13th, Mr. Perkin, the chairman of the Committee for foreign affairs in the House of Representatives, said that the House would not take any step with regard to the Japanese immigration question in the forthcoming session.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

New York, November 14.

There is no doubt that President Roosevelt will join the staff of the Outlook after the expiration of his tour. The capital of the magazine is $150,000 and 20 per cent of the shares are owned by Mr. Steelman who has a special connexion with the Standard Oil Company. Thus there is some comment among the public as to the President's attitude on joining the office. He is quoted as having stated that nothing will restrict him from freedom of speech. The Outlook declares its principle to be justice.

CHINESE IN THE UNITED STATES.

Chinese residents in the United States are collecting a fund among themselves for the building of warships. The Peking Government seems to be willing to accept the money. There is no report as to the cause which has inspired them to do so.

PASSAGE ON THE PACIFIC.

The third class passage between the Eastern States and Japan via Vancouver has been raised to $116, which rate is similar to that on the line between Seattle and Hongkong.

MR. BRYAN'S SPEECHES.

In the case of the election campaign with Mr. William McKinley, Mr. Bryan made 600 speeches, at which prolixity the public were astonished. During the recent campaign, however Mr. Bryan delivered 1,600 addresses. Some of the speeches took 4 hours and some 25 minutes.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg, November 12.

A Constantinople telegram says that Turco-Bulgarian negotiations have made steady progress. No agreement has yet been arrived at as regards the amount of indemnity, but other questions are expected to be settled shortly. Consequently the Russian, British and French Ambassadors have intimated to the Porte that if Turkey and Bulgaria proposed an International Conference before the negotiations are concluded, it cannot be said to be premature in any way. Vienna wires that the King of Italy replying to the Emperor of Austria says that Italy recognizes the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Powers' Conference has no right to discuss the accomplished fact. Paris reports that the British and French Governments have arranged between themselves that the British Government shall mediate between Turkey and Bulgaria and the French Government between Austria and Serbia. France has already begun the work. Serbia is hopeful of success. Constantinople reports that the Austrian Ambassador in an interview with the Turkish Premier refused to submit the question of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the Conference.

THE KAISER AND PRINCE VON BULOW.

San Francisco, November 14.

Prince von Bülow, German Chancellor, will tender his resignation, probably on Nov. 16th. It is expected the Kaiser will accept his resignation. His Majesty was displeased with the undertaking given by the Chancellor to the Reichstag that the Kaiser would not in future interfere in foreign affairs without previous consultation with the Ministry. His Majesty declares that he will take any step he likes, and that the Reichstag has no right to restrict his actions. This utterance of the Kaiser has created great indignation among the public, and has given rise to a grave situation.

ANTI-ASIATIC AGITATION.

The American Labourers' Union has held a meeting at Denver. They adopted a resolution that the necessity of restricting the number of Asiatics entering the United States still remained.

THE DUMA.

St. Petersburg, November 14.

Elections for the President and Vice-President of the Duma took place on Nov. 14th. The Labourites and Democrats expressed indignation at the attitude taken up by the other parties, who are in the majority, and decided not to take part in the election. Most of the Constitutional Party also agitated against participation in the election. After a stormy debate, the election was put through, resulting in the re-election of the present president and vice-president.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

New York, November 15.

Baron Takahira, Japanese Ambassador, has had an interview with Mr. Root, American Secretary for State, lasting for three hours. It is said in consequence of the negotiations that the United States has submitted a proposal to the Japanese Government in connexion with the death of the Emperor of China.

THE AMERICAN BATTLESHIP SQUADRON.

Details with regard to the reception of the American Battleship Fleet in Japan, have been received in the United States. The newspapers of New York commenced to publish the reports on Nov. 14th. Americans and Japanese are satisfied with the cordial reception.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

Many of the Powers have invited President Roosevelt to visit them after the expiration of his term next year. The President declined to accept the invitations. He, however, will call in England on his way home from the visit to Africa next year.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

New York, November 17.

There is a rumour that negotiations are being conducted between Japan and the United States with regard to the Chinese question. On Nov. 15th President Roosevelt declared that the rumour was quite baseless.

Many of the newspapers of New York are devoting attention to the death of the Empress Dowager and the Emperor of China and to the possible attitude of Japan towards China on the present occasion.

San Francisco, November 16.

The American Secretary of State denies the report that the United States Government has asked Japan for a guarantee as to her policy in Manchuria. According to a note issued by the White House, the rumour that a conflict has arisen between the United States and Japan is groundless. The relations between the two countries are growing increasingly cordial.

VICEROY TANG SHAOI.

Viceroy Tang Shaoi, special Chinese Envoy to the United States, has arrived at Honolulu. On landing he was escorted by a number of American soldiers. The Governor of Hawaii and other notables received him.

THE DEMISE OF THE EMPRESS DOWAGER OF CHINA.

New York, November 17.

Rumour is current among the Chinese living in New York that the demise of the Empress Dowager of China is not attributed to natural causes. Many of the American newspapers opine that troubles

THE KAISER AND THE "CENTURY."

The Century Magazine of New York announced through the advertisement columns of several newspapers that it would publish, in its December number, full details with regard to the interviews of the Kaiser with its correspondent on various occasions. On this the German Government asked the proprietors of the magazine to abandon this enterprise as anxiety existed lest the report should give rise to unfavourable comments among the public. It is said that the suppression of this report has cost the German Government $50,000.

SECRETARY ROOT.

A deputation representing the majority of the citizens of New York has asked Mr. Root, Secretary of State, to enter the Senate as representative of that State. Mr. Root has replied that he was willing to do so if requested by the whole State.

VICEROY TANG SHAOI.

San Francisco, November 17.

A captain of the American Army is on his way from Washington to San Francisco to receive Viceroy Tang Shaoi. The San Francisco local brigade will take part in the welcome.

KEPT PRISONER BY AWFUL HUMOUR

Hands, Arms and Ear in Serious Condition with Eczema—Cared for by Doctors, Dispensary and Nurse
but Got Only Temporary Relief—Could Scratch Herself to Pieces.

SOON COMPLETELY CURED BY CUTICURA REMEDIES

"I feel it my duty to let you know about my being cured of eczema. A year ago last April I chilled my blood and it caused my hands and arms to break out. I used to try all kinds of things and I had two different doctors and also attended a dispensary for three months. Then I had a nurse come to the house every morning for seven weeks. They would seem to ease me for the time but it would all come again and by night I could scratch myself to pieces. My own girl has been an hour every night putting bandages on my arms and hands. Almost everyone in High St. could tell you what a sufferer I was and the doctors told me that I should never be able to do my washing again."

"Last May my ear became awful, too. Then I read of Mrs. Cutler's child, on King St., being cured by Cuticura. So a neighbour kindly went and saw her, as I was a perfect prisoner and could not even go to the door or window. Mrs. Cutler told her if I tried Cuticura she felt sure it would do me good. I sent right away for Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills. I shall never forget the first time I used them, they cooled me so. I used three sets and at the end of the week I was a different person. This was seven months ago and I have not had a spot on me since. I have kept on using Cuticura Soap and always shall. A friend of mine had her baby nearly all covered with sores. I told her about my cure, in fact, she had seen the state I was in. She bought Cuticura Soap and Ointment and her child is now quite different, thanks to Cuticura." Mrs. E. Brown, 51, High St., Stonehouse, Devon, England, Dec. 1, 1907 and Jan. 12, 1908.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, NOV. 28TH, 1908.

BIRTH.

On Monday, the 23rd Nov., 1908, at 72-D, Bluff, Yokohama, the wife of FRED. POLLARD of Daughter.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE Emperor will be present at the graduation ceremony of the Military School, which is expected to take place on Nov. 27th or 28th.

THE steamer Ikuta Maru III, which sunk in June this year between Matsue and Takenoko near Moji was floated on Nov. 21st.

A TELEGRAM from Dairen says that M. Spoff, Russian Consul-General at that city, will probably be transferred to Japan next month.

MR. G. TSUJI, an official in the Kinkei Hall and a member of the House of Peers, according to Tokyo papers, will shortly be promoted to the peerage in recognition of his services rendered towards educational enterprises while he was engaged as Vice-Minister at the Department of Education for a long period.

BUSINESS in woven goods at Kiryu seems to be still depressed. According to an Ashikaga telegram, a considerable fall has taken place.

THE Nippon Ladies' Education Society will hold a general meeting at 1.30 p.m. on Nov. 26th at the residence of Prince Mori, Takanawa, Tokyo.

A LAND slide over an extensive area occurred on mount Ibuki at 3 p.m. on Nov. 19th. The local government officials are investigating as to the cause.

A GRADUATION ceremony was held on Nov. 21st at the Naval Cadet School, Etajima. Prince Higashi-Fushimi was present on behalf of the Emperor.

THE Duma will meet on Dec. 14th when a bill providing for the abolition of Vladivostok as a free port and other important matters will be considered.

TOKYO papers say that Mr. A d'Ambro-Adanioc, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, will shortly leave for home. He will be appointed to another position.

THE United States Consul-General received on Nov. 25th a telegram from the Governor-General of the Philippines: "Past week cholera four cases only.—Smith."

DR. SVEN HEDIN will proceed to the Palace in company with Mr. Wallenberg, Swedish Minister, at 10.30 a.m. to day, Nov. 26th, when he will have audience of the Emperor.

THREE men were arrested in Tokyo on Nov. 25th on a charge of having counterfeited an enormous lot of revenue stamps and sold them in Toyama prefecture and other provinces.

ON Nov. 19th a man stole yen 3,500 from the Shita Post Office, in Tokyo, by the means of several false orders. Five days later, he was arrested by the Yotsuya police.

MR. T. KATO, the new Ambassador to London, will leave Tokyo on Dec. 17th for his post. He will embark at Kobe by the Hirano Maru two days later. He will proceed via Suez.

A PASSING R train collided with an unoccupied train on Nov. 25rd at the Tsudanuma Station causing damage to both locomotives. The cause was negligence on the part of a pointsman.

EARLY on the morning of Nov. 24th fire occurred in the district of South Tsuru, Yamanashi prefecture, destroying 56 buildings including two banks, one post office and one police station.

A WAREHOUSE at Etchujima, in Fukagawa, Tokyo, belonging to the Military Department, which is in course of construction collapsed on Nov. 19th. Twelve of the workmen were severely injured.

A WIRELESS telegraph station was opened on the promontory of Nemuro, Hokkaido, on Nov. 20th. The first message will be exchanged with the Aki Maru, which leaves Yokohama on Wednesday.

PRINCE ITO, Resident-General, arrived at Shimomoseki on Nov. 20th, where he put up at the Shunpan-Ro. On Monday he will leave by the cruiser Kasuga to Chemulpo on his way to Seoul.

THE Kaiser has decorated Professor Nagayo, President, Baron Yamawaki, Vice-President, and Mr. Taniguchi, Secretary, all of the School of the Deutsche Society, Tokyo, with the First Order of the Red Eagle, the Second Order of the Crown, and the Fourth Order of the Red Eagle respectively. The 25th anniversary of the establishment of the institution was recently celebrated.

THE Hirano Maru (Capt. H. Fraser), sister ship of the N.Y.K. Kamo Maru, will arrive in Yokohama from Nagasaki in the early part of next month and will leave on her first trip to Europe on Dec. 16th.

It is reported by telegram from Aomori that a heavy snow storm was experienced in that district on Nov. 23rd. Traffic on the railway was impeded. A similar report has been received from Akita prefecture.

MESSRS. K. ITO and I. Abe, painters of Tokyo, have been engaged by the Philippine Government. They left Nagasaki on Nov. 20th by the Yawata Maru for Manila. They will delineate specimens of marine and land products.

THE Hochi says that the Vladivostok-Tsuruga liner Loongmoon sustained damage to her propeller about 2 miles off Echizen point on the night of Nov. 22nd. She was towed to a harbour near by. The passengers and crew are safe.

THE Emperor will shortly receive in audience Dr. Sven Hedin. The Nichi Nichi says that His Majesty will present to him a rare gift, in recognition of his meritorious services to geographical science. No decoration will be conferred.

MR. NAGAI, Japanese Consul in San Francisco, who was recently appointed a secretary of the Embassy in Washington, will visit home before assuming his new position. He will leave San Francisco on Dec. 5th and proceed through Siberia.

A TELEGRAM to the Dempe says that at 8 p.m. on Nov. 23rd the iron bridge on the Pelsa-ho in Kiaotchow collapsed while a train was running on it. Some cars fell into the river. Two Germans and 40 Chinese of the passengers were killed or injured.

It is reported from the district of South Aidzu that snow fell during the ten days ending Nov. 17th, to a depth of about ten feet. Communications with other places were stopped and the poorer people are in desperate straits. Their only food stuffs are millet, beans, potatoes and turnips.

WE learn with regret of the death of Mr. Harry W. Williams, General Manager of Reuter's Telegram Co. for India and the East, who passed away at Bombay on October 17 in his 64th year. Mr. Williams, who came to Bombay in 1866, had acted as General Manager for the last forty years.

MR. JAMES R. MORSE, President of the American Trading Co., the head office of which is in New York, has been decorated by the Emperor of Japan with the Second Order of the Sacred Treasure in recognition of his meritorious services to Japanese finance during the past 30 years.

It is to be noted that the N.Y.K. new steamer Kamo Maru (Capt. F. L. Sommer) which left London on Oct. 24th and is due here on Dec. 11th is absolutely full of passengers. Among those on the list, which we publish elsewhere, will be found a number of names well-known in Yokohama.

A CHANGE has taken place among the high officials of the Bank of Japan. Mr. Inouye, Chief of the Business Bureau, was appointed superintendent of the agency in New York; Mr. Ono, Agency Superintendent in New York transferred to London; Mr. U. Yanagitani, Agency Superintendent in London, ordered home; Mr. Hijikata, chief of the National Debt Bureau, appointed Chief of the Business Bureau in addition to his present post.

CHINA.

Friday, November 20.

Rumours continue to pour into Tokyo from China. They illustrate the mood of the Chinese people, if they do nothing else. Hankow sends a wire that the great ex-Viceroy Chang Chih-tung was so shocked by the news of the twin catastrophe in the Palace that he died on the spot. But the telegram, with some inconsistency, goes on to say that his Excellency's exclusion from the Sepulture Committee has created much surprise, in view of the fact that he is famed for his close acquaintance with ancient rites and ceremonies. To most persons, however, it will appear that Chang's alleged demise is a tolerably sufficient cause for his exclusion from the committee. Another telegram from Peking alleges, on the contrary, that Chang Chih-tung is now the central figure among the elder statesmen, and that he wields dominant authority in the councils of State.

Reports of deaths being the order of the day, it is further alleged that Prince Ching broke a blood-vessel at 2 p.m. on the 15th instant and expired, and that the Empress Dowager is in a parlous condition. These last two statements are telegraphed from Shanghai from the correspondents of the Asahi and the Mainichi Dempo alike, and it is added that all communication between the Palace and the outer world is severed.

Another story is very consequential. It says that the new Emperor, Pu yi, having been nominated successor to Tung-chih, not to Kuang-hsi, the widow of the former should properly have become Empress-Dowager, and that, finding herself slighted in favour of the consort of Kuang-hsi, she attempted to commit suicide, but was saved. This tale may have been suggested by the fact that an edict has been published conferring special rank and liberal pensions on the second consort of Hsien-feng, two consorts of Tung-chih and one consort of Kuang-hsi.

The last wills of the deceased Emperor and Empress-Dowager have been duly engrossed, and copies have been forward to the Chefs de Mission in Peking for transmission to their respective Government.

It is a comfort to turn from the column of canards to a telegram in the Mainichi Dempo which represents the Peking public as much moved to approval by the prompt and efficient steps taken by the Government to prevent disturbances and to avert any financial panic. Things seem to be quite in hand, though the eventualities of the near future are still regarded with uneasiness. The rumours of foul play in the Palace on the occasion of the two deaths are said to obtain greater credit abroad than in China, and people are actually addressing inquiries to Europe and America by telegraph as to the grounds that exist for this belief.

Tientsin is said to have subsided into a state of calm after its threatened upheaval.

The Dalai Lama being still in Peking was to proceed to the Palace on the 20th instant with a large number of priests in order to pray for the souls of the deceased Sovereigns. Meanwhile Prince Ching is said to be temporarily prostrated by stress of work in connexion with the crisis. Naturally the various Departments of State are engrossed by the funeral preparations, to the exclusion of all secular business.

Mr. Liang Kwei-chu, the leader of the revolutionaries in China, who has made Japan his home for some years, has been interviewed by a representative of the Asahi Shimbun, and has said a great deal which is obviously intended to discredit the statesmen now in power in Peking.

But one of this gentleman's allegations is a sufficient index of the confidence his theories deserve. He says that whereas, for the past two years, the Empress-Dowager's debility compelled her to remain on her couch during the greater part of the day, her real condition was carefully concealed, and the public were led to believe that the Emperor was in a parlous state, though his Majesty was in truth quite hale. Mr. Liang entirely ignores history. He forgets that, in 1898, when disquieting rumours were circulated as to the treatment given to the Emperor by the Empress-Dowager, the Chinese Government took counsel of the British Representative, Sir Claude MacDonald, and were by him advised to have his Majesty examined by a foreign medical expert. After some hesitation this course was adopted, and, Dr. Bushell, the medical Officer of the British Legation, being absent from Peking, the services of the physician of the French Legation were requisitioned. The Emperor was examined with the greatest minuteness in the presence of the Empress-Dowager, who seemed to treat him as a mother would treat her own son, and it was ascertained that his Majesty was suffering from Bright's disease. Two or three years then seemed the limit of his reasonable expectation of life, yet he survived for 9 years, though of course as a confirmed invalid. Any one who now describes his Majesty as having been a hale man during the past few years, labours, therefore, under a very false impression.

Prince Ito has been interviewed in the train by a representative of the Asahi Shimbun, and, while speaking with due caution, has stated that he sees no reason to apprehend any further commotion in China. His Highness recommends his countrymen to maintain a calm and self-possessed demeanour.

The Kokanin Shimbun, in a strain not over-courteous, ridicules the old Chinese custom of holding a weeping ceremony at the obsequies of great personages. There is some absurdity in the habit, from certain points of view, but it would be easy to cite equally irrational displays made by other reputable nations on similar occasions.

Saturday, November 21.

Telegrams continue to arrive in numbers from Peking. Fatal illnesses or deaths constitute the topics of many messages, which fact may perhaps be interpreted as a not unnatural result of the shock given to the public mind by the recent catastrophe. Thus it is confidently announced that Prince Ching is in extremis, but another report represents him merely as having succumbed to the exceptional labours of the five days succeeding the deaths of the Emperor and the Empress Dowager. During that time Prince Ching and the other leading statesmen are said to have been on duty day and night without interval, and the strain seems to have been too great for a man of Ching's age, 71 years. Another sick statesman is said to be Yuan Shih-kai, but his malady does not seem to be anything worse than rheumatism of the legs. All rumours agree that his Excellency Chang Chih-tung continues to defy the advice of his physicians by discharging functions which are above his physical strength. His hearing has become defective and he is suffering from a severe cough, but nothing will induce him to desist from attendance at the Palace and from minute discharge of all the duties connected with his position.

There is a telegram (Mainichi Dempo) which says that the Chinese settlers in the South Sea Islands have wired to Prince Ch'ün, saying that, as the late Emperor was poisoned, vengeance will fall in the first instance on the head of the Prince Regent. People who really mean business do not proclaim their intentions in this manner. Another telegram to the same journal represents the Viceroy of Manchuria as having wired to Peking in the sense that the revolutionists are moving on the capital, but whence, his Excellency does not say. Shanghai believes that Prince Ching is dead; that the Empress Dowager has taken poison and that Prince Pu-lun has raised the standard of revolt. Prince Pu-lun is the grandson of Prince Yin-chin, who was the eldest son of the Emperor Tao-kuang.

An Imperial decree has been published in Peking which seems to show that the Government is not altogether at its ease about the situation. The decree speaks of agitators who spread false rumours for the express purpose of exciting the people, and of disaffected persons who are congregating on the borders of the Empire or in foreign countries, secretly planning a movement of some kind. Viceroys and Governors are warned to take every possible precaution against these peace-breakers.

Another edict has appeared in the name of the infant Sovereign. It inculcates the duty of strict obedience to the dying behests of the late Empress Dowager and to the commands of the duly appointed Regent, Prince Ch'ün.

Marquis Katsura has been interviewed by a representative of the Hochi Shimbun and is said to have expressed himself with remarkable clearness. He dissents in toto from the views expressed by alarmists who are quoted as experts in Chinese politics. These persons have always been accustomed to predict signal events as a consequence of the Empress Dowager's decease, and their abiding conviction now induces them to believe that their predictions must come true. But their forecast has been founded on an exaggerated idea of the qualities of the Empress Dowager. She was not endowed with such transcendent ability as many publicists have attributed to her, and if any proof were needed of their excessive estimate, it would be furnished by the absence of any serious commotion at this juncture. The Marquis himself never anticipated that the demise of Her Majesty would give any great shock to the Chinese polity. Some critics are in the habit of saying that individualism is the leading characteristic of the Chinese race, and that subordination of self to country is a sentiment little known among them. Their conduct at a crisis shows that this analysis is incorrect. All the statesmen in Peking and the great officials throughout the Empire are now evidently combining in a most loyal manner to preserve peace and good order, and to save their country from the humiliation of affording a pretext for foreign interference. The Marquis concludes by observing that there was nothing to be surprised at in the fact that the two deaths followed each other in quick succession. The Empress Dowager was an aged lady, worn out by the multitudinous cares of a very strenuous life, and the Prince Imperial had been standing for many years on the verge of the tomb.

The above is confirmed by utterances attributed (Asahi Shimbun) to Marquis Katsura at an entertainment given in his honour at Nagoya. His Excellency set out by saying that he did not claim any special credit for the financial policy inaugurated by the present Cabinet, nor did he assert that the economic improvement witnessed of late was due to that policy. He believed rather that what they were witnessing was an illustration of the old proverb, action and reaction are equal. When things reach their worst they generally begin to mend, and happily the country had now entered the ascending grade. It was for the people to exercise diligence and zeal so as to achieve a worthy sequel to the great War. He then passed on to speak of Chinese events. All the official information received by the Japanese Government showed that things were moving smoothly and quietly, and that no apprehension of disturbance need be entertained. If the Japanese people allowed themselves to be thrown into a panic by the present happenings in China, they would be acting the part of a man who proceeds to dismantle his house when he sees a fire on the other side of a river.

Sunday, November 22.

It appears that there has been a mutiny or an insurrection on the part of the troops stationed at Anking in the province of Hupoh. No reason is assigned by the telegraph, but it is stated that the mutineers engaged in a street fight, killing or wounding several of the citizens and wrecking some houses. Fortunately the Governor of Anhui returned from the abandoned manoeuvres unexpectedly soon, and with the assistance of the gunboats succeeded in restoring order. It has nevertheless been considered necessary to move up troops from other districts. News of this event coming via Hongkong puts the number of mutineers at 500.

Shanghai persists in believing that Prince Ching is dead; that the Empress Dowager has taken poison; that Prince Pu-lun is opposing the accession of the new Emperor, and that political affairs at the capital are in a ferment. On the other hand the vernacular press of Shanghai seems to be writing in a comparatively confident strain. It believes that the new Regent, Prince Ch'un, being a young and vigorous man, will take upon himself the functions of active administration, and will carry out the behests contained in the wills of the late Emperor and the late Empress Dowager. In fact these journals appear to think that the constitutional reforms which have been occupying such a large share of Chinese public opinion for the last two years will be expedited rather than impeded. There is, however, a strong apprehension that the anti-dynastic rebels will endeavour to accomplish something, but it is not thought that their efforts will be crowned with any success.

It appears that the first decree issued by the new Emperor enjoins the importance of paying due attention to the obsequies of the late Empress Dowager, and obeying her Majesty's last commands, reinforced as they were by the will of the late Emperor. These commands are that in everything relating to the Government of the Empire the Regent shall be consulted and obeyed, and the Princes of the Blood are exhorted to set an example of this obedience. At the same time it is declared that any insubordination will be severely punished.

With reference to the above the Tsji Shimpo has a telegram saying that an excellent effect has been produced by the decree in silencing the feelings of discontent which existed in certain circles with reference to the regency of Prince Ch'un. The decree has also had the result of dispelling the impression that an era of certain government by the Empress Dowager was to be apprehended.

In the Mainichi Dempo's telegrams we read that his Excellency Yuan Shihkai is particularly favourable to England, and that, when recently celebrating his 50th birthday, the only foreign diplomatist whom he invited was Sir John Jordan. It is also stated that the ex-Viceroy is determined to obtain funds for the Suchow-Hanchow Railway from England. Our contemporary's correspondent thinks that as England's ally Japan shares this statesman's favour, and that his position of influence being very secure she will benefit accordingly.

On the 21st inst. the foreign Representatives repaired to the Palace in a body to offer their condolences. The Representative of Spain, in his capacity of Doyen, read an address, and Prince Ch'un replied with great dignity. All the Princes from Prince Ching downwards were present, and all the high officials except Chang Chih-tung. So much for Shanghai's conviction that Prince Ching is dead.

Monday, November 23.

At length there is a cessation of disquieting news from Peking. His Excellency Chang Chih-tung appears to be the principal figure in the new situation. He is acting as adviser to Prince Ch'un, and, since the latter accepts his advice readily and gladly, the old statesman may be said to be the real Regent. As for his Excellency Yuan Shihkai, he is working earnestly and loyally under, and in cooperation with, Chang. It appears that at the outset Prince Ch'un was threatened with some opposition. Certain of the Manchuk Princes objected to the powers entrusted to him as excessive, and others construed the late Emperor's final decree as signifying that His Majesty contemplated a system of curtain government. All this trouble has been corrected, however, by the recently issued decree from the Throne, which confirms Prince Ch'un's authority, and it is not anticipated that any further complications will manifest themselves.

There has evidently been some uneasiness on the part of the foreign Powers, for the intended departure of an Austrian frigate from Chefoo has been postponed, and several foreign men-of-war are said to have assembled at Taku. Moreover the British Consul at Changsha is reported to have applied for the protection of a gunboat. It is, however, quite natural that, with the Boxers' experience still fresh, foreign Governments should adopt ample precautions, and it does not at all follow that they view the situation with alarm.

There is one somewhat dark spot on the horizon, namely a rumour that Prince Ching is not on good terms with the new Regent, and that the resignation of the former and the members of his party is likely to follow the conclusion of the period of mourning. That the aged Prince Ching should step down from the platform of active politics would not be likely to disturb the situation, but there is the chance that he might drag down with him his friend Yuan Shihkai. Yuan, however, is now regarded as the greatest expert in foreign affairs that China possesses, and he is moreover the head and front of the reform movement. His position seems therefore to be secure, especially as the new Regent has himself travelled abroad, and must therefore understand the advantage of having the Empire's foreign affairs presided over by such a man as Yuan. As to the Minister of War, Tielh Liang, who was regarded at first with some uneasiness by certain onlookers, it is true that he commands six Divisions, but, on the other hand, nearly all these troops were originally under the orders of Yuan Shihkai, and, the officers being for the most part lihs with the latter, Tielh is not likely to attempt anything troublesome, even if he were so disposed, which is very problematical. We take most of these particulars from a long telegram in the Mainichi Dempo. It concludes with a reference to the provincial Viceroys and Governors, concerning whom the judgment is that none of them can think of competing with Chang and Yuan, and that they will consequently obey the orders of Peking implicitly. There may of course be some disturbances throughout the provinces, and some assassinations of foreigners, but the stability of the Central Government seems to be assured.

It will be remembered that at the ceremonial on the 21st inst. Chang Chih-tung was originally reported to have been absent, and some disquieting conclusions were deduced from the fact. But it now appears that he was present, as were also Prince Ching and Yuan Shihkai.

The Asahi has a telegram conveying the somewhat incredible news that his Excellency Yuan has memorialized the Throne in the sense of shortening by 9 years the period of probation for inaugurating constitutional government. Such a measure seems to us to be very premature, and we are greatly inclined to doubt the correctness of the telegram.

The sum of the day's news is that a feeling of confidence has been at length restored, and that rumour has for the moment ceased to be mischievously active.

Tuesday, November 24.

The Mainichi Dempo has a telegram from Peking saying that Prince Ching will undoubtedly retire from the Cabinet at an early date and that his place will be taken by Prince Kung. This Prince Kung is the grandson of the sixth son of the Emperor Tau-kuang and therefore the grand-nephew of the late Emperor Kuang-sü. The first Prince Kung was a celebrated name in Chinese modern history. It was he that negotiated the treaty with Lord Elgin, as well as the Peking Treaty, and it was he that aided and abetted the coup d'état which raised Kuang-sü to the Throne.

There is another somewhat incomprehensible telegram to the same newspaper. It says that the amnesty to be proclaimed on the occasion of the coronation ceremony next year will extend to all persons lying in jail, except those convicted of heinous crimes, as parricide, matricide or wilful murder, and rebels. That would be comprehensible enough. But the telegram does not stop there. It goes on to say that pardon will thus come to Sun Yat-sen, Kuang Yu-wei and their associates. This may be true in the case of Kuang, who can scarcely be called a rebel, but we fail to see how it can hold in the case of Sun.

One of the most perplexing messages hitherto received is said to have been sent by the Japanese Consul at Singapore, to the effect that the anti-dynastic rebels are mustering their forces in the Yangtze valley and that a rising may soon be expected there. It is of course possible that intelligence of this design may have reached Singapore through the medium of associates at that place, but such a route certainly seems strange. Perhaps the Singapore news is only an echo of the disturbance recently reported from Anking. With regard to that affair, we now read that order has been completely restored, and that the mutineers, who are found to number about 350, have fled to Luchow, whither they have been pursued by the Government troops. Peking wires that the province of Hupeh, where this incident has occurred, is in a disturbed condition, and that the local authorities have been warned to exercise strict vigilance. A representative of the Mainichi Dempo has interviewed one of the anti-dynastic leaders now in Tokyo, and has learned from him that the forces at Anking consist of about 1,500 troops organised under the old system and 1,000 organised under the new. He is unable to tell among which of these two classes the insubordination arose, but he opines that adequate preparations can not have been made and that consequently the trouble will be shortlived. He nevertheless claims that there is much anti-dynastic feeling among all classes in Hupeh, from officials down to students.

As to Dr. Sun, there have recently been various rumours. One extremely improbable story said that he had been invited to Peking by a high official; another represented him as having arrived in Kyoto. The truth seems to be that he left Singapore travelling eastward on the 16th inst. This again may have something to do with the report stated to have been sent by the Consul at Singapore to the Peking Government.

Marquises Nabeshima and Hosokawa and Viscount Kiyoura are now in Shanghai, where they have been entertained by, and have in return entertained, the members of the Japanese Club. On the former occasion Viscount Kiyoura is reported to have spoken in a very optimistic strain of the prospects of constitutional government in the Middle Kingdom.

Wednesday, November 26.

Our readers will have observed that there has been some doubt as to the age of the newly chosen Emperor of China, the statements varying between two years and eight. We now learn that Prince Pu Yi was born on February 11th, 1906, so that he will complete his third year in less than 3 months. It appears that the decree ordering the child to be brought to the Palace for the purpose of being educated was published in Peking on November 13th. The same decree appointed Prince Ch'ün to be Regent. Further, Prince Ching's recall from his visit to the place where the Empress Dowager's Mausoleum was under construction, seems to have almost, if not altogether, synchronised with the issue of the above decree. It is not an extravagant inference that the death of the Empress Dowager occurred about the 12th instant. Curiously enough, too, on the latter day two decrees appeared, one ordering that, in view of the approach of winter, half a month's pay should be given to each member of the Eight Banner Corps and of the Chinese infantry belonging to the Green Regiments of Peking; and the other directing that, for the same reason, a month and a half's rations be given to all unemployed members of the Imperial clan and collateral branches and to widows and orphans of such clans. These distributions of largesse are suggestive of a political crisis. It was on November 13th that the first news reached Tokyo of the Emperor's death, but the accounts differed as to the exact date, some putting it during the night of the 12th and others on the morning of the 13th. In Shanghai his Majesty's demise was announced by the N.-C. Daily News on the 14th instant, so that Tokyo received the intelligence earlier than Shanghai. Another fact now made clear is that the Court contemplated a period of concealment extending beyond the 14th, for on that day an edict was published detailing his Majesty's symptoms and mentioning the names of seven physicians, who, in answer to a rescript issued in the autumn, had been sent up from the provinces to Minister to the Imperial ailments, and who, having failed signally, were relieved from further attendance, while Viceroy and Governors were exhorted to find other men of science—"regardless of rank or standing"—and send them to Peking to prescribe for the sick man. On the whole it seems probable that the news of His Majesty's death became known at a date earlier than that which would have been chosen officially, and that the official announcement made on the evening of the 14th was more or less forced.

Hankow telegraphs that the Anking trouble threatened at one moment to be serious but that timely employment of the troops returning from the manoeuvres effectually quelled the disturbance.

There appears to have been a bad accident on the Railway at Tsintao. A bridge gave way and a train was thrown down with the result that a fire broke out and many persons were injured. The particulars are very meagre.

Mr. Okabe, Japanese Consul at Mukden, is said to have called on Viceroy Hsu and to have informed him that Japan would do everything in her power to assist in preserving order at this juncture. The Viceroy is said to have received this information with much satisfaction.

Mr. Tang Shaoi has arrived at San Francisco, where he was received with all formality, a guard of honour being attached to his person. He is said to be observing strict reticence, a very necessary precaution when a man of any consequence finds himself in the neighbourhood of the yellow press.

There is not a word of news from Peking this morning, which fact may doubtless be interpreted to mean that things are perfectly quiet.

Thursday, November 26.

A telegram to the Mainichi Dempo from Tieling says that, so far as that part of Manchuria is concerned, the news of the deaths in Peking has not produced any disturbance in men's minds. The upper classes are all for peace, but the lower classes desire a change of government, and it is anticipated that the latter feeling may lead to trouble in the future, though, for the present, things remain quiet. Appended to this telegram, however, is a curious rumour to the effect that the Peking authorities have hitherto failed to communicate to the provincial authorities any orders about national mourning, and this reticence is attributed to interference on the part of Japan, who is suspected of planning to place China in the same category with Korea.

Peking telegraphs to the same paper that the details of the coronation ceremony have been drawn up, but that they will not be published until the expiration of the period of Court mourning. All possible expedition will, however, be observed in this matter, so as to avert mischievous rumours.

GERMANY AND ENGLAND.

It appears fated that some cloud should always hang upon the horizon of Anglo-German relations. In making a statement as to the Government's financial policy the German Chancellor seems to have told the Reichstag that England's sentiment towards Germany is informed by jealousy of the latter's industrial and commercial development. This assertion has elicited a strenuous denial from The Times, which characterises it as an opinion derived from the utterances of petty journals. The Times denies that the English nation entertains any ill will whatever towards Germany, and quotes the utterances of the Prime Minister in support of this assertion. It is certainly very regrettable that statements of such a nature should be made by Prince Bülow from his place in the Reichstag, but we are bound to confess that a mutual feeling of commercial rivalry has existed between Germany and England for several years back, so far as we can judge. Any old resident in the Far East can easily recall the time when German industry and German commerce occupied an altogether insignificant place in the Orient, and when the opportunities enjoyed by the German merchant in this part of the world were secured to him entirely by English protection. We all admire the splendid results which have attended German genius and energy since that time, but from our heart of hearts we can not altogether banish a souffron of jealousy, nor do we for a moment believe that our German rivals are more magnanimous. All this is inevitable, human nature being what it is, but it need not in any way disturb the relations between the two countries.

On the same occasion the Chancellor of the German Empire is reported via San Francisco as having said that Germany was the most unpopular Power in Europe, and that in these circumstances her safety could be assured solely by the strength of her naval and military forces. She must increase her armaments, and for that purpose large funds were required. This, however, was precisely where the weakness came in, but the Prince did not doubt that the patriotism of the German people would reconcile them to supporting larger fiscal burdens. This is a disheartening utterance. It shows that there is to be no cessation of the armaments' rivalry, and it certainly will not conduce to Europe's peace of mind.

A BELGIAN-JAPANESE BANK.

We read in the Niroku Shimbun that arrangements have been virtually completed for establishing a new bank in Japan, to be called the Belgian-Japanese bank. His Excellency Baron d'Anethan is said to have rendered signal assistance in bringing together the Belgian and Japanese capitalists who are interesting themselves in the project. The capital is to be 2 million yen, of which 1½ millions will be put up on the Belgian side and the remainder on the Japanese. It is stated that the Belgian share has already been found, and that the Japanese portion is nearly in sight. Baron Kuki, Mr. Tsuji Shinji and Mr. Fukuoka Kotei are spoken of as the chief organizers in Japan, and the idea is to select share-holders mainly from men who are not already associated with other banks in that capacity, though we scarcely see how such a restriction can be applied in practice. Of course the purpose of the bank will be to provide capital from London, Belgium and Paris for the development of profitable Japanese industries. The Niroku alleges that Baron d'Anethan will be the principal director—an obviously erroneous statement—and that Mr. Matsukata Iwao, manager of the Teiyu Ginko, will represent Japan. We give this story for what it is worth. Probably the project itself is a reality—and we trust that it is—but the details published by our Tokyo contemporary require confirmation and evidently correction also.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

Professor Takahashi, who was sent last year to investigate in loco the causes of the anti-Japanese feeling in the United States, has returned to Japan and has just delivered a lecture at the Meiji University. The gist of his statements is that the trouble had its origin chiefly in American misapprehensions, but that some of the responsibility must be borne by Japan also. The proximate cause of the disturbance was that about 7,000 Japanese labourers crossed from Hawaii to Vancouver within a very brief interval, and being unable to find employment, or, in some cases, even lodging, they constituted for a time a very unsightly element of the population. Taylor, the great labour leader in San Francisco, seized the occasion to deliver an incendiary speech declaring that the Japanese are a menace to the white race, that they are war-loving barbarians, and that civilization requires their expulsion from the shores of the United States. This invective added fuel to the fire already kindled in Vancouver, and a section of the populace appealed to force, which appeal elicited a reply in kind on the Japanese side. It is not to be supposed, however, that there is any radical objection in America to Japanese workmen who proceed thither to take up bona fide employment. The objection is to persons who drift there without any settled prospects and without any settled means of subsistence. Students who are half labourers, and petty tradesmen whose methods are often objectionable, represent an element to which the Americans are naturally averse, and one trouble is that, whereas real labourers are subjected to the closest scrutiny before receiving passports, persons professing to be students or tradesmen are not closely examined. That is a defect which Mr. Takahashi thinks should be at once remedied. In Portland there is only very little anti-Japanese feeling, and what there is may be attributed to electioneering tactics; while Seattle appears to be altogether free from prejudice, probably because the employers of labour have the upper hand, and because there is a desire to placate the Japanese in the interest of the exhibition which is to be held there next year. California contains the greatest number of Japanese labourers. There are probably as many as 60,000 in the whole State, 16,000 of them being at Los Angeles and 30,000 at Stockton. These men are for the most part successful and flourishing, and practically no voices are raised against them. In San Francisco itself the anti-Japanese feeling may be attributed to three causes. The first is agitation fostered by European immigrants who have become naturalized in America. The manual dexterity of the Japanese, while it renders them a very useful element in the development of American resources, makes them also formidable rivals of these naturalized labourers, and the latter therefore cry out against them at every opportunity. The second cause is that, in order to win the votes of this anti-Japanese section, local politicians assume a sympathetic attitude; and the third cause is that newspaper correspondents who were offended by the treatment they received during the War, have since then lost no opportunity of imparting an anti-Japanese tone to the newspapers with which they are connected. Professor Takahashi thinks that when the Americans come to understand the Japanese better, this feeling of antipathy will be replaced by friendship.

We have now another rumour about an exchange of notes between the Governments of Washington and Tokyo. It will be remembered that the Niroku Shimbun recently went to the length of publishing what purported to be a verbatim copy of the text of such a document, but as official denials followed quickly, the Niroku's news was treated merely as a display of newspaper enterprise. The Hochi now takes up its contemporary's parable. It alleges that such a note has actually been drafted and approved by the two Governments, and that it will greatly promote the good relations of the signatories. Our contemporary adds that the contents of this note will be within the limits of the Convention which Viscount Aoki proposed to conclude during his service as Japanese Ambassador in Washington.

The Hochi Shimbun continues to speak confidently of an entente having been concluded between the Governments of Tokyo and Washington. It even gives the gist, namely, a mutual pledge to respect each other's territories in the Pacific and to maintain China's integrity as well as the open door and equal opportunities. Our contemporary adds that the recent visit of the United States Fleet to Japanese waters had much to do with the conclusion of this compact.

"THE POSITION OF FOREIGNERS IN JAPAN."

The above is the title of an article in the Yomiuri Shimbun. We have already made brief reference to it, and we now append a translation:—"How the position of foreigners in Japan will eventuate is a question which has been discussed of late among the residents of Yokohama and Kobe. Reflection shows that for a long time back there has been a tendency on the part of our merchants to seek to dispense with the aid of the local foreign residents and to do business direct with the merchants on the other side. Attempts of that nature have been made of late in silk and tea, but the impression is that they have been rather a failure. Hence we gather that no little nervousness has been caused among the foreigners. Recently the Canadian Trade Commissioner, Mr. Preston, advocated direct trade between Japan and Canada, with the result that a discussion was immediately started among the foreign merchants of Kobe, and some commotion was caused by the publication of a decision in the opposite sense by the Chamber of Commerce there, from which events we infer that there is increasing uneasiness on the subject. The Tokyo correspondent of the London Standard has just written to that journal his opinions on the matter, and the gist of them has been reproduced in the foreign local journals as follows:—" * * * This correspondent's views are calm, forcible and circumspect, and we see no room to utter a word of dissent. Yes, direct trade, as compared with trade conducted through a middleman, has the advantage of reducing the expenses of a transaction and of facilitating the relations of supply and demand between the producer and the consumer, so that, speaking academically, there can be no doubt that such a method should contribute largely to the development of commerce. Nevertheless the influence that foreigners have planted here is not to be rooted up in a moment. To seek to ignore them and make our commerce boom is an idle thought. Nevertheless, if we are to speak without reserve, we should say that the reason why our merchants, during recent years, have turned their thoughts to direct trade with the result of more or less disturbing the position of foreigners, is not to be mainly sought in economic relations but is to be found in another, not so palpable, cause. What is that cause? It is that the attitude of the foreign residents is somewhat lacking in amiability towards Japan. Among them there are not a few who have made this country their home for many years back; but there is also no lack of sojourners who, if they are to-day in Yokohama, will tomorrow leave for Shanghai, and, if they were yesterday in Kobe, will sail for Australia next day. The consequence is that these persons form shallow and superficial estimates of Japan, and, deliberately or thoughtlessly, do not hesitate to spread abroad interpretations in the highest degree injurious to the interests of the Japanese merchant; to throw doubts upon his business morality, and to selfishly advocate the elimination of his staples. All this is unendurable in the eyes of upright Japanese merchants, and has the effect of impelling them to desire the establishment of direct trade. An apt illustration is furnished by the hostility of the Kobe Chamber of Commerce to Mr. Preston's proposal of direct trade between Japan and Canada. Our opinion is that if it be desired to give real security to the position of foreigners in Japan and to enable them to participate with the Japanese in the blessings of progress, we on our side must not hastily seek to eliminate the foreigner, and he, on his side, must, at the same time, at least refrain from conduct calculated to impair the just interests of our merchants. Otherwise, whatever be the views of the Standard's correspondent, we can not but fear that the time is not far distant when the foreign residents will find their position growing still more precarious; which consummation is not necessarily to be regarded as the wish of us Japanese."

We may add that a most misleading précis of the above article has been published by a local foreign contemporary.

DR. SVEN HEDIN.

Dr. Sven Hedin continues to be the recipient of numerous invitations from Japanese societies. It is evident that the feats of the great traveller are warmly appreciated in this country. He has received another gold medal, this time from the Educational Society of Tokyo. It was presented on the 23rd inst. at a meeting of the Society, the presentation being accompanied by a document which Prof. Isobe read, eulogising the signal work of the Swedish explorer. Dr. Hedin acknowledged the honour in eloquent terms. He explained that in order to come to Japan he has refused invitations from several other countries, and the welcome extended to him here had more than repaid him. He had heard much of the progress of Japan but the reality had exceeded his expectations, and he was proud to think that his own humble efforts in the cause of geographical science were appreciated by such a nation.

On the 24th inst. Dr. Hedin was received in audience by the Emperor.

When received in audience by the Emperor on the 26th instant, his Majesty decorated Dr. Sven Hedin with the First Class Order of the Sacred Treasure.

MR. KATO, Japanese Consul at Mukden, who has been ill for some weeks past, died on Nov. 21st.

THE KAISER AGAIN.

Saturday, November 21.

It will be remembered that some time ago the Century Magazine was said to be about to publish in its Christmas number the substance of another interview between the Emperor of Germany and an American publicist, but the German Government, being informed of the magazine's intention, paid a large price to secure the omission of the interview. The whole of this story may be a pure canard so far as Germany is concerned, but evidently some agitators in the United States see in the incident an opportunity for creating fresh international ill-will. The Asahi's telegrams which we publish this morning, show that the alleged interview, although excised from the columns of the Century, has been published by another journal, and judging from the telegraphic summary, the interview assumes the form of a clumsy forgery. We can not for a moment believe that the Kaiser used the expressions attributed to him, but we do believe, and indeed the text of the interview makes it abundantly plain, that the whole story was deliberately invented by a group of men who are endeavouring to accomplish the nefarious design of embroiling America with Japan, and plunging the world once more into war. The audacity of these agitators is extraordinary. We learn from the telegrams that Prof. Hale, to whom the Kaiser was alleged to have addressed the expressions communicated to the Century, has denied that he ever had such a conversation with anyone. But this does not silence the agitators. They have the supreme effrontery to affirm that the interview did actually take place and that the expressions of opinion attributed to the Kaiser are accurately reported. It is plain that if yellow journalists not merely devote themselves to inventing mischievous falsehoods, but also decline to accept any contradiction even when emanating from the only sources competent to speak, a new era of pernicious lying has been opened.

Monday, November 23.

Telegrams from America say that the New York World has now followed the example of the New York American in publishing an interview said to have taken place between the Kaiser and Mr. Hale. As might have been expected, the World goes the American one better, for it alleges that the interview before publication was duly edited by Mr. Hale. The story is that the Kaiser, when he passed half a day on board Mr. Hale's yacht last July, spoke quite freely upon various topics, and the conversation now published is said to have been obtained on that occasion. If the story were credible, Mr. Hale would stand convicted of the turpitude of committing a gross violation of the sanctity of private life, but we do not believe that the yellowest of yellow journals will succeed in persuading many people that the Kaiser used the words attributed to him. Possibly one good result of all these lying rumours will be to materially increase public distrust of newspapers like The World and the American. The latter is the acknowledged organ of the labour party, and as the Chuo Shimbu, commenting on this incident, shrewdly observes, the unique aim of the labour party is to embroil Japan with the Occident, and thus to contrive complete suspension of the ambitious tendency now shown by the nations of the Orient. Given a selfishly pernicious motive of that kind, and given also the absolute unscrupulousness which distinguishes papers like the American and The World, there is no difficulty in appraising the true value of any statements made by them. In this case they have actually the audacity to ignore the direct denial of Mr. Hale himself. The Chuo recalls that, some years ago, when Prince (then Marquis) Ito was passing through America, he gave to his countrymen in New York a short address, which was perverted by the labour organs into something radically different from anything he had said or dreamed of saying. These papers have well learned how to exploit the unfortunate fact that when a lie once gets the start, it is exceedingly difficult for the truth to catch it up.

We are sorry to see that the Hochi Shimbu preserves its proverbial antipathy to Germany so far as to place some credit in this new interview. It thinks that, however shameless the yellow journals of America may be, they would not invent such a story out of whole cloth, and in spite of Mr. Hale's own denial, the Tokyo paper finds some evidences of probability in the utterances now attributed to the Kaiser. It appears to us that this showshow imperfectly the Hochi Shimbu appreciates the audacity and adroitness of the yellow press.

Tuesday, November 24.

The Hearst group of newspapers ought to have received a severe blow from the most recent exposure of their nefarious practices. There is now no doubt whatever that the words attributed to the Emperor of Germany by the American and the World were deliberate falsehoods. The trouble is that not everybody will recognise them to be falsehoods, even in the face of their explicit denial by the only persons who are really in a position to speak with authority. People have not yet been educated to recognise the full extent of the unscrupulousness of the yellow press, and many will certainly be found to believe that a newspaper's utterances can not be wholly fraudulent. It is at all events reassuring to find that the leading American journals have not thought it worth while even to notice this latest canard, and that such papers as have referred to it, have done so only for the purpose of ridiculing it.

Thursday, November 26.

The Asahi's New York correspondent says that the publication of the Hale interview has produced a profound impression in New York; that the German Government is adopting every possible means of contradicting it, that Mr. Hale himself has contradicted it but that all his efforts have no avail in the eyes of persons who are acquainted with the relations existing between Mr. Hale and the Century Magazine.

Count Okuma is quoted by the Yomiuri Shimbu as wholly refusing to believe that the Emperor of Germany ever used such language. The Kaiser is both a statesman and a diplomat, and it is absurd to imagine that he would announce such opinions to the whole world. Whence then did the interview emanate? Count Okuma shrewdly surmises that it emanated from a man, or a group of men, who, obsessed by jealousy and apprehension, put together the opinions which they know to exist among a section of Occidentals, and attributed them to the Kaiser in the hope of investing them with credit which they could not otherwise have commanded. The affair is in fact an outcome of the racial anger excited in some bosoms by the unprecedented successes of an Oriental Power and by fear of their consequen-ences. The Kaiser's real connexion with the business is probably limited to the fact that he is the reputed author of the "Yellow Peril" theory, and that therefore these anti-Oriental views find a measure of appositeness as emanating from him.

In connection with the alleged utterances of the German Emperor, as published in the New York American and The World, a representative of this journal called at the German Embassy, to obtain the German Ambassador's views on the subject. His Excellency Baron Mumm replied: "The alleged utterances of His Majesty the German Emperor, as published in the New York newspapers The American and The World are absolutely apocryphal. I am in receipt of official information according to which the fabrications of the said two papers were most categorically denied in the Reichsanzeiger (the German Official Gazette), on the 23rd inst. The recent press telegrams to the effect that the German Government had paid the sum of 50,000 dollars to the Century for the suppression of an interview between His Majesty the German Emperor and the American professor Dr. Hale, are equally baseless. I can affirm on the highest authority that the German Government has never paid one cent in connection with this matter."

"THE JAPAN FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC MONTHLY."

The October number of this periodical appeared about a week ago, so that the editor may now be said to have brought the magazine up to date. It has evidently been a feat difficult of accomplishment, not merely as concerned the collecting of materials but also as concerned the printing. A magazine with 112 pages of letter press—exclusive of advertisements—including a great number of tables and many columns of figures, takes much time to type, and Mr. Mochizuki is to be congratulated on finding a publisher—Methodist Publishing House, Tokyo—to carry through such a work rapidly. From among Mr. Mochizuki's tables we take the following, as an indication of the state of the Tokyo Share Market in August, 1906—that is to say, a period prior to the advent of the boom—compared with August, 1908:—

MR. INUKAI ON THE CHINESE COMPLICATION.

Mr. Inukai Ki, whose opinions on any question derive importance not only from his political position but also from his proved ability, has been speaking in Tokyo on the subject of Chinese affairs. He lays down the principle that the prime object of Japanese statesmanship should be to cement close relations with the political leaders in Peking who may be regarded as the depositories of real power. During his recent visit to the Middle Kingdom he endeavoured to find out whether that kind of procedure was adopted by his country's officials, but he failed to assure himself that such was the case. In his opinion the political power in Peking is divided between two parties; one headed by Prince Ching and Yuan Shihkai, the other by Prince Ch'un and Tieh L'ang. As to which of these two is the stronger, an index is furnished by the fact that of the six newly organised divisions of troops, four may be said to be under the control of Yuan Shihkai, and two under that of Tieh. On the other hand, there are 20,000 soldiers under the leadership of Ma Yu-kon, and these would certainly not throw in their lot with Yuan. The latter statesman is therefore in a not very enviable position at the present juncture, and it may be predicted that he will enter upon a period of diplomatic sickness which will prevent him from discharging active duties, devoting himself meanwhile to strengthening his military power. Tieh Li'ang may be expected to follow the same policy, and it is probable that the recent hasty return to Peking of General Feng Shan was connected with this rivalry. (General Feng, we may mention, is believed to be one of the most capable officers of the new regime. He visited Japan to attend the autumn manoeuvres, and he hurried home on receipt of news of the Peking catastrophe). Mr. Inukai does not think that the question will come to the arbitration of military force: it will be solved by the exercise of political influence in Peking, and he thinks that one of the prominent factors in its solution will be the personality of Tsen Chun-hsuan. (This is the official who during his viceroyalty in Canton succeeded in getting things into a very unquiet condition, and who subsequently refused to proceed to Szchuan, when appointed viceroy of that province.) Tsen, according to Mr. Inukai's analysis, will not side with Yuan, and altogether the latter's prospects are not viewed in an optimistic light by the Progressist leader. He does not think, however, that there will be any disturbance in China for some time to come, as the recent proclamation announcing the establishment of constitutional government in nine years will exercise a strong pacific influence. He thinks that the students sent by China to foreign countries will all come home imbued by revolutionary ideas. They will not, however, engage in any perilous enterprise such as that recently witnessed in Yunnan, which commotion Mr. Inukai frankly attributes to French influence. He believes that the Japanese Government is devoting its efforts to cementing closer relations with Yuan Shihkai, but he regards this as a mistaken policy. Yuan will henceforth cultivate all nations equally, not Japan in particular, and the better plan would be for the Tokyo statesmen to join hands with Prince Ch'un's party. We have greatly epitomised Mr. Inukai's utterances in the above précis, but if the published reports be correct, the gist of his remarks was as here given.

THE UNITED STATES.

According to the telegrams, Mr. Bryan has been lecturing at San Francisco, and apparently this indomitable politician is not one whit disheartened by his recent defeat. He declares that four years will amply suffice for the Republican Party to show its administrative incompetence and to forfeit the confidence of the nation, and he promises that, if he is then called upon to stand forward once more as the Democratic candidate, he will not shrink from doing so. These utterances are said to have provoked condemnation and approval in about equal degrees. Some political organs applaud Mr. Bryan for his perseverance, while others ridicule him for his persistence.

Mr. Richard Croker has returned to New York after a prolonged stay in Dublin and has been received by Tammany Hall with great demonstrations. It is thought that he contemplates resuming an active part in politics.

Mr. Bryan's organ, the Commoner, has published a strong attack upon Tammany Hall. The article is said to bear internal evidence of having been inspired by Mr. Bryan if not actually written by him. He charges Tammany Hall with treachery to the Democratic Party, and alleges that Mr. Taft could never have obtained a majority in New York had the Tammany men stood true to their colours.

Publicity has been given in Tokyo through the columns of the Hochi Shimbun to a remarkable rumour. It is said to come from an American source, and its gist is that the mission of Mr. Tang Shaoi to the United States is not limited to merely returning China's thanks for the remission of a part of the Boxer indemnity, but includes also an attempt to enlist the services of President Roosevelt as Adviser to the Chinese Government. One is bewildered by such a rumour. The idea is certainly magnificent, and if China were really in earnest in seeking such aid, the effect on the destiny of the Far East would be incalculable. Nobody would welcome such a consummation more heartily than Japan. But as to President Roosevelt's acceptance of the position, that is more than problematical. He is understood to have already given up his South African shooting tour for the sake of becoming editor of the Outlook, and he would have either to abandon or abbreviate the latter arrangement if he agreed to go to Peking as Adviser. At all events the project has such immense potentialities that to discuss it at the present stage would be foolishly premature.

San Francisco is troubled by another anti-Japanese wave of excitement. It appears that, in the time of the former Mayor, whose administration ended in such disgraceful disclosures, a law was enacted providing that licenses for carrying on retail trade in spirituous liquors were to be granted only to American citizens or to persons qualified for American citizenship. This of course excluded the Japanese, who are not entitled to naturalization in the United States. The present Mayor, however, has applied the law leniently and in spite of its provisions has granted five-year licenses to Japanese subjects. In connection, however, with Captain Hobson's project for introducing an anti-Japanese bill in Congress, strict investigations are being carried out, and these have disclosed the above facts. The newspapers are said to be writing in an agitated strain about such a violation of the law, and the world is again confronted by a display of San Francisco's uncivilised intolerance.

POLITICS.

On the 22nd inst. an entertainment was given by the new parliamentary members of the Progressists Party at the Maple Club in Tokyo for the purpose of effecting a reconciliation between Mr. Inukai Ki and Mr. Oishi Masami, the two leaders of the Party, whose alleged dissensions have frequently given rise to disquieting rumours. The entertainment seems to have passed off very successfully. Mr. Inukai declared that his 33 years' friendship with Mr. Oishi had never been disturbed by anything more serious than political discussions, and Mr. Oishi, on his side, avowed that his differences with Mr. Inukai were purely of a personal character, and need not trouble the Party in any way. Both men declared their loyal adherence to the principle that to be strong a party's attitude must always be governed by the will of the majority. Mr. Oishi, who never loses any occasion of discussing foreign affairs, seems to have alluded to the celebrated Interview, and warned his hearers that Japan must be on her guard, and must spare no pains to perpetuate her Alliance with England.

It is alleged that the Seiyun kai have now recovered their working majority in the House of Representatives. They suffered some losses at the time of the Saionji Cabinet's resignation, for there are in Japan a certain number of politicians who shape their course in consonance with official relations, and who consequently decline to associate themselves with any party in actual or potential opposition. These are not the men who have now joined the ranks of the Seiyun kai. There has been, according to Tokyo journals, an accession of strength from another quarter. It is not thought, however, that the fact will exercise any appreciable influence on the political situation. If the Seiyun kai saw their force increased by fifty or sixty members in the Lower House, they might be unwilling to extend the period of sufferance for the Katsura Ministry. Such a majority as they would then possess would be difficult to reconcile to a rôle of passivity. As things stand, however, no signal occurrence is thought to be in sight.

COURT MOURNING IN JAPAN.

His Majesty the Emperor, on his return from the autumn manoeuvres, ordered Court mourning for 21 days in Japan on account of the deaths of the Emperor and Empress Dowager of China. This act presents a quality of special graciousness in view of the fact that the Chinese Court took no notice of the death of the Empress Dowager of Japan some years ago. His Majesty's act may be confidently interpreted as an expression of desire to cement the friendliest possible relations with the neighbouring Empire.

On the 21st inst. the ceremony of "mourning at a distance" was performed at the Chinese Legation in Tokyo. Their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Kanin attended as representatives of the Emperor and Empress of Japan, and all the foreign Representatives as well as the Ministers of State and high officers of the Army and Navy were present.

KOREA.

Friday, November 20.

It is again stated (Nichi Nichi Shimbun's telegrams) that the insurrection in Korea is now almost completely quelled, and it is found possible to recall some of the detachments hitherto scattered throughout the provinces. There is a possibility, however, that this comparative quiet may be merely due to the approach of winter, which would naturally have a restraining effect upon the insurgents.

The Yalu River is completely frozen and navigation on it has ceased until next spring.

It is expected that Prince Ito will reach Seoul on the 23rd inst.

The celebrated Dr. Sato, speaking through the columns of the Niroku Shimbun, describes the healing art in Korea as being in a lamentably backward condition, although there are signs of marked improvement. So great is the superstition prevailing among the people that had the new hospital been called a "hospital," nobody would have entered it: the only plan was to call it a "medical hall." The habits of the people are indescribably filthy, and some of the acts prescribed by the physicians can not be put into words. The general belief is in roots of plants and bark of trees as the only curatives, and although the Emperor has been nearly persuaded to abandon his faith in such agents, his Majesty was alarmed beyond measure when a foreign physician recently employed a stethoscope to examine him. Dr. Sato's successful treatment of Prince Wi-hwa for typhoid fever made some impression, but it still remains a parlous business to treat members of the Imperial Household, for the doctrine has not yet entirely died out that a physician should answer with his life for the success of his remedies. The bulk of the people do not wash their bodies from year's end to year's end, and that cleanliness is the first principle of hygiene is a truth which they will take long to learn.

Thursday, November 26.

Prince Ito entered Seoul on the afternoon of the 25th inst. It goes without saying that he had a splendid reception, an Imperial Chamberlain, all the high officials and all the leading Japanese residents turning out to welcome him.

It is stated that, at a Cabinet meeting on the 24th inst. in Seoul, the draft of the new Publications Law was presented and approved. The Law is said to be the same as that operative in Japan, except that censorship of all printed matter is provided for. The telegram does not state the exact limits of this censorship, but it will probably be something of the kind exercised in Japan during the War.

GARDEN PARTY IN TOKYO.

One of the most brilliant garden parties ever seen in Tokyo was given on the 23rd instant in the Koraku-en by Mr. and Mrs. Inouye (Kakugoro). More than 3,000 invitations had been issued, and there were fully 2,000 persons present, among them being Baron Shibusawa, Baron Goto, Baron Ito (Miyoji), Governor Sufu, Admiral Arima, Admiral Miyabara, Count Hirose, a number of military officers of every rank, nearly all the leading business men in Tokyo and several foreign ladies and gentlemen. Innumerable pavilions, theatrical halls, refreshment rooms and beer salons had been erected throughout the spacious park, and as all the geisha in Tokyo attended, wearing brilliant garments, this perpetual movement of delightful colours, combined with the flaunting of many hued flags which festooned the grounds, and with the glitter of bright sunshine on lakes, cascades and fountains, combined to create a spectacle of remarkable beauty. The guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Inouye, who were assisted by all the Directors and chief officers of the Tanko S.S. Company and the Seiko-sho, both of which companies have the good fortune to be under the management of Mr. Inouye. The occasion of the fête was the completion of Mr. Inouye's fifteenth year of service as President of the Tanko S.S. Company, an enterprise which under his able direction has been developed from insignificance to conspicuous prosperity and magnitude. Commencing at one o'clock in the afternoon, the celebration lasted until half past four, and every moment of the time was filled with some delightful spectacle, whether in the shape of theatricals, no-kyogen, kiyari processions, geisha dancing, juggling, music or refreshments, the last being on a sumptuous scale and set forth in such an immense pavilion that the vast concourse of guests found ample space to eat and drink at leisure.

Mr. and Mrs. Sonoda gave a garden party at their residence in the Meguro suburb of Tokyo on the afternoon of the 23rd instant, by way of farewell to their Excellencies the Japanese Ambassador to the Court of St. James and Mrs. Kato, who are expected to leave Tokyo in about 3 weeks for London. The weather was sunny though cold, and the great popularity of the host and hostess, as well as the desire to shake hands with the distinguished statesman who goes to England as his country's Representative, attracted a large number of the elite of the capital and of Yokohama, both Japanese and foreign. Some five hundred persons were present, and there was every evidence of complete enjoyment.

THE BOYCOTT.

The S.S. Korea, which has just arrived at Nagasaki, reports that the boycott is maintained as firmly as ever in Hongkong. There is no actual rioting, but there are frequent cases of individuals being jostled and otherwise maltreated if they enter a Japanese store. On the other hand, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that, according to news received by the Japanese Government from Canton, the Viceroy of the two Kwang has addressed to the boycotters a proclamation, pointing out the suicidal character of their procedure from a commercial aspect, and urging that the wisest course is to adopt a more circumspect demeanour. His Excellency has further ordered the expulsion from Canton of the leader of the "Desperadoes." This is the first emphatic action taken by the Chinese authorities to check the boycott, and we may reasonably hope that it will produce a good effect. Meanwhile we observe with regret that, according to news brought by the Korea from Hongkong, a belief still obtains in that colony that the continuance of the boycott is largely owing to the instigation of foreign firms. The firms in question are not clearly named on this occasion, but a hint is given which suffices to identify one of them. An emphatic denial has already been given to these stories in the case of two British firms, and it should by this time be well known among the Japanese that no respectable English merchant would lend himself to such practices.

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

The appointment of the Bishop of Stepney to the Archbishopric of York will at once entitle the eloquent young prelate to a seat in the House of Lords, the archbishopric being one of the only five spiritual peerages unaffected by recent legislation. Until within the last few years the whole of the twenty-four English bishops were, with the two archbishops, peers of parliament; but when the growing activities of the church and the increase of population called for the creation of new dioceses, it was stipulated that there should be no increase in the number of spiritual peers, the two archbishops and the bishops of London, Durham and Winchester alone sitting ex-officio, the summoning of the twenty-one necessary to make up the original quota being governed entirely by seniority of appointment. At the present time there are eleven bishops, not including suffragans, who have no seats in the House of Lords, and it seems strange to see the Bishops of Birmingham and Wakefield sitting in the Upper Chamber and those of the ancient and famous dioceses of Ely and Worcester excluded. Any increase in the total number, however, would only strengthen the agitation for their entire exclusion. On the other hand, such appointments as the one just announced constitute an unmistakable accession of strength both to the Church and to the House of Lords. The appointment cannot fail to be a popular one, and a brilliant career may confidently be predicted for the new Archbishop. An evening contemporary erroneously referred to him on Wednesday as "Primate of all England." It is the Archbishop of Canterbury who is Primate of all England; His Grace of York is only "Primate of England."

THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

The proceedings against the Standard Oil Company in New Jersey State, as reported by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun's telegraphic correspondent, brought Mr. Rockefeller himself into the witness-box, where his evidence seems to have produced an excellent impression. He recounted the whole history of the great Company from first to last, going into all the details of his own plans and efforts and of the numerous obstacles that had to be overcome on the road to success. He claimed with a degree of earnestness which went far to carry conviction, that, so far from deserving arraignment at the hands of the authorities, the Standard Oil Company was in reality a public benefactor, for it had not only greatly improved the quality but also largely decreased the cost of the people's principal illuminant. It must be confessed that from the point of view of outsiders this prosecution of the Standard Oil Company has become a colossal farce.

A telegram to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun from New York says that Mr. Rockefeller still occupies the witness-box at the prosecution of the Standard Oil Company in the State of New Jersey. The great financier continues to lay bare with startling frankness the minutest details of the Company's organization and methods of conducting business. His statements are reported to impress their hearers as emphatically credible and sincere, but we gather from the telegram that the demeanour of the court is not sympathetic, and that Mr. Rockefeller was subjected to a very rigid cross examination. His testimony, however, remained unshaken.

CHINESE PORCELAIN.

In a recent issue we alluded to a remarkable book which is about to be issued at the Clarendon Press—the Manuscript of Hsiang, which was compiled in the 16th century by a learned Chinese Connoisseur and has now been translated and annotated by Mr. S. W. Bushell, C.M.E. We described the unfortunate destruction of the original manuscript by fire and explained how a copy was happily found to have been made in Peking. The prospectus of the work has now reached us, and from it we take the following:—

The illustrated manuscript catalogue reproduced in the following pages, the work of a celebrated Chinese connoisseur of the sixteenth century of our era, came into my possession more than twenty years ago. The original, bound in the ordinary Chinese fashion in four volumes between rosewood boards, was shown at the time to the Peking Oriental Society, and excited much interest. It was described in a paper read before the Society, and subsequently prepared for publication and brought to England for the purpose. But the valuable Chinese album, together with my own poor notes on the subject, was burned up in the disastrous fire at Whiteley's Repository in 1887. It only remains for me to state, in a few words, how, by a happy chance, the loss has not been altogether irretrievable.

The album, before it was brought to my notice, had been taken to His Excellency M. von Brandt, a well-known authority on Far Eastern subjects, who was then German Minister at Peking. Recognizing its importance as a document in the history of Chinese ceramic art, Herr von Brandt, although he declined to buy it outright, commissioned a Chinese artist named Li Teng yuan to make a careful copy of it. The said Chinese artist, a protégé of the Lazarist Fathers at Peking, made at the same time a duplicate copy for his own use, with illustrations and text complete, and has since, doubtless, executed many another for European and American collectors, as well as for his native clientèle. I was fortunate in being able to secure from him the present copy on my return to Peking, which was executed, as the artist notes in the preface (p. 34), in the 15th year (A.D. 1888) of the reigning emperor Kuang Hsi. My friend Captain F. Brinkley must also have acquired a copy from the same source, to supply eleven of the coloured illustrations to his learned disquisition on the "ceramic art of China." Our clever and versatile Chinese artist is the author, as well, of most of the quaint illustrations in Monseigneur A. Favie's attractive work on Peking, several of which he has evidently culled, although unacknowledged, from the old porcelain album.

I have learned so much myself from the water-colour pictures of the old artist Hsiang Yuan-p'ien, and from his current descriptions of the pieces figured by him in his book, that I am convinced that no apology is needed for introducing the worthy virtuoso to a wider circle of admirers. His soft colours were faded, it is true, but their restoration has been materially aided by many details in the descriptive passages, although these occasionally strike one as almost too enthusiastic in their tone. Some of the tones, at first sight, may shock one's preconceived notions, but further research has generally established their high probability, until there seems no room left for cavil. The many requests that I have received, in print and in writing, to fulfil an old promise to publish the work in its entirety, embolden me to hope for a favourable reception. To the courteous writer of one, Mr. C. F. Bell, of the Ashmolean Museum, I am very much indebted for securing its appearance under such favourable auspices from the Clarendon Press.

The album, in four volumes, was brought to me in Peking by a curio dealer from the library of the palace of the hereditary Princes of Yi. This palace was famous for its collections of ancient bronzes and porcelain, which were being dispersed at the time, as the fortune of the family was at a low ebb, and they were also the source of the peach-bloom and crushed-strawberry vases which created such a furor in the United States about this time. The founder of this hereditary line of princes was Yun-hsiang, thirteenth son of the emperor K'ang Hsi, who was born in 1686, and died in the eighth year, 1730, of the reign of his brother Yung Ch'eng. T'ang Ying, the celebrated director of the imperial potteries at Ching-t'è-ch'ên, refers to this prince as having personally conveyed to himself the emperor's commands before he (T'ang Ying) started to take up the duties of his new post in the year 1723, so that we may gather that the prince took a personal interest in the development of the ceramic art. After Yun-hsiang's death the hereditary rank of imperial prince (Ch'in Wang) was conferred upon his descendants, a unique honour, as it is the rule in China for each succeeding generation of the Imperial blood to descend one step in the scale of nobility till they become commoners, except for the privilege of wearing yellow girdles. His lineal descendant in the fifth generation was the notorious Prince of Yi named Tsai Yuan, to whom the empress-regent sent a silken cord in 1861, so that he might expiate by his suicide his mismanagement of the Anglo-French war with China. As an additional punishment his sons were passed over and the principedom was conferred upon a distant scion of the house, in consideration of the services of his ancestors. The new prince is reported to have taken to dissipated ways since he grew up, and to have squandered the ancestral treasures and collections under his control.

Dr. Bushell has forgotten—some men easily forget benefits conferred by them—that it was through his kind assistance that Captain Brinkley procured a copy of the precious manuscript. In fact, at Captain Brinkley's request Dr. Bushell was so good as to have a copy made in Peking and forwarded to Japan. It will be observed that Dr. Bushell speaks of Hsiang's "soft colours" as being "faded," and of "their restoration having been materially aided by many details in the descriptive passages." We judge from the specimen illustrations in the prospectus that the restorations have been very successful, though Dr. Bushell says of the descriptive passages that they "occasionally strike one as being almost too enthusiastic." Were they really too enthusiastic, we wonder. The eminent Japanese artist, Mr. Kamei, who reproduced the plates, using the descriptive passages wherever restorations seemed necessary, arrived at results even more beautiful than those shown in the Oxford work and quite sufficiently attractive to warrant the eulogies of Hsiang. At all events the Clarendon publication will be a book of the highest interest and charm. We are sincerely glad that an English publisher has been found, for generally the task of bringing out these choice and costly volumes falls to the much more enterprising publishers of the United States.

INCOME-TAX NOTICES.

It is the custom of the Japanese local authorities to distribute to all persons liable for income-tax a document stating the amount at which their income is assessed for that purpose. The assessment is not made officially. What is done is that, in the first place, a form is furnished to be filled in by the tax-payer. He writes thereon the amount of his income and the sources whence it is obtained, and in 999 cases out of every 1,000 his statement is accepted as correct. Thus far the process is unimpeachable. Due privacy is secured by the tax-payer, who takes care to enclose his answer in a sealed envelope. But thereafter a procedure is adopted which appears to be quite superfluous and is sometimes very disagreeable. A document is addressed to the payer, informing him that the amount of his taxable income will be so and so much; in other words, informing him that his own statement is accepted. Now what is the use of wasting time and money by sending a document? Would it not be incomparably simpler and less expensive to announce, once for all, that in cases where statements are accepted by the Authorities, no further communication will be made until the time comes for paying the tax, when the amount of the levy—national and local—will be intimated, and that only in cases where the Authorities do not accept the return furnished by the payer will any notice be given? We presume that in the city of Tokyo and its suburbs at least 250,000 of such intimations are sent out yearly, which means an outlay of 7,500 yen on postage alone, to say nothing of clerical expenses which must be very considerable. Then there is another point worthy of attention. The intimations of amount are sometimes sent in open envelopes, so that every one through whose hands they pass can read them if he pleases. We confess that no example of such an abuse has come under our own direct notice, but we have heard a bitter complaint on the subject, and such publicity is certainly not fair to a tax-payer. The sum of the matter is that the whole process might be limited to two documents, one asking for a statement of income and the other indicating and calling for the amount of tax.

THE GERMAN SOCIETY SCHOOL.

The German Society's School celebrated, on the 22nd inst., the 25th anniversary of its establishment. This school is now a most flourishing establishment. It has turned out 1,223 graduates and it has actually 557 students on its books. Originally it was purely a language school, but special subjects were afterwards added to the curriculum, and it may now be said to be a nursery of medical science. Among its graduates 100 are now students of high schools; 150 are in universities, and 150 are studying at medical colleges. The German Ambassador was present, and delivered a short speech which unfortunately does not appear to have been reported. Count Okuma, in his congratulatory speech, insisted that German science was the foundation of Japan's modern civilization, since what she had received direct from Holland was only borrowed by the latter from Germany. The fact that the Dutch had access to Japan in early days made it convenient for every foreigner coming to Japan to assume Dutch nationality. That had been conspicuously the case with the celebrated Dr. Siebold, who, although really a German, passed as a Dutchman. The speaker himself had studied Dutch originally, and having thus recognised its German affinities, he had advocated the teaching of the German language on the threshold of Japan's career of modern progress. But he had encountered vehement opposition, especially from the War Department. English and French had been adopted in preference, yet now, if they looked around them, and observed that the most profound subjects studied in the University required a knowledge of German, they would recognise that he had been right in his forecast.

A CASE of small-pox is reported in Tokyo, the patient being a child living in Motozono-cho, Kojimachi.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, November 20.

The recently published news as to the success of the Japanese exhibits in the St. Petersburg Exhibition is confirmed. More than one-half of the entire number of exhibits were sold, and had a reduction of 10 or 15 per cent. been made on the remaining exhibits during the closing days, as was done at the sections of other nations, and as was evidently expected by the public, there is no doubt that the sales would have been greatly increased. The actual value of the goods disposed of did not exceed one-fifth of the total price, but even this result was conspicuously better than that attained at other sections, and the reason assigned for this discrepancy between number and value was that the goods left unsold were all high priced articles. Out of 264 prizes awarded, the Japanese exhibitors received no fewer than 49, and among these were 41 medals of gold or silver.

Naturally the Balkan crisis and Peking incidents interfered greatly with the progress of the negotiations just concluded in London for the issue of two million sterling of the Industrial Bank's debentures. That the negotiations were carried through in spite of these drawbacks is a proof of the great improvement of Japan's credit abroad. The terms of the issue are also regarded with much satisfaction, especially the lengthy period for repayment which contrasts strongly with the short periods granted in the case of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha and the Kanegafuchi Spinning Company as well as the South Manchuria Railway. The rate of commission is not yet known in Japan, but it is believed that the interest will figure out at something like 5 6 per cent. It is worthy of observation that this transaction represents the first issue of debentures by the Industrial Bank in its own name. There appears to be also much gratification over the fact that French financiers have taken part in the affair, and especially that the Société Générale is concerned, as this important Bank commands large resources.

News from New York shows that Wall Street continues to be very active. The transactions amount to about a million shares daily and prices tend steadily upward.

Mr. Uchida, Chief of the Marine Inspection Bureau in the Department of Communications, continues to speak emphatically of the necessity of maintaining the system of encouragement to shipbuilding and navigation in Japan. The result of his tour abroad has been to convince him that Japan is still far behind other States as to the development of her marine.

The Nichi Nichi Shinbun now contradicts its previous statement and alleges that the authorities will not give permission for an increase of fares on the Tokyo Railway so long as the present directors remain in office.

Saturday, November 21.

The Yomiuri Shinbun has a very frank article on the subject of the position of the foreign middleman in Japan. We shall presently lay before our readers a full translation of the article but in the meanwhile we note its salient features, namely, that while fully acknowledging the strong position won by the foreign middlemen in Japan's over sea trade, and while disavowing any desire on the part of the Japanese to dispense with the aid of foreigners merely because they are aliens, our contemporary says that if it be permitted to speak quite frankly, there is an underlying factor well worthy of attention. That factor is the harsh criticisms too often heard in the foreign settlements about Japanese acts and Japanese character. If the two sides are to co-operate harmoniously for the development of a business profitable to both, it is essential that a little more sympathy should inform local foreign judgments of Japan and the Japanese.

We read in the Asahi Shinbun that in addition to the two steamers belonging to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha which are laid up for want of employment, the following seven vessels have recently been added to the same category:—Manchu Maru, Kasado Maru, Ujina Maru, Shinkoku Maru, Tatsu Maru, Ryoto Maru and Miyoshino Maru.

We find in the Asahi Shinbun and the Chuo Shinbun some vague talk about the now utterly wearisome subject of the Tokyo Railway's fares. It is impossible to place any reliance on the details given. When we find a journal like the Nichi Nichi Shinbun saying one thing to-day and just the opposite to-morrow, it is evident that all stories must be received with scepticism. The only thing which may be regarded as certain is that the Company can not pursue its enterprise profitably at present rates, and that the Directors can not be supposed to have abandoned all hope of obtaining reasonable treatment at the hands of the Authorities. It, in spite of the figures hitherto published, doubts be still entertained as to the integrity of the Company's management, we fail to see why the books should not be thrown open for official inspection.

It is stated that a new agreement has been concluded between the directors of the Tokyo Railway and Mr. Sonoda on behalf of the Anglo-Japanese Hydro-Electric Company. By this agreement the Company is to be established in the spring of next year, and from the 1st of July, 1911, it is to supply 10,000 kilowatts at 1.7 sen per kilowatt per hour. From the 1st of July, 1912, the supply is to be increased to 11,000 kilowatts. The contract is to hold good for ten years from the date of signature, and if either side desires to terminate it, two years' notice must be given.

The telephone authorities are now quoted as saying that since the message-charge system has proved so unpopular, it will be necessary to confine the extension of the enterprise to the 2 million yen appropriated in the Budget for that purpose. There has been talk of recourse to the system of voluntary contributions, but such contributions serve only for new installations, and can not be used to cover the expenses of an increased staff.

Sunday, November 22.

With regard to the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition recently spoken of by Baron Sakatani at a dinner given by the Bankers Club, the Nichi Nichi Shinbun alleges that the affair has been virtually arranged. It appears from our contemporary's account that the British Government approached Japan on the subject some time ago, but as Japan then had it in view to hold an exhibition in Tokyo in 1912, the Authorities could not see their way to organise a supplementary exhibition in London. The 1912 project having been abandoned, however, that of an Anglo-Japanese exhibition has now been taken up again, and the year 1910 has been chosen. The recent departure of Mr. Wada for London has to do with this programme, and it is expected that an official notice will soon be issued.

It is very difficult to understand the exact nature of the charge brought against Mr. Imai Bunkichi, an ex-broker of the Tokyo Stock Exchange, who is now undergoing magisterial examination. The idea is that he is accused of failing to execute orders given to him by clients, but as such orders generally leave a certain measure of discretion to the broker, it will be very difficult to bring home any crime to Mr. Imai. It appears to be thought, however, that his arrest was largely responsible for the set-back which the share market suffered on the 20th inst.

It is stated that the Authorities contemplate an amendment of the regulations for notaries public. According to the present system, notarial fees are levied simply with reference to the number of pages of writing, without any regard for the dimensions of the sum involved. A new scale of charges is now contemplated on the basis of the amount in question.

Frequent references are made by Tokyo newspapers to the recommendations which Mr. Uchida, of the Department of Communications, has made to the Government in the sequel of his trip abroad. The latest statement is that, in consideration of his advice, the ships not needed on the North America lines will be used to form a South American service which will be duly subsidised.

It is now alleged that the Government will ask the Diet next session to appropriate a sum of 350,000 yen annually for improving the breed of horses, and that this amount will be divided among the 13 race-clubs. Such an abortive measure might as well be abandoned at once. A subsidy of from 20 to 30 thousand yen annually will not begin to defray the expenses of a race club.

The trade returns for the second ten days of November show an excess of only 587,000 yen on the side of exports. The figure for exports was 10,135,000 yen, and that for imports 9,548,000 yen. This brings the total volume of exports from the beginning of the year to 330,037,000 yen, being 59,129,000 yen less than the figure for the corresponding figure of last year; and brings the total imports to 394,331,000 yen, being 47,392,000 yen less than last year's figure. The aggregate excess of imports up to date is 64,294,000 yen.

Tuesday, November 24.

The Hochi Shinbun has a telegram from New York saying that the Japanese who were recently apprehended on a charge of poaching in northern waters have been condemned to pay a fine of 35,400 dollars. They will appeal against the sentence, but there is said to be little hope of reversing it. The telegram does not say what the alternative penalty is, though this would have been interesting, inasmuch as the payment of a fine of over 70,000 yen by fishermen whose worldly belongings are probably limited to their boats, their clothes and their implements, becomes a mere farce. They could not pay even a tenth part of the money, and we don't see how it can possibly be collected.

We read in the Fiji Shimpo that the Oriental Development Society is likely to devote its early attention to the business of marine products in Korean waters. At present about 4 million yen worth of these commodities are obtained every year by Japanese subjects, about a million and a half worth by Korean subjects, and about a million yen worth by Chinese poachers. These people all work with small capital and on a more or less primitive scale. Any company entering the field with ample resources, and using the best modern appliances could easily double the take. The Eastern Development Society's prime business must of course be what its name indicates, namely, the reclamation and cultivation of waste land. But that is a slow process from the point of view of profit, and if the Government's subsidy is to be dispensed with at the end of 8 years, it will be necessary to find an adequate substitute before the expiration of that time.

One of the results of the recent naval manoeuvres is reported to have been complete confirmation of the excellence of Prof. Mizuno's system of wireless telegraphy. There had been some doubts as to its efficiency, but these were completely dispelled by the experiments which took place between the Fleet and the signalling station at Kobe. It is stated that the messages transmitted emerged as clearly as though they had been sent by the ordinary telegraph. The system has therefore been definitely adopted and will henceforth constitute a subject of instruction in technical schools.

It is stated that one of the first enterprises undertaken by the new Railway Bureau after its organization will be the establishment of suitable hotels at chosen places throughout the country. The idea is that whereas the number of tourists increases every year there is no corresponding development of hotel accommodation, and this reacts injuriously on an important source of potential revenue. The Bureau will also undertake to construct additional warehouses, as the facilities now existing for the storage of goods are quite inadequate. The former of these enterprises may have valuable indirect results, but that it will bring any money into the coffers of the railways we greatly doubt.

Mr. Matsuoka, a managing director of the Tokyo Stock Exchange, is quoted by the Uho as animadverting very strongly on the manoeuvres of the bears to drag down the share market by magnifying every rumour that comes about Chinese affairs, and by inventing rumours when they do not come. Temporary success may have attended these devices, but in Mr. Matsuoka's opinion the economic tide has begun to rise steadily, and no artificial efforts on the part of the bears can long check it.

Wednesday, November 26.

We read in the Asahi Shimbun that the Kanegafuchi and Fukushima Spinning Companies are contemplating to continue the system of bonus sales, which, according to the original arrangement, was to have terminated at the close of this year. The system did not at first meet with strong opposition on the part of the foreign community in Shanghai, mainly because the effect produced on the export trade was not conspicuous in that settlement at all events. But by and by it came to be evident that the system was likely to strongly influence Chinese buyers at places more or less remote, like Hankow, and the question was then taken up officially in Shanghai, a protest being addressed to the Japanese Consul. The latter replied, however, that the system did not properly fall under the ban attaching to a lottery inasmuch as no monetary prize was in question. If the above Spinning Companies combine to continue the arrangement, further trouble may be expected.

The Tokyo Local Court has ordered the final closing of the Fifty-seventh Bank, which was one of the principal monetary institutions affected by last year's panic. This decision appears to be very unwelcome to a large body of the shareholders, and they have lodged a protest against it, their belief being that the affairs of the bank can be readjusted if due time be allowed.

There are again various rumours about the question of the Tokyo Railway fares' schedule. Nothing can be learned definitely from these rumours except that the matter is still on the tapis. It must be confessed that the long delay is very singular. If the Authorities hold that the railways in the capital of the Empire are to be the only ones arbitrarily prevented from obtaining a reasonable profit on the large amount of capital invested, and even from carrying out their original plan of suburban extensions, there must be some very valid reason for such apparently harsh discrimination, and it is time that the reason should be published. If, however, the Company's application is not acceptable because of suspicions as to the honesty of its management—a question which really rests not with the authorities but with the shareholders themselves—then surely some kind of satisfactory investigation ought to be possible. There seems to be a singular mixture of business and sentiment in the whole affair.

Doubts are again expressed as to the fate of the proposed change in the telephonic system. A few days ago the message charge was said to have been abandoned, but now rumour alleges that such is by no means the case, and that the question not being considered of such a nature as to be laid before the Cabinet, will be left entirely in the hands of the Minister of Communications. As to Baron Goto's intentions, however, different journals make different statements. One attributes to him an unalterable determination to carry out the proposed change; another says that he will postpone it, and a third alleges that the matter will be left to the choice of telephone owners themselves. In this last event those opposed to the change will be charged a fixed sum of 80 yen yearly instead of their present payment, 64 yen.

Thursday, November 26.

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha holds its half-yearly meeting to-day. The actual earnings of the Company's ships during the half-year were not good, but owing to the exercise of strict economy, to reductions of staff and to cheapness of coal, it is possible to pay the usual dividend of 12 per cent. without making any call upon the reserves. The full figures will be published in our next issue.

Tokyo newspapers agree in stating that the Government has decided to subsidise a line of steamers to South America. This is mainly in consequence of investigations made by Mr. Uchida during his recent tour abroad. It appears that so long as the vessels of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha were plying on this route the carriage of a ton of goods cost only 20 yen, whereas since the withdrawal of that Company's vessels the rate has gone up to 50 yen. Moreover, in the absence of a regular line of steamers, great inconvenience occurs in sending emigrants from Japan to South America, where the demand for them is steadily increasing.

We read in the Asahi Shimbun that the services of the vessels constructed by the Kaiji-kyokai to constitute a volunteer fleet are already at a discount. Only one of these steamers is in existence thus far, namely, the Sakura Maru. She was taken over by the Osaka Shosen Kaisha and placed on the Formosan line with a handsome subsidy, put by our contemporary at 260,000 yen annually. This money is paid by the Formosan Government, but the latter's resources will undergo sensible diminution from the next fiscal year, when one half of the customs dues collected in the Island, namely, 1,300,000 yen, will be taken into the Central Treasury. The Formosan Government has therefore declined to continue the subsidy, and this will be followed by the steamship Company's removal of the Sakura Maru from its list of employed vessels. She is expected to revert ultimately to the Naval Department, which will find her something of a white elephant, unless the condition of the maritime carrying trade improves perceptibly. Her sister ship, the Unegaka Maru (Plum Perfume), which will be launched this year, seems likely to prove a similar superfluity.

The Mainichi Dempo attributes to Baron Sakatani a scheme for reforming the Stock Exchange by shortening the period for forward deliveries and increasing the amount of bargain money. The Baron is said to have arrived at this conclusion in the sequel of his recent travels in Europe, and the Cabinet is believed to share his views. If that be the case, the next realm to be invaded by official interference will be the Stock Exchange, and we shall see something like another panic artificially produced by the very statesmen whose financial reforms have just succeeded in imparting some measure of strength to the market.

It is alleged that the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, on being approached by the Mayor of Tokyo, has declared that it sees no objection to restoring to the Municipality the sum put up by the latter on account of the Exhibition. The view assigned to the Department is that, although the Exhibition has been merely postponed for five years, the plan of the Exhibition of 1917 will be much larger than that of the originally designed enterprise, and consequently a new agreement with the city will be necessary. Therefore the best course now is to terminate the agreement. The previous consent of the Diet will be required, however, before refunding the money.

The Nippon says that the question of revising the fare schedule of the Tokyo Railway is likely to come up for discussion in the City Assembly at a very early date. It was at one time thought that the question would be deferred until next year in order to give time for the re-election of Mr. Emma to the post of Chairman of the Assembly. But as the members are believed to be almost unanimous in approving of revision, no delay is thought necessary. The Niroku says that a meeting of the principal shareholders of the Company to discuss the matter would have been held during the present month, but has been deferred until the beginning of December in order to await the return of Messrs. Okura and Nodzu. We observe that the

Nippon recommends the citizens of Tokyo to be on their guard, a piece of advice which will be construed by a certain class of the citizens as an invitation to smash the cars so soon as the fares are raised.

Baron Goto is quoted by the Fiji Shimpo as saying that he is about to give effect to a project which will reduce the staff of the South Manchuria Railway by 500 men, and the annual outlays by a million and a half of yen.

JAPAN PAINTING AND APPLIED ART.

In the last number of the Kokka Mr. Sei-ichi Taki has a powerful article on the subject of Japanese painting and applied art. His purpose is to show that Japanese pictorial art is not decorative, as some critics have affirmed, but that it is to be classed with pure art. We do not find his arguments very convincing, inasmuch as he ignores the essential features which have induced the critics to deny the latter title to Japanese art, namely, that there are no cast shadows, and that the pictures are consequently intended to form part of a decorative scheme, rather than to take independent rank. He lays a great deal of stress on portraits, such as those of divine or saintly personages, which "often express ideas of deep and mystic significance;" but it will doubtless be contended by the exponents of the decorative theory that portraits are the exception which prove the rule. We should not ourselves be disposed to admit even this exception, for we hold that whatever idealism a portrait displays, it may nevertheless be described properly as a decorative picture under certain conditions. We gather from Mr. Taki's writing that he deems it in some sort a depreciation of Japanese pictures to class them as applied art, but the late Professor Fenollosa, who held that Japanese pictorial art is greater than Occidental, used to maintain that where the latter had gone radically astray was in breaking away from the decorative canon, the true art being that which preserves both characters, as Japanese does. Mr. Taki shows a disposition to compromise, by admitting that some Japanese pictures belong to the category of applied art and that others do not. That thesis may perhaps be maintained, but we can not recall that we have ever seen a Japanese picture which could not be adapted to a place in some decorative scheme, whereas a picture which satisfies the requirement of true art, as the term has now come to be interpreted, must be carefully segregated from all its surroundings.

THE INSURRECTION IN KOREA.

There has been published in Tokyo a document, apparently official, which gives a statement of the casualties resulting from the insurrection in Korea in the interval from July, 1907, to the 31st of October, 1908. From this we learn that the total killed and wounded on the Japanese side was 452, but there is no detail as to how many were killed and how many wounded. The aggregate alone is given with the added information that it includes the casualties in the gendarmes as well as in the garrison troops. When we come to the case of the insurgents, a similar want of accuracy is shown, but in this case the killed alone are given, namely, 14,354, and nothing is said about the wounded. This very formidable number of casualties on the Korean side indicates that the insurrection has been of a serious character and that the resistance made by the Koreans has been desperate. Probably the greater part of the insurgents do not know what they are fighting for, being merely instigated by the words of their leaders or by false reports circulated among them. It is to be sincerely hoped that the worst of this unfortunate affair is now nearly over. At the best it must leave a mark indelible for many years to come not only in Korea itself, but also in the minds of compassionate people who can not but grieve to think that misguided and comparatively helpless folk should have been betrayed into such madness.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

Mr. Francis MacCullagh, correspondent of the Mainichi Dempo, writes to that journal from Belgrade that he has had an interview with the Crown Prince of Serbia, and that the latter assured him that unless Austria withdrew her troops from Bosnia there would certainly be war. The Prince further explained that although there are nominally 140,000 Austrians on the frontier of Serbia, 60,000 of them are Serbs, who would throw away their arms at the first outbreak of hostilities against their country. Mr. MacCullagh also obtained an interview with the Prince of Montenegro, whom he reports as accusing Austria of deliberately seeking to stir up strife by massing troops on the frontier and co-ordinating this military display with a naval demonstration in the Adriatic. This interview is said to have taken place at Cettinge. The two interviews, taken together suggest that the four countries of Bosnia, Herzegovina, Montenegro and Serbia are all strongly hostile to Austria's policy. The same authority quotes two Russian officers now in Montenegro as saying that while the great northern Empire is most anxious to preserve peace, it can not stand idly by while its Slav kinsmen in the Balkan Peninsula are the objects of foreign aggression.

PRINCE ITO'S REMINISCENCES.

In the Far East for August the opening article is entitled "Autobiography of Prince Ito Hirobumi." It has been recorded by Mr. Ohashi Otowa and translated by Mr. Adachi Kinnosuke. Some interesting facts are brought out. Among other things we learn that from Prince Ito the idea of abolishing feudalism emanated. He writes thus:—

I was then one of the principal advocates of nullifying the old clans. The men who advocated this measure of abolishing the clan system were not popular. Neither the Imperial Court nor the different clans all over the Empire, had the slightest idea at this time of abolishing the clan system. The samurai were still clinging to the idea of receiving their hereditary revenue of 500,000 koku, and a million koku, as they used to do. I broached this matter to Kido, discussed it with him: and I had the pleasure of seeing Kido agree with and support me very enthusiastically. It gave me courage. I brought the matter to the attention of the clans of Satsuma and Choshu. After that I approached the clans of Tosa and Hizen. As for the two princes, Sanjo and Iwakura, they were thoroughly in accord with us from the start. This was the measure which won for me their regard and favour.

Another point elucidated publicly for the first time is the cause of the temporary coolness between Ito and Kido which, in the early seventies, threatened what would have been little short of a national calamity, for to the hearty co-operation of these two great men Japan owed the foundations—in large part at any rate—of her modern career. Prince Ito tells the story thus:—

Kido and myself, as I have said, received instructions at the same school; naturally our relations were intimate. But for a time our friendship suffered a little through a singular misunderstanding. It arose in course of this European mission. The reason for it all was something like this: Kido and Okubo were exceedingly important personages in Nippon at the time. Of course, for the pillar and support of the State were Saigo and a few others, but from the standpoint of administrative talent, Saigo was not of the ablest. Now, I went to America in company with Okubo. We were commissioned to broach the subject of the revision of treaties to the different powers to which we were accredited, but without going any farther than the United States, we found that we did not have sufficient powers invested in us to discuss with the representatives of the different governments the question of the revision of treaties, and in order to receive ample powers to negotiate such revisions I returned home. At the time, Okuma and Inoue were shouldering the most important functions of the government in the absence of the eminent men of the embassy, Yamagata (the present field-marshal) and Saigo were also at home. When I mentioned the reason why I returned home, both Okuma and Inoue said to me: "If Kido and Okubo were to stay abroad, it is very difficult to conduct the domestic affairs properly, and for that reason we wish you would arrange matters in such a way as to persuade Kido and Okubo to return home as quickly as possible. As for the European tour, we hope you would undertake it, and facilitate a speedy return of Kido and Okubo."

Someone, we could not find who, began to scatter the rumour that Inoue and Okuma were scheming to get Kido and Okuma back home as quickly as possible. Now, this rumour did not please Kido at all. He took offence on the ground that a few of his subordinates at home took it into their heads to dictate his movements. So when I took the second trip to America, and from America passed into Europe and met Kido, I noticed at once the entirely different attitude on the part of Kido toward us. I could not account for it. I could not understand; but I did not pay any attention to this matter in the least.

One day, it was in the city of London, Kido, Okubo and Yamaguchi were dining together. I was put in charge of the secretaries, whose duty was to prepare reports to the home government. One of the paragraphs of the report prepared at the time ran something like this: "As for the time of our embassy's return it will be some time past the summer, of the fifth of Meiji." We presented this report for signature. Kido glanced over this passage, then threw back his head, and with a mounting colour remarked: "Who can tell when we shall return to Nippon? There is no necessity of stating the time. And why should the secretaries get together and try to dictate our movements?" That was the first hint I had as to the reason of Kido's displeasure toward us. There was another singular thing in connection with this. The remark made by Okuma and Inoue to me on my return to Nippon was by no means meant to curtail the time of Kido's and Okubo's visit to Europe from any hostile motive. Inoue and Okuma made the remark solely because they were solicitous of the difficult situation of the domestic affairs, and because they felt sorely the need of the presence and assistance of these two great men. We were innocent of the vile efforts of an unknown party who evidently gave Kido an entirely wrong construction of this matter. I remarked to Kido that it was likely that he and Okubo would be recalled by an Imperial order, and made the matter worse. Naturally Kido was exceedingly angry.

After passing through France, Belgium, Holland, we reached Germany, and there we found Aoki-Shuzo and Shiagawa Yajiro. They said to us: "We don't think that you are getting along very well with Kido. Let us smooth this matter over between you." I did not accept their invitation. I said to them: "As for my relations with Kido, you need not be troubled about them." And while we were staying at Berlin, we received an Imperial command for Kido and Okubo to return home. Okubo at once complied with the command. As for Kido, he separated himself from the Embassy and visited Russia and Italy, and after that, returned home. I remained in the company of Prince Iwakura and Yamaguchi Hanzo. I think Kido returned home in April or May of the sixth of Meiji, and we returned in September of the same year.

NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENCE.

We have received an interesting letter on the above subject, but as our correspondent has failed to comply with the essential condition of enclosing his name and address we are obliged to leave his communication unpublished.

THE SHANGHAI TRAMS.

From the Shanghai Times we learn that the chief complaints made by the public against the trams are the following:—

Of the two compartments, the first class one, while ostensibly reserved for those who pay a higher fare, is often a vestibule by which the second class passengers, who pay less, enter the car. If such second class passengers were compelled to pay a reluctant first class fare, as it happens now sometimes, they would take good care, the next time, to find the compartment in which they intend to ride; and, then, the first class passengers would be blessed with a little of the comfort which the additional fare entitles them to. There is no striking difference between the two classes as to cleanliness, and as often as not the floors are covered with cigar butts and other refuse. The rules prohibiting spitting on the floor and smoking are generally disregarded; and it is not to be wondered at, seeing that nobody is instructed to see that these rules are observed. As regards smoking, a might conform to the rule on the French Tramways, that a passenger be allowed to smoke when other passengers do not object to it. Then, there is great irregularity in the running of the cars, and many a time one has to wait half an hour for the arrival of a car to take him to a certain destination. More especially disagreeable this becomes when a busy man has to wait—with a season ticket in his pocket. The man with a season ticket has paid for a month and it would be double loss to him to take a ricksha in the streets.

It is also a frequent occurrence that when two trams meet on routes where only single tracks are laid, much to the irritation and delay of passengers, the motormen daily five or ten minutes before deciding as to which one shall back and remain in the siding and allow the other to proceed. It would be easy to instruct the motormen that whichever car arrives first at the siding, whatever direction it may come from, must wait until the first car from the opposite direction arrives, and see that such instruction is strictly followed. Another great inconvenience, entailing loss of time and money to passengers, is that conductors never announce the names of the streets. Passengers are sometimes carried far beyond their destinations at present, and if the management instructed conductors to announce the names of the stopping places in English, it would be a veritable boon to the public. Public approval of the tramway system will be withheld until radical changes are made in the system.

There is no distinction of classes in the Tokyo trams, but on all the other points mentioned by our Shanghai contemporary, things are very differently managed in this country. There is no smoking or spitting in the cars; it is seldom necessary to wait more than 5 minutes; the names of stopping places are always clearly called out, and the system of signalling obviates any such inconvenience as two cars meeting on a single line. Shanghai seems to be very backward.

ANTI-JAPANESE WRITING AND FAIR CRITICISM.

In answer to our comments on its markedly unfair and anti-Japanese writing, the Japan Gazette falls back upon the hackneyed pretence that the views it expresses are legitimate criticism, and that, were our censure endorsed, there would be an end of all intelligent public discrimination between the good and the bad. That is the excuse invariably made by the anti-Japanese section of the Yokohama and Kobe journalists. The Japan Gazette apparently imagines that the public is so lacking in intelligence as to be unable to distinguish between fair criticism and strongly prejudiced hostile aspersion. Grown-up folk are not to be imposed on by such specious clap-trap. Nobody objects to fair criticism. On the contrary, everybody welcomes it. But it is the purest hypocrisy to pretend that palpably hostile animadversions are amicable advice in disguise. One does not show one's love for a man by kicking him downstairs.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, November 20.

The 20th instant found a very weak tone on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. All prices fell, with insignificant exceptions, though there was a slight rally towards the close of the afternoon session. No reason is apparent for this depressed condition, unless one be furnished by the imprisonment of a broker for exercising unlawful discretion in executing a client's order. No such discretion is now permissible, though it seems to have been hitherto not unknown.

Saturday, November 21.

The market opened active on the 21st and all shares appreciated sensibly. But in the afternoon session there was a set back, owing to the comparatively unfavourable nature of the returns of the foreign trade, and owing to news that the Osaka market was dull.

Tuesday, November 24.

The market was inactive on the 24th inst. Some prices declined and others appreciated, but the fluctuations were nearly all fractional. Possibly the imminence of the close of the month may have had a depressing effect.

Wednesday, November 25.

The market on the 25th instant was quite uneventful. Dulness marked the forenoon session, and though some slight activity was witnessed in the afternoon, it did not leave any substantial mark. The Stock Exchange shares alone appreciated sensibly, owing to an impression that a buoyant feeling is in air.

Thursday, November 26.

The 26th was a day of depression on the Stock Exchange. All shares declined fractionally. Profit-taking sales are said to have been largely responsible, but another influence was probably a persistent rumour that two other brokers are involved in the affair on account of which Mr. Imai is under arrest. It is stated that the new Code is not sufficiently explicit in its provisions. We append the quotations for January delivery:—

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Before the end of this year there will be two additions to the Japanese Navy, namely, the cruiser Mogami (1,350 tons) and the destroyer Isonami (381 tons). These two constitute an addition of 1,731 tons to the Navy's displacement, but, on the other hand the following vessels are to be struck off the effective list—the ancient ironclad Fuso (3,718 tons); the gunboats Chokai (750 tons) and Aliya (950 tons); the cruiser Matsushima (4,210 tons), which was the flagship of Admiral Ito in the War with China; and eight torpedo-boats. These 12 discarded vessels represent a total displacement of 12,095 tons, and if from this aggregate we subtract the figures of the two new vessels mentioned above, the result is that the tonnage reduced amounts to 10,364.

The obsequies of H. I. H. the Dowager Princess Kwacho took place on the 21st inst. at Gokoku-ji in the Otowa suburb of Tokyo. They were attended by all the Princes and Princesses of the Blood, by representatives of the Emperor and Empress, by the Ministers of State and by other high officials. The cortege had to travel from the Mita suburb to the Otowa, that is, from one extremity of Tokyo to the other.

A garden party was given at Count Okuma's Waseda villa on the 22nd inst. to celebrate the completion of the first volume of the Japanese Encyclopedia, which has just been brought out by the well-known publishing house, the Sansei-do. Sixteen hundred persons are said to have been present, and they included many men of note in every branch of society. Count Okuma made a speech explaining that Japan was one of the few civilized countries of the world which lacked an encyclopedia, and it was a source of sincere gratification to know that the defect would now be remedied. Dr. Inouye Tetsujiro, one of the compilers, said that nine years had been devoted to the preparation of the Encyclopedia; that it would be completed in seven volumes of about 1000 pages each, and that over 100,000 subjects were treated. We may mention that the price of this Encyclopedia is only 7 yen a volume, and anyone subscribing now can get it for 45 yen. The number of scientists engaged in its compilation has been 239.

It has been suggested, and we entirely endorse the suggestion, that instead of writing an Chinese ideographs alone the destinations of the Tokyo trams, the indication boards should have this information in Romaji also. Very little trouble would be entailed in making the addition, and the resulting convenience to foreigners using the cars would be incalculable. It may be urged, perhaps, that the foreign travellers do not amount to an appreciable fraction of the millions of Japanese passengers; yet even for the sake of that fraction the Directors would, we think, be acting in accordance with the spirit of progress if they made the addition here advocated.

The Takarada Oil Company held a celebration in the grounds of its Refinery at Hodegaya on the 22nd instant. Occasion was taken of the opening of a Yokohama branch, in the sequel of the purchase of the Asano Refinery and the Namboku Company. About 800 persons were present. The President, explained that when the company was formed in February, 1893, its shares numbered only 300 and their face value was only 15,000 yen, Nagaoka being the scene of operations. Since then, no less than 127 associations and companies had been bought up at a price of 28 million yen and the company had now a nominal capital of 10 millions. Baron Goto, Minister of Communications, also spoke. He contrasted the original condition of the Company with its state to-day, when it is producing 1,000 koku of oil daily. Such progress was astonishing. The quantity of oil consumed in Japan yearly was 2 million koku, and the country produced only about one-third of that total. He hoped that development would proceed so that it would soon be possible to dispense with foreign oil altogether.

Mr. Torii Ryuzo and his wife have returned from Mongolia after a residence of three years there, during which time Mrs. Torii acted as teacher in the King's Palace and Mr. Torii engaged in various physiological researches. He states that in the south and east of Mongolia onions form the chief staple of the people's diet, and that they mix them with milk, adding sometimes portions of beef or mutton, for they keep large flocks of cattle and sheep. Further west the men lead an utterly idle life, devoting themselves solely to amusement, while the women take charge of the flocks and herds. At a place which in its transliterated form becomes Uchinchin there is a salt mine which greatly contributes to the livelihood of the people. The dwellings are of the crudest description, mostly tents or rough edifices of timber, and everything is so peaceful that strangers, even women, may travel through the country without any fear of molestation.

We take the following extraordinary paragraph from an American exchange:—

Lundy's electrical demonstration at the New Grand this week is a complete puzzle to the experts in that line in the city. He claims to take 250,000 volts into his body, but that is only an estimate and the voltage is probably much greater. It is a known fact that to make a spark of one inch in length requires 30,000 volts and one of four inches requires 100,000 volts. Beyond that there is no known means of estimating the quantity. Lundy with his instruments makes a perfect spark of over twelve inches in length, proving conclusively that the voltage is 250,000 or over, and he takes the whole force of it into his body. The demonstration all through is most interesting. While the current is running through his body he lights gas jets with his tongue and with his fingers, and his assistant lights pieces of paper by merely touching them to his shoes, his clothes or his bare flesh; and there are many other experiments that excite the wonder of his audiences. Owing to there being no electric current in the afternoon, Lundy is only able to give his demonstration at the night performance.

With regard to the heavy fine inflicted by an American court on the crews of these two steamers for poaching in American waters, there has been a telegram from the master of the Kinsei Maru, announcing that he has appealed with some hope of success. It appears that the method pursued by the Court was to impose a fine of 600 dollars each on every member of the ships' companies, and as these numbered 59 in all, the fine aggregated a very heavy sum. In this procedure the court departed from the precedent set last year in the case of two other Japanese schooners. On that occasion fines were inflicted on only the masters of the vessels and two of the crew of each steamer, who had manned the poaching boats. But on this occasion the idea would seem to have been the imposition of such a fine as should be effectually deterrent.

The newspapers state that Mr. Augustus Wood of the Tokyo Higher Normal School attempted to commit suicide on the 23rd inst. by cutting his throat with a razor. Fortunately he did not sever the jugular and his life is not in danger. Mr. Wood is an old resident of Tokyo. He was at one time Professor of Literature in the Imperial University. Of course various reasons are assigned for the attempt, but we refrain from publishing them.

We regret to have to announce the death of Mr. Inagaki Manjiro, Japanese Representative in Madrid. He was reported on the 25th instant to be in a dangerous condition, and a telegram has now been received announcing his death. The Emperor has raised him to the Second Rank of the Third Grade.

THE MYSTIC'S AIM.

On the shining surface of the sea a little island. How small a proportion does that which is visible bear to that which stretches away down through cool translucent depths—out of sight. Depths in which reigns a great and profound silence when froth, tumult, wild boisterousness, hold carnival above.

And so beneath the noise, beneath the fuss, beneath the jangling of the outer personality of man, are depths where reign a great peace, an immense calm,—and happiness beyond articulate description.

The small island upon the surface of the gleaming sea is situated in sight of yet other islands, some bigger, some smaller.

Were it able to reflect it might regard itself as an isolated unit, separate from the other islands, having no point of unity with them. But how great a delusion, what a nightmare of the surface, is that supposed separateness. Plunge down through those cool depths and those islands are found to merge into one in the ocean bed of which down there they are a part.

Is it not so with man? The apparent separation;—is it not also a night-mare, a surface delusion? Plunge into the depths of consciousness sufficiently far and will not an Ocean Bed of Consciousness be reached in which the consciousnesses of men will be found to merge? In which the underlying unity of humanity, the real Brotherhood, will be found to be an inarticulate reality? To reach in experience the realisation of that Oneness—at-onement indeed—is the aim of the real mystic.

And if a man were really in full realisation of that Oneness would he feel resentment towards personalities who hated him, abused him or crucified him? Not so; the froth and noise of personalities is on the surface. He is conscious below it all where he and those who persecute are—One. "Therefore it is written that for the sake of the Self everything is dear; not for the outer shape but for the inner Self—the lowest as well as the highest, the speck of dirt as well as the loftiest Deity. Brahman is in all, pervades all; everything is there. Face the imperfection of the universe, and there you will find the supreme consolation. If there is to be a universe, there must be limitation; if there is limitation, there must be less than perfection, i.e., imperfection, then only you can have variety; but the separated things can not be perfect, since perfection belongs to the unlimited and the all." (Annie Besant).

A long, long series of concatenated incarnations would be well worth the living if conscious Divinity is to be realised. C.D.

BASEBALL.

The team of the Reach All American Club who arrived at Yokohama on Sunday morning by the China left for Tokyo by the 11 a.m. train on the same day. They put up at the Imperial Hotel. In the afternoon they played the first match with the players of the Waseda College on the ground belonging to the institution. Count Okuma and a large number of prominent Japanese were present. The score of innings was 5 to nil in favour of the Americans.

The Reach-All American Baseball team played two games in Tokyo on Monday. In the first with the Tokyo Club the score was: Americans 10, Tokyo 1. In the afternoon, against the Keio University, playing on the grounds of the latter, the score was: Americans 3, Keio 0. There were large crowds of spectators.

A baseball match was played between the team of the Reach All-American Club and a team of the Yokohama Cricket and Athletic Club on the Cricket Ground on Wednesday afternoon. Prior to the game, Mr. Mitsuhashi, Mayor, made the following speech:

I desire in the first place to express my appreciation and thanks for the honour and pleasure the management has given me by inviting me to officiate on this occasion of the first game played in Yokohama by the Reach All-American Team.

Perhaps you are aware that it was not until the year 1884 that the game of Baseball was introduced into Japan. But since then the game has been eagerly taken up by the students of Public Schools and other young men, so that it is now played, not only in Tokyo and the neighbourhood, but all over the Empire, and I fully expect that, before long, Baseball will become, as in the United States, the National Game. In this connection, I am highly gratified at the prosperity of the Yokohama Athletic Club and at the recent exchange of visits between Japanese and American teams as well as the last but not the least, the present visit of you, gentlemen, forming the famous and mighty American Team: because I am convinced that these International Matches played in this country cannot fail to arouse further keen interest in, and to give a great impetus to, the practice of Baseball, which most decidedly is one of the best games for the improvement of the physical condition of the people.

Now let me say one word about our relations. We have already proved—if indeed a proof was needed and although personally I never thought it was necessary—during the recent visit of the American Atlantic Fleet and of the Honorary representatives of the Pacific Coast Chambers of Commerce, that our sentiment of friendship and good will towards America and Americans is a most genuine, sincere and devoted one, and I am very glad to say that it is so accepted and appreciated on the other side of the Pacific Ocean. But the comingling of both peoples on occasions of this nature will I am sure have the effect of cementing the intimate and cordial relations of their nationals still firmer and closer. Therefore I feel all the more pleased to take part in the ceremony which is about to take place.

In conclusion, I beg to tender my best wishes for your continued success and prosperity.

Under very favourable weather conditions a large crowd of spectators watched the game with interest. The line-up was as follows:—

The Yokohama nine, though well up to their average form, were outplayed from the start. The pitching and field work of the visitors was very smart and several big hits were made. In the circumstances the heavy defeat of the local men hardly came as a surprise.

A very good game was played on Thursday on the Yokohama Grounds between the Reach All Team and a nine from the Keio gijiku. The visitors won easily.

A VLADIVOSTOCK telegram to the Asahi says that the Russian Government has invested the Governors of Za-Baikal and Amur with authority to expel foreigners, if necessary, or to prohibit them from living in those regions.

THE KAISER.

IT was easy to predict that no force of denial would suffice to extinguish the latest rumour about the KAISER's expression of opinions. In fact it appears that the strenuous efforts officially made in Berlin to convince the public of the untruth of the whole affair are regarded in some quarters as an excess of zeal which goes to prove the contrary of what it is intended to demonstrate. Some men are absolutely incorrigible as mischief-mongers. If a thing be not contradicted, they say that silence gives consent; and if it be contradicted, they say that such a want of dignified reserve goes to confirm the story. One telegram (Fiji Shimpo) alleges that Mr. Hale originally wrote out the interview with his own hand, his intention being to publish it in the columns of the New York Times; but in the meanwhile the intention became known to German officials, and they expressed a desire that publication should be made in a magazine, not in a daily paper. The Century was then chosen, and the matter had been actually set up in type when Berlin interfered and purchased the silence of the Century. The same telegram affirms that several London papers had had the manuscript in their hands for some time, but had refrained from printing it. The worst of it is that the opinions attributed to the KAISER are undoubtedly held by a small section of conservative Europeans and Americans. We ourselves have heard the very same views expressed by more than one person, and everybody must have recognised that in the bosom of many white people there exists a traditional antipathy to anything like alliance or coöperation with an Oriental people. The KAISER, therefore, would not be singular if he held some of the views attributed to him, but that he ever expressed them openly, or that German officialdom ever consented for a moment to their publication—these are hypotheses too ridiculous to be entertained by any sane man. We are doubtless in the presence of a campaign deliberately planned and adroitly carried out by men who regard it either as a sacred duty or as a profitable business to re-dig the gulf between East and West which was nearly bridged by the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. Perhaps it would be expecting something beyond the capacity of human nature to look for absolute forbearance on the part of the whole Japanese nation at this juncture. We greatly regret, however, to find that journals like the Asahi Shimbun and the Yomiuri Shimbun attach to this latest rumour a degree of credit not consistent with their usual sagacity. That the Hochi Shimbun should write in a strong strain was perhaps inevitable, seeing that the Hochi has always been frankly suspicious of Germany. But we should have expected the Asahi and the Yomiuri to recognise more clearly the obvious probability,—to use the mildest form of expression—that this whole affair is a deliberate plot to embroil the East and the West. However, it is reassuring to see that the Asahi Shimbun draws a clear line between the sentiments which may be supposed to imbue the German nation and the sentiments entertained by, or attributed to, the German Emperor. That point can not be too strongly emphasised. It has been made quite clear by the result of the Telegraph interview. The German people have shown that they intend to guide their own career, and not to subserve it to the will of any autocrat whatever his intellectual endowments.

"PERFIDIOUS ALBION."

THE British Empire—that marvellous assemblage of self-governing states and skilfully-ruled dependencies which, under the genial light of the Pax Britannica, represents a maximum of government with a minimum of machinery—has again excited the attention of the Japan Herald. Not content with the curious propositions of Dr. A. R. WALLACE, our enterprising local contemporary has unearthed an essay of HERBERT SPENCER'S, written in a similar vein twenty years ago. The motive of this exhumation is, peradventure, to win support for a fresh outcry against British territorial predominance. Our contemporary is so frankly pleased at the result of its delving that it has not paused to consider whether this mouldy protest against the successful spread of British rule to the four quarters of the globe—for that is what Mr. SPENCER'S diatribe amounts to—is of any more value for the purpose in hand than the remarks of the previous protestant whom the Herald welcomed to its side. If the excursions of the scientist from his laboratory—where he is on familiar ground—into the field of politics—where he is not—are to be deprecated, so, or more so, are those of the philosopher. The philosopher, by reason of his cast of mind, looks upon life with the eyes of the idealist. Just as the scientific crank, his sense of proportion offended, would have the world sliced up with scientific precision and distributed with scientific equality among the nations, so the philosopher doubtless finds many things in the world's wide field of battle which conflict with his sense of the eternal fitness. What our contemporary will not see is that, unfortunately, the politics of this world are not ordered by science or morality. Dr. WALLACE admits this—as every thinking man must—and yet falls foul of his own countrymen for being guided by more elementary and less exalted principles, and would deny to his own people what their own right hands have won. In a similar way, a score of years ago, HERBERT SPENCER passed judgment from the high platform of philosophy, and now the Japan Herald joins lustily in the pseudo-scientific, ultra-philosophic cursing of Albion.

Why does our local contemporary thus lend its strident voice to the trio? Not on the basis of these lofty principles, for by those very principles all the nations stand condemned. Here consciousness of guilt (if guilt it be) should render our Teutonic contemporary dumb; or, if speech remained, it might with profit join in the universal confession—"All we like sheep have gone astray: we have turned every one to his own way." But the Herald is innocent of the slightest turn of introspection. It joins in the maledictory refrain on more material grounds. The two idealists we have mentioned were led to their Utopian conclusions from their false outlook upon the world: the Japan Herald applauds these conclusions because they happen to fall in with its own "Little-England" aspirations.

Now the gist of the whole matter is this—Britain, in her remarkable national development, has pursued the ideals common to all nations with greater success than any other of her rivals. That is the gravamen of the charge against her. In the minor affairs of life the successful man finds that his success has aroused jealousy and won him enemies: it is the same with the successful nation. England having in the course of centuries reached unprecedented heights of national prosperity, having won on many a hard-fought field, or by the force of circumstance, or by the discoveries of her travellers, an Empire beside which those of Rome, of Greece or of Assyria shrink into littleness, is now assailed by the jealousy of those less successful peoples who to-day would gladly possess her heritage, if they could—"the increasing jealousy of the continental nations," as our contemporary frankly puts it. Of these splenetic rivals, losers in the same great race, the Japan Herald seems to be one exponent, reiterating its cry whenever it finds a fellow-feeling among the ingrates or eccentrics in the winner's camp.

No one will contend that the record of British empire-building is wholly free from blemishes—humanum est errare; but what we do say is, let that nation which is without sin first cast a stone. Certainly no journalistic representative of the Fatherland is in that fortunate position. In view of the seizure of Kiaochow, of the isolated action of Germany in Morocco, of her present extraordinary naval activity, of the recent utterances of her Sovereign, or her long-drawn war of extermination against the Hereros of South-West Africa, that she may build for herself an Empire in the desert—to take only a few examples from the history of recent years, with what shadow of right, does the Japan Herald point an accusing finger at Great Britain? Mr. Spencer mentioned New Guinea as an example of unjust acquisition on the part of England: does not a very big slice of that large island fly the flag of the Fatherland?

Then there is the old trick of laying at England's door the responsibility of the increasing armaments of the nations. "The extension of the British Empire and the necessary large armaments for its protection would inevitably cause friction with the other Powers." But the device is threadbare. Signs are abundantly in evidence that the British people would gladly relinquish the burden of armaments, if they dared. Did not 144 members of Parliament this very year sign a petition to that effect? Are not the new-construction programmes of the British Admiralty drawn up after those of the other European Powers, an only just sufficient number of ships being provided to preserve that minimum of Naval strength which British statesmen of every shade of political opinion have deemed essential for the safeguarding of their great responsibilities? All these things the Japan Herald knows full well, and if, in dealing with this great subject, it could rise to an ordinary level of candour, it would acknowledge their truth and force. But that, we fear, is beyond its powers, and so the old campaign of misrepresentation and calumny is renewed, with an ever-increasing ring of insincerity, as often as some misguided alien voice can be found to join in the belittling strain. We will content ourselves by placing on record two statements made by our contemporary which will move Englishmen, some to mirth, and some, perhaps, to indignation:—

(1) Great Britain has interfered in the affairs of other nations to a considerable extent.

(2) It would be difficult to find a nation which has actually benefited by her rule.

For every son of the British Empire, for every unbiased student of history, for every lover of truth, these calumnies need no comment.

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

(FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.)

London, November 5th, 1908.

The Public Prints announce, in large and persuasive lettering, "Franco-British Exhibition—Last days," and the up-to-date Londoner no longer takes the underground railway to Shepherd's Bush. But winter and the closing of the "White City" are not for a few days yet. People in suburban motor-busses ask each other, for the last time, "Been to the Franco-Brit? What did you think of the Flip Flap?" or "How did you enjoy the pictures and old furniture?" according as they are gay and irresponsible, or serious and intellectual.

We have enjoyed the Flip Flap and other entertainments very much. We have hailed with enthusiasm a type of amusement which, in point of fact, has been a good deal of a novelty, and which has succeeded in making an amiable change in our national life. Defying our climate, we have lived more or less out of doors, and entertained our friends in the open air. We have at last made a beginning in the science of pleasant loafing, we have learnt a little to take our pleasure gaily about the restaurants, the gardens and the exotic villages of the "White City." The Exhibition buildings are pleasing. If they are pretty rather than dignified, or graceful at the expense of solidity, it may be contended that they thus gain in suitability to their purpose, producing an impression of airiness and impermanency.

Once fairly within the precincts, we have the treasures of the world. Wonders of skill, ingenuity and patience, from France, from England and her colonies, are spread before our eyes. The sight of the Machinery Hall with its mysteries, its marvels of invention, its huge possibilities and its intricate delicacies, leaves us, like the Queen of Sheba, with no more spirit in us. Above all we are impressed with a sensation of sharp reality, of vigorous life, of power and of progress. The place is alive with a fine significance, upon which it is unnecessary to comment.

No less significant of the signs of the times is the province devoted to the arts. Here, however, the opportunity for criticism is not wanting. Doubts and insistent questions assail the mind, and a certain haunting anxiety takes the place of elation. We may study the much talked of collection of French and British pictures, observe the art of thirty years ago and the tenets of conflicting schools. We may notice the Pre-Raphaelites, with their slavish imitation of an arbitrary period, or the kaleidoscopic colouring and exaggerated sentimentality of such pictures as Madox Brown's lauded masterpiece "Work"; finally turning, with relief, to the grand and quiet art of Gainsborough and Reynolds, or of Manet in the French section. We may examine the exhibition of furniture, "Tudor," "Jacobean," "Louis quinz," "Empire," "Sherraton," "Chippendale" and modern. We may look with a kind of awe at the feast of "Fashions on a mammoth scale and wonder at the variety, the ingenious combinations, the complicated fancies of the costumes of many ages. Out of all this scrutiny one question arises, and the same question has insistently asked itself at all art exhibitions of modern times:—Is invention dead? On all hands, where the old and the new are set forth together, it is the old that is better. And it is better because it is original and sincere. In furniture, for example, we have evolved no beautiful style since the days of the Empire. We seem to be able only to copy ancient patterns, with varying success. There is no such thing as an Edward-the-Seventh chair, or an early-twentieth-century table. Our age will have nothing to contribute to the exhibitions of the future. We cannot invent a style of our own in dress, but adopt the "Napoleon" hat and the "Charlotte Corday" bonnet, the "Directoire" gown and the "Louis Quinze heel." Indeed, in this general tendency towards imitation and revival, in matters of taste, our present fashions bear a part which borders upon the ludicrous. They are the imitation of an imitation, the unintelligent copying of what was in itself a copy—a sufficiently foolish and affected cult of the Classical in dress, literally in and out of season. The older revival was redeemed, or at any rate explained, as being more or less the fancy of a set of peculiarly graceful women about the court of Napoleon. The present craze is the result of a tradesmen's conspiracy, apparently welcomed by all and sundry of our womankind, and fast becoming ridiculous in its indiscriminate adoption.

Thus we see our artists and our designers seeking their inspiration in the past. With the Irvingesque revival at the Shaftesbury Theatre, we are confronted with a further aspect of the same temper. Mr. H. B. Irving has decided to present to London audiences a selection of old plays, some of which were made famous by his father's acting, all of which are, in one way or another, connected with Sir Henry Irving's name. The first of this series is the "Lyons Mail," which was produced some nights since, and met with a favourable reception alike from public and press. A melodrama of the melodramas, fitted with every melodramatic convention from marvellous resemblances and deserted women to comic malefactors and pistol shooting by moonlight, "The Lyons Mail" has still some features of a good play. It has sentiment, pathos, humour and, in one act at least, a very cleverly obtained series of dramatic effects. The story turns upon the robbery of the "Lyons Mail." Joseph Lesurques, an innocent and upright citizen of Douay, who bears an exact resemblance to the villain Dubosc, its actual perpetrator, is accused of the crime. An extraordinary concatenation of circumstantial evidence brings Lesurques to within an ace of the guillotine, the depositions of his best friends and even of his father being against him. The play is founded upon fact, and visitors to the cemetery of Père la Chaise may see to this day a plain monument in white marble, upon which is the following inscription: "A la mémoire de Joseph Lesurques, victime de la plus déplorable des erreurs humaines, 31 Oct., 1796. Sa veuve et ses enfants martyrs tous deux sur la terre sont tous deux réunis au ciel." At the theatre, however, the tender heart of the public is spared laceration. Lesurques is cleared in the nick of time, whilst Dubosc is taken, in the midst of a drunken orgie, and dragged to his deserved doom.

The version of the play adopted by Mr. H. B. Irving for production at the Shaftesbury theatre is that of Charles Reade, made for the celebrated Kean and first acted at the Princess theatre in 1854. It was acted in 1870 at the Gaiety, when Nellie Farren took the part of Joliquet, the boy at the inn, while her husband Robert Soutar, whose death at the age of eighty-one has just been announced, impersonated the fop Courriel. Henry Irving played the same version of the piece at the Lyceum in 1877, and continued to appear from time to time, in the dual role of Lesurques and Dubosc until his death.

Mr. H. B. Irving appears in the two parts at the Shaftesbury theatre, and recalls his father so closely by look, voice and gesture, that his acting, if it were not so obviously natural, would be a veritable tour de force. Old Lyceum playgoers are delighted and critics exclaim: "Le roi est mort, vive le roi." If anything, Mr. Irving's conception of the dual part is more delicate than Sir Henry's was. He does not claim the sympathy of the audience for Lesurques alone. Tender and charming as that character appears, in his hands, a certain demon's fascination is reserved for Dubosc, who has bravery and humour and is a born leader of men. Through this moderation, the interpretation gains in subtlety; by it the illusion of the play is greatly strengthened. The mistaken identity appears natural. The spectator feels the full force of the evidence that accumulates against Lesurques. The scene in which the innocent man is accused of the rail robbery calls forth Mr. Irving's finest acting. He triumphs over his crude and worn materials, stirring the emotions to their depths and rendering to the full the poignant agony of the situation. Miss Dorothea Baird plays Jeanette, one of Dubosc's unfortunate victims, and Miss Phyllis Embury, a very young actress, is entirely charming as Julie, the daughter of Lesurques.

Altogether the production is interesting. Its value consists almost entirely in its fine actor and in its many associations and memories. Its success is retrospective and sentimental. But what can be said of the situation from the point of view of the lover of dramatic art, the art which claims preeminently to present life? Is a taste altogether justifiable that sanctions the devotion of splendid talent to the revival of a crude old play with outworn conventions, to the cultivation of a style, which, however excellent, must necessarily be lacking in qualities of novelty and originality? Mr. Irving's production is good filial piety, but it is questionable art. It lacks power, and, as a whole, it lacks sincerity, because of its aloofness from actual life. In this aloofness consists the chief danger of the retrospective attitude in matters of art. The spirit that seeks its inspiration in the past is usually delicate, and refined, it is fastidious, it is romantic and exotic, it has something of the sentimentalist, something of the dilettante, something of the dreamer. It is lacking in strength, courage, vitality and virility. In its relation to quick actual life, it is unsympathetic, nervous in the face of its burning questions, often disgusted at its bald ugliness. To the eternal law of evolution it is blind. It is an unpractical and an ineffectual spirit. Moreover, it is not exclusively confined to the realms of art.

Something more than a week ago, there was announced the death of Joseph Leicester Lyne, better known Father Ignatius, at the age of 71 years. There then passed away from the world a man of peculiar and magnetic personality, possessing alleged powers of an uncommon character.

Father Ignatius was born in Trinity Square, hard by the Tower of London, his father being Mr. Francis Lyne, a city merchant. He was a precocious and sensitive child, early possessed by the mystical ideas that were to govern his strange after career. Educated at Saint Paul's School and at Trinity College, Glenalmond (here amongst scenery of an austere and lonely beauty), he took Anglican orders and was immediately appointed to an unpaid curacy at Saint Peter's Church Plymouth. Here occurred the first of that series of supernatural events which he claimed as his experience and which furnish what is most curious in his career. It is said that Father Ignatius, miraculously and in a moment, cured a child from a loathsome disease. From this time onwards, his life appears to have been as full of miracles, wonders and divine interventions as the existence of any ancient mediaeval saint. He was enabled to bring a man and a woman from the dead, to revive a dying woman to normal health and to take deadly poison with impunity. Many that mocked and opposed him were visited with swift supernatural retribution. He solemnly maintained that he had been comforted by the visits of angels, that he had wrestled with arch-fiends in palpable form, that critical moments of his career had been decided by apparitions, visions and special signs. He was dowered, upon occasion, with the gift of tongues, and by his eloquence quelled crowds, wild with anger against him. At such times, men and women, converted from fury to repentance, flung down their coats that he might walk upon them. His openly declared ideal was "to revive the ancient monastic life of England." To this end, he adopted the benedictine code, holding "that there was not a single article in its rule that an Anglican could not profess with a quiet conscience and an orthodox mind." Upon this subject there were not unnatural differences of opinion. He wore the monk's habit and tonsured head, and suffered much by his insistence in this respect. "I felt called upon to come before the world as a monk," he said; "I knew I should be exposed to the chaff and ridicule of a world opposed to monks. I knew I should cut myself adrift from my friends. I knew I should have to suffer every indignity and perhaps martyrdom." After a stormy period, occupied in the founding and dissolving of various religious communities, subjects of universal criticism and grievous scandal, Father Ignatius brought into being a monastery at Llanthony, across the Welsh border, in memory of a vision of the Virgin which he declared had appeared to him. Here he passed periods of comparative quiet, broken by frequent expeditions into "the world" to attack "the Higher Criticism," or to fulminate against individual views.

In the Monk of Llanthony, celebrating the feast of "Our Lady of Llanthony," leading the austere, narrow, conventual life, among his handful of disciples, we seem to see a figure marked with the pathos of one born out of due time. Ardent, austere, mystic and magnetic, all these he was, and his life and influence have been, relatively, singularly ineffectual. The ancient monastic life of England can no more be restored than the custom of Trial by Ordeal which represented our forefathers' ideas of equity, or the picturesque practice of going into battle clothed in complete armour. Father Ignatius cherished an outworn ideal, therefore he remained out of touch with the very life he wished to operate upon, out of sympathy with the very griefs he wished to alleviate. The retrospective spirit was his undoing.

All this gives rise to a curious speculation. Looking about us, we remark a feebleness of interest, a lack of originality, a dearth of invention in all things unconnected with pecuniary profit. Strength, novelty, usefulness, sincerity are reserved for enterprises directly convertible into hard cash.

And, apparently, the people love to have it so.

THE LAW COURTS.

PETITION FOR CANCELLATION OF REGISTRY.

The hearing of a case instituted by Mr. Adelaide Benstead, of Sussex, England, against Messrs J. D. Canour and Co. Mr. Charles Geo. Dunlop, and two Chinamen named Peh-Hih and Pao-Shang, petitioning for cancellation of registry made by them over a perpetual lease of land and buildings thereon, came up on Nov. 24th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Hasegawa.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. S. Sawada, and defendants were all absent.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that his client had owned, for 29 years past, a perpetual lease, 526 tsubo, at No. 16, Yamashita-cho, and one bungalow, two two-storied houses, one warehouse and one shed erected thereon. During that period the owner allowed the occupant's right over the property without objection from any one. Recently the owner found incidentally that the registry of the property was still standing in official records of the United States Consulate-General and Chinese Consulate-General, which were transferred to the Japanese Government offices when the extra-territorial treaties came to an end. Counsel went on to say that on April 24th, 1877, Mr. C. G. Dunlop leased the property from Messrs. Canour and Co. who were the owners at that time. The lease was registered at the United States Consulate-General. Though the term of 15 years, which was the condition of the lease contract, expired at the stated time, the registration was left standing in the records of the Consulate. On Nov. 1st of the 15th year of Kwang-Hsu, i.e., in 1889, the defendant Chinamen leased the property on the condition also of 15 years, which fact was duly registered at the Chinese Consulate-General. The registration, however, was left standing in the official record even after the contract term expired. As a matter of fact nobody had occupied the property since Plaintiff owned it. Recently having tried to sell the land and buildings to a third person, Plaintiff learned the foregoing facts. Counsel added that the registry still standing was absolutely the result of mismanagement.

In reply to the Judge, Counsel said that Defendants were not living in Japan and that he was unable to find witness to substantiate his contentions. He produced copies of official letters. Referring to them, Counsel stated that the two lease contracts above mentioned expired in due course and that his Client was the only owner of the property.

The Judge passed judgment in favour of Plaintiff.

THE "AGENOR" CASE.

The following is the whole text of the decision rendered in the Court of Cassation in the Agenor case, the gist of which was published on Oct. 23rd in these columns.

SENTENCE.

Albert A. Lewis, (29) merchant, British subject, living at No. 45, Bluff, Yokohama; appellant in public prosecution and civil case.

Charles Arthur Hill, (36) mariner, British subject, living at No. 32, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama; appellant in public prosecution and civil case.

Mr. Charles V. Sale, Director and representative of Messrs. Sale and Frazar, Ltd., No. 167, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, respondents in civil case.

The accused Lewis and Hill who were charged with fraud and the sinking of the Agenor and who were defendants in the civil case instituted by Messrs. Sale and Frazar Ltd. in connection with the loss of the said vessel, appealed against a decision given in the Tokyo Appeal Court on July 8th, this year. In the present Court the grounds adopted in the judgment of the lower Court have been examined. The following decision is delivered:—

GIST.—The appeal in the public prosecution and in the civil case is dismissed. The accused are ordered to bear the costs entailed in the civil case.

GROUND.—As the first point of his appeal, Lewis referred to an item in the decision given in the lower Court "Lewis concealed his plan to obtain wheat by fraud, but disclosed other intrigues to Hill. Lewis thus induced Hill to take part in other plots. Hill consented to assist him. Hill was employed as supercargo and assistant to the captain of the sailing vessel. Subsequently he interfered with the shipping of the wheat on the ship." Lewis contended that in the Court no evidence was given in support of the foregoing statement. The "other plots" referred to in the statement seem to have included the alleged sinking of the sailing vessel and an attempt to obtain insurance money by fraudulent means. No evidence was given in the lower court as to the allegation that Hill and Lewis had jointly planned a serious crime. The lower Court gave its decision without finding the necessary evidence, which was an infringement of Art. 203, and the 5th clause of Art. 269 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As the second point of his appeal, Lewis also referred to an item in the decision delivered in the lower Court, "Lewis through Shiina Fusajiro removed 1,879 bags of wheat and 60 bags of sweepings to a warehouse situated in Sagacho, Fukagawa, Tokyo, which he leased from Yabu Kozaburo. Thus Lewis stole the grain by fraud." Lewis held that he leased the godown, but not on his account, and that Yabu Kozaburo did not make a statement when he was examined that the building was disposed of for the private use of the accused. Yet the lower Court did not take evidence as to the foregoing statement. Inasmuch as the lower Court did not call evidence as to the ground for this decision, it should be taken as an infringement of Art. 203 and the 9th clause of Art. 269 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The contentions of the accused, however, should not be admitted as a proper ground for the appeal. In the 5th and 6th items of the decision, the lower Court enumerated several items of evidence and inferred that the accused jointly sank the ship with a view to obtaining the insurance money. As to the fourth point in the decision, the lower Court produced several kinds of evidence. Collating that evidence, the Court found that Lewis leased a warehouse from Yabu Kozaburo, to which he removed the wheat, and thus he stole the grain. The finding of the Court should not be regarded as an infringement of Art. 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In his appeal, Hill also referred to the item in the decision of the Tokyo Appeal Court "Lewis kept in secrecy the plan to steal the wheat by fraud and disclosed another plot to Hill inducing him to engage in the sinking of the Agenor. Hill consented to participate in the scheme, for which purpose he was employed as supercargo and assistant to the captain of the Agenor. He took part in the shipping of the wheat." As to the foregoing statement, Hill contended that the lower Court did not call any evidence. The "other plot" referred to in the statement seemed to have meant that the accused had tried to obtain insurance money by fraudulent means. Yet there was no evidence shown in the decision as to the allegation that Hill and Lewis together planned the crime. As the Court gave its decision without showing proper evidence, the decision must be regarded as an infringement of Art. 203 and of the 9th clause of Art. 269 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The contention of Hill resembled the first point of that of Lewis in the latter's appeal. It must, however, be taken as without sufficient reason, as in the case of Lewis.

In their supplementary appeal, the accused through Mr. Takagi Masutaro, a lawyer, lodged an objection as to the procedure in the lower Courts—the Yokohama District Court and the Tokyo District Court. (1) They stated that the first Court adopted in its decision the statement of Howard, who was examined as a defendant. Yet the records of his preliminary examination were not properly made, viz. the Ket-in, or two halves of a seal, to be affixed to the pages by the Court clerk concerned, were omitted. Accordingly the official records should not be taken as valid in accordance with Art. 20 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is further inferred that the first Court tried the accused before the proper preliminary examination was concluded. The statement of Howard could not be admitted as valid. Counsel added that the Appeal Court adopted the illegal evidence in its decision, and referred to the decision passed on Feb. 15th, 1897, in the present Court in a murder case (in re No. 74.) The present Court examined the records in question and found that there was no stamp such as should be affixed by the Court clerk. Inasmuch as the stamp was omitted, the records should be taken as invalid. The defect might be regarded as an infringement of the procedure in the Court. Yet the statement of Howard in the public trial was embodied in the records which were properly made. Therefore his statement should be taken as evidence in the trial of other accused.

The first Court adopted the statement of Howard given in the public examination in order to give its decision with regard to the accused.

(2) Mr. Takagi, one of Counsel employed for defence, stated that at the 7th trial in the Yokohama District Court, Mr. Sale was examined as a guidance in the criminal case. The proceedings were described in the Court record commencing with 773rd page. When the 7th sitting was opened Mr. Hiraoka Manjiro, one of Counsel employed for the defence, was absent.

There was no fact in the record that the lawyer was properly summoned—though also there was no fact that the accused informed to the Court they had no necessity to have the lawyer present. An examination was made as to the summons of Mr. Hiraoka to the resumed trial. A document showing that the summons was sent to the lawyer, was included in the Court record which constituted its 754th page. (a-1) at the end of the document, an addition was made "as above mentioned, the summons was delivered on January—th day 1908." The date described in the document was imperfect as the exact day when it was delivered to the lawyer could not be ascertained. Any summons in civil or criminal case must be delivered through proper administration. Otherwise the delivery should not be taken as a legal measure in accordance with the nature of the various laws. If the conditions required in the laws were omitted in the summons, it should be taken as invalid and accordingly there was no delivery of the warrant. As there was no summons, Mr. Hiraoka was absent from the Court (a-2) When there were several lawyers employed for the defence in one case, the summons to them must be issued separately. Each warrant must be delivered at their offices. The accused in the present case employed three lawyers—Dr. Masujima Rokuichiro, Hiraoka Manjiro, and Yamamoto Shimuke—for the defence. Yet only one summons was issued to them. Dr. Masujima only signed the receipt of the summons and there was no receipt signed by two other Counsel (a-3) There was no record that the warrants to two other Counsel had been delivered. In consequence of the above mentioned three defects appeared in the procedure of summoning Counsel, it should be inferred that they were not properly summoned to be present in the Court. When Mr. Hiraoka was absent, Mr. Sale was examined in the present criminal case and naturally the statement of Mr. Sale should not be admitted as evidence. Counsel referred to the criminal case, (re), No. 271, to the appeal of which a decision was given on April 17th, 1906. One of the items in the judgment says "in the first Court two policemen named Uno and Yamamoto were examined as witnesses to the three accused when Mr. Deguchi Tatsuza employed by Ando Yuzo, one of the defendants was absent owing to non-summons. As the lawyer employed by the accused was absent, the statements of the witnesses must not be admitted as proper evidence. Nevertheless the Appeal Court adopted the statements of the policemen as evidence. The decision made on such improper evidence could not be admitted." Counsel further referred to another case, No. 770, on which the present Court passed a decision on February 18th, 1898. One of the items in the ground says the accused employed the lawyers for defence. The Court must issue summons to Counsel in accordance with Art. 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure before the opening of the public trial. On June 26th, 1897, when the trial was opened, no summons was issued to Mr. Kanda Bunjiro, one of Counsel in the defence for the two accused, and accordingly the lawyer was absent on the occasion of the hearing. Only one summons addressed to Mr. Kobayashi Toyotaro and Kondo Bunjiro was made. The result was that the warrant was delivered to Mr. Kobayashi whom Torazo, one of the accused, employed and that nothing was informed to Kondo as to the opening of the trial. Yet the Appeal Court concluded the examination. The decision thus given in the case was regarded as invalid." In the Court an examination was made as to the objection of Counsel and it was found that the delivery of the summons to Mr. Hiraoka was properly made. Consideration was also made to ascertain whether the delivery of the warrant was or was not one of the improper means contended by Counsel. (b-1) According to Art. 19 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, if there was no special stipulation in that law, the Code of Civil Procedure should be applied. It is provided in the first clause of Art. 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure that any judicial official who attended to the delivery of summons was authorized to make a document showing the place, date, means of the delivery and receipt as well as the confirmation of the bailiff who personally handed over the summons to the receiver. The delivery of the summons referred to by Counsel was properly made with the necessary requisites of the law though the day when the warrant was handed over to the appointed person was left blank. Accordingly there was no doubt that the document was properly issued and delivered. (b-2) If there were more than one Counsel employed for the defence, the summons to them might be made in one form and not issued separately. Mr. Hiraoka and another lawyer had their temporary offices at the office of Dr. Masujima which fact was already informed to the Court—vide 598th and 614th pages of the Court record. In accordance with the convenience of the Court, the summons to the three lawyers was issued in one form. Dr. Masujima signed receipt of the summons, which fact meant that he received the whole summons also on behalf of his colleagues. The judicial messenger also was well aware that Dr. Masujima received the document for himself and his colleagues. Therefore the objection of a-2 was regarded as groundless. (b-3) If the delivery of the summons was made by a special means as provided in Arts. 145 and 146 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the details must be described in the receipts by the messenger. In the ordinary case, the signature and stamp of the receiver were sufficient to confirm the delivery and receipt of the document. Therefore the receipt in question was not filled on a special clause. As explained above, Mr. Hiraoka was summoned to the Court by proper administration before the opening of the trial. In spite of the legal and proper summons the lawyer was absent. Mr. Sale was examined in the Court properly organized. The step taken in the Appeal Court adapting his statement as evidence should not be regarded as any infringement of the law.

CLAIM BY AN ARCHITECT.

A case in which Mr. K. Shimoda of the Shimoda Construction Co. claims yen 875 from the Standard Oil Co. came up again on Nov. 26th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Hasegawa.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked Defendants' Counsel whether or not Mr. Shimoda intervened in the work of drawing plans and specifications for building the warehouses at Itozaki though the Standard Oil Co. contended that the firm had not practically ordered from the Japanese architect the construction of the buildings.

Defendants' Counsel replied that the Standard Oil Co. did not employ the Japanese for drawing plans or specifications. Messrs. H. H. Beers and Koyama, civil engineers, were engaged by the firm, and there was no necessity to have any assistance by Plaintiff.

Plaintiff's Counsel also asked Defendants' Counsel whether the firm sent the Japanese architect to Itozaki before the construction work was commenced.

Defendants' Counsel replied that his clients did not instruct the architect to make investigations at Itozaki. Counsel added that he did not know whether the Japanese architect had visited the place on his own business.

Referring to technical matters, Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine Mr. Shimoda as principal. Counsel added that the architect would give explicit explanations as to the details of the construction.

The Judge granted the request and decided to summon him on Nov. 17th.

CRIMINAL CORRUPTION IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Full exposure of the criminality of Abraham Ruef, Frank J. Murphy and A. S. Newburgh in the attempt to bribe John Martin Kelly, a venieman in the Ruef case, came up in Judge Dunne's court. E. A. S. Blake, agent for the crooked attorneys, on the eve of being sentenced for committing the crime, went on the witness stand voluntarily and without hope of immunity, and made a full and complete confession, implicating Ruef and his attorneys. Murphy and Newburgh engaged Blake in the lawless enterprise through which Ruef sought to buy his way out of the meshes of justice. With Blake caught and convicted through the honesty of Kelly, Ruef placed in the hands of Martin Stevens, an attorney, promissory notes for $10,000. That sum was to bribe Blake to keep silent. In addition to the lump bribe Blake's wife was to receive $300 a month during Blake's imprisonment. Ten days ago Blake repented of his crime. He sought Attorney Matt I. Sullivan and made a complete confession. The other morning, attended by his handsome young wife, he went into court. When Blake was called by Judge Dunne to stand up and hear sentence pronounced his wife sprang from her seat within the rail and, sobbing, called out, "No! No! Don't!" Blake went on the stand and laid bare the details of Frank J. Murphy's and Adolph S. Newburgh's conspiracy to bribe Kelly, the venieman. His story corroborated the testimony given before the grand jury which indicted Murphy and Newburgh for the crime of which Blake was convicted, and then went further, telling how Newburgh hired the attorneys to defend him and how bail was secured for him. While Blake was making his complete confession Ruef was across the corridor in Judge Lawlor's courtroom facing other exposure of his corruption, and Newburgh and Murphy were before Judge Murasky fighting the indictments in which they are charged with the crime confessed by Blake.

A Victoria (B.C.) paper gives the following account of the same affair.

San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 29.—Standing in the shadow of the penitentiary with sentence about to be passed upon him, and having seen his young wife just led from the court room hysterically crying, "No, No," E. A. S. Blake, contractor convicted of attempting to bribe John M. Kelly to qualify on the jury to try Abraham Ruef and vote for Ruef's acquittal, made a full confession in court to-day.

Blake said that after he was arrested on a charge of bribery, Frank J. Murphy, Ruef's associate counsel, came to him and promised him $10,000 if he would keep quiet. He said that notes for $10,000 purporting to be signed by Ruef, were delivered to a third party to be paid to Blake after he was sentenced if he were convicted of bribery.

Besides this amount, Blake declared his wife was to receive $100 a month while he was in the penitentiary.

The story told by Blake created consternation in court, and the case was continued for two weeks.

It is no longer a matter for surprise that the prime actors in the San Francisco "graft" scandals have not ere this been brought to justice.

SALE OF RACE-HORSES.

The following race-horses were sold at auction on Saturday by Messrs. Eytton & Pratt at the Negishi Race Course:—

YOKOHAMA.

The steamer Naniwa Maru (about 1,000 gross tons) collided with the sailing vessel Shin Kannon Maru about 9.20 p.m. on Nov. 18th in the neighbourhood of Kannonzaki. The latter sustained slight damage on her starboard side. On the following day the sailing vessel arrived at Yokohama in tow of the steamer.

A youth employed at the Yokohama Railway Station committed suicide on Nov. 19th at his house by hanging. The cause is not known.

A fracas by coolies occurred on the evening of Nov. 18th at an inn in Ishikawa-machi, Yokohama. Three men attacked two comrades with knives, etc., inflicting severe injuries on their heads and faces. The assailants were later arrested by the Kotobuki-cho police at a house near by.

An old man, apparently a workman, was found crushed to death on the morning of Nov. 19th on the railway near Oiso. He is believed to have been run over by a train while attempting to cross the permanent line.

The Emperor returned to Tokyo on Nov. 20th, passing the Hiranuma Station at 2.27 p.m. Prior to his arrival, Baron Sufu, Governor, and Mr. S. Hashimoto, the chief of the prefectural police, went to Numadzu and escorted His Majesty to Shimabashi.

Mr. G. O. Wallenberg, Swedish Minister, gave a tiffin at noon on Nov. 19th to the leading Japanese and foreigners of Yokohama at his residence, No. 9, Bluff, in honour of Dr. Sven Hedin, and also a tea-party on the same afternoon at the same place.

The Yokohama Specie Bank has received a telegram from Peking to the effect that the financial situation which has been threatened in connexion with the demise of the Emperor and the Empress Dowager was restored.

In consequence of the present dullness in foreign rice business, 15,000 bags of Rangoon rice were re-exported from Yokohama to Manila on Nov. 18th. The price was comparatively lower in Japan.

The Association Football match which was fixed to take place on Monday has been indefinitely postponed.

The baseball team of the Reach All American Club arrived at Yokohama on Sunday morning by the China. They were received by the players of the various Japanese Clubs.

According to a report received at the Yokohama Chief Police Office, the dead bodies of a man and a young woman were washed ashore on Nov. 20th near the villa of Count Date in Kamakura. They are believed to have committed suicide.

The foreign trade of Yokohama during ten days ended Nov. 20th was: Exports, yen 6,269,778, and imports, yen 3,914,345. Excess of exports yen 2,355,433.

On the night of Nov. 20th a young woman attempted to commit suicide by throwing herself into the creek near Sasanami bridge in Kanagawa. She was rescued by a policeman who had been watching her from a distance.

A case of hydrophobia is reported in Isezaki-cho, Yokohama. A mad dog has attacked a child inflicting severe injuries on her feet. The police killed the dog.

A case of typhoid fever is reported in Yokohama, the patient being a Chinaman living at No. 142, Yamashita-cho. He has been removed to a foreign hospital on the Bluff.

The proprietor of an inn in Miyoshi-cho, Yokohama, has been prosecuted by the Isezaki-cho police on a charge of having ill treated one of his guests who was suffering severely from lung disease. It appears that the inn-keeper had removed the invalid to a rice field in South Yoshida machi as the latter was unable to pay the whole of his bill. The unfortunate man passed one night in a critical condition. On Nov. 21st he was removed to the City Office by the police.

On the evening of November 22nd Mr. Wallenberg, Swedish Minister held a dinner party at his residence, No. 9 on the Bluff, in honour of Dr. Sven Hedin. About twenty distinguished Japanese were present, including Prince Tokugawa (Isato), Viscount Hanabusa, Baron Mitsui, Lieut-General Fukushima, Vice-Chief of the General Staff Office, and Professors Yamakawa, Jintō, Shiratori and Omori. The Swedish Minister briefly spoke, introducing the eminent explorer. Viscount Hanabusa duly replied on behalf of the guests. Dr. Sven Hedin will leave Tokyo on Nov. 26th for Kyoto.

The well-known Hoden Kerosene Oil Co. of Niigata prefecture, which recently established a branch at Hodogaya in Yokohama held a garden party on Nov. 22nd. About 2,000 guests were present, including a number of high officials and journalists from Tokyo and Yokohama. Mr. Mitsuhashi, Mayor of Yokohama, and other officials made congratulatory speeches in appreciation of the development attained by the company.

About 2 p.m. on Nov. 23rd fire broke out in a new bungalow at No. 3,263, Negishi, Yokohama. Owing to the strong northerly wind the flames at once spread to the adjoining two-storied houses. The buildings, which belonged to Mr. C. B. Clausen, No. 87, were entirely destroyed. The cause is not yet ascertained.

About a m. on Nov. 24th one coolie attacked another in Yoshihama-cho with a large knife inflicting severe injuries on his right shoulder. The assailant was arrested later at a house in Ishikawa-machi. When the crime was committed the assailant was drunk.

On Monday evening 12 Chinese quarrelled among themselves at No. 166 Yamashita-cho, a building occupied by some Formosan singers. They sustained some injuries after which they were summoned to the Kaga-cho Police Office, but were afterwards released.

A shoemaker living in Suyeyoshi-cho committed suicide early on the morning of Nov. 23rd by drinking a quantity of carbolic acid. Heavy debts are alleged to have been the cause.

A shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama at 4.17 a.m. on Nov. 23rd. The motion was gentle at first and 10 seconds later became somewhat severe. The whole duration was 2 minutes and the direction was between west and east.

While playing on a lighter near the Nippon Hatoba on Nov. 23rd, a child fell into the sea. When she was taken out by some men from a lighter near by, life was extinct.

A woman attempted to commit suicide by throwing herself with her infant into the creek near the Nishi-no-hashi on Nov. 23rd. Sendoes rescued them. On the previous night an employé of the licensed house Kaisei-ro, Yeiraku-cho, also attempted to commit suicide by jumping into the creek near Suyeyoshi-cho. He was saved by a passer-by and was handed over to the Isezaki-cho police. He had been ill for some weeks past.

Three French sailors of the Armand Belic now in Yokohama harbour were arrested on the evening of Nov. 23rd by the Harbour police while attempting to smuggle 4 cans of opium. On the following day they were removed to the District Court. According to them, a Chinaman whose domicile was not known asked them to land the drug secretly and to hand to him it at the Public Gardens.

About 5 p.m. on Nov. 24th a woman attempted to commit suicide by cutting her throat with a razor at a licensed house in Kanagawa. She was removed to the Noge Hospital. As she is in an unconscious state nothing is known as to the cause.

T. Kawaguchi, an employee of the Yokohama Railway Station has been arrested by the Toke police on a charge of theft. It appears that he stole a large lot of rice and other goods from several freight trains since September last year. He sold the goods to small merchants in Hodogaya and South Naka-dori.

A Berlin telegram was received in Yokohama on Nov. 25th to the effect that the interest rates have risen by 2½ per cent. on an average owing to the stringency in financial circles in London.

THE IMPERIAL COURT.

As already reported, Dr. Sven Hedin proceeded to the Palace at 10.30 a.m. on Nov. 26th in company with Mr. Wallenberg, Swedish Minister. The Emperor received him in audience. His Majesty eulogized his exploits and presented to him a handsome silver flower vase.

On Nov. 25th the Emperor presented a set of gold cups to Baron S. Goto, Minister for Communications, for his excellent service, when he was attending to the Kwantung Government and the Formosan Government as an adviser.

Marquis Guiccioli, new Italian Ambassador, was received by the Emperor on Nov. 25th, when he presented his credentials. Subsequently His Excellency and Marchioness Guiccioli had audience of the Empress.

TRADE-MARK DECISION.

Mr. Y. Toneri, Chief examiner of the Patent Bureau, has given decision on a protest lodged by Herr Mattins Hownell, of Wurtemberg, Germany, against H. Ishihara dealing in musical apparatus in Osaka. The statement of the appellant was that the Japanese registered a trade-mark No. 23,724 at the Patents Office on July 10th, 1905, and used it on various musical instruments manufactured by him. The mark adopted by the Japanese resembled that of the German merchant who had used it for a long time past. The chief examiner gave decision in favour of the German and said that the Japanese had stopped the employment of the trade-mark, which fact had been intimated to the Bureau on June 15th this year.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

EXPERIMENTAL ACETONE GAS BUOY MOORED OFF TSURUMI.

Notice is hereby given by the Department of Communications that the following experimental acetone gas buoy has been moored off Tsurumi outside Yokohama Harbour, province of Musashi:—

Construction and painting:—Cylindrical Iron buoy painted red, with an iron pillar supporting the lantern. Height of light:—11 feet above the water. Character of light:—Occulting white light by acetone gas. The light will be changed to red light sometimes and the flashing period will be irregular. Depth of water:—4½ fathoms at L. W. S. T. Magnetic bearings taken from the buoy:—

Jūniten-bana (Mandarin Bluff), S. 24° 33' W., Flag staff of Royal Naval Depot S. 46° 18' W., Lighthouse on the end of north breakwater, Yokohama Harbour S. 65° 43' W.

Notice is hereby given that the siren at Shirakami-zaki Lighthouse, the west entrance to Tsugaru Strait, Hokkaido, has been put in operation since November 17th, 1908 (see Notification No. 972 of Department Communications, October 1908).

We are also informed that Kawara-zu Buoy on the south side of Kawara-zu south-west of Hiroshima, Shiaku seto, Inland Sea, has broken adrift.

A LITERARY SOCIETY ANNIVERSARY.

(COMMUNICATED)

On the evening of Nov. 20, the Literary Society of Miyagi Girls' School, Sendai, celebrated its seventeenth anniversary. The programme consisted of literary and musical numbers. There was not a dull number on the programme. All of the performers did remarkably well.

Among the features of the programme was a piano selection, "Marche Militaire," rendered by eight hands playing on two pianos at the same time. Nothing like this had ever been attempted in Sendai before. It was well rendered and showed that the performers had profited by the careful instruction received from Miss Kate I. Hansen, head of the department of instrumental music.

An English dialogue, consisting of four scenes from Louisa May Alcott's "Little Women," was very well done.

The Japanese recitation, "Nasu no Yoichi," by Miss Kiyo Kaneko, met with great applause.

The climax of the evening, however, was reached in the rendition of extracts from the dramatic cantata of "Ruth the Moabitess" by a chorus of twenty-one girls, who had been trained by Mrs. W. G. Seiple, head of the department of vocal music in the school, and Miss Hansen.

A large and appreciative audience of Japanese and foreigners filled the hall.

FOOTBALL.

Rugby Football appears to be going strong, judging by the number of players who turn up for mid-day practice. The game on Saturday between Whites and Colours was witnessed by a goodly number of spectators and though the play was somewhat loose—as might be expected at the start of the season—it was fast and keen. Six unconverted tries, however, point emphatically to the need for improvement in place-kicking.

Whites won the game by a substantial margin—17 points (1 goal 4 tries) to 6 (2 tries)—a result which they owe to superior passing. The try-getters were Graham W., Bell, Buckle, Kellogg (2) for Whites; Vincent and Foster for Colours, while Kellogg succeeded in kicking the only goal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

MARQUIS KATSURA, Premier, arrived at Nagoya and put up at the Hyakushun Hotel, on Nov.

18th where he spent the following day. He returned to Tokyo on Friday.

PRINCE ITO, Resident-General, left Shimonoseki on Nov. 23rd by the cruiser Kasuga for Chemulpo on his way to Seoul.

Snow fell in Saghalien on Nov. 8th, being one day later than last year. The depth is about 2 feet in the district of Toyohara and 1 foot in Otomari. Temperature varied between 30° and 35° F.

THERE is every promise [that with good weather the races taking place at Kanakura next Sunday will be very successful. There will be two races before tiffin and half a dozen in the afternoon, including in all likelihood a ladies race. Already accommodation at the Kaihir-in is practically unprocurable. Indeed it is with something like surprise that one learns how few guests so fine and large a building can house. The races begin at 10 a.m.

THE Bureau Veritas Monthly List, published on October 1st, of wrecks and casualties recorded in August last, announces that 48 sailing vessels were reported as totally lost; 19 by stranding, 5 by collision, 3 by fire; while 4 foundered, one was abandoned, 10 were condemned, and 6 were missing. No less than 133 sailing vessels were damaged; 22 by stranding, 45 by collision, one by fire, 20 by leaks, and 45 by stress of weather. The steamers totally lost were 28; 7 by stranding, 2 by collision, 3 by fire; while 7 foundered, and 9 were condemned. The steamers damaged were 288; 64 by stranding, 126 by collision, 25 by fire, 2 by leaks, 17 by stress of weather; while 54 reported injury to their engines or boilers.

THE ringleader of the Kentucky night riders is believed to be now a prisoner. His name is Garret Johnson. No less than seventy-one alleged to have been connected actively with night riders in this vicinity are under arrest, and the authorities believe enough evidence has already been collected to hang at least four men. The confession of "Tid" Burton is the sensation of the day, both here and at Union City, and it is believed that he has not yet told all he knows about the killing of Captain Rankin. Another of these law-defying scoundrels has confessed that the night rider outrages have included the whipping of women. One woman was whipped for deceiving her husband and another for being of ill repute.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REVIEWS AND REVIEWERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR, As Mr. Denning has thrown up a good deal of dirt, it may be well that I should again clear the air by restating the real issue, which is this:—should a daily journal of the general style and tone of the Japan Mail continue to employ a writer who shows himself repeatedly to be conspicuously incompetent, both from the intellectual and moral standpoint, to deal with the subjects which he handles? I venture to think that a writer who showed the same incompetence for dealing with, say, political matters, which Mr. Denning displays in dealing with the far more solemn matters of religion would be soon cashiered by any high-class journal. The Japan Mail is a daily newspaper; it is not a religious journal, nor is it an anti-religious journal; subscribers buy it in order to learn current news. If, say, Dr. de Forest gives a lecture from a Christian standpoint, it may rightly find a place in your columns, and if Mr. Denning were to give an equally noteworthy lecture from an anti-Christian standpoint, it would have, merely as current news, an equal claim to your hospitality. But I hold that the readers of the Japan Mail have a distinct grievance if, when they go to their paper for current news, they find repeatedly obtruded therein the peculiar views of Mr. Denning. The annoyance is intensified by the unfair spirit, the underhand devices, and the unreliability of statement which characterize his impertinences (I use this word in its true etymological meaning). The unfair spirit is, e.g., clearly demonstrated in such an article as that to which (I think) he—no doubt with a purpose—gives the clumsy title "Mr. Alfred R. Wallace defends Darwinism against theologians and others." In the course of his article, though he goes out of his way to make some remarks which are quite impertinent (here the word may be construed in both its senses) he refrains from making the pertinent remark that the vast majority of theologians have been led to accept Darwinism as probably playing an important part in organic evolution.

By underhand devices I mean, for example, the giving such a cast to a sentence that it conveys an impression other than it can do if strictly construed. An example of this will be found referred to in my former letter. The statement of half-truths also comes under this head: for instance, "miracles conflict with the universal law of causation." Mr. Denning, by the way, in his last letter betrays ignorance of the signification of the term half-truth. And then, lastly, his unreliability of statement is more than abundantly illustrated by the article upon which I commented a few weeks ago. In addition to what I then said, since Mr. Denning still has the effrontery to speak of the book "Supernatural Religion" as a "tip-top scholarly work," which was so well written from the point of view of theologians that its authorship was attributed to a Bishop" (the so characteristic italics are Mr. Denning's), I may to-day quote a foot-note which I find on p. 8. of the well-known Introduction to the New Testament by the late Dr. Salmon of Dublin (7th ed.):—

"The book.....obtained a good deal of notoriety by dint of enormous puffing, great pains having been taken to produce a belief that Bishop Thirlwall was the author. The aspect of the pages bristling with learned references, strengthened the impression that the author must be a scholar of immense reading. The windbag collapsed when Lightfoot showed that this supposed Bishop Thirlwall did not possess even a school-boy acquaintance with Greek and Latin, and his references were in some cases borrowed wholesale, in others did not prove the things for which they were cited, and very often appealed to writers whose opinion is of no value. But what I wish here to remark is that what really made the book worthless, was not its want of scholarship but its want of candour. An indifferent scholar, if he were industrious and honest, and, I might add, modest enough not to find fault with the translations of better scholars than himself, might compile a book which would only need the removal of some surface errors to be a really valuable contribution to knowledge. But want of candour vitiates a book through and through. There is no profit in examining the conclusions arrived at by a writer who never seems to care on which side lies the balance of historic probability, but only which conclusion will be most disagreeable to the assertors of the supernatural. For myself, I find instruction in studying the results arrived at by an inquirer who strives to be candid, whether he be orthodox or not; but I have little curiosity to find out the exact amount of evidence which would leave a capacious objector without a word to say in justification of his refusal to admit it."

It is painful to have to add, Sir, that there seems to be some resemblance between the spirit and the writings of the "retired Indian official" and of Mr. Denning; and it is for that reason that I urge you—in the name, I feel sure, of the majority of your readers—to exercise a wise discretion in his employment. Current news, reliable summaries and reviews, and irresponsible correspondence—that is one thing; but that any employee of your paper should abuse his opportunities for furthering his own peculiar views and with statements howsoever misleading—that is quite another.

Believe me, Sir, Yours faithfully,

C. H. BASIL WOODD.

Osaka, November 18th, 1908.

P.S.—An interesting illustration of the sort of contributions by Mr. Denning to which I have been objecting, will be found in the foot-note to the monthly summary of the Japanese Religious Press which appeared in your issue of the 3rd inst. A Japanese writer is quoted as urging in support of the constancy of Japanese wives that their husbands can actually go abroad for years and safely leave them behind. This is interesting. But what shall we say of the foot-note?—"The same thing takes place in Europe and America. Loyalty to absent husbands is not universal either in the West or in Japan. But it is perhaps a fact that cases of disloyalty are far more frequent in the West than in Japan for various reasons." The first part of this note is utterly commonplace and the last part, one feels, cruelly untrue. And yet there are no figures by which the accusation can be met. Besides, the writer can cower behind the word "perhaps;" and also behind the fact that he has left out the word "comparatively," and why does he not show his "learning" by giving his readers some of the "various reasons." Surely even "Layman" must see the worse than uselessness of such addenda.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In any letter of the 21st inst. by a regrettable printer's error the ugly word dist is substituted for the more appropriate word dust in the opening sentence.

I am, Yours faithfully,

C. H. BASIL WOODD.

THE LATE EMPRESS DOWAGER OF CHINA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Although I cannot get rid of the feeling that the world's estimate of the character of the late Empress Dowager of China may be greatly affected by discoveries yet to be made, I would not withhold from her the frankest acknowledgment of the possession of any quality in which she was truly great. The illuminating editorial that appeared in the Japan Mail of the 18th inst. set forth with singular clearness and force the most conspicuous of those qualities, but two of the acts of her life were indicative of an enlightenment of mind and a progressiveness of spirit that seem to call for special recognition. I refer to her anti-opium edicts and her consistent discommencement of foot-binding, which, even if she should turn out to have been a second Lucrezia Borgia, would still redound to her everlasting honour.

As for her apparent vacillation as regards the granting of a constitution, it certainly should not be criticised by anyone who has witnessed the commotion excited in England by a proposed slight extension of the suffrage or some apparently unimportant change in the basis of parliamentary representation. The granting of a constitution to China, an empire of a million and a half square miles, a population greater than that of the whole of Europe, and less than four thousand miles of railway, of which nearly one-third is in Manchuria—such an event will be fraught with the most tremendous possibilities, and a few years' delay, even if it should be provocative of agitation and a certain amount of lawlessness, can only be conducive in the end to permanent stability and good government.

Yours faithfully,

November 19, 1908.

THE CHRISTMAS MAIL TO AMERICA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Every foreign resident of the Far East knows only too well that the trans-Pacific steamship companies, in fixing the sailing dates of their steamers, have but little regard for public convenience in the matter of the transportation of the mails. Hence we frequently see three and sometimes even four steamers leaving Yokohama for American and Canadian ports within twenty-five hours, and then not another for a week or ten days.

The sailing dates this coming month are about as inconvenient for Christmas mail purposes as they can well be. There is no P.M. steamer scheduled to arrive at San Francisco from Japan between December 11th and 25th, and no N.Y.K. steamer timed to reach Seattle between December 11th and 24th. Christmas mail sent by either of these routes to New York, Boston, Philadelphia or other eastern points will therefore reach its destination either nine days before Christmas or four or five days after. There is an "Empress" sailing from Yokohama December 7th, whose mails, if she were to cross in eleven days, as the "Empresses" usually did last year, the C.P.R. would deliver in New York on Christmas Eve. But I think I am correct in stating that these steamers are not making quite the fast time they did, and with the Canadian and American railway mail services congested, as they always are at Christmas, I think it extremely doubtful if mail sent by this steamer will reach eastern American points by Christmas Day. The Bank Line mail steamer Suzuki being advertised to sail for Tacoma on December 2nd, I have made very particular inquiries of the agents, and have been informed that she will in all probability sail on the appointed date and cross in seventeen days, in which case any mail she might carry would stand a better chance of being delivered at eastern points on the 24th or 25th than that sent by any other route.

Perhaps the best plan will be to send Christmas mail by this steamer if she sails on the date now expected. If her sailing should be delayed more than twenty-four hours, it would be better to hold the mail for the "Empress" sailing December 7. I have no interest in any steamship company or transportation line whatever, and I write this letter because I think there may be those who like myself do not care to have their Christmas greetings delivered ten days before the time or, if it can be avoided, a single day late.

Yours faithfully,

November 22, 1908.

DOES HORSE-RACING IMPROVE THE BREED.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The concluding sentence of your article entitled "Race Clubs" which appeared in your issue of the 20th inst., "Are Race Clubs necessary at all in Japan" is a subject on which there exists great difference of opinion, though it is worthy of note that, thus far, those who have ventilated their opinions in the most violent denunciation through the public press, have shown, by extravagant assertion, unsupported by even a shred of evidence, that their knowledge of horse-breeding is very limited. I do not propose to contest the betting-evil which usually accompanies horse-racing, but to confine my few remarks to the consideration of whether horse-racing does, or does not, improve the breed.

The universal action of the Governments of the world in buying valuable thorough-breds, is surely prima facie evidence that horse-racing does improve the breed. To bring the question nearer home I would ask the opponents of horse-racing, "for what purpose does the Japanese Government import thorough-bred stock, and buy animals which have been used for racing at Negishi and elsewhere?" Let me add that most of the Australian mares raced in Japan are not thorough-bred.

The following extracts selected from Stonehenge's "British Rural Sports" (see foot-note) are instructive:—

"The sole object for which horse-racing was originally established and has since been supported by the powers that be, is, confessedly, the encouragement of the breed of English horses. No one can contend with a semblance of reason that in any other view it is capable of standing its ground as a national sport; for it is certainly alloyed with numberless objectionable concomitants, and it requires a strong inducement to those who wish well for the morals of the people to counterbalance these disadvantages. But while wars are inevitable attendants upon our fallen nature, well-mounted cavalry are essential to our existence as a nation, and unless a great encouragement is afforded to our horse-breeder, we shall speedily lose that pre-eminence in horse-flesh for which we have always been remarkable."

Further on "Stonehenge" shows by proof and argument, that the English race-horse as now bred is solely useful in improving the breeds of our hunters and light road-horses. "That it has been the means of improving these breeds is clear enough and we now possess horses which are excellent hacks, hunters, and light carriage horses, and often all in one. This is the perfection of the horse, and if many such could be produced it would make itself generally useful." Without high-breeding, however, this is impossible, consequently there is a necessity for government interference to produce such a breed of thorough-bred horses, by careful selection, as shall give us the above three kinds useful in civil life, from which a plentiful supply of cavalry horses may be culled whenever wanted."

Under a chapter devoted to the "habits and varieties of the horse" we read:—"The Cavalry Horse may be considered under three several heads, first the Charger, or officer's horse, secondly, the Heavy Trooper, and thirdly, the Light Trooper. The charger is almost always thorough-bred, or nearly so, and is a horse bred for racing, but too slow for that purpose, yet with a fine form and good action. The heavy troop horse is a discarded hunter, that is a horse bred for that purpose, but considered too heavy to gallop the required pace and is therefore sold at troop-horse price. The light troop horses are obtained from all sources, and many of them, as might be expected from the price allowed per horse, are very inferior animals. Very few of these horses are up to more than 14 st. yet have to carry 18 st., so that it is no wonder that in actual service they break down."

In concluding this letter I would draw attention to a statement which appeared recently in a New York paper, viz., "Owing to the prohibition of race-course betting in the State of New York, over 60 horses comprising some of the bluest equine blood in America, have been shipped across the Atlantic to compete in England and France."

These horses will, in all probability, eventually go to enrich the studfarms of European countries. If the prohibition is extended throughout the United States and the example of these New York owners generally followed, and when we remember that a frequent infusion of new blood of high breeding is essential to prevent the deterioration of any class of high-grade Saddle or Harness horses, it may pertinently be asked, "what is ultimately to become of the breed of first-class horses in America?" Extinction?

NOTE.—As most British sportsmen are aware, "Stonehenge" was editor of The Field nearly seventy years ago, and the first edition of "British Rural Sports" appeared about the year 1855. Since its first appearance "British Rural" Sports has been recognized as the leading British authority on Angling, Coursing, Hunting, Racing, Shooting, etc., while the work has been brought up to date in every succeeding edition.

THE RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Isn't Mr. Woodd a little unreasonable? There is a great debt of gratitude owing to Mr.

Dening for his extraordinarily able summaries of Japanese thought.

You can't have everything in this world, and even if Mr. Dening does show an occasional bias towards his own convictions, it is open to question whether there would not be an equal bias if these summaries were done by some one of convictions opposed to Mr. Dening's,—and also whether anyone could be found to do them half as well.

Further, surely we needn't excite ourselves about Mr. Dening's occasional little anti-Christian explosions. A man who can solemnly trot out "Supernatural Religion" at this time of day is really quite harmless.

It is perhaps too much to expect of any man that he should find time to make himself a first rate Japanese scholar and also keep up to date in modern controversy. Every one must realize the arduous work which these summaries must give Mr. Dening, and if in the course of it he finds a little recreation in firing off an antiquated blunderbuss or two, it won't do any body any harm—unless the weapons he uses should burst and hurt himself.

As for the anonymous stalwart who intervened with the harrowing experiences of his escape from the Presbyterian Ministry and ultimate destitution (one really does not know which to congratulate most on the hair-breadth escape, your correspondent) or the excellent body of men who compose the Presbyterian Ministry—he seems to be ignorant of the fact that when one side impugns the elementary honesty and good faith of the other, controversy is performed at an end.

Further his picture of the clergy being in a horrible dilemma between starvation and the propagation of Christianity, is—as regards a very large number of them—utterly untrue in point of fact.

Hitting below the belt has an attraction for a certain order of minds, but it is a poor sport.

Yours truly, H. B. WALTON.
Yokohama, November 23rd.

THANKSGIVING 1908.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—After the time honored custom of the United States, President Roosevelt has again issued his Proclamation calling upon all American citizens to set apart the last Thursday in November as a day of special Thanksgiving and to assemble themselves in their various places of worship for the purpose of giving thanks for the blessings of another year. From the Atlantic to the Pacific the American people will not only make Thanksgiving Day a day for quiet rejoicing in the Churches, but in thousands of family gatherings there will be tender reminiscences, and kindly memories of kindred beyond the sea.

It seems peculiarly fitting that American citizens in a foreign land should lay an especial emphasis on this great National day, and even at some sacrifice, endeavor to unite in spirit with their fellow citizens in the home land by spending an hour of quiet worship together on Thursday morning, in response to the President's appeal. The sense of national unity is too important a stimulus to the best citizenship to be undervalued even on the most practical grounds. When it is associated with the religious traditions of a great people, it becomes a priceless heritage both for ourselves and our children. Special Thanksgiving services will be held in the Union Church on Thursday morning at 11 o'clock, and at Christ Church at the same hour. May I earnestly appeal, through your courtesy, to all American citizens resident in, or visiting Japan, to make a special effort to attend one or other of these services. It may involve a little sacrifice, but it is worth while.

Yours sincerely, T. ROSEBERRY GOOD.
Yokohama, November 24th 1908.

THE PRESIDENTIAL THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Will someone who has access to the full text of President Roosevelt's Thanksgiving proclamation for the present year be so good as to say whether the President has reverted to the practice of his predecessors in a certain important particular, or followed the precedent he established a year ago, when he called upon the people to assemble in their various places of worship or in their homes? When there are those who try to make out that religion is losing its hold upon the Christian nations of the West, such an admission that the obligation to public thanksgiving is not imperative as is involved in the use of the words "or in their homes" can only be regarded as most unfortunate,—just as ill-advised, in fact, as the omission of the legend, "In God we trust," from the silver dollar. The latter departure from time-honored usage Congress sat down upon about as promptly and emphatically as it did two years previously on the new-fangled spelling, but the Thanksgiving proclamation is something the President has entirely in his own hands.

Yours truly, A VISITOR.

THE CHINESE OBITUARY DECREES.

The following translations are published by the N.-C. Daily News of Nov. 17th:—

VALEDICTORY MANIFESTO OF EMPEROR KUANG HSU
November 14.

It was owing to the exalted love of Our Imperial mother, Our canopy and support, that the Divine Vessel (the Throne) was bestowed upon Our keeping. Having set foot in Our childhood upon Throne, We succeeded to Our great heritage in reverent devotion, from the moment of Our accession. We looked on high for guidance to the ancestral precepts of the Sacred Ones before Us, and in devotion to Our Government, and love toward Our people, made the fear of Heaven and the example of Our forefathers the mainstay of every act. Conscious of Our own deficiency, We have not dared to do ought but labour late and early with anxious application. To be unwearied day by day has been Our single purpose. We have striven earnestly to advance toward the highest path of order. Whenever, in times of visitation by flood or drought, Our governors in the provinces have prayed Us to remit taxation or bestow relief, the immediate outpouring of Our bounty has in no case been withheld. We have established schools, reorganized the armies of the State, encouraged industrial enterprises and revised the laws of the Empire. The anxious care that in the seclusion of Our palace has filled Our breast must have been witnessed by Our ministers and people throughout the Empire.

Our bodily constitution has through Our life been strong; but since last autumn We have been frequently indisposed and for some days past Our strength has gradually failed, until the hope of recovery has passed away. We recognize in this the will of Heaven. Mindful of the grave interests of the dynastic line, We feel that it behoves Us to transmit Our charge to worthy hands, and We have now received the benign mandate of her Majesty the Empress Dowager, in these words:—"Let Pu Yi, the son of Prince Chun, be adopted as heir to the Emperor Kuang Hsu and enter, upon the inheritance of the great dynastic line, as Emperor by succession." Our imperial successor is virtuously disposed and filial, and endowed with bright intelligence. We are assured that he will know how to accept with reverence the trust that is bestowed. It is Our hope that Our Ministers and servants, civil and military, will unite in upright and loyal efforts, each zealous in the discharge of his allotted duty, that thus they may uphold for Our adopted successor a more and more glorious rule. If this be done, the cravings of Our breast will be assuaged.

In obedience to former usage, let the robes of mourning be laid aside at the end of seven and twenty days. Be this proclaimed throughout the Empire for the information of all.

INAUGURAL DECREE.

Decree of the Emperor, in compliance with the Command of the Empress Dowager, stating that on the 21st day of this moon (the 14th day of November, 1908) at the Yeo hour (5-7 p.m.) His Majesty Emperor Kuang Hsu departed this life, ascending upon the Dragon to be a guest on high. Her Majesty the Empress Dowager has commanded Us to enter upon the inheritance of the great succession. Prostrate upon the earth We bewailed Our grief to Heaven, vainly stretching out Our hands in lamentation. For four and thirty years, as We in humility reflect, His Majesty now departed reigned under the Canopy of Heaven. In reverent observance of the Ancestral precepts He made the counsels prompted by maternal love His guide, applying himself with awe-struck zeal to the toilsome performance of His duty. For not a single day, in reverence for Heaven and in obedience to the ancestral pattern, did He cease to be inspired with devotion in the cause of government and love on behalf of His people. He gave the charge of office to the attached and wise. The welfare of the people and the policy of the State were ever present in His inmost thoughts. Sincere in the deepest measure must be, at this time, the grief and lamentation of all to whom the breath of life is given. Not in words can We give expression to the sadness which pierces Our heart and shows itself in tears of blood. Grave in Our mind is the trust bequeathed, the burden of which is charged upon Our unworthy person; yet know We that We are able to depend, in Our Capital and throughout the Empire, upon our Ministers and servants, high and low, in the ranks of the civil and military administration. Unitedly they will strive in uprightness and loyalty to maintain on Our behalf an ever improving rule. It behoves the government of all the provinces to bear a gentle sway over the people committed to Our Charge. Thus will consolation be administered to the soul in Heaven of His Majesty now departed. Fervent is Our hope that this may be!

For the observance of the rites of mourning, We have reverently received a charge, by the testament of His Majesty now departed, that in obedience to previous usage the mourning garb be laid aside at the end of seven and twenty days. To do this Our feelings, in very truth, will not consent. We shall observe with reverence in strict adherence to the rule of ancient time, three years of mourning, that expression may in some slight part be given to the grief that fills Our mind.

As regards all the acts of sacrifice and worship prescribed by canon for the Temples of the State, it is fitting nothing be diminished in the allotted ceremonial on account of the present mourning. Let therefore the departments that are concerned assemble to decide what steps it is right to take, as former precedent directs, for the appointment of officials reverently to discharge the duty on Our behalf, or for Our personal performance of the ritual, and make report to Us thereon. Let the rites of mourning to be observed by the officials and the people throughout the Empire be conducted in conformity with the established rule. Let this be promulgated for the information of all in Our Capital and throughout the Empire.

THE IMPERIAL NAME.

In the 3rd moon of the 26th year of Tao Kuang (1846) His Majesty the Empress Sian Tsung Cheng, Our Imperial Ancestor, issued a special edict, in the following terms:—

"The two names [given to an Emperor] should not be capriciously altered in demonstration of respect. Henceforward, on a successor to the Throne being declared, let the first character of his name, as before, remain unchanged; neither let any diminution be made in the strokes of which it is composed. As regards the second character, let decision be taken at the time with reference to the stroke that should be dispensed with. Let this be enrolled among the fundamental institutes."

This having been reverently received, We now, in respectful obedience to the will of Our august predecessor, ordain that the first character of the Imperial name be written as before, without necessity of alteration. For the second character, let the last stroke be omitted, and alteration as a token of respect be made by writing the character 祚. All books that have been printed before the issue of this Decree remain unaffected by it.

Whereas in the thirteenth year of Tung Chih (1874) on the decease of His Majesty the Emperor Mou Tsung Yi, His Majesty now departed excused, in conformity with precedent, the Manchü Generals, Viceroy, Governors, Commanders-in-Chief, Provincial Treasurers and Judges, together with the Comptrollers of the Salt and Customs' revenue and Superintendents of the Manufactories, from the duty of coming to the Capital to do homage before the Imperial sarcophagus—now, inasmuch as His Majesty has departed this life and ascended to the empyrean heights, let all the high officials concerned take note that they need not ask permission to come to the Capital to do homage before the Imperial coffin, to the end that no neglect be entailed in the functions of their office. What is incumbent upon them is that they do exert their efforts for the complete fulfilment of their duty, and thus show themselves not unworthy of their trust. The mere form of ceremonial observance is not that which is important. Let this be made known to all.

THE NEW PEKING.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

For the student of political and racial questions, few places on earth can compare in interest with the capital of China to-day. To revisit it after an absence of ten years is to realize something of the forces at work in and around the Middle Kingdom, something of the result of the deadly struggle for world-power which has made Manchuria and North China the cockpit of Asia, and of which the end is not yet. To those who knew the Peking of the nineties, the contrast offered by the city of to-day gives food for much reflection. There are other phenomena in this part of the world equally striking, such as the creation and growth of the Russian railway city Harbin, and the grim, silent passing of China's sovereignty in all that region sacred as the birth-place and cradle of the dynasty, but none of these strike the imagination so forcibly as the outward and visible signs of signs and change that confront one in Peking.

Before the Chino-Japanese war of 1894, and even after until the great Boxer upheaval, the Peking known to travellers and European diplomacy was much the same slumberous, dust-laden medieval city as that from which Nurhachu and his Manchu bowmen drove the effete Mings three centuries ago. Remote, deliberately inaccessible to all influence and intercourse, holding haughtily aloof from the ever-approaching clash of conflicting systems, Peking stood, above all, for the home and headquarters of the Bannermen (that conquering race from whom the instinct and power of conquest has long since departed), an anachronistic excrescence clinging to the walls of the Forbidden City. Long regarded by Europe (and particularly by Russia) with feelings of superstitious awe, by reason of a survival of respect dating back to the day of Kanghsi, the capital of China has come to be recognized, since the exposure of 1895, as the home of an alien race of rulers, effeminate and slack after generations of tribute-eating ease, the seat of a Government Manchu only in name, and unchallenged only by force of tradition. Despite the rude shocks of 1890 and the nearer perils of 1895, Peking at the close of the century had apparently learnt nothing and forgotten everything except its inextinguishable desire for seclusion, that desire which found its final expression in the Decrees of 1900 ordering the extermination of all foreigners. Isolated for want of all means of rapid communication, innocent of sanitation, police, and all other forms of civic administration, the capital of China slumbered on, only ten years ago, amidst the gathering forces of disintegration. Through her filth-strewn streets, axle-deep in dust or mud, still lumbered the rude vehicles of a primitive civilization; though her ancestral, battlemented gates, close-barred at sunset, long lines of slow-pacing camels bore the city's food supply with a congenial flavour of antiquity. Such was Peking in the nineties, a city well content in squalid isolation, brooding on her empty dignities, capital of the chiefest of earth's peoples. What need was there for the sacred city of the Dragon Throne to change any of her ancient ways because of the clamour of upstart nations on her borders; was she not still the centre of the universe, and suzerain of many great States, receiving tribute, as of old, from Tibet, Korea, Nepal, and many other vassals?

And to day, as if by enchantment, the old order has changed, and the capital of China no longer typifies the mouldering traditions of the Manchu hierarchy, but rather the new national instincts and aspirations of the Chinese people. On the immediate causes of the transformation we need not dwell, for they are known to the world—the aftermath of the Boxer madness, which brought the railway and the outer world to the very gates of the Palace; the continued occupation of the city, and its road to the sea, by the military forces of the allied Powers; then, five years later, the amazed awakening of all Asia to the earth-shaking fact that Oriental armies had successfully challenged the boasted supremacy of the white races; last, and most vital, the creation and pressure of Chinese public opinion, articulate through the new Press, bringing to bear upon the hoary traditions of Celestial statecraft its unmistakable demand for new methods and new ideals. The keynote of this public opinion, born of "Western learning" and recognition of China's humiliating weakness, is "China for the Chinese," and its avowed object is that the Government should speedily put an end, by effective reforms, to a situation which thinking men have come to regard as intolerable, a situation which involves curtailment of foreign garrisons, "spheres of influence," and extra-territoriality, with all its privileges for the alien. And thus the day of reform has been made to dawn in high places, and the Mandarin to realize that the ancient house must be put in order, and that quickly.

So it has come to pass that to-day three railways bring their traffic and broadening influences to the very gate of the city. The tinkling camel bells are gone, their old-world music replaced by the indefatigable bugling from school parade-grounds and camps. No longer does the medieval watch patrol the midnight streets with noise of rattle and drum; the new police, with their foreign uniforms, rifles, and sentry-boxes in every quarter, have consigned it to oblivion. Well-paved streets, flanked by bricked drains, now connect all the principal gates; the paper lanterns that accentuated the darkness of former days have been replaced by electric light; scavenging is no longer left to the unaided efforts of pariah dogs and pigs; brought ams and jinrikshas ply in the place of sedan-chairs and springless carts, and public building of suitable size and design are being provided for the various Government offices. Most remarkable of all—as indicating the change in social and educational standards—is the new zoological and botanical garden, whither large crowds of both sexes resort daily; a purely Chinese enterprise, of which the citizens are justly proud. All these manifestations of a new and energetic administrative faculty are the work of the past ten years, and to those who remember the Peking of the old régime the change is a matter of wonder and hopeful anxiety. If any one had predicted in 1900 that in less than ten years a foreign adviser to the Chinese Government would be driven in an automobile, in company with a member of the Grand Council, from the City to the Summer Palace, or that Chinese newspapers, printed in the capital, would freely discuss the necessity for constitutional government, his friends might reasonably have called in medical advice; yet these things, and others equally remarkable, have come to pass. To press of public opinion in the provinces the change is primarily due; the actual inception of reformed administration in Peking (frankly modelled on the example of the foreign settlements at Shanghai and Tien-tsin) must be credited in great measure to the wisdom and courageous initiative of Yuan Shih-kai, Prince Su, and other prominent progressives.

Nevertheless, and while these evidences of reform are entirely hopeful and reassuring, there remains inevitably in the mind of the close observer a sense of peril in the very suddenness and feverish haste of the changes that confront him on all sides, a feeling justified by all the history of the East. The flower of reform is certainly in full bloom, but what of the roots? Some millions of taels have been, and are being, spent on proving to the civilized world that modern municipal administration is not beyond the powers of Chinese officialdom at its fountain-head, but there are already signs that the strain of this unusual expenditure is beginning to tell heavily on the boards concerned. When looking beyond the immediate present, it is therefore natural that one should seek to find in the financial policy of the Central Government some proof that these reforms are the result of a definite and deliberate plan of reorganization and are not merely due to the spasmodic activities or transient influence of a few progressives. Considering only what meets the eye in Peking itself, it is evident that for the permanent and satisfactory maintenance of police, public lighting, and other things hitherto undreamt of in Chinese philosophy, there must first be devised a system of municipal taxation, sanctioned by law, with definite allocations of revenue, and there must also be a public service composed of officials specially trained and permanently employed for this class of work. In other words, the old hand-to-mouth, happy-go-lucky methods (methods which find the solution of every financial problem in a new loan from a foreign bank, and by virtue of which every Mandarin leaves "maintenance and repairs" to his successor) must be replaced by an efficient and business-like system, if the beginnings of reform are not to lead to worse chaos than before. The metropolitan boards themselves require to be reorganized in fact as well as in name (of which there is as yet no sign), and the Central Government could, therefore, give no better earnest of its intentions than by disbanding forthwith its army of inefficient and insecure officials, that locust horde whose immediate interests have hitherto been stronger than all the counsels of progress. It is too much to hope that the Mandarin of China will follow the example of the Daimios of Japan in a general and patriotic surrender of his class privileges, but in the absence of any such altruism it may safely be said that, unless the Government is prepared to face the thorough reorganization of the country's civil service and finances, other reforms, however outwardly impressive, can be at best but face-saving makeshifts.

And when, wandering in the streets of this new-decked Peking, so often rough-handed in the past because of the ignorance or weakness of its rulers, one sees the military garrisons of seven foreign Powers philosophically accepted by this patient, peace-loving people as part of the established order of things; when one remembers what this incorrigible, après-moi-le-déluge ignorance has already cost China, and what forces, are already now gathering on her defenceless borders; when one realizes that it is this very weakness of the Chinese Government which perpetually threatens the peace of the East, one cannot but fervently hope that all these sudden evidences of patriotism and public spirit may prove to be the first fruits of a genuine and permanent awakening; that all the many current schemes for constitutional government, a reorganized army and navy, opium abolition, State education, and the development of the country's wealth, which exercise the minds of the Grand Council, may become accomplished facts while yet there is time, and may commence with a radical reform in the methods and personnel of the administration. For the writing stands clear upon the wall to-day, deep-graven by the events of the past ten years, so that he who runs, mandarin or mule-driver, may read and understand the law which decrees the survival of the fittest. Time alone can show whether the lesson has been learned in China as it was learned by the patriotic people of Japan 40 years ago. For the present, therefore, while welcoming every sign of progressive change at the capital, we must inevitably suspend judgment as to the permanent value and effect of the initiative shown by the central and provincial Governments.

A strong China, wise in council and resolute of purpose, would ensure the peace of the East and the postponement of many perilous questions; a weak and inefficient China means perpetual unrest and the constant harassing and shrinkage of her frontiers. Every well-wisher of this inoffensive, law-abiding, and industrious people, every one interested in the peaceful development of their commerce and well-being must hope for permanent and practical results from the present awakening of the national consciousness. And, since it is within the yellow-tiled walls of the Forbidden City that these results must first take form and life, the march of events at Peking, political, financial, and administrative, deserves the closest attention of the civilized world.—The Times.

CHINESE RAILWAYS.

THE REMOVAL OF ENGLISHMEN.
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Peking, October 14.

Wide regret is felt here at the resignation of Mr. Kinder, the engineer-in-chief of the northern railways, who is leaving his post after 30 years of distinguished service. His is the founder of railway construction in China, having in face of immense opposition constructed the northern railways, now the chief productive work under the control of the Ministry of Communications.

The reason for his resignation given by Mr. Kinder in his letter is simply that of his age, 56, and a desire to return to England. It is well known, however, that he is in vigorous health, and that his resignation has for some time past been inevitable. He was deprived of all real authority, objectionable contracts were entered into without his knowledge binding the railway for terms of years, trustworthy English employés were summarily dismissed without reference to him, so that his position had become intolerable. Yet Englishmen are directly interested to the amount of £2,000,000 in the railway, which he was supposed to control, and the service of the new loan of £5,000,000 will mainly be dependent upon the earnings of this important railway.

China openly violates Article 6 of the loan contract of October 10, 1898, which was designed to safeguard foreign employés, and forbids dismissal except for incompetency and misconduct after consultation with the chief engineer. Unfortunately the present Minister of Communications, Chen-pi, the adopted son of the chief eunuch, to which dignified connexion he owes his appointment, is one of the most corrupt and incompetent officials at present holding high office in China. He recently appointed as Director of Railways, a Chinese clerk named Jutsunenien, who, under orders, is removing competent Englishmen to find places for the incompetent protégés of his superiors.

Mr. Kinder had founded at To-g-shan an engineering college to train Chinese for future railway work. Opened in October, 1906, under an experienced English principal, with 125 picked students, it was a great success. In August last a Cantonese friend of the Director-General, 25 years of age, without any technical training and master in an elementary school in Canton, was given control of the college, with the result that in September the English principal was summarily dismissed with three months' pay without reference to Mr. Kinder, and the college practically ruined. Yet the college, which is costly, is maintained from the earnings of a railway mortgaged to British bondholders. This railway, since Mr. Kinder has been deprived of real authority, has no protection from similar abuses, which, unless the British Government promptly interfere, will multiply indefinitely.—The Times.

An unexpected sequel to some remarks we made lately on the difficulty of four-move problems may interest solvers. Having occasion, a few days ago, to look up an old collection of problems, we came across a four-mover of our own composition published in the Glasgow Herald nearly forty years ago. Prompted, out of curiosity, to see a little more of it, we have to confess that so far, all our efforts to solve it have resulted in utter failure!

The great players have seldom given much attention to problem composition, but the veteran Blackburne, who supplies our problem this week, has furnished many fine examples in the course of his long Chess career. A curious fate befell the Chess Editor of the Japan Mail some years ago in his desire to show that the masters were not altogether barren in this field. After a good deal of research he unearthed a problem by the late Jas. Mason, which, after all, turned out to be faulty—an easy "cook"!

(a) An early advance strenuously advocated by Dr. Tarrasch, who always has the courage of his opinions. The management of this pawn is always a knotty point in the close game, and eminent masters differ as to its treatment. The more usual continuation is Kt — K B 3.

(b) White now attempts to throw a definite focus against the centre pawn and the relentless way in which the lens gradually converged on it is most instructive. Dr. Zukertort held that an isolated pawn is not necessarily a disadvantage on account of the compensating freedom sometimes attained, but here this hardly applied and White allowed his opponent no leisure to dissolve it by P — Q 5.

(c) Preparatory to a bold coup. The bishop might well have stationed himself here earlier in lieu of the feints with the knight. But this is wisdom after the event. It must be borne in mind that many well-thought-out moves contain ideas which the counter-strategy keeps below the surface.

(d) This effectually "cooked" Black's problem, for if Kt x R, P x B, and the knight could not escape. It will be seen at once that taking the knight prematurely meant suicide for White via R x P. Black was under time pressure and probably burnt his boats intentionally.

(e) This left Black with a very formidable minus sign to account. Q — Q B 4 has been suggested as a more promising corollary to the antecedent moves, but the simple K — Kt 2 followed if R x P by Q x P, seems a valid answer. Evidently the "pin" was very dangerous.

(f) It was clearly necessary for Black to foil the menace of 34 Q — Kt 5 ch. White had his position well in hand and could easily meet the remaining threats. The denouement came very swiftly and elegantly, though two or three of Black's final strokes were exchanged rather as a sacrifice to the conventionalities, than with any set purpose.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL TO THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

THE INDUSTRIAL BANK LOAN.

Received in Yokohama 7 a.m. Nov. 24.
Before the lists were opened, the Paris portion of the Japanese (Industrial Bank) loan was covered six times over.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

BELLICOSE SERBIA.

London, November 19.

The Powers have made renewed representations to Serbia, recommending her to preserve peace and withdraw her troops from the Austrian frontier. Serbia has replied complaining of the insults to Serbian royalties which have appeared in the Austrian press and have been uttered in Austrian theatres. She also protests against military preparations on the part of Austria.

TURKEY AND THE CONFERENCE.

London, November 20.

Turkey has presented to the Powers her programme for the Conference. It comprises seven points, including revision of the status of Rumelia, also Bulgaria, and it also includes the question of tribute, and of the status of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with compensation to Serbia and Montenegro. It advocates Articles 23 and 61 of the Berlin Treaty, and it proposes a modification of the Capitulations and the revision of Article 29 as desired by Montenegro.

BISHOP AWDRY'S SUCCESSOR.

The Bishop of Dorking succeeds Bishop Awdry as Bishop of South Tokyo.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

Colonel Seely, replying to Mr. Taylor in the House of Commons, said that the report of the opium commission in the Straits Settlements had not yet been received. With regard to Hongkong the Governor's modified proposals are now on their way. Meanwhile it has not been possible to take any action.

NEW EDUCATION PROPOSALS.

Mr. Asquith has announced that new education proposals will be embodied in the new bill which may possibly be introduced to-day. All parties are anxious for a settlement of the question.

NAVAL POWER.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking at Scarborough, declared that Britain harbours no ill-will to any foreign Power, but the interests of the Empire demand that her naval power shall be equal to any possible combination. There is no half-way house between safety and ruin.

SIR EDWARD GREY ON THE SITUATION.

Later.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking at Scarborough, emphasized the fact that in the recent debates in the Reichstag there had been no word of hostilities to Britain. He hoped that this would be reciprocated by the British people. He hoped also that the Balkan complication would be satisfactorily adjusted, but the progress of the negotiations was slow, although it was more hopeful now since Turkey had been re-assured as to the prospect of fair-play.

THE LICENSING BILL.

London, November 20.

In the House of Commons the Licensing Bill passed the third reading by 350 to 113 votes, with no material modification.

GERMAN FINANCE.

Prince Bülow, introducing the new taxation bill in the Reichstag, said finance was at present Germany's weakness. Financial strength was equal in importance to military strength. He paid a tribute to the finance of Great Britain.

THE BALKANS.

France and Austria have refused to negotiate further with Turkey until the boycott is stopped.

EDUCATION BILL.

November 21.

Mr. Runciman, President of the Board of Education, introduced the new Education Bill, which passed the first reading.

Details are withheld pending a final agreement.

THE BRITISH ARMY.

Mr. Haldane, speaking at Guildford, said that there was never a better prospect of peace than at present. But the tremendous armaments abroad were only neutralizable by sufficient armaments on our own side. He hoped in a few months Britain would be able to put 160,000 men into the field at a moment's notice. The territorials were recruiting three times more quickly than the volunteers.

THE GERMAN NAVY ESTIMATES.

Later.

The German Navy Estimates show an increase of three millions sterling to provide for the laying down of three battleships, one large and two small cruisers, and a torpedo flotilla. They include half-a-million for submarines.

UNEASINESS IN SERBIA.

From Belgrade an official statement has been issued to the effect that Austria is transporting large quantities of ammunition up the river Save and stationing troops in all the towns on the lower Danube. The Servian Government consequently finds it difficult to pacify its people.

AUSTRIAN ENGINEERS FIRED ON.

London, November 22.

Telegrams from Buda-Pesth report that Servian troops have fired across the Danube near Semendria at some Austrian engineers who were engaged in measuring and surveying.

THE TSAR APPEARS IN PUBLIC.

The Tsar yesterday attended the funeral of the Grand Duke Alexis. This is his first public appearance in St. Petersburg for two years.

THE KAISER'S SPEECHES: THE NEW METHOD.

The Kaiser was present at a centenary celebration in the town-hall of Berlin yesterday. Instead of the usual extemporization, he read a prepared speech handed him by Bülow.

THE TSAR'S IMMUNITY.

London, November 23.

The Tsar and his family passed within a few yards of the spectators at the Grand Duke's funeral. Nothing could have been easier than the commission of an outrage, especially as his appearance was announced beforehand. It is hoped that this presages a resumption of normal conditions.

THE CULLINAN DIAMONDS.

A remarkable affair was the presentation of the mounted Cullinan diamonds, valued at a million sterling, to King Edward. The Queen tried two of the great stones round her neck, upon which his Majesty exclaimed "beautiful! beautiful!"

PERSIA.

Later.

Teheran.—The Shah has proclaimed that as learned people do not want a constitution and a Parliament he has decided to defer to their wishes. Moreover, as the clergy has decided that the establishment of a Parliament would conflict with the laws of Islam, never, under any pretext, shall such a Parliament be established.

THE DUMA AND FREE PORT PRIVILEGES.

The Financial Committee of the Duma recommended the abolition of free port privileges at Vladivostok and other Asiatic ports, owing to Chinese competition.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

London, November 22.

The Educational Bill provides that the Cowper-Temple may be replaced by denominational teaching in duly provided schools two mornings weekly at the cost of the denomination or denominational manager. The test for teachers varies, and the Bill abolishes grants to non-provided schools not situated in single school areas.

GERMANY AND ENGLAND.

The Kölnische Zeitung welcomes Sir Edward Grey's references to the Reichstag debates and says, "As we are quite ready to believe in English assurances as to the defensive purposes of the British fleet, we hope that similar recognition will be accorded to us."

CHINESE MISSION TO THE U.S.

London, November 24.

Tang Shaoi has arrived in San Francisco on a mission to thank the United States for the remission of the Boxer indemnity and to enlist American co-operation in the development of North China.

THE STANDARD OIL TRIAL.

Rockefeller has undergone a severe cross-examination lasting several days in the Federal Court at New York in the suit against the Standard Oil. He narrated circumstantially but with an air of non-balance the history of the trust, admitting that the original capital was $56,000,000, while the earnings between 1899 and 1907 amounted to $570,000,000.

RUSSIA TO SEEK COMPENSATION.

Later.

A semi-official statement issued in St. Petersburg includes a suggestion that Russia will seek compensation in Azer-Baijan for the annexation of Bosnia.

FRACAS AT VIENNA UNIVERSITY.

Nineteen persons were injured in a fight between German and Italian students at Vienna University yesterday. The University has been closed. Twenty-three arrests were made.

LORD ROBERTS ON INVASION.

The House of Lords by 74 votes to 32 have adopted a motion made by Lord Roberts as to the necessity of having an army strong enough to deter the most formidable nation from attempting to effect a landing. A million trained soldiers will be required. It is dangerous to trust to the navy alone. Lord Roberts dealt with the possibility of a German invasion.

Subsequent speakers deprecated the discussion in view of the present state of Europe's nerves.

REMARKABLE STATEMENT BY LORD ROBERTS.

London, November 25.

In the debate in the House of Lords Lord Roberts stated that painstaking researches instituted lately had proved beyond possibility of doubt that vessels capable of accommodating 200,000 men were always available in the North German ports, while under the new service laws men could be collected secretly without any fuss or mobilization.

Later.

The German Press is much exercised by the fact that the House of Lords adopted Lord Roberts' motion. A section of the newspapers strongly resents this. A semi-official statement has been made that Germany will continue to build up her Army and Navy in accordance with her own interests and regardless of other Powers.

MEMORIAL SERVICE IN BERLIN.

At a memorial service for the late Emperor and Empress Dowager held at the Chinese Legation in Berlin, Bülow and the diplomats who attended bowed before the memorial tablets of the deceased sovereigns.

THE FATE OF THE LICENSING BILL.

A meeting of Unionist peers has resolved by a large majority to reject the Licensing Bill. Lord Lansdowne moves the rejection of the Bill to-day.

THE SHAH WITHDRAWS.

The Shah has withdrawn his anti-parliament proclamation. Doubtless this is the result of a vigorous Anglo-Russian protest lodged immediately it was issued.

THE KAISER.

The Kaiser is abed with a cold.

CASABLANCA.

The Casablanca arbitration treaty has been signed. The proceedings will open at the Hague in the spring.

LORD ROBERTS' SPEECH.

London, November 25.

The speech by Lord Roberts has created a general sensation and has increased the bitterness of the anti-British tone of the Austrian press. The French press concurs with Roberts and argue that the remedy is conscription.

THE OPIUM CONFERENCE.

The Times states that the American Government has agreed to request China to postpone the opening of the opium conference to Feb 1st.

DORANDO BEATS HAYES IN MARATHON RACE.

Later.

Dorando has beaten Hayes in the Marathon race at New York.

STEAMSHIP CATASTROPHE.

The Tapayanni liner Sardinia, when just leaving Malta for Egypt, burst into flames a mile outside the harbour. There were 250 persons on board: 23 Europeans and 100 natives were drowned.

THE FRENCH ESTIMATE.

The French Chambers are discussing the Navy Estimates. Colonel Picard was cheered for a speech forecasting reforms in the administration and the improvement of artillery.

THE LORDS DEBATE.

The discussion in Germany of the Lords' debate continues briskly. Numerous technical articles by military experts have appeared. They express various opinions as to the feasibility of an invasion of England.

DEATH OF THE JAPANESE MINISTER TO SPAIN.

The Japanese Minister in Spain has died at San Sebastian.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIA.

London, November 20.

St. Petersburg.—A short-sighted and irresponsible party is still endeavouring to involve Russia in another Eastern adventure. A telegram from Persia reporting a national success is used as an argument for intervention.

THE INDUSTRIAL BANK LOAN.

London, November 20.

The issue of the loan of the Industrial Bank of Japan was a striking success. It is stated that the debentures were applied for eight times over.

GERMAN JOURNAL FOR CONSTANTINOPLE.

Constantinople.—A German journal has been founded to defend German interests. It is believed the Government will grant subventions.

GERMAN FINANCE.

Berlin.—The Chancellor, in the course of a speech in the Reichstag on the Government's financial proposals, added little of value to the solution of the problem. It is evident that the Minister has a less firm hold of the House. He asserted that Britain is jealous of German economic progress and therefore distrusts her. The Times describes this as a stale press calumny, and the British Foreign Secretary has emphasized the fact that the British bear no ill-will.

THE FRENCH ARMY.

London, November 21.

Paris.—The Reporter on the Army Estimates stated in the Chamber that the anti-militarist propaganda had not affected the army, which was thoroughly organized, and materially and morally was a credit to the country. The officers were working most zealously.

THE KAISER'S INTERVIEW.

November 21.

New York.—The American publishes the substance of a professed account of a suppressed conversation between the Kaiser and an American traveller named Hale, who declares as untrue the allegation that the Kaiser emphasized the danger of the Yellow Peril. It is predicted that England will ultimately lose some of her colonies through her with Japan, who is fomenting an insurrection in India. Germany and America will solve the eastern question, becoming the recognized friends of China. The Kaiser sympathized with Russia in her struggle with Japan because the former was really fighting for the white man's cause, with regard to which England was a traitor. He (the Kaiser) believed that America would be forced to fight Japan within ten years.

THE SHAH AND THE CONSTITUTION.

London, November 23.

Teheran.—The Shah has informed the reactionary priests that in view of their denunciation of the constitution as contrary to Islamic laws, it is entirely abolished, and he will rule in strict accordance with the principles of the Koran. It is understood that solid Anglo-Russian pressure is contemplated in order to convince the Shah of the earnestness of those Power's demands.

AMERICAN TARIFF REVISION.

London, November 23.

New York.—The public belief is growing that some reduction in the tariff duties is about to be effected. Taft is determined to have an honest revision. The lumbermen favour a reduction in the timber duty, the sugar refiners declare that protection is unnecessary. The opinion is freely expressed that most industries do not need protection.

VIENNA AND THE CRISIS.

Vienna.—The Emperor Francis-Joseph expresses a strong desire for a peaceful solution of the Near-Eastern crisis. Baron Aehrenthal has received instructions to that effect. On the other hand the official press is indulging in diatribes against England.

LORD ROBERTS' WARNING.

London, November 24.

In the House of Lords Earl Roberts urged the immediate necessity of providing military forces sufficiently strong to resist any attempted invasion of the country. He examined the possibilities of a German invasion and pointed out the altered strategic conditions in the North Sea, instancing German facilities for the landing of large forces in spite of the British navy. In conclusion he invited the Government to state its opinions to the Imperial Defence Committee.

The Government's reply was non-committal and unilluminating. The Times considers the country has a right to know.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

New York.—The Republican campaign fund totalled £33,000 besides £124,000 distributed to the various state committees. The subscribers, amongst whom was Taft's brother, numbered 12,000.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg.—The Russian reply to the Austro-Hungarian note with reference to the Balkan Conference adheres staunchly to the essential conditions agreed upon between Russia, France and England, which include free discussion of the annexation of the two provinces, and compensation for Turkey, Serbia and Montenegro.

BRITISH DEPUTATIONS IN BERLIN.

Berlin.—Two British deputations are studying the conditions of the working classes, visiting factories, and ascertaining the opinions of trade-union workers. The visitors generally favour compulsory deductions from wages to form invalid and sick funds.

COMMENT ON LORD ROBERTS' SPEECH.

London, November 25.

The Continent, Canada and the United States all comment on Lord Roberts' speech. The leading French papers heartily support his plea for the serious organization of the Army. The Germans are considerably impressed. Many papers reluctantly admit that the recent utterances of the Emperor have greatly contributed towards the opening of British eyes to the existence of eventualities requiring watchful guard. Canadians and Americans are inclined to question the advisability of Lord Roberts' declarations.

SHAH REPENTANT.

London, November 26.

Teheran.—The outcome of the Anglo-Russian pressure is that the Shah is repentant and the Court is apprehensive.

St. Petersburg.—The sudden turn-round of the Shah relieves the Government of much anxiety. The press insists upon the necessity of continued Anglo-Russian pressure.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE ANKING DISTURBANCE.

The disturbance at Anking fu in China was the work of a section of the revolutionists. They offered an obstinate resistance but were disposed by the Government's troops. The Peking Government has issued instructions to the various Viceroy's and Governors, and the consequence is that things are quiet.

THE MUTINY AT ANKING.

The news received up to the 24th instant at Hankow with regard to the Anking affair is as follows:—The mutineers consisted of the artillery and cavalry within the walled town. They attacked the citadel suddenly on the 19th instant, and approached the forts outside the walls on the 20th. But they were fired on from the rear by three gun-boats and by the garrison of the city. Moreover, immediately on receipt of this intelligence at Wuchan the Viceroy sent a regiment of troops from the place of the manoeuvres, and ordered three other regiments (630 men each) to advance rapidly, so that the mutiny ought to have been quelled by this.

This Taiti Maru, which has just arrived at Hankow, reports that when she passed Anking at 2 a.m. on the 21st instant, she heard rifle shots within the town, but order seemed to have been restored outside.

The telegraph not being in working order, no intelligence has been received as to the Japanese subjects who are at Anking in the service of the Chinese Government, but probably they, together with the foreign missionaries, are under the protection of the Chinese Authorities.

Another vessel which has just reached Hankow reports that, when she passed Anking on the 20th instant, she did not observe anything strange.

LIKIN IN CHINA.

Foochow.

The Chinese authorities at Foochow have decided to raise the rate of likin by 4 per cent. They announced that the new rate would become operative from the 24th inst. As a protest against this, the Chinese merchants inaugurated a boycott and have wholly ceased to handle either exports or imports. The result is that shipping companies and others concerned can not obtain any cargo or goods, and business is at a standstill. The boycott being entirely a question between the Chinese merchants and the Chinese officials, there is no disturbance of general good order.

THE PANIC IN HANKOW.

Hankow.

Four small banks in this place have closed their doors, but the Local Government has lent a million taels to relieve the situation, and there will probably be no further panic.

THE ANKING TROUBLE.

Shanghai.

Telegrams from Anking say that the disturbance there has been quieted.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

AFFAIRS AT PEKING.

H. E. Yuan Shih-Kai is unwell and has summoned a Japanese physician, Dr. Nakane, from Tientsin to attend him.

H. E. Chang Chih-tung is seriously indisposed, but in spite of the advice of his physicians and the urgings of his family, he persists in attending the Court daily, and in discharging onerous duties in connexion with the occasion. Nothing but the constant use of drugs sustains him.

Their Excellencies Prince Ching, Na Tung and Yuan Shih kai have addressed to the Chinese Legation in Tokyo a joint telegram, saying that everything is absolutely tranquil at the Court and in the city, and desiring that the fact shall be officially conveyed to all the Chinese Consuls in Japan.

London, November 24.

An official denial has been published in Berlin of the statements attributed to the Kaiser by the New York American.

Mr. Asquith has declared in the House of Commons that the British Navy must be as strong as the combined navies of the next two strongest naval Powers.

San Francisco, November 24.

Mr. Loomis is urging the American people to take part in the Japanese Exhibition and in Japanese trade, so as to show their sympathy with the genuinely friendly spirit of Japan and with her great progress.

All the American business-men are speaking in the highest terms of the reception given to them in Japan and of the kindness and hospitality shown to them.

(“DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST” SERVICE.)

THE FINANCIAL REFORMS.

Berlin, November 19.

Prince Bülow has opened the debate in the Reichstag as to the proposed financial reforms of the Empire.

THE MAINTENANCE OF INTEGRITY.

A dispatch from New York says that the United States Government intends to cause an exchange of Notes with Japan as to the maintenance of the integrity of China.

THE PROPOSAL FOR A MILITARY CONVENTION.

Berlin, November 20.

Turkey has definitely decided to reject the proposal for a military convention with Servia and Montenegro.

Signor Tittoni, the Italian Premier, will ask the Chamber for a vote of confidence in his Balkan policy.

THE NEW TAXATION BILL.

Prince Bülow, the Imperial Chancellor, and Herr von Sydow, the Secretary of State for the Treasury, speaking in the Reichstag, explained the new Taxation Bill, of which they gave full details.

Special stress was laid on the carrying out of the greatest economy.

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Sir Edward Grey, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in a public meeting at Scarborough, said that the British people should recognise and return the friendly declarations made in the German Reichstag in favour of England.

Referring to the Near Eastern Conference, Sir Edward Grey expressed himself rather sceptical as to the outcome, but spoke in friendly terms of Turkey.

THE NEW BRITISH AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN.

Sir W. E. Goschen, the new British Ambassador at Berlin, has been received in audience by the Kaiser and has submitted his credentials.

The Ambassador was welcomed by the Kaiser and the Kaiserin in a very cordial manner.

APOCRYPHAL REPORTS OF THE INTERVIEW.

Berlin, November 21.

An apocryphal report of the interview with the Kaiser by Mr. Hale, the well-known American journalist, appears in the American papers owned by Mr. Hearst.

The German Press declares that the report of the interview as it appears in these papers is absurd and treats it as a gross falsification of the facts.

The New York World also publishes a report of the interview, this report also being denounced as a gross invention.

THE CENTENARY OF MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

The Kaiser, speaking officially at the Berlin Town Hall on the occasion of the centenary celebration of the Municipal Government Act, recognised the rich results brought about by self government.

The bond of confidence and fidelity between the King and the citizens was inseparable, and ascending shadows of clouds would never come to separate the Kaiser and his people.

An enthusiastic ovation was given the Kaiser by the people on the return journey to the Palace.

PROPOSED BALKAN ALLIANCE.

The papers of the Young Turkish party express themselves as very sceptical regarding the fulfilment of the Russian idea of a Balkan alliance.

INDISPOSITION OF THE POPE.

The Pope is slightly indisposed.

THE CANCELLATION OF THE PERSIAN CONSTITUTION.

Berlin, November 23.

The Shah has proclaimed the cancellation of the Constitution.

FRENCH YELLOW BOOK ON MOROCCO POSTPONED.

The publication of the French Yellow Book on the Morocco question has been postponed by the Chamber by the desire of M. Pichon, the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

PROPOSED TREATY WITH SERVIA.

Freiherr von Aehrenthal, the Austrian Premier, pleads for the acceptance of the Austro Servian Treaty of Commerce, in spite of the unfriendly attitude of Servia.

The boycott of Austrian goods has been organised systematically by the Committee of the Young Turk party.

THE SIBERIAN MAIL.

The Siberian mail, with Yokohama dates of 6th November, arrived at Berlin on the 23rd inst.

A NEW WIRELESS SYSTEM.

The problem of dirigible wireless telegraphy has been solved at Paris.

THE IMPERIAL DEATHS.

A mourning ceremony has been held at the Chinese Legation at Berlin, at which were present Baron von dem Knesebeck, Grand Master of Ceremonies, as representative of the Kaiser, Prince Bülow, and the highest officials of the Empire, the State, the Court and the Army.

THE FRENCH YELLOW BOOK.

Berlin, November 25.

The French Yellow Book on the Morocco question treats all the points pending between Germany and France in a very moderate way.

THE POLICY OF RUSSIA.

The Novoe Vremya expresses itself as strongly opposed to all meddling in Persian affairs on the part of Russia, in view of the pending Balkan question.

PRESIDENT TO VISIT BERLIN.

President Castro of Venezuela is coming to Berlin to have a surgical operation performed.

FIGHT AMONG UNIVERSITY STUDENTS.

The University of Vienna has been temporarily closed, a fight between the German and Italian students having taken place.

THE PROPOSED CHANGE IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Berlin, November 25.

At the debate on the initial resolution to be moved in the Reichstag very shortly, as to a change of the Constitution, concerning the responsibility of Ministers, etc., the Government representatives will, as is customary on such occasions, not be present.

ANTI-AUSTRIAN DEMONSTRATIONS.

At Turin, Florence and Bologna anti-Austrian demonstrations have taken place among the students at the universities.

DEPARTURE OF THE AUSTRIAN AMBASSADOR.

The Austrian Ambassador has left Constantinople, the boycott movement having not yet ceased.

THE ALLEGED INTERVIEW.

The German Official Gazette declares that the statements alleged to have been made by the Kaiser to Mr. Hale, as published by some of the American papers, are gross inventions.

The Kaiser did not say one word to Mr. Hale inimical to Japan or concerning the yellow peril.

(FROM THE “ASAHI SHIMBUN.”)

THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA

New York, November 19.

Mr. Metcalf, American Secretary for the Navy, denies a report that the American Fleet now at Manila will be sent to Chinese waters.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

The Russian Foreign Office has received a long telegram from the Austrian Government re the proposed conference. Austria strongly insists that there is no necessity to submit to the Powers the question of annexation. In consequence of the Austrian message, it is said, the Russian attitude has weakened. Probably Russia will be satisfied if Austria makes some concession with regard to Servia and Montenegro. A similar report was transmitted from Belgrade on Nov. 17th. The Servians are much depressed.

RUSSIAN GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF THE FAR EAST.

Russia, it is reported, intends to appoint a Governor-General in her Far Eastern dominions.

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES.

New York, November 19.

The proposed increase of the freight rates of the American railways, which was to have come into operation on Nov. 11th, is still left undecided owing to the disparity of opinion on the part of the railway companies. The companies, it seems, intend to make a further alteration in the rates, reducing the new rate to the original grade. This is doubtless due to the fact that some Japanese merchants have already dispatched goods to the United States via the Suez Canal and that there are signs of foreign merchants in Japan doing the same.

MR. BRYAN.

Mr. Bryan has declared that no amount of failure is sufficient to dishearten him, that if his party should nominate him presidential candidate at the next election, he would by no means refuse the honour.

THE BALKAN QUESTION.

San Francisco, November 19.

The report that Montenegro has stationed military forces on the Herzegovina frontier and that Serbia has also ordered the mobilization of the 15th army corps has led the European Powers to entertain apprehensions for the peace of the Balkan peninsula. Bulgaria likewise is beginning to show fresh activities. The note which Austria recently presented to the Russian Government is regarded as unsatisfactory. The outlook is grave.

GERMAN ARMAMENTS.

Prince von Bülow, explaining the Bill for the expansion of the Army and Navy, says that since Germany is the most unpopular Power in Europe, the only way of maintaining her influence is by the enlargement of her military and naval forces. Germany requires great armaments and consequently a large outlay of funds. Her present financial condition seemed, however, to be her weak point, so that it behoved every patriotic German to respond to the call for the increase of taxes.

Although it is open to question whether the Reichstag will approve of this proposal, it is said that outside the socialist party the public will give Prince von Bülow credit for his armaments expansion policy.

GRAND DUKE CYRIL.
VLADIMIROVITCH.

St. Petersburg, November 20.

Grand Duke Cyril Vladimirovitch, who was deprived of his office after the war, has been rehabilitated as a Lieut.-Commander of the Russian Navy, and appointed Naval aide-de-camp to the Tsar.

THE KAISER.

New York, November 20.

The substance of the interview of Dr. William Bayard Hale with the Kaiser, which the Magazine Century intended to publish in its December number—the project having been abandoned at the earnest request of the German Government—was given in the New York American of Nov. 20th. In the first part of the interview, the Kaiser showed a suspicious attitude towards British policy, and expressed himself in direct opposition thereto. He went on then to say that the British were regarded as renegades among the White Races and that, as the result of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, Great Britain would eventually lose some of her colonies. The significance of the recent visit of the American Fleet to Australia was that the Australians were going to throw in their lot with America, and the Kaiser wished to warn Great Britain of their intention. Turning to the Orient, the Kaiser said that Japan was apparently looking for revolutionary disturbances in India. Probably an outbreak of war would take place in the British dominions within the next six months. On that grave occasion Germany and the United States would make an effort to resolve all the problems of the Far East, with which purpose the Kaiser and President Roosevelt had carried on negotiations for some months past with satisfactory results. As the upshot of these negotiations, they agreed to alienate China from Japan(?) and avail themselves of any trouble which might occur in that country. A prominent Chinese official would shortly visit Germany to intervene in the secret understanding between Germany and the United States. Chinese territorial integrity and the question of the open door would be upheld. Referring to Russia, the Kaiser said that though Russia had failed to wage the war successfully she was regarded as having battled with Japan in the cause of the white race in general. This was universally admitted by the statesmen of all the Powers. If the German army, which ranked first among the European forces, had appeared in the field instead of Russia, there would have been a very different result. His Majesty expressed his sympathy with Russia and added that, if Japan arrogated to herself the right of maintaining the integrity of Chinese territory, the whole of Europe would oppose her. When war broke out between Europeans and Asiatics, the Mahomedans would support the cause of the Whites. In conclusion, the Kaiser said that war would break out between the United States and Japan within the next ten years, despite the reluctance of the former. The interview lasted altogether for two hours.

The publication of the foregoing report in American had been previously announced. On the eve of publication, Dr. Hale intimated to the newspaper office by telephone that he had not disclosed the interview to any body. The American published this intimation of Dr. Hale and also a statement contending that the information was trustworthy.

THE KAISER'S INTERVIEW.

New York, November 21.

The New York World of Nov. 21st published the interview of Dr. Hale with the Kaiser. Its main feature resembles that published in the New York American. The World added that the information had been edited by Dr. Hale. According to the paper, Dr. Hale visited Germany this year on his yacht. The Kaiser called on him on the ship where His Majesty spent half a day taking tiffin. The statement of the Kaiser is reported to have been made on that occasion.

VICEROY TANG SHAOI.

San Francisco, November 23.

Viceroy Tang Shaoi, the Special Chinese Envoy to the United States, has arrived in San Francisco. The reception committees from the Federal and Local Governments received him with special courtesy. A company of the local forces acted as escort. On receipt of further instructions from the Peking Government he will leave on Thursday for the East. He is silent with regard to the rumoured Sino-American alliance and other foreign affairs.

JAPANESE SENTENCED.

Sentence has been passed in the case of 59 Japanese who were arrested in Alaska on a charge of poaching in American waters. The Judge ordered them to pay a fine of $800 each. Those of the accused who were unable to pay were sentenced to 300 days' imprisonment.

JAPAN VIEWED BY AMERICANS.

Mr. Loomis, Chief of the American Committee for the Tokyo Exhibition, and party, as well as some of the American business men of the Pacific Slope, have returned. They appreciated the great development in Japanese industry and were pleased with their reception in Japan. They agreed in saying that the whole of the Japanese nation—from the Emperor to the school children—were amicably disposed towards the United States and never dreamed of war with them.

JAPANESE AND LIQUOR RETAIL.
LICENSES.

San Francisco, November 24.

According to the regulations promulgated by the previous Mayor, retail liquor licenses are not granted to any but Americans. The present Mayor, however, who sympathizes with Japanese, has given them some 5 year licenses. Captain Hobson, who is credited with the intention of introducing into Congress a proposal for the expulsion of Japanese, has commenced investigations in San Francisco as to the administrative attitude toward Japanese and discovered this infringement of the regulations. The newspapers are excitedly commenting on the affair.

VICEROY TANG SHAOI.

Viceroy Tang Shaoi the special Chinese Envoy, now in San Francisco, is avoiding all political conversation. He has, however, admitted that he is charged with an important mission apart from that already reported.

BOYCOTT OF AUSTRIAN MERCHANDISE.

November 24.

According to a Constantinople telegram the boycotting of the Austrian merchandise continues unabated. The agitation has been extended to German goods also. On Nov. 24th, a crowd of rioters attacked two German steamers at Iatsff (?) while the landing of cargo were going on. They threw the goods over board. The German Ambassador has lodged a strong protest with the Porte.

PERSIA

A Tabriz telegram under date of Nov. 23rd says that the revolutionaries have occupied the Northern district of Persia. The Russian residents have taken refuge in their consulate. The revolutionaries have defeated the government forces and subsequently occupied the Russian Telephone Office. It is reported in Berlin that the abolition of the Constitution in Persia is attributable to Russian designs. Nevertheless it is believed in Persia that the disturbances have been instigated by Germany in order to divert the attention of Russia and Great Britain from the Balkans to Persia.

CONVERTING WASTE HEAT INTO ELECTRICITY.

That much is being done to recover the waste heat from blast-furnaces and coke-ovens in this country is clearly established in Engineering. The first arrangement made by any of the power companies was brought about by the initiative of the owners of the Priestman Collieries, and resulted in the erection of the electric station at Blaydon in 1905. At the present moment the three Tyneside power companies have at work or in hand five waste-heat stations, three in connection with coke-ovens and two in connection with blast-furnaces. Additional stations are under consideration. It will be remembered that as regards the Cleveland blast-furnaces the calculations quoted dealt with the surplus available on the basis of the gas being utilised in gas engines, but the adoption of gas-engines to the exclusion of all other types of prime-mover still lies some distance in the future, and in the majority of cases in Cleveland it is found that steam blowing engines are used, and that, after the requirements of the stoves have been met, the gas is practically all expended in raising steam to supply these blowing-engines. To free any substantial quantity of gas for outside power users would involve therefore the substitution of gas engines for the existing steam-blowers. Considerations of capital expenditure usually forbid this course, and had it not been for the genius of Mr. Parsons, whose exhaust steam turbine provides another effective, though less ambitious, way of dealing with the situation, the Cleveland furnaces could not be regarded by a power company as an immediately available source of energy. In this connection, as capital outlay controls so completely the cost of electricity, and as exhaust steam-turbines are so dependent on a high degree of vacuum for efficiency (at 26 in. they consume 50 per cent. more steam than at 29), it is, perhaps, not always easy to justify the policy of installing small exhaust steam-turbines

The grounds of the suit are alleged to be similar to those against Mr. Robert Young, the editor of the Japan Chronicle, the main features of which were recently reported.

CHINA.

Friday, December 4.

In connexion with the coronation ceremony in Peking, an Imperial decree has been published conferring steps of rank and monetary rewards on various officials; granting educational privileges to the children of men who have attained certain grades, and remitting all sentences of reductions of rank and stoppages of pay. As for the much talked of amnesty to criminals or those suspected of crime, it excludes persons who have killed their parents, their grandparents, their uncles or aunts, their wives, their concubines or their servants, burglars with violence, spreaders of mischievous reports and men lying under sentence of court-martial. To all others a free and full pardon is accorded. It is curious to find so much importance attached to the offence of mischief-mongering, and the obvious inference is that the Manchu Dynasty feels very uneasy in the presence of disaffection. With regard to sentences of court-martials, an exception is made in favour of military men who, during three years of banishment, have been reported for good conduct, as well as men who have attained their 70th year. The Decree also orders that pecuniary rewards shall be given to farmers who have distinguished themselves by diligence in agriculture, and that rank shall be conferred on all persons who have attained their 70th year. These ranks ascend in proportion to the age of the recipient, and are to be accompanied by a gift of money in the case of centenarians. There is finally a reference to widows and orphans who are supported in asylums at the public expense: the authorities who manage such asylums are exhorted to increase their efforts in behalf of these unfortunates.

It is alleged by the Peking correspondent of the Mainichi Dempo that a sum of 20 million taels has been found among the effects of the late Empress Dowager. Foreign economists have always been perplexed to explain whence accrued the large revenues that support the Imperial House in Peking, and the discovery of such a great sum lying idle in the treasury of her late Majesty will increase the perplexity.

Saturday, December 5.

An Imperial Decree has been published in Peking confirming the Decree of the late Emperor which was based on the will of the late Empress Dowager. This new Decree in the most emphatic terms enjoins upon the officials concerned the duty of carrying out the preparations for constitutional government, so that it shall become an accomplished fact within the time originally indicated, namely, nine years. The decree definitely fixes the 8th year of the new Era (Hsuan-tung) as the time for opening the first parliament. This new year period begins in 1909, and its 8th year will therefore be 1916, that is to say, the year before the great Exhibition in Japan. This coincidence helps to fix our ideas as to the proximity of the mighty change which China is about to undergo. People in general have fallen into a deep groove as to their manner of thinking about China, and it is almost impossible to them to conceive the idea of a Congress of Chinese subjects meeting in Peking and discussing affairs of State. Imagine the interest that will attach to the first Chinese budget, which may be expected to dispel all the clouds of perplexity and uncertainty that have hitherto dimmed the vision of situalogues when they attempted to discuss Chinese finance.

The Viceroy of Szechuan has memorialized the Throne advising that a mining office should be established in that great province with a capital of 3 million taels, put up for the most part by the people themselves, but supplemented by the Government, should that be necessary. Broadly speaking, his Excellency's idea is that all mining operations hereafter undertaken in Szechuan should be carried on in the name and under the direction of this Bureau. Indirectly this plan, if carried out, would prevent all further concessions to foreign companies in Szechuan, since its charter would extend to all mineral deposits not hitherto worked, or hereafter discovered, throughout the whole province. The present Viceroy of Szechuan is Mr. Chao, formerly Governor-General of Mukden.

Something in the nature of a riot on account of excessive taxation is reported from Kansu, but it does not appear to be a matter of any consequence.

Shanghai is talking of the restoration of Wei-hai-wei to China next year, but some more trustworthy intelligence is needed before such a rumour is credited.

It is reported from Peking that his Excellency Chang Chih-tung is suffering from a severe cough and that his illness is causing some uneasiness.

Sunday, December 6.

A species of political party seems to have been formed in Peking under the name of Constitutional Progressists. They are said to have sent out a circular alleging that there was much dispute in the Palace about the appointment of a Regent and that the death of the Emperor was due to the machinations of Yuan Shihkai. The Government, in reply to this circular, has addressed to the various newspapers published in the Chinese language a statement setting forth in detail the circumstances of his Majesty's demise. The telegrams leave us ignorant of the facts contained in the latter interesting document.

Monday, December 7.

A censor named Pi has memorialized the Throne in the sense that students ought to be sent abroad for the purpose of studying naval science. This memorial has been approved by the Throne. We have not hitherto heard of any Chinese students visiting Japan for the above purpose, but in all probability they will now begin to come.

It is stated that the Dalai Lama, who is now en route for Lhasa, has requested that in future he be permitted to address the Chinese Throne direct instead of sending his communications through the Chinese Representative in Tibet.

We read in the Mainichi Dempo's telegrams that the project for the construction of a railway from Hankow to the capital of Szechuan, namely Chingtu, is meeting with financial difficulties. This has always been regarded as one of the most important railways in China, since it would not only render easily accessible the biggest province in the Chinese Empire, but also would overcome the immense difficulties of navigation presented by the upper reaches of the Yangtze. At first the idea was to borrow money for the construction of the line, but the people of Hupoh, who are proverbially conservative, objected strongly to any employment of foreign money, and it was therefore decided to have recourse to Chinese capital. Vigorously worded circulars were addressed to the wealthy residents in the various provinces traversed by the line, and it was decided that the face value of the shares should be only 5 dollars, so as to bring them within easy reach of a wide circle. But in the present state of the domestic money market this programme has not been attended with success. Only 5 million dollars worth of shares have been subscribed for, and the project is hung up for the moment. The total amount needed is not stated, but the sum required for the Hangyang Ichang section alone is over 30 million dollars. The Szechuan people appear to have commenced their end of the line.

The notorious B'g Blade rioters have made an irruption over the Shantung border into Honan, and Government troops have been sent to quell them.

News from Hankow as to the economic situation is not reassuring. The three banks which recently closed their doors have pulled down 13 or 14 smaller institutions; bankruptcies of more or less important merchants are occurring daily, and neither bank paper nor commercial bills command any credit. It is now said that the trouble has its origin in the excessive issues of copper coins. In the presence of this debased currency silver has been driven out, copper has depreciated, prices have risen and money has become scarce. It is the old vicious circle, and the only reassuring feature is that the authorities have vetoed the issue of any more copper cash.

Although the rice crop in Hupoh has been excellent this year, the local authorities, faithful to their traditions of paternal government, have vetoed the export of grain. It is a curious device, that of preventing men from selling the proceeds of their labour in the best markets for the benevolent purpose of facilitating their means of livelihood.

It appears that the corpses of the unfortunate people who lost their lives in the sea off Chefoo by the wreck of the Ginsei Maru and the Dai San Nagato Maru have received shocking treatment at the hands of the Chinese inhabiting the coast. Including the crews, the death-list totalled 750, and as fast as the bodies were washed ashore they were not only stripped of all their clothing and robbed of any money found on their persons, but even their teeth were pulled out to get at the gold contained in them, and their fingers were cut off for the sake of the rings. It is stated that among these unfortunates there were a number of labourers returning from Manchuria with the proceeds of the year's savings, and also a number of persons who had visited Antung and its neighbourhood for the purpose of purchasing the wild silk cocoons which are produced in the country north of the Yalu, and which are carried every year to Chefoo to be there reeled and spun. It is thought that the catastrophe will have a serious economic effect on Chefoo.

Tuesday, December 8.

It appears that Japan's project of reducing to three companies her troops which have been posted in the metropolitan province of China since the Boxer outbreak, was interrupted for a time by the recent events in Peking, which events suggested the wisdom of awaiting the outcome of the political situation. Now that a peaceful solution is certain, it has been decided, according to the Hochi Shinbun, to proceed with the work of reduction at once. The overland movement of the troops will commence on the 15th inst. and the programme is that they shall embark for Japan at Dairen. It is expected that the withdrawal will be completed before the end of January.

Wednesday, December 9.

The latest statement as to the reduction of the Japanese garrison in Pechili is that the troops are to embark at Chinwangtao on the 18th inst. It will be remembered that a previous telegram spoke of the men being moved overland; but evidently such a method was exceedingly unlikely at this season of the year, unless some special reason existed.

The International Conference on opium, which is to meet in Shanghai, has been postponed until the 1st of February next.

There is some talk of a strike on the part of the South Manchuria Railway employees who are losing their positions in the sequel of the great reforms recently carried out. Tielhing and Mukden are spoken of as the centres of disaffection. Cipher telegrams have frequently been passing between the men at the two places, but the authorities are said to be keenly on the watch.

A telegram from Peking to the Kokumin Shinbun says that there is much talk in the Chinese capital of the expediency of appointing Mr. Wu Tingfang to be Grand Tutor to the new Emperor.

There are rumours of an insurrectionary movement in the provinces of Hunan, Kweichow and Shansi, but they are of the vaguest character.

Thursday, December 10.

The posthumous name of the late Emperor of China has been fixed as Taosung, a term which conveys the impression that His Majesty's administrative qualities are specially commemorated.

It is stated that their Excellencies Tang Shaoi and Wu Ting-fang have been commissioned by the Chinese Government to negotiate with the Washington Authorities with reference to the abolition of likin and a tentative establishment of gold monometallism in the Middle Kingdom. This telegram leaves a great deal to be desired in point of lucidity. It indicates two reforms of enormous importance, for, if likin were abolished and if the terrible element of gambling were removed from China's trade by adopting gold monometallism, there need be no limit to the development of her commerce with the outside world. Further news of the two schemes will be awaited with the keenest interest.

The Viceroy of Manchuria is reported to have issued a very arbitrary order to all the provincial authorities under his jurisdiction. He has directed that communications coming from Chinese students studying abroad shall, before delivery to their addressees, be opened and examined by the local censors, and anything calculated to disturb public peace and good order shall be suppressed. The thought suggested by such administrative measures is that China is very unfortunate in being obliged to take them. If a visit to foreign countries and introduction to the evidences of progress seen in Japan and in the West have such a disturbing effect upon the minds of Chinese students, the contrast between the conditions existing at home and abroad must be very great. On the other hand, it is inevitable that the near approach of the immense change which the Chinese polity is to undergo in 1916 should disturb the minds of the people. A similar prospect produced somewhat analogous results in Japan, except that here the agitation did not present any revolutionary feature, but was merely a collision between political parties, in other words, between conservatism and radicalism. Japan is fortunate in the possession of a great steady-point, namely, the Throne, whereas in China's case it may almost be said that the reigning dynasty is a source of instability.

The Mainichi Dempo has a very interesting telegram from Tielhing. It says that a meeting held at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce in that town was attended by some 250 persons, representing men of substance and influence. An animated discussion took place with regard to a railway which it is proposed to build between Hailung and Tielhing. We have already referred to the project for a railway from Hailung to Kaiyuan, and, as Tielhing lies about midway between the latter place and Mukden, the line now talked of is practically the same as the Kaiyuan route, that is to say, in each case alike, the idea is to connect Hailung with the South Manchuria Railway system by a road carried along the bases of the mountains which lie between Hailung and Kilin. The meeting at Tielhing decided to make every effort for promoting the scheme and to apply for official permission as soon as ever the preliminaries are arranged. It appears that gold mines, coal mines and iron mines exist in the neighbourhood of Hailung, but can not yet be worked to advantage owing to lack of means of communication.

Speaking of coal recalls the fact that the product of the Fushun mine does not appear to have yet entered the market in competition with the Japanese mineral. The price of the latter went up rapidly during the War, and although inferior grades of coal are cheaper now than they were three years ago, screened coal costs more than it ever did. The causes assigned for this fact are that the Kyushu supply is running short, or at any rate getting more difficult to take out, and that, so long as Shanghai, Singapore and Hongkong are willing to pay high prices for the Japanese mineral, the domestic market can not expect to get easier. One would think that Fushun should find its opportunity in these conditions, but apparently it does not, and, that being the case, it is hard to see how mineral taken out in the Kaiyuan districts can have a very promising future.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIA RAILWAY.

There is no longer any doubt that an extensive scheme of reform is to be carried out on the South Manchuria Railway. A telegram to the Asahi Shinbun from Dairen gives details as to the abolition or amalgamation of existing offices, and it is believed that cardinal economies will be effected.

Meanwhile the Kokumin Shinbun quotes at considerable length statements attributed to Mr. Nonomura, one of the managing directors of the Railway. He repeats the assurance that the Railway Authorities are determined to pursue a positive and enterprising policy. The only properties that are now paying handsomely are the railway and the coal mine, but the Company has no idea of abandoning collateral undertakings because they are temporarily unprofitable. Thus the steamship service between Shanghai and Dairen now shows a loss of 100,000 yen a year, but, instead of being deterred by this, the Company proposes to put on another steamer, being convinced that to make popular the Trans-Asian line via Dairen is an imperative duty. The hotels again are not paying as yet, but they are absolutely necessary if passenger traffic is to be encouraged. The same may be said of hospitals, and as for schools conducted under the auspices of the Company, there are 700 children in attendance now, whereas there were only 30 at the end of last year. The Chun Railway will be commenced next Kilin Changspring, and, as it will carry all the rich products of the country about Kilin, it can not fail to bring a great access of traffic to the main line. Referring to the interesting subject of the Mukden-Antung road, this authority says that, whereas its traffic receipts last year amounted to only 600 yen a day, and the loss on a year's working was 500,000 yen, the corresponding figures for the current year are 1,200 yen and 200,000 yen, respectively. It is anticipated that, when the line is reconstructed, it will carry considerable quantities of Korean rice to Manchuria, for there is a substantial difference of price between the Korean cereal and that produced in the Three Eastern Provinces. As for the main road, it is making excellent progress. Thus, between April and September of the current year, the number of passengers carried showed an increase of 200,000, and the quantity of goods an increase of 500,000 tons, as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

We may mention in this context that the Asahi Shinbun quotes a foreigner who lately made the journey from Shanghai to Europe via Vladivostok, and on his return travelled by Dairen. He says that there is a clear gain of 2 days by the latter route, and, as a matter of fact, a letter recently posted in Shanghai was delivered in London on the 15th day, which constitutes a new record. Besides, there is a distinct gain in point of cheapness. Thus a traveller from Shanghai who crosses to Dairen by the Kobe Maru, can travel 1st class the whole way for 307 roubles, whereas if he goes by Vladivostok he has to pay 407 roubles. On the other hand, going by the Japanese line involves making a change of cars at Kwan-chengtsz, which is not convenient for persons having heavy baggage. A curious fact is that, although the Dairen route means a saving of 100 roubles for a 1st-class passenger, the Vladivostok route is cheaper for a 2nd-class passenger. This is probably due in great part to the fact that the Russian Volunteer-Fleet steamers have no 2nd-class cabins, and therefore so-called 2nd-class passengers have to travel 3rd class by that line. Still this subject of 2nd class fares is worthy of attention.

Reverting to Mr. Nonomura's statements, he points out that the foreign trade of Dairen is increasing rapidly, and that, although it is not the desire of the Japanese authorities in any sense to substitute Dairen for Newchwang, there can be no doubt that the former place is assuming greater relative importance. Thus, whereas the imports at Dairen aggregated only 16,391,911 yen in 1906, they grew to 29,473,510 yen in 1907, and they amounted to 21,579,876 yen for the first six months of the current year, so that the total figure for the year will probably be at least 40 millions. At Newchwang, on the contrary, the imports in 1906 were 60,314,734 yen, whereas in 1907 they fell to 35,197,746 yen. In the matter of exports a similar result has to be noted. Thus, whereas the figure for Dairen in 1907 was 15,475,873 yen, the figure for the first half of the current year was 15,562,343 yen, so that the aggregate for the whole year is likely to exceed 30 millions. Newchwang, however, exported 28 million yen of goods in 1906, and this figure grew to only 29 millions in 1907.

THE "ENTENTE."

Friday, December 4.

New York now telegraphs to the Jiji Shimpō and the Nippon, in the sense that there is talk of an Entente between Germany and Japan. The telegram represents German statesmen as somewhat unwilling to be left outside the circle of peaceful influences, and as entertaining some slight apprehensions in connexion with the effect produced on the Japanese nation by the Kaiser's recent utterances. Careful readers of Japanese current literature can not hide from themselves the fact that there exists in the bosoms of the Japanese a considerable measure of perplexity about German policy. The methods pursued at Kiaochow left an indelible mark on the Far East, and Germany's subsequent declaration to the effect that she did not regard Manchuria as a part of China proper—for that is practically what her announcement amounted to—makes it difficult to conceive of her becoming a party to any agreement guaranteeing the integrity of China's dominions. These are the two obstacles that lie in the way to an Entente, but they are not invincible obstacles, and certainly the position is not entirely satisfactory so long as Germany is excluded. Who can tell but her inclusion might constitute the first step to better relations between her and certain European Powers. At all events it would lessen the raison d'être of the big fleet she is now building.

Our readers have heard so much about the traditional friendship between America and Japan, and have had to swallow so many adjectives in the context of this latest Entente, that we refrain from publishing any further translations of appreciations uttered on either side of the water. We include in this comment the utterances of the Japanese Ambassador in Washington except in so far as they deprecate the idea that any new situation has been created between the high contracting Parties. They have merely set down on paper a statement of the sentiment and policy by which they would have been guided, even in the absence of any document whatever.

An incidental effect of this Entente is to subject the Russian Government to an attack which seems to be essentially inspired by post facto wisdom. Certain journals of St. Petersburg point out that Japan has now definitely established her character as a peace-loving nation, and that Russia's position in the Far East would be very different to-day had she, recognising Japan's real disposition, refrained from robbing her of the spolia acquired by the Shimonoseki Treaty. That criticism seems to us to be distinctly defective. It has long been perfectly plain that Russia's irretrievable error was made, not after the Shimonoseki Treaty, but when she failed to accept Japan's final proposals in 1903. It was those proposals that emphatically proved Japan to be a genuine lover of peace, and it was those proposals that would have left Russia in virtual possession of Manchuria and of the free access to southern seas so long coveted by her. Her position to-day, had she appreciated Japan's intentions and capacities, would have been almost illimitably different from what it actually is, so far as concerns the Far East at any rate.

We observe that Mr. Matsuda Masahisa, Minister of Finance in the last Cabinet, and the Yomiuri Shimbun unite in condemning the Entente as superfluous. The Yomiuri, indeed, goes so far as to apply to it the Chinese epithet, "rib bones of a chicken," an article of diet which although it has neither succulence nor savour, is yet too good for the ash-pit. In fact, our contemporary does not hesitate to denounce the Entente as a device for giving a fillip to the Stock Exchange. We may mention here that the Yomiuri is no longer an organ of the Progressist Party. It seems rather to lean in the direction of the Seiyu-kai.

Saturday, December 5.

Quotations from American and French papers on the subject of the Entente are reaching Tokyo in great numbers, but these echoes of Occidental opinion have ceased to possess much interest. We may sum them up therefore by saying that the leading American journals express the conviction that the tongues of the mischief makers are now effectually silenced, and that it is no longer possible for any one to pretend to suspect Japan of aggressive designs upon the Philippines or Hawaii. Special satisfaction is expressed with reference to the 5th article, which pledges the high contracting Parties to take counsel of each other before undertaking any enterprise for the purpose of preserving the principle of the open door or of China's integrity. To us (Japan Mail) the importance of this article can hardly be over-rated, for it has evidently a direct bearing upon the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. It ensures that any step taken by Japan in connexion with the Alliance, so far as Far Eastern affairs are concerned, will have the concurrence of the United States.

The French press is almost equally congratulatory, with the exception of Le Temps, which is apparently disposed to regard the Entente as a patchwork sort of affair, whose value time must be left to demonstrate. The Journal infers that Japan has agreed to some restraint upon her sea-power in the Pacific, but by way of compensation has secured a period of peace for the development of her material resources and the adjustment of her finances.

A representative of the Kokumin Shimbun has waited upon the German Ambassador in Tokyo and obtained an expression of his Excellency's views with regard to the Entente. Baron Mumm speaks in an entirely appreciative strain. He says that the understanding will dispel all the clouds which, owing to the contrivance of mischief makers, had more or less obscured the relations between the United States and Japan, and will place on definite record the unwritten agreement hitherto existing between the two countries. As for Germany, both Baron Chinda and Mr. Hill informed the Berlin Government about the intention of concluding such an entente, and this measure was accepted by Germany as a proof of friendly feeling. Germany seeks nothing but free commercial development, and from that point of view she welcomes everything that makes for the principle of the open door and equal opportunities. The Triple Alliance, which she has cemented in Central Europe, has for its main purpose the peaceful pursuit of commerce and industry, and it has hitherto fulfilled that purpose. Germany aims at nothing more.

Wednesday, December 9.

It was of course anticipated by the Cabinets of Tokyo and Washington alike that when the vehicle of diplomatic notes was chosen for the purposes of the Entente, criticism would be provoked on the part of the United States Senators. The choice of such a method is well understood to have been expressly made for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of consulting the Senate beforehand, that body having already demonstrated that its method of dealing with diplomatic questions is not of the most circumspect character. The Senate itself, however, can not be expected to recognise that its own shortcomings dictated its exclusion from the arrangement, and we are not surprised to learn that the question is likely to be brought forward as soon as the Congress meets. The telegrams do not suggest that there is any disposition to condemn the Entente itself. The only point is that senatorial dignity is ruffled by the exclusion of that august body from the arrangement. Government by the people is a very fine thing in its way, but it certainly does not conduce to the easy solution of international problems.

We may mention here that the diplomatic denials which, up to the eleventh hour, pre-faced the official announcement of the conclusion of the Entente, seem to have inspired the public with more than its wonted distrust of all diplomatic declarations. Thus, although Berlin strenuously denies that there was any talk of the conclusion of a German-Japanese entente, the denial is not accepted in New York, but is regarded rather as cognate with the negotiations which preceded the Japanese-American Arrangement.

The Mainichi Shimbun repeats its asseveration that the next move on the diplomatic chess board will be an entente between Peking and Washington. It has certainly been very curious and very anomalous that China should have been the corpus vile of numerous covenants all relating to the preservation of her territorial integrity, but none including any agreement on her own part. She has in short been set up in the East as a kind of interesting infant which the various great Powers of the world desire to preserve against one another's aggressions, though they regard the baby as too impotent to be worth consulting about its own fate. Naturally the Chinese resent this suggestive exclusion from arrangements which vitally concern them, and there can be no doubt that they would gladly alter the curious custom. But the difficulty is to conceive any reasonable lines upon which an entente with China could be concluded. She might indeed pledge herself to maintain the principle of the open door in consideration of a promise to guard her territorial integrity, but that America would set the example of signing such a covenant is very problematical, and moreover, all the great Powers are now pledged to keep China's dominions intact.

THE BOYCOTT.

There are some rumours rather difficult to understand with reference to the boycott. It is alleged that the boycotters do not extend their campaign to Japanese stores, and that a plan is on foot to establish such stores in Hongkong and to supply them with marine products direct from Japan. But at one stage of the boycott it was distinctly stated that all Chinese purchasing goods at Japanese stores suffered ostracism or other ill-treatment at the hands of the boycotters, and thus the efficacy of this new device seems very doubtful. Meanwhile news comes that the leaders of the boycott, exasperated by the drastic methods of the British authorities to put an end to all lawless procedure which imposes restrictions upon trade within the limits of the Colony, are now agitating for the extension of the boycott to British goods also.

KOREA.

Saturday, December 5.

The Young Men's Christian Association has been very active of late in Seoul. It held opening exercises on the 30th ultimo and the 1st inst. in its new Hall, and among those present was Dr. Timothy Richard, whose great work as a missionary in China has been before the world for nearly two score years. The exercises seem to have extended to the 3rd inst., and on the evening of the 4th Prince Ito invited Dr. Richard and the prominent Korean members of the Association to a banquet at the Residency General. The Prince made a brief speech, the gist of which, as telegraphed to Tokyo, was that in matters of religion differences of new and old, domestic and foreign, should not be recognised, and that in Korea all might count on perfect freedom of conscience. Dr. Richard, in reply, is said to have expressed profound admiration of the results that have crowned Prince Ito's great work in Korea.

The Hochi Shinbun has a telegram from Seoul, which says that a number of members of the Young Men's Christian Association are endeavouring to take advantage of its organisation for anti-Japanese purposes. It would seem that in the eyes of the average Korean everything in the shape of a combination of individuals must either have political significance or be invested with it. Another example of this is furnished by the Salvation Army in Seoul. Its parades in the streets, its uniform-wearing and its music are construed by the Koreans as evidences of a military organisation, and they believe themselves to be in the presence of an attempt on the part of American citizens to annex Korea. The result is said to be considerable agitation.

Monday, December 7.

There has again been talk of a change of Cabinet in Korea, and indeed it is not wonderful that men should be speaking of such an event, for the present Cabinet has lasted quite an unconscionable time from a Korean point of view. Prince Ito is quoted, however, as saying that the Cabinet has discharged its functions too admirably to permit any idea of change. It is said to be thought, nevertheless, that one or two portfolios may be transferred to new hands.

The Hochi Shinbun publishes a very interesting interview said to have taken place between a member of its staff and General Hasegawa. The latter is quoted as saying that the present disturbers of the peace in Korea may be distinctly divided into two classes. In the first place, there are the incendiary bandits who make their appearance every year about harvest time, and continue their depredations until the following spring, in the provinces of Hwanghai, Hamyeong and Chihollado. These folks do not at all partake of the nature of rebels. They are mere robbers, and they have been one of the curses of Korea from time immemorial. Nothing short of drastic administrative reforms will abolish them. On the other hand, there are the genuine insurgents, who call themselves Wipyeong, and who came into existence at the time of the abdication of the ex-Emperor. Nearly all the leaders, great and small, of these insurgents have been killed or captured. When one of them was brought into General Hasegawa's presence and questioned as to whether he and his followers really had any hope of holding their ground against the Japanese regular troops, he replied that they had no such hope. With what purpose then did they keep the field, was the next question put. To this the man replied that the orders issued were to avoid as far as possible any encounter with the Japanese and to confine their operations to districts where Japanese troops happened to be absent. By pursuing this programme their hope was, not merely to wear out the patience of the Japanese, but also to create the impression that Japan is incompetent to restore peace in Korea, and that her interference in the affairs of the Peninsula tends only to disturbance and bloodshed. If the world could be induced to believe this, foreign countries must ultimately interfere.

General Hasegawa is further quoted as saying that the Eastern Development Company will have to proceed with great circumspection, for a suspicion still exists among the Koreans that the object of the Company is to buy up all the land in Korea and convert the country into a Japanese colony. It will be remembered that some such apprehension was frankly confessed by some of the Korean members of the Establishment Committee who recently visited Japan, and that this element of distrust was supposed to have been effectually removed before the committee-men left Japan. Nevertheless, doubts appear to have lingered in their minds after all, and the Directors of the Company are said to be devising means for reassuring the Koreans in general, and convincing them that the Company means to work in their interests.

Another statement attributed to General Hasegawa is that the number of the Il Ching-hoi throughout the provinces who have been due to death by the rebels aggregates 2,000, and that many of the survivors are reduced to a state of great indigence. The recent visit of their leader to Japan was probably connected with this question. Prince Ito has done everything in his power to afford relief, but naturally he can not entirely satisfy all the claimants, and consequently there are not wanting men who accuse him of insufficient sympathy.

The last statement attributed to the General is that the visit of the Korean Prince Imperial to Japan has had an excellent effect on the relations between the two countries. Undoubtedly it was believed at the Palace that the little Prince would never live to leave Japan, and the pain that his parents must have felt at parting from him can not but have been indescribable. Daily evidence is now reaching them that the Prince's health is excellent, that he is progressing with his studies, and that he is leading a happy life, well cared for by all from the Mikado himself downwards. This has effectually broken down the barriers which long existed between the Court and the Japanese. Thus Lady Om, mother of the Crown Prince, received General Hasegawa for the first time on the occasion of the latter's recent departure from Korea; expressed regret for never having received him before, and begged him to thank the Imperial Family of Japan for all the kindness shown by them to the little Prince.

Tuesday, December 8.

With regard to the manner of employing the loan of 20 million yen recently floated by the Industrial Bank in behalf of Korea, it is stated that the Korean Government will pay back 5 million yen of its present debt to the Bank, and will employ a large part of the remaining sum to making a thorough cadastral survey of the whole country. In the absence of any such authentic survey, the area of land liable for taxation has been steadily declining for many years past, and there is no room to doubt that the income of the Government would be largely increased if a more scientific system were adopted.

A telegram to the Asahi from Seoul says that the current rumour about a pending change of Cabinet is utilized by many unscrupulous people. Under pretext of having secured the promise of appointment to various high offices, these persons are freely extorting money from their ignorant countrymen. This story is suggestive of the state of affairs habitually existing in the Peninsula Empire.

Wednesday, December 9.

Considerable reductions in the staff of the Imperial Court are said to be pending as a part of the reforms contemplated by Prince Ito.

It is stated by the Mainichi Dempo's Seoul correspondent that the proprietors of the Outlook Magazine have made a direct announcement to the Korean Sovereign in the sense that, as Mr. Roosevelt is to assume the editorship of that magazine from next March, it will be advisable for His Majesty to use the magazine as a medium for all communications relating to Korea. This is a pretty tall departure on the part of the Outlook, but after all there is no reason why a periodical edited by an ex-Chief Magistrate should not address itself direct to a reigning Sovereign.

The Yorodu Choho has an extraordinary paragraph with reference to the electric railway and electric lighting in Seoul. Our contemporary does not hesitate to attribute flagrant dishonesty to the foreign partners in these enterprises, but of course we refrain from reproducing charges which no person of common sense will be disposed to credit.

AMERICA AND THE GREAT EXHIBITION IN JAPAN.

According to the Asahi's lengthy telegraphic report of the President's Message to Congress, Mr. Roosevelt spoke quite enthusiastically of the Exhibition of 1917 in Tokyo. He said that the postponement of the project from 1912 to 1917 would afford a better opportunity for American citizens to participate in an affair which would not only be unique as the first international exhibition held in the East, but would also mark the 50th anniversary of the accession of a Sovereign under whose sway his country had leaped almost at one bound into a foremost place among the nations. America could not better show the sincere friendship she entertains for Japan than by heartily participating in this Exhibition.

The Message is said to have been of immense length, extending to no less than 44 pages, and The Times is reported to have observed with some sarcasm that American statesmen are fortunate in having time to compile and the American people time to peruse such documents. It is indeed true that under President Roosevelt's regime the annual messages have assumed vast dimensions, but on the other hand each year has added to the importance of every word uttered by Mr. Roosevelt, for he has certainly succeeded in making himself one of the great personalities of modern history. Besides, a special interest attaches to this last message because, in view of Mr. Taft's declarations, it may be taken as setting forth the views, not only of the outgoing President, but also of the incoming.

THE BOYCOTT.

There are some rumours rather to understand with reference to the boycott. It is alleged that the boycotters intend their campaign to Japanese goods in Hongkong and to supply their needs of products direct from Japan. It is stated that all Chinese purchasing goods in these stores suffered ostracism, and thus the efficacy of the boycott seems very doubtful. It is also stated that the leaders of the boycott were exasperated by the drastic measures British authorities had imposed in regard to the boycott within the limits of the port, and now agitating for the extension of the boycott to British goods also.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, December 4.

The latest news about this strange affair is that, in spite of the alleged ignorance of the Mukden authorities and their denial of having in any way inspired the naturalization order issued by the Chi-hsien, telegraphic news received by the Japanese Consul-General in Mukden on the 2nd inst. confirmed the facts recently reported. Mr. Okabe is said to be urging the Mukden officials to take steps for immediately rescinding the arbitrary order.

The Mainichi Dempo, having despatched one of its staff to the Foreign Office in Tokyo in search of information, finds that there can be no doubt as to the truth of the incidents. The local authorities in western Chientao have certainly issued an instruction in the sense that all Koreans residing in the district—and there are a great many of them—must at once choose between quitting the country and becoming naturalized Chinese. If they select the former alternative, the prohibition of the export of grain will prevent them from carrying away their recently reaped crops. In the place of this extremely harsh procedure many of the Koreans have become naturalized, and have adopted the Chinese queue. As to what steps Mr. Okabe has taken, however, the Foreign Office is not informed.

Saturday, December 5.

Not much fresh light has yet been thrown on the coal-mining complication at Hsintung. Another of the Managing Directors of the South Manchuria Railway is quoted by the Asahi Shimbun as saying that, so far as the Company itself is concerned, it has not received any intelligence of the incident. Some time ago a Chinese subject obtained permission from his Government to exploit a seam of coal which was obviously an outcrop of the Fushun deposit, but the Railway Company immediately lodged an objection. This may be the matter now reported, or it may be that, as the general question of the mine's ownership remains unsettled, the Chinese authorities have vetoed any exploitation beyond the limits of the original workings. Altogether it will be seen that very vague ideas prevail on the subject, and at any rate it is not likely to prove a troublesome complication, inasmuch as Viceroy Hsu and his subordinates, while reserving the fundamental question, are said to have shown both courtesy and liberality in assisting the Japanese to buy up property which interfered with the working of the mines.

Sunday, December 6.

The Lingkiang question appears to have been satisfactorily settled. At the instance of the Japanese Consul-General, his Excellency Hsu, Viceroy of Manchuria, is said to have telegraphically instructed the Chi-hsien of the district in question to rescind his order for the naturalization or withdrawal of all Korean subjects in Lingkiang. It appears that in issuing this order the Chi-hsien laboured under a wholly false impression as to the intentions of the Viceroy. He had gathered this impression on the occasion of a visit to Mukden paid by him last spring.

The Hsintung coal-mine question has been settled for the moment by the issue of an order from the Viceroy forbidding all digging of coal by Chinese subjects in that district until the question of boundaries is definitely settled. We read in the Asahi Shimbun that the outcrop under dispute is on the south bank of the Hun River, about 13 miles from Fushun, and that it obviously forms part of the coal beds of the latter place. The coal shows on the surface at some places, and certain Chinese subjects have been tempted to excavate on a small scale.

Tuesday, December 8.

The reconstruction of the Mukden-Antung Railway is to be commenced, it is said, as soon as the snow of winter disappears. The cost is estimated at 24 million yen. This is a bold enterprise, for at present the line is a veritable white elephant. It figures in the books of the South Manchuria Railway Company for a substantial loss every year, but the idea is that it could not possibly be expected to attract either passengers or goods in its present imperfect condition. When this road is finished passengers for Europe will have the choice of three transcontinental routes, namely via Vladivostok, via Fusan and via Dairen. With a little management it should be possible to make the Fusan route the quickest of the three, and it would have the further advantage of entailing the shortest sea voyage, so far at any rate as passengers from Japan are concerned.

Wednesday, December 9.

Major-General Kojima has just returned from the Yalu, where he has for some time been in charge of the lumber operations. He is quoted by Tokyo papers as saying that during the season about a million and a half trees can be felled and rafted. Only seven months in the year are available for the work, the remaining five months being a time of snow and ice. During the summer, about 1000 Japanese workmen are employed, but their number dwindles to 200 when winter sets in. The Koreans in the region prefer Chinese jurisdiction to Japanese, and not infrequently they cross the Yalu and settle on the north bank for the express purpose of coming under Chinese sway. The Major-General says nothing about the financial results of the enterprise, but we learn from an independent source that they have been much better than was originally estimated.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

On the 4th instant the organisation of the new Railway Board took place formally in Tokyo. Baron Goto becomes Governor and Mr. S. Hirai, Vice-Governor. Five Bureaux are created, namely, the Central Superintendent Bureau, the Western Superintendent Bureau, the Kynshu Superintendent Bureau, the Eastern Superintendent Bureau and the Hokkaido Superintendent Bureau. Baron Goto, in announcing the organisation, said that its main object was not by any means to reduce the number of the Staff, as some persons supposed. Its main object was to effect such improvements as would materially facilitate railway traffic. If the services of some officials were dispensed with, that was merely an incident of the general reform. Large powers are to be delegated to the Superintendent Bureaux, as experience has shown that local conditions require to be promptly dealt with in order to prevent vexatious delays. There is also to be an Investigation Bureau, to which all questions will be submitted, and whose advice will generally be final. This is considered essential in order to secure the best expert assistance.

This creation of Superintendent Bureaux—one at Ueno in Tokyo; one at Shimbashi in Tokyo; one at Kobe; one at Moji; and one at Sapporo—is taken as ground for strong criticism by some newspapers, conspicuously the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, which has always been an uncompromising opponent of railway nationalization. That journal now argues that whereas the prominent reason assigned by the Government for its nationalization scheme was the removal of abuses consequent upon divided management, this same Government has now organised a system of which divided management is a leading feature. Our contemporary further urges that to speak of the independence of the new Board is ridiculous, seeing that its Chief is none other than the Minister of State for Communications himself. How can a Board be said to be independent of a Cabinet when it is presided over by a Cabinet Minister?

For our own part we can not but think that the critics are confounding financial independence with operating independence. We fail to see how the business of the Railway Board could possibly be carried on in a satisfactory manner if everything had to be referred to headquarters in Tokyo. From that point of view the establishment of semi-independent bureaux at the chief local centres appears to be a rational and an essential measure. It can not be supposed that when the Government decided upon nationalization it contemplated such a degree of centralization as would have substituted red tape for the dislocation previously existing. As to whether it would not be wiser to place the governorship in the hands of an official who is not a member of the Cabinet, there is room for much difference of opinion. We are ourselves disposed to think that the combination of the two offices is unwise, but we base that view solely upon the consideration that to discharge the dual business efficiently is beyond the capacity of any one man. Besides Baron Goto carries on his back the business of the South Manchuria Railway also, which extends even to Korea.

THE ACME OF SUSPICION.

A weekly journal published in Munich, and described as a scientific magazine, is reported by telegraph to have propounded a novel theory about Japanese hospitality. Referring specially to the celebrated Dr. Koch, it says that the hospitality lavished on him by Japan was deliberately contrived to throw dust in his eyes, so that he might not detect the true character of the people he was visiting, but should see them only through an atmosphere of champagne and geisha. This theme is enlarged upon. It is extended so as to embrace all Japan's courtesies, and the writer warns his countrymen not to accept the verdicts of transient travellers like Dr. Koch on any subject except the charms of the dancing girl. The Niroku Shimbun publishes this intelligence, and dubs it the acme of suspicion. The title is not strong enough, but no one need torment his intelligence to find epithets for the propounder of such a theory. There is no limit to the abject meanness of human nature, nor would it be easy to climb down to a lower depth of depraved churlishness than that of the mind which conceived and gave utterance to the dictum of this Munich boor. Happily he is a rare exception, but we wish that he belonged to some nation other than the one which fate seems to be now bent upon converting into the Ishmael of the twentieth century.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

The Mainichi Dempo has an interesting paragraph which announces in almost so many words that an understanding has been arrived at between the Seiyu kai and the Cabinet. Prince Ito is represented by our contemporary as having been at the root of this arrangement. Ever since he formed the Seiyu kai, his Highness is said to have been a firm believer in the efficacy of political parties, and in the necessity of their support to any Cabinet which hopes to administer successfully. The Prince has therefore impressed these views upon Marquis Katsura, and has urged that the Seiyu kai should receive due consideration from the Government, no attempt being made either to crush or to corrupt the Party. With regard to minor questions, freedom of action should be left to the members, but in all serious problems of State the Ministry should be able to reckon on their support. Views in that sense are said to have been subsequently interchanged between the Premier and Marquis Saionji.

Another article in the same paper speaks of a probable coalition between the Seiyu kai, the Daido Club and the Boshin Club. According to this analysis, it appears that, while the Seiyu kai command nearly 200 votes in the Lower House, only 120 of these can be absolutely counted on to obey the behests of their leader, Marquis Saionji. The remainder are waverers who might break away in the presence of any emergency, and thus the Seiyu kai would be left in a minority. To guard against such a catastrophe the plan of a temporary coalition of the above nature is said to be entertained, on the understanding that the Vice-Presidency of the House, and the chairmanship of the whole House, shall go to the members of the Daido and the Boshin. This coalition would, of course, support the Cabinet.

According to Tokyo newspapers, the mood of the Daido Club is not altogether complacent. When the Katsura Cabinet came into power, the Club expected that their own importance would be largely increased and that steps would be taken to augment their strength by way of balancing the Seiyu kai. But Marquis Katsura's policy proves to be one of absolute impartiality towards all political parties, and this system of equal treatment does not altogether please the Daido Club. Their leaders are said to have remonstrated with the Premier, but they received no encouragement from him. The Marquis is reported to have pointed out that the Ministry now in power has virtually succeeded to the tasks commenced by its predecessors. There has been, it is true, an expansion of programme, but there has been no radical alteration, and the Seiyu kai therefore have no reason to oppose the Cabinet. Some of their junior members may perhaps harbour a measure of discontent, but the majority recognise that in aiding the Cabinet they are merely implementing their own work. The Marquis does not anticipate that mere covetousness of the sweets of office will seriously disturb the political calm during the next session of the Diet, and since to place palpable reliance on one party would tend to alienate the others, he intends to maintain an impartial mien.

The Asahi Shimbun publishes what professes to be a statement of the views held by the leaders of the Daido Club. They maintain that all this talk about dissatisfaction on their part is simply an attempt to create ill feeling between them and the Seiyu kai. The Daido leaders do not approve of any situation which is completely dominated by one party. They believe in the doctrine of counter-balance, and the role which they contemplate for themselves is one of impartial independence, such that they can throw their weight into whatever scale seems to contain the best interests of the country. They have no desire whatever to stir up trouble in a calm sea, or to attack the Seiyu kai so long as the latter afford no reasonable ground for attack. It remains to be seen how the great Party will employ its majority. There are no signs at present that it will abuse its strength, and consequently there is no reason to assault it. As for the rumour that a certain party intends to introduce the gun-abolition bill once more in the coming session, and thus create a situation which will virtually force the Seiyu kai into opposition, if there be such a party it is not the Daido Club.

Meanwhile the Boshin Club has become an accomplished fact. It has addressed circulars to about 50 more or less well known men, and there seems to be no doubt that it will muster a following of not less than 45 members of the Lower House. The leaders of this Club are Messrs. Kono Hironaka, Shimada Saburo, and Minowa Shinjiro, and in its ranks are to be found several men who have distinguished themselves as free lances in previous sessions of the Diet. They have invited Mr. Ozaki Yukio to join them, but up to the present he has not answered the invitation. There has never yet been discovered any political niche into which Messrs. Kono and Shimada could fit with perfect comfort. They aim at a political standard to which practical men can hardly yet attain, and they and their followers may be expected to act the part of uncompromising critics in the next session of the Diet.

There has been talk for some time of a triangular entente between the Seiyu kai, the Daido Club and the Boshin Club. We now read in the Mainichi Dempo that this project has become a reality, so far as the Seiyu kai and the Daido Club are concerned. The agreement is that the Seiyu kai will communicate its decisions to the Club before they are brought forward in the actual session of the Diet, so that it will be possible for the two Parties to march in line, at least with regard to actual proceedings in the House. As to the Boshin Club, there seems to be some dispute about the election of its managing committee. Thus far three members have been elected, namely, Mr. Nakano, President of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce, Prof. Tomizu, of Septemvirate fame, and Mr. Sengoku, formerly President of the Kyushu Railway. There remain two to be elected, and Messrs. Kataoka Chokuon and Nakamura Y Roku are spoken of. If this be the ultimate composition of the committee, the Club will probably work hand in hand with the Seiyu kai.

THE BALKAN COMPLICATION.

The latest batch of telegrams are decidedly contradictory. On the one hand, we are told that the Neue Freie Press of Vienna laments the fact that Italy has gone over to Russia and thus shattered the Triple Alliance; on the other hand, we are assured that nothing of the sort is the case. Then we have a telegram saying that the policy enunciated by Signor Tittoni is on all fours with the declarations made by Mr. Asquith and Sir Edward Grey, but other messages from Berlin and Vienna say that in those cities anything like a combination between Russia, France, England and Italy is regarded as a mere threat. Paris is said to have declared that there is no reason for it to interfere with the steps that Russia may think right to take in the Balkans, and according to Reuter's telegrams from Berlin Germany is strongly disposed to assume a neutral attitude. It looks therefore as though the issue were gradually narrowing to Austria, Russia, Turkey and the Balkan States. In that event war is pretty certain to be averted, for neither Russia nor Austria will be willing to draw the sword if that catastrophe can in any way be averted.

The Asahi Shimbun's St. Petersburg correspondent sends a long telegram which professes to give the gist of the speech that M. Iswolsky is to make in the Duma. His Excellency will state, first, that Russia has done nothing directly or indirectly to encourage a special conference between Austria and Turkey with regard to the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina; secondly, that neither before nor after Austria's declaration of annexation did Russia give any expression of approval, the question being of an international character which can not be solved without the consent of the signatories of the Berlin Treaty, to which view Russia has adhered throughout, and England, France and Italy are at one with her in holding it; thirdly, if the signatories of the Treaty give their consent to annexation, Russia will advocate the making of some reparation to the Balkan States affected by the change; fourthly, Russia has entire sympathy with the union of the Balkan States, such a union of the Slav races being necessary in the interests alike of Russia and of Turkey, with which Power Russia desires the closest relations; fifthly, that consultations are now going on with Austria as to the holding of an international conference, and that she has not yet consented to submit to such a conference the question of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but it can scarcely be expected that she will persist in her refusal as her situation is very difficult; and, sixthly, that Russia has counselled Serbia and Montenegro to maintain a very circumspect demeanour, since any appeal to arms on their part against Austria could not be successful, and, Russia having no desire to be drawn into war, the best plan is to wait the result of the conferences now going on.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL.

SIX-A-SIDE COMPETITION.

The following are the teams for the above competition, the first named player in each instance being captain of the side.

The games will be on the "English Cup" system, i.e., each losing team in each round plays no further matches.

Dates of fixtures to be notified on Monday. The following are the teams:—

A. W. S. Austen, J. E. Drummond, W. Graham C. I. Hornstein, C. L. Manley, and L. Stornebrink.

S. R. Ford, D. E. M. Drummond, H. J. Hearne, M. Luther, C. Thwaites, and B. G. Walker.

V. A. Hearne, H. Boist, H. Cabeldu, B. Deveson, W. Gray, and J. Tresize.

W. B. Mason, A. E. Bates, B. C. Foster, A. Gorman, H. C. Gregory, and S. A. Vincent.

L. C. Sharman, W. da Costa, G. K. Totton, W. Hayward, G. A. Neville, and W. H. Worden.

A. H. Windett, G. H. Bell, H. Y. Irvine, D. A. Neville, W. E. Tibbs, and L. Waisen.

The above are to be played off as follows:—Ford, bye; Austen, v. Mason; Hearne v. Windett; Sharman, bye.

THE CHINESE ARMY.

Telegrams from Hankow say that a Lieutenant-General and three Major-Generals of the Hupei Divisions are to be placed on the retired list, and their posts given to officers who have studied military science in Japan. Moreover, this is spoken of as part of a programme to be gradually carried out, namely, the substitution of men of modern education for all the old school Chinese officers. Some years will be required to complete the exchange, but when it is completed and when—as may be fully anticipated—the rank and file under these officers have been trained and equipped in accordance with the best models, the international effect suggests uneasy reflections. According to the present scheme, the Middle Kingdom is to have an army of 36 Divisions; that is to say, 2 Divisions for each of the 18 home provinces. We do not know just what the strength of a Chinese Division is. Hitherto the tactical unit has been the regiment (yei), which musters 500 of all arms, so that, from a numerical standpoint, it ought rather to be called a battalion, but, being complete in itself, the name “regiment” has always been given to it. We may take it for granted that the yei is not the unit in the new organization. Such a body is altogether too small to be usefully employed in operations which extend over the immense widths of front occupied by armies now-a-days. Probably, as the Chinese are taking models from Japanese systems, their new “Division” musters about the same strength as its Japanese namesake, which would mean that an army of 36 Divisions would represent about 350,000 men on a peace establishment, and a million on a war footing. The Chinese are habitually looked down on as fighters. How such a theory can be maintained after Chikiang and Taku we do not understand, but certainly no wise statesman will attach any faith to it. He will ask himself rather whether this organizing of a great army is to be interpreted as a sign that China has abandoned her traditional contempt for appeals to the sword, and has discovered that there is no safety save for the strong man armed. Occidentals have done their very best to inculcate that conviction. By their example in the competition of armaments, and by their constant readiness to have recourse to force where an Oriental State is their vis-à-vis, they can scarcely have failed to convince China that she is living in a fool's paradise when she expects reason to be the final arbitrator in international differences. Will she act upon that new conviction a few years hence, when she finds ready to her hand a weapon incomparably more efficacious than reason? It must be confessed that the future in the Far East is full of interesting eventualities. Not a very distant future either. Apparently the new Regent and his councillors are determined that there shall be no postponement of the date fixed for the establishment of constitutional government in the Middle Kingdom, and when the folks who now show their readiness to protest against every fancied or real slight by recourse to the boycott come to be entrusted with the management of their own State affairs, there may be cause to regret that China did not remain in her conservative groove.

THE BUDGET FOR NEXT YEAR.

From the November number of the “Japan Financial and Economic Monthly,” which useful magazine now makes its appearance fully up to date, we take the following resume of next year's Budget:—

It is true that the previous Cabinet decided upon the postponement of public works amounting to 37,000,000 yen for 1908, but it is a question whether or not the same postponement may be continued from year to year. The mere piling up of postponements is not what we desire, as it tends to confuse finances. Marquis Katsura, clearly perceiving that difficulty, decided at the outset on the 11 years' programme, with a view to bring about the balance between revenue and expenditure. The particulars of the so-called 11 years' programme are inscrutable, but it seems that the Budget for 1909, 1910, and 1911, shows a deficit totalling 59,000,000 yen. Against this, however, the surplus for 1907 and for a part of 1908 amounts to 70,000,000 yen. Moreover the yearly revenue from 1911 will show an increase of 4,600,000 yen, 13,000,000 yen and 3,000,000 yen in 1911, 1912 and 1913 respectively; while in 1914, there will be a deficit of 7,000,000 yen, for naval and military completion, which will, however, be met by the surplus from the previous three years. Also it is computed that for 1915, the increase of income will amount to 16,000,000 yen, for 1916, to 280,000 yen, for 1917 to 29,000,000 yen, for 1919 to 29,000,000 yen. This is excluding the so-called natural development of revenue. Thus it will be seen that the postponement of public works amounting to 168,000,000 yen will suffice to maintain the financial balance. The preceding accounts of finances based upon the 11 years' programme amply show that the programme will encounter no serious objection on the part of the people, who, we believe, must be fully satisfied with the arrangements, and who, after careful study of them, will pay higher prices for our public bonds.

OFFICIAL UTTERANCES.

On the 9th inst. Baron Oura invited 82 members of the United Chambers of Commerce to his official residence, and delivered a speech the gist of which was that, whereas the Cabinet and the Chambers of Commerce ought to work in unison for the promotion of the nation's interests, there was unfortunately some lack of such co-operation. It would be the Government's endeavour, his Excellency said, to correct that defect, and he looked to the Chambers to assist. Mr. Nakano, President of the Tokyo Chamber, replied that the Minister's expressions were fully endorsed by the Chambers, who would assist to consummate the wish expressed by the Minister.

Marquis Katsura also addressed the meeting in his capacity of Minister of Finance. He dwelt specially on the fact that now first, during an interval of many years, the expenditures of the State were brought within the limits of the actual income, and thus a thoroughly wholesome system was introduced. For the rest, the remarks made by his Excellency added nothing to what he had stated on previous occasions.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, December 4.

With regard to the talk of abolishing the communications tax by a vote of the two Houses of the Diet, Mr. Wakatsuki, Vice-Minister of Finance, is quoted by the Asahi Shimbun as saying that, although the sum involved is only 2 million yen, yet in the present state of the country's finances, 2 million yen is a serious consideration. Besides, this tax is not without precedent in the most civilized countries of Europe, and so long as no substitute for it is indicated, Mr. Wakatsuki, speaking individually, can not endorse the idea of its abolition.

There is no denying that the Cabinet's financial policy has had an excellent effect upon the market for Japanese State securities. Marquis Katsura's prediction that the 5 per cent. consols would soon rise to 60 has been fulfilled by facts.

The Shogyo Shimpō says that French capitalists are displaying a strong inclination to invest in Japanese securities. On the one hand, they see that better times have dawned for Japan, and, on the other, they are losing their taste for German investments.

In the year 1900 silver fell to 21½d., and it now threatens to reach that minimum figure. Japanese financiers appear to be divided in their estimates of the situation, some holding that, as the cost of production is 22d., and as the recent debacle is due mainly to a breakdown in the attempt to corner the white metal, an era of appreciation may now be expected. Others think, however, that silver has altogether fallen out of the rank of precious metals, and that its prospects are hopeless.

The affairs of the Seventy-eight Bank of Hachioji have been dragged into the political arena by the Nippon Shimbun, which invites its readers to believe that, in ordering the closure of the Bank, the Government simply obeyed a desire to embarrass the Seiyū-kai, whose financial organ is the Bank. This is not thought worthy of comment by any other leading newspaper, but the Nichi Nichi Shimbun quotes a prominent member of the Seiyū-kai as ridiculing the idea.

Saturday, December 5.

The Hochi Shimbun publishes a translation of the article copied recently into these columns from the North China Daily News with reference to the Hankow affair. Our readers will remember that this article offered an explanation as to the apparent exclusiveness practised by the British community in Hankow with regard to wharfage facilities for Japanese-owned ships. The Hochi says that the explanation is well worthy of attention, and expresses curiosity as to the rejoinder that it will elicit from the Japanese side.

The Imperial Gazette of the 5th inst. contains several Imperial ordinances with reference to the organisation of the new Railway Board. From these ordinances we learn that there will be one governor at a salary of 6,000 yen annually; one vice-governor (4,000 yen); nine managing directors (3,000 yen); one chief engineer; sixty councillors; one private secretary; sixty-six shuji; forty assistant shuji; three hundred and thirty-two engineers; 5,281 secretaries and 2,795 mechanical engineers. Among the engineers 13 may be of chokunin rank. According to Tokyo newspapers the above organisation involves the dismissal of three officers of chokunin rank, 50 of sonin rank, 600 of hannin rank, and 350 employees. Baron Goto is quoted as saying that the saving effected in salaries alone will be 250,000 yen a year, and that the total economies now in sight will aggregate half a million annually. He points out, however, that time will be needed to organise the new Board on a really satisfactory footing and to effect the necessary reforms.

There is one feature about the new organisation which seems likely to attract a good deal of attention. It is the fact that 5 semi-independent branch offices are to be established at as many places throughout the Empire. Already this fact is construed as proving that the policy of unification which the Government placed in the forefront of its programme of State purchase has proved impossible to realize. But truly that view seems rather far-fetched. However homogeneous the new system of railway may be, its managers are bound to pay due attention to local conditions and for that purpose the appointment of semi-independent branch offices in various selected districts must have been contemplated from the first. But as the pros and cons of railway nationalization are almost inexhaustible, the public must be prepared for a long controversy between experts.

Telegrams from St. Petersburg to Baron Goto show that the Russo-Japanese Railway Council was to commence its business in that City from the 29th ultimo. The matters to be discussed are the linking up of the Japanese and Russian railway systems, as well as the connexions of both with the European systems, and the arrangement of mutual facilities in relation to junction ports. The telegrams say that Russian officials seem disposed to approach the discussion in the best possible spirit.

We read in the Asahi Shinbun that the authorities of the South Manchuria Railway Company are about to increase the steamship service between Dairen and Shanghai. Hitherto they have had only one steamer making weekly sailings from either end, but although she does not yet pay her expenses, the results achieved have exceeded forecasts, and it is now in contemplation to put on at least one more steamer capable of developing greater speed, so as to meet the requirements of rapid travel, which is all the vogue now.

Tokyo newspapers contain various rumours about the rise of fares for the Tokyo Railway. We need scarcely say that the intelligence is evidently coloured by the spectacles which the different newspapers wear in viewing this problem. The Jiji Shimpō, which for some unexplained reason is radically opposed to any increase of fares, has hastened to send a representative to Baron Goto, and has received from him an assurance that the matter is under consideration and that no decision has yet been taken. For the sake of reviving the old faith which long acquaintance with the Jiji Shimpō's writings inspired at one time in the breast of the public, we earnestly wish that this great journal would explain clearly why it raises its powerful voice against the fundamental principle of justice, fair remuneration for a fair service.

The Shogyo Shimpō notes that 57,696 boxes of silk were exported from Japan during the period from July 1st to November 11th of the current year, namely, 14,447 boxes to Europe and 43,249 to America. Our contemporary gives some partial figures relating to the American trade. They cover only 28,100 boxes, out of which 22,000 boxes were exported by two Japanese firms, the Mitsui and the Kiito Kaisha. It is stale news that "direct trade" has made its influence felt most conspicuously in the silk export business.

A member of the House of Peers is quoted as denouncing the idea of abolishing one only among the three so-called "objectionable taxes." He alleges that those of his fellow-members as advocate such a measure, are influenced solely by consideration for the Tokyo Railway Company. That is a curious position to take—namely, that to get rid of one out of three bad imposts is worse than to keep them all in force—and it is also a curious accusation to lay at the doors of members of the upper Chamber.

Sunday, December 6.

On the 3rd inst. the Imperial Oil Refining Company came to an end. This enterprise seems to have been one of the mushroom growths of 1906. Its capital was announced at a million yen and it got as far as the erection of a factory in the Shinagawa suburb of Tokyo, and the opening of business. But apparently it could not find any work to do, and dissolution was finally decided on. The general meeting held on the 3rd inst. proved to be a very stormy affair, but the necessary resolutions were at last carried.

There are two oil companies in Formosa: one in the south called the Dai Nippon Sekiyu Kaisha, the other in the north, namely the Takarada Company. The latter is said to have discovered new oil wells in the Bioritz district, and the two companies are vying with one another to extend their business.

On the afternoon of the 4th inst. the ceremony of opening the new wet dock of the Yokohama Dock Company was held in presence of a large concourse of people and with great éclat. The new dock is 180 feet in breadth and 600 in length and is capable of accommodating two steamers of 6,000 tons each and one of 3000 tons at the same time.

The directors of the Tokyo Rice Exchange have adopted five regulations designed for the purpose of putting an end finally to all irregular practices on 'Change. The first of these is that under no circumstances whatever is a broker to consent to receive from a customer a smaller amount of bargain money than that fixed by the laws of the Exchange. The second is that brokers are not to make discretionary sales of shares when the margin threatens to become extinct; that they are not to call for additional margin without the consent of the Exchange, and that they are not to work for fees less than the fixed amount; the third is that no agents other than those duly authorised are to be allowed to take any part in the business of the Exchange; the fourth, that special police are to be employed to watch the operations of brokers; and the fifth, that all persons guilty of irregular practices are to receive one warning, and thereafter to be expelled from the Exchange, in the event of their not mending their ways.

The Hochi Shinbun has a vehemently worded article against the Tokyo Railway Company but the gist of it may be summed up in a very few words, namely that the Company is thoroughly unpopular under its present management and that the citizens will never consent to an increase of fares until the directorate is changed. Tokyo seems to be rapidly falling into the state of London as described recently by Engineering, which said, "when once the passenger has been allowed to travel partly at the expense of the rate-payer, he will not surrender his privilege. It is practically impossible to raise fares when once they have been established at an unremunerative figure. If municipalization of tramways is subject to ordinary business principles, the practice of letting the public travel partly at the expense of the rate-payer is to be condemned as vicious. If, on the other hand, commercial principles are not to be held to govern this form of enterprise, consistency demands that the full programme of the socialistic propaganda should fix the goal of municipalization at free urban transportation." There is no longer any question of municipalizing the Tokyo trams. The problem in the Japanese capital is whether the citizens are to be allowed to travel at the expense of a private company. It is astonishing that any Japanese newspapers should advocate such an injustice.

Monday, December 7.

It now appears probable that the Sakura Maru will be placed on the line between Dairen and Japan, and that her sister-ship, the Umegaka, which is to be launched next March, will be devoted to the same service. These are the vessels of the Japanese Volunteer Fleet. The Sakura Maru, as our readers probably remember, has been plying between Japan and Formosa under a subsidy from the Government of the latter, but the subsidy is now to be discontinued in consequence of the absorption of the Formosa customs revenue into the Central Treasury. The Jiji Shinbun has a sarcastic article on this subject. It contrasts the mountain-like projects of the Kaiji Kyokai with its mouse-like performances, and asks whether the world is to be informed that the country which calls itself the England of the East, and which prides itself on its patriotism, is to admit its inability to dispose of even one ship out of a squadron which represents the very incarnation of patriotism.

A remarkable ceremony was held in Tokyo on the 6th inst. at the Kanda Hall. It was a meeting to inaugurate the formation of an association calling itself the Young Men's Railway Society. Its object, as we understand, has nothing to do with religion, but relates solely to cementing close relations between the men employed on railways of all kinds in Japan. Count Okuma, Baron Goto and several other distinguished persons were present. The Count delivered a remarkable address. Having deprecated his own right to the title conferred on him by the founders of the Society, namely, the Father of Japanese Railways, he recounted the stupendous difficulties and obstacles that had to be overcome in connexion with the building of the first line in Japan, which involved a foreign loan of 3 million yen. That was less than 40 years ago, and now Japan has more than 5,000 miles of railway. The Count spoke also of the fact that whereas the prices of commodities have risen 125 per cent, during the past few years, the wages of labour have increased by only 25 per cent.

Mr. Mizumachi, the new Finance Agent of Japan in Europe, left on the 7th inst. for London. He is said to have stated to a member of the Chuo staff that he does not expect to have much to do during the three years of his service in Europe. Japan is not going to raise any more foreign loans, with the exception of the remaining 2 millions sterling of the South Manchuria Railway Loan, the floating of which has been expected for some time, and will be effected when a convenient opportunity presents itself. It is very much desired that the high-interest-bearing foreign loans of Japan should be commuted on a lower scale, but the more pressing duty is to pay back the 300 million yen representing the domestic war loan. Until that is done the foreign debt must be left as it is.

There has been for some time a question about the export of salt from Formosa. A legal limit of 100 million catties has been imposed, but this not only cripples the development of the industry, but also condemns consumers to pay a high price for one of the principal necessities of life. It has now been arranged, we read, to remove all limit of export to Manchuria and Korea, but to retain the old rule so far as Japan proper is concerned.

Tuesday, December 8.

A deputation of the Seiyun-kai waited on Baron Goto on the 7th inst. and addressed to him various questions with regard to the Railway problem. The interview is said to have lasted nearly two hours. Asked about the programme of improvements and extensions with regard to railways in Japan proper, the Baron is represented as having replied that the Government had prepared a bill which would be submitted to the Diet in the approaching session, and, if this bill was approved, the Government would endeavour as far as possible to carry out the improvements and expansions already fixed by law. His Excellency was not in a position to publicly state the details of the above bill, but he explained that it dealt with the organisation and programme of the new Railway Board. The deputation then passed to the question of the South Manchuria Railway and asked for a statement of the Minister's policy. He replied that, judging by recent reductions of staff and other evidences, some critics had supposed that a negative policy was likely to be followed; but he assured his visitors that such was not the case. Alike with regard to the reconstruction of the Mukden-Antung line, the establishment of public schools, the building and equipment of hotels and the working of the Fushun mine, a vigorous positive policy was being followed and would be followed.

It is evident that the above interview is abbreviated in reproduction to the very limits of abbreviation. Nothing whatever is said about the Korean railway system, although the latter is included in the questions said to have been submitted by the deputation.

Asked about the project of telephone charges by messages, the Minister is reported to have replied that when the cost of extending the system is taken into full account, telephones are not nearly so profitable an investment as the general public seem to imagine. The Government is therefore desirous of adopting the Message system.

Some news agency, which as usual is not indicated by the papers publishing its material, represents Baron Goto as saying that from the point of view of common sense he sees no argument against reducing the Government's subsidy to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha by one half, or even giving it up altogether. This is quoted as a statement made privately to a friend, which description is probably considered sufficient to relieve from all responsibility both the news agency furnishing the intelligence and the journals reproducing it.

Several Tokyo newspapers allege that, so far from abandoning the project of charging telephonic rates according to the number of messages sent, the Authorities are actually making preparations to enforce that system. The difficulty is that a large outlay would be needed to equip the various exchanges with registering instruments, and in the absence of such instruments it will be necessary for the telephone clerks to make a written entry of each message. At present they are being trained to do that in the most expeditious manner.

It appears that there are already some 300 Japanese settlers on Ocean Island and that 50 others are just about to start. Ocean Island is known also by the name of Cure Island. It lies a little to the west of the Midway Islands and is about 6 miles in circumference with an area of 3,300 acres.

According to the Kokumin Shimbun, the Directors of the Tokyo Railway claim that the reforms recently effected have been perfectly successful, and that everything is now working smoothly. The Company can pay a dividend of 7 per cent., but not if it makes proper appropriations for the renewal of roadbed and rolling stock, for extensions to the suburbs and for reserves against the time when the Railway will have to be handed over gratis to the Authorities.

The affairs of the Mivagiya Ginko have been at last settled though the intervention of Baron Shibusawa, on the basis that the former depositors shall all receive shares representing the amounts of their deposits. As this Bank did a large business of the nature of pawn-broking, its final failure would have been somewhat serious. It is to be carried on hereafter under the name Sakae Ginko, which is taken from that of Baron Shibusawa, the first ideograph of whose second name has the Japanese sound of sakaeru.

According to the Keizai Zasshi there is a project for amalgamating the five principal fire insurance companies of Japan on the basis of Lloyds. This will involve the dismissal of all salaried agents and their replacement by brokers whose remuneration will take the form of commissions and whose proposals will be tendered for by the five companies.

Wednesday, December 9.

It is alleged that the race clubs, deeming it impossible to make ends meet with the paltry subsidies which the Basei Kyoku recently announced, have decided to hold their autumn meetings as a sort of farewell ceremony and then to put up the shutters. As this step would greatly interfere with the Government's programme for improving the breed of horses, an official suggestion is said to have been made in the sense that the leading race clubs of Tokyo and Yokohama should combine to form one big institution to which the Basei Kyoku will pay the whole subsidy of 330,000 yen, which sum was to have been divided between all the existing companies. This proposal is said to be now under consideration.

The United Chambers of Commerce assembled in Tokyo on the 7th inst. and should have on the 8th received various reports from the committees appointed to investigate subjects of finance and taxation. Since, however, these reports were not rendered, the Chambers proceeded to consider a measure urging that, as the Usui tunnel is now in a very unsatisfactory condition, arrangements should be at once be made either to take the road around the base of the pass, or to reconstruct the tunnel. The bill was handed to a committee.

The Kobe Chamber of Commerce submitted a proposal in the sense that if the adoption of a system of charges by message is essential for the purpose of obtaining funds to extend the telephone service, no objection should be raised, but some special discount should be allowed in the case of newspaper messages. The delegates of the Yokohama Chamber, however, declared themselves wholly opposed to the principle of message charges. This matter also was entrusted to a committee.

The Kokumin Shimbun raises its voice in favour of some reduction of the amount paid by the State for the purpose of encouraging the development of the mercantile marine. Our contemporary's argument is couched in general terms, namely that aids to navigation are granted only in so far as they may be necessary pending independent capacity on the part of the subsidised vessels. So soon as an overseas service becomes able to stand on its own legs without official assistance, the latter should be withdrawn, in part at any rate. The subvention given by France to the Messageries Maritimes is often quoted, but it has to be observed that this subvention is about to undergo a large diminution. As for the British Government and the Cunard line, special considerations apply, and at any rate the line is not remunerative. If the trend of the times is to be followed, some reduction must be made in Japan's expenditures on this account. We do not know how far the above may be taken as representing official opinion.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that there is a large foreign demand at present for the bonds about to be issued in payment of the nationalized railways. With reference to this, the Shogyo Shimpo alleges that the sales of these bonds to foreigners have averaged a million and a half yen monthly since August. It urges its countrymen not to part lightly with securities which will certainly prove a very profitable investment.

Thursday, December 10.

The Chuo Shimbun predicts that the Government's decision—which will be taken within the course of the current month—with regard to subsidies to steamshipservices, will be to fix the present outlay as a limit, but to increase the number of services. As to the laws for encouraging navigation and shipbuilding, they have still a considerable time to run, and therefore no hasty decision need be taken with regard to them. One of the newly subsidised lines is likely to be a South American service, as Japanese emigration to Brazil and Peru is proving very successful. The immigrants are heartily welcomed; there is ample room for development; the climate is quite endurable, and the scale of pay is very nearly as good as that ruling in North America.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange is to hold its general meeting on the 23rd instant, when a dividend will probably be declared of 11.6 per cent. With reference to this the Chuo Shimbun propounds a number of queries, inspired by doubts of the integrity of the Stock Exchange. Truly it seems to us that things are becoming rather topsy-turvy in Japan. There will presently be no such thing as an independent private company. The affairs of all will be subjected to public scrutiny. Every Dick, Tom or Harry that comes strolling along the road will be entitled to constitute himself a commissioner of inquiry into every company's affairs.

The Shogyo Shimpo confidently affirms that next spring will see a reduction of the rate of interest. There is quite exceptional ease in the money market at present, considering the time of year, and the banks are already reducing their rates, though nothing has yet been publicly announced on the subject.

On the night of Dec. 6th fire occurred in west Iwai near Morioka destroying 60 buildings. Several persons were injured.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

A considerable interval has elapsed since the public learned that Mr. Bethell had instituted libel proceedings against the North China Daily News on account of a telegram published by the latter from its Tokyo correspondent. The suit was interrupted at the outset by a question of lodging security for costs and by an application for time to procure evidence. We now read in the Mainichi Dempo's telegrams that Mr. Zumoto, editor of the Seoul Press, has been summoned as a witness for the defence, and that he passed through Nagasaki on the morning of the 6th inst., travelling by the Empress of India. This year closes on quite a number of libel actions against newspapers. There is this Shanghai suit, which, we imagine, will be quickly disposed of, and there are the suits instituted by Mr. Preston against the Japan Chronicle and the Japan Daily Herald.

The following will interest Dr. Eby's many friends in Japan:—

Rev. Dr. C. S. Eby will be the new pastor for Zion Congregational Church on College street. The Board of Deacons will extend the formal invitation on Wednesday evening next, and Dr. Eby will reply, accepting the pastorate. Recognizing that the matter was practically settled, Dr. Eby, who has been preaching here for several weeks, has suggested several changes which he will adopt in endeavoring to build up the congregation. Dr. Eby is a Methodist, but, it is understood, was the more willing to accept this invitation on account of the greater theological latitude allowed by the Congregational Church.

In spite of the denials about a German Japanese entente, the Yomiuri Shimbun quotes an anonymous Japanese diplomat as declaring that the thing will soon become a fait accompli. This informant attributes to Marquis Katsura a long-entertained design of joining hands with Germany, his Excellency's belief being that Japan's friendship for the great central European Power ought to be marked as distinctly as her friendship with any other of the States of Continental Europe. Count Okuma also is quoted as strongly approving the idea, but the Jiji Shunpo wisely observes that it would scarcely be consistent with Germany's dignity to come hastening in at the tail of the hunt. Japan wants to be on the best possible terms with her, but a fitting opportunity must be awaited.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shimbun that the case of the Miya Maru is not yet settled. The ship is lying in Vladivostok, and the Japanese authorities were asked to take delivery of her, but they declined to do so on the ground that in her present dismantled and dilapidated condition she is practically useless. The Russian authorities have not yet made any answer to this plea, and it is thought probable that they will give due compensation. Our contemporary adds with regard to the Kompira Maru's arms and hunting gear, that the illegality of the confiscation has been recognised, but the amount of compensation is not yet fixed. Something over 60,000 yen is spoken of, but such a sum appears rather large.

We take the following from the New York Independent:—

Japan's welcome last week to the American fleet has touched the heart of the nation.

Here are people who were brutally insulted only a short time ago by our Pacific Coast, a people we call "heathen" and send missionaries to Christianize, actually teaching us a lesson in Christian ethics. Then they were all but driven from California; now they literally strew our path with flowers. Then they were excluded from the schools of our greatest far-Western city; now they suffer their little children to greet us singing our national hymn.

President Roosevelt, by his indirect stand at the Algeiras Conference in favor of a result which ultimately made the Anglo-Japanese treaty less valuable; by his advocacy of a lock instead of a sea-level canal, so as to get our battleships as quickly as possible from the Atlantic to the Pacific; by his settling the Russo-Japanese War to the advantage of Russia, and by his sending the fleet to the Pacific, has created a chain of circumstances that have led some people to think that he is not Japan's best friend. Yet the Emperor of Japan, the very Son of Heaven, breaks his sacred seclusion to meet our sailors as man to man, and tells them to convey to President Roosevelt this message:

"The historic relations, the good understanding, and the genuine friendship of the United States I count as a valued heritage of my reign, and it shall be in the future, as it has been in the past, my constant aim and desire to weld ties of amity uniting the two countries in indissoluble bonds of good neighborhood and perfect accord."

Surely there is no nobler object lesson in history than this story of how Japan, by returning good for evil, gained a moral victory over us greater even than her physical victory over Russia. Hobson, Beveridge and Lodge should hang their heads in shame.

We rejoice that from now on our ancient friendship for these modern Greeks will be renewed and quickened. Certainly no American will again challenge Japan's friendship for us and get a respectful hearing.

In 1854 the American fleet under Perry opened Japan to the world, in 1908 the American fleet under Sperry re-opened Japan to America.

So many of our readers have lost valuable dogs through that fell disease, worms of the heart, that the following letter which appears in the N.C. Daily News will be read with interest:—

SIR,—The health of dogs is a subject of much interest to a large number of residents in Shanghai, and elsewhere in China. In common with many old residents of Shanghai I have lost a great many dogs from that terrible disease, worms in the heart. I have shared in the common belief that this disease is caused by drinking stagnant, or impure water. I have tried for some years to prevent the loss of dogs from this disease by giving them annually, in the Spring, and autumn, Fowler's Solution of Arsenic, but have found, after a lengthy trial, that it is absolutely useless.

I recently met a scientific gentleman, who told me that the cause of this disease in dogs is now well-known and he lent me a book on animal parasites, in which this disease is specially referred to. From this it appears that the disease is caused by the bites of a particular kind of mosquito, the Filaria immitis, which is believed to bite only at night.

It has been suggested that the only way to preserve dogs from the bites of this insect is to enclose them at night, during the warm weather, in a mosquito house.

A fact within my own knowledge appears to support this idea. Four dogs were imported from England at the same time, about four years ago. Three of these were sporting dogs, and were kept outside the house, the fourth was a small pet house dog, which always slept in a mosquito house during the summer. The three dogs have all died from worms in the heart. The small house dog is alive, and apparently thoroughly well.

I am, etc.,

W. V. DRUMMOND.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, December 4.

Yesterday's forenoon session was of an undecided character, but a brisker feeling prevailed in the afternoon, and the arrival of buying orders from the Kansei district as well as the receipt of news that silver had risen to 22¼, gave an impetus to the market. There were no marked appreciations, but on the whole, a sense of strength seemed to prevail. The barometer, however, remained practically stationary, which is not an encouraging phenomenon.

Saturday, December 5.

The 5th instant was a dull day on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, but the only depressing factor in sight was the renewed fall of silver, which, for a moment, had seemed inclined to appreciate. Experts pronounce the situation to be firmer, and allege that many persons are awaiting an opportunity to invest, but there are as yet no results of that mood.

Monday, December 7.

The market opened somewhat dull on Monday, but acquired strength in the afternoon session owing to news that things were brisk in Osaka, that the banks there were talking of reducing their rate of interest, and that silver had appreciated in London and New York. Nearly all shares rose appreciably.

Tuesday, December 8.

Things were dull on the Tokyo Stock Exchange yesterday. There is said to be an apprehension that a point has been reached from which a descent is as likely as an ascent. Other interpreters allege that there will be no further movement of consequence during the few remaining days of the year, and that a renewal of activity can not be expected before January. Thus it is that opinions vary from day to day. It must be confessed however, that the situation yesterday did not present any ground for special vaticination.

Wednesday, December 9.

The 9th was a dull day on the Stock Exchange. An impression prevailed that a falling market might be expected and that a good opportunity would soon offer for buying. Osaka seemed to be of the same mind, and the two markets re-acted upon each other. A further decline of silver helped materially to depress prices, and with few exceptions depreciation was the order of the day.

Thursday, December 10.

The 10th instant saw a continuance of the fall which commenced on the 8th. There was nothing very marked, but buyers held off, and in the absence of transactions prices declined. The afternoon witnessed a slight recovery, which, however, was of only partial efficiency, though in the case of the Stock Exchange itself the quotation was carried back over the ground lost in the forenoon. The market closed amid a feeling of depression, which the news of an appreciation of the gold-price of silver did not suffice to dispel. Appended are the quotations for February delivery:—

THE LATE MR. J. H. CURTIS.

The friends in Japan of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Curtis will learn with regret of the death of Mr. Curtis, who passed away near London aged 59 years. It is known that he had been suffering severely from rheumatism, but whatever was the cause of death he suffered a great deal towards the end, which came on Nov. 13th. The funeral took place on Nov. 17th at Hithergreen Cemetery, London, and quite a number of old Japan residents were present as mourners. Among them were Capt. Haswell, Capt. Forbes, Mr. F. O. Eustace, Mr. M. Russell, and Mr. Geo. Alcock, with the deceased's cousin Commander Curtis, Mr. L. T. Corke, formerly of Tokyo, and Mr. Clark, an old Shanghai resident. Mr. Curtis was for years in the employment of the Mitsui Bishi and Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

THE FUSHUN MINE.

IT is apprehended in Tokyo, according to the Asahi Shinbun, that a new factor of friction with China will be created in connexion with the Fushun mine. We related in our last issue that the Chinese had objected to the digging of coal by the South Manchuria Railway Company at Hsintung, on the ground that this deposit can not properly be considered an outcrop of the Fushun seams. A temporary settlement of the dispute has been found, but not without the assumption of something like a menacing attitude on the part of the Chinese. It will be remembered that the latter formulated a strong protest against the inclusion of the mines along the Antung-Mukden route in the list of assets accruing to Japan after the war with Russia. The principal of these mines was at Penhsifu, and a charter to work it had been given to the OKURA Company before the receipt of the Chinese protest. The complication was finally arranged by a compromise which converted the enterprise into a joint undertaking by Chinese and Japanese. Then arose a difficulty about the Fushun mine. A Chinese subject came forward and asserted a claim to the mine on the ground that he had purchased it from the Russians for a considerable sum. How this matter was settled, if it ever was definitely settled, the public has not yet been informed, and in the meanwhile this new difficulty about the Hsintung outcrop has arisen. This latter complication seems to have been temporarily settled by the very unsatisfactory process of closing the mine altogether, and we now hear talk of a commission to finally delimit the area properly falling within the term "Fushun Coal Mine." It is perfectly natural, though not very grateful, that the Chinese should endeavour by every legitimate means to reduce the dimensions of the assets acquired by Japan in Manchuria, infinitesimal as those assets are compared to the sacrifices made for their acquisition. No one therefore will find fault with the Chinese so long as their protests have a basis of fairness and legitimacy. But due attention must be paid to the collateral fact that Japan's position in Manchuria differs materially from the position occupied by any other foreign Power within the limits of the 18 provinces of China proper. Many publicists are disposed to measure the propriety of Japan's acts in Manchuria by the rules that govern the acts of Western States in the 18 Provinces. This is especially the case in the matter of railways, although a moment's careful thought discloses a radical difference. Japan, whether as owner or as lessee, holds certain fixed properties in Manchuria, and among those properties the most important are railways and mines, whereas the corresponding privileges enjoyed by foreign States in the 18 Provinces are at best mere temporary concessions or liens obtained as security for financial accommodation. It is scarcely possible to regulate the Manchurian situation by provisions identical with those that apply in China proper, more especially in view of the fact that in the 18 Provinces the interests of foreign concessionaires are more or less identified with the interests of the Chinese themselves, whereas in Manchuria it is the obvious and natural aim of the Chinese to contrive the greatest possible deterioration of Japanese assets. This radical difference does not appear to receive adequate attention at the hands of the average critic.

LABOUR IN JAPAN.

ACCORDING to statistics published by the Bank of Japan, a comparison of the market prices of commodities during November, with those ruling throughout October, shows that there was appreciation in 10 cases, no difference in 19 cases and depreciation in 27 cases. If the average figure for October be taken as 100, the corresponding average for November is 98.78, thus showing a fall of 1.22 per cent.

Count OKUMA, in his recent speech at the inaugural meeting of the Young Men's Railway Association, mentioned that whereas prices have risen 125 per cent. during the past 20 years, salaries and wages have risen only 25 per cent. He observed that in these figures the seeds of socialism may be found, and that the socialistic problem is one which has defied all the methods of solution proposed by religionists, moralists and statesmen in Europe and America. Happily for Japan, the Count went on to say, she has a most benevolent and most merciful Sovereign, whose memorable Rescript at the time of the Restoration was couched in language which showed that this great question had already presented itself to His MAJESTY'S mind. Unlike the countries of Europe and America, Japan may hope that the Throne will serve as the pivot for the solution of this absorbing problem. These words were addressed to a large concourse of railway employees, the vast majority of whom are doubtless thirsting for higher emoluments to help them in their hard struggle with the res angustæ domi. It must be assumed that Count OKUMA had chapter and verse for his statistics, yet we find it difficult to endorse his dictum that salaries and wages have increased by only 25 per cent. during the past 20 years. That may be true of salaries—especially official salaries—but within our own knowledge the daily wage of a carpenter or a gardener has more than doubled within the past quarter of a century. In 1875 a common labourer's hire was 20 sen, or at most 22 sen per diem: now it is 60 sen. If we turn to something more trustworthy than memory, namely, the statistics contained in the Financial and Economic Annual, we find that a farm-labourer's daily wages rose from 18½ sen in 1895 to 34 sen in 1906, and that in nearly every one of the 53 kinds of labour there enumerated the remuneration earned shows an increase of nearly 100 per cent. in the course of those 12 years (1895 to 1906). On the other hand, let us set down the prices of a few leading commodities taken from the same source:—

	1896.	1906.
	Yen.	Yen.
Rice, per koku .....	9.16	14.44
Barley do .....	3.57	4.62
Wheat do .....	6.11	8.68
Salt do .....	2.44	5.18
Soy do .....	10.71	22.16
Tea, per picul .....	33.34	47.17
Brown Sugar (Japanese) .....	7.90	11.96

In no cases except those of Soy and Salt have the increases of market prices kept pace with the augmented wages of labour. It is difficult in such circumstances to perceive where a basis for socialistic agitation can be found, especially when we remember how largely the labour field has been developed during the past twenty years by the introduction and rapid expansion of manufacturing industry. Not very long ago the opportunities for female bread-winners in Japan were indeed small. Domestic industries may be said to have comprised the whole list. But the latest returns showed that there were no less than 370,000 women and girls employed in factories of various kinds. Altogether the labouring classes in Japan may be said to live amid much more favourable circumstances to-day than they did a generation ago. Socialistic tendencies ought to be still far distant, nor does there appear to be much reason for the apprehension entertained in some quarters that the rate of wages will rise so rapidly as to check the country's industrial development. Speaking broadly, the increase of daily wages during the past decade has been 50 per cent., but we have to remember that during the same period the paid-up capital of agricultural, industrial, commercial and transportation companies grew from 481 million yen (omitting fractions) to 1,070 yen, and that the field for labour must have grown in nearly the same ratio. If Japanese manufactures progress in the future as rapidly as they have progressed in the first 40 years of the Meiji era, it may be expected that the demand for labour will develop proportionately and that its price will rise. But can it be reasonably hoped that the progress will continue to be so rapid, and is it not true that the efficiency of Japanese labour increases every year, with the result that a smaller number of hands suffice for the same task? We see no reason to apprehend any sharp conflict between Japanese labour and Japanese capital in the near future, nor any reason to think that the progress of manufacturing industry will be impeded by high wages.

THE FEMINIST MOVEMENT AND THE SEX.

THE march of civilization sometimes brings strange consequences in its train. In at least two parts of the world where British rule prevails—India and Egypt—the blessings of peace, liberty and enlightenment are producing the unexpected offspring of political unrest, accompanied by agitation against the very bringers of those blessings. In China, as the subtle influences of Western civilization percolate through the recesses of that immense country, we hear of discontent, of disturbance, of a New-China party pledged to "reform." These movements have their counterpart even in nations most highly developed from the viewpoint of modern culture. Great Britain, France and the United States are each confronted with a phase of thought and activity which may work a change more lasting and more profound than any which could be brought about by "Boxers" or Bengali Baboos. We refer to the forces that to-day are agitating that moiety of the human race which was wont to glory in the name of "the gentler sex."

The movements now observable among certain Oriental races may certainly be taken as fresh evidence of the truth of the adage which declares the danger of a little knowledge. Neither the British legislator nor the trader of the West paused to consider the dangerous potentiality of the instruments they were putting into the hands of their neighbours when the one opened India to the benefits of the Pax Britannica, and the other knocked insistently at the long-closed doors of the Middle Kingdom. But for the conditions in the far-advanced Occidental countries to which we have referred the adage needs adaptation. A survey of modern social conditions certainly suggests that modern civilization, with its refinements and luxuries, is, for certain types of people, as productive of undesirable results as insufficiency of knowledge is for an ill-developed mind.

In France, the observer of the signs of the times sees growing the national evil of a falling birth-rate—full of ill portent for the future of that race. In the United States more than one warning voice has been raised in denunciation of the social life of the upper classes, where only too clearly are betrayed the poor ideals of luxurious living and false liberty. To Britain also has spread the spirit of social unrest, manifesting itself in the so-called feminist movement for the parliamentary franchise, and threatening, by the nature of the tactics adopted, to bring into jeopardy "the traditional relations of the sexes." One has only to read with ordinary discernment the reports of the trial of the leaders of the Women's Social and Political Union at the Bow Street Police Court on the serious charge of inciting to a breach of the peace, and to reflect on the extraordinary character of the arguments by which Miss C. PANKHURST and her mother defended their disorderly conduct, to realize the extent of social mischief and confusion this Suffragist movement may yet accomplish.

This evil of social unrest, being thus widespread and flourishing under diverse conditions, is difficult to diagnose or locate. One or two students of sociology have, however, pointed clearly to some of its main aspects. Professor HERRICK of Chicago has approached the problem through the medium of fiction in a novel entitled "Together." This powerful story deals with the varied careers of six women, each in herself a type, and in the course of the narrative the author takes occasion to pass some very severe strictures upon the rich and idle women of the day. Another close observer, Dr. ANDREW MACPHAIL, of Toronto, recognizing that "there is something rotten in the State of Denmark," has examined the question in two very able and remarkable letters which recently appeared in the London Spectator under the caption of the "American Woman." The writer begins by explaining that the term is indicative of a type by no means peculiar to America—

"The 'American woman' was a common occurrence long before the United States were discovered. It is a familiar fact, however, that a disease which occurs sporadically in one milieu will burst into an epidemic of unexampled fury when it is transferred to a new environment. Upon this analogy, it would appear probable that the 'American woman' was introduced into the United States at a very early period, and finding there a suitable environment, began to develop an exuberant growth and to thrive exceedingly."

As for the characteristics expressed by the term "American woman,"

"Idleness alone (which the divines of New England described as the mother of naughtiness) will account for them all.....It is an eternal law—at least it has been a law since the beginning of created things—that an organ, an animal, or a species cannot exist independently of its function. Life and growth are bound up with work, and we have not yet grown so mighty that we have emancipated ourselves from the dominion of this law."

Dr. MACPHAIL then proceeds to show how, in the course of time, with the progress of civilization, and for reasons largely beyond her control, the obligations connected with the primitive functions of the woman have become less incumbent upon her. The preparation of food and clothing, for example, is now done in the factory.

"Every advance in that industrial development of which we are boasting continually makes for the destruction of the family. . . . The country has grown rich, but the family is destroyed. There is money and idleness for the women of the well-to-do; idleness alone for the women of the poor. . . . The care of the offspring has been handed over to male and female hirelings—physicians and nurses—and thus a wide outlet for the physical and mental activity of the woman has been effectually stopped."

The consequences of this unnatural process of evolution are thus forcibly depicted:—

"Reduced by a power not her own to a condition of idleness, her case is a most unhappy one, and her manifold activities in the street, in places of entertainment and finally in the Divorce Court, are merely blind strivings to free herself from an intolerable ennui. Her life is one of rivalry for appearance and position. The struggle exhausts her energy. . . . Her mind becomes warped and her ambition distorted. Eternal restlessness is her portion, a dislike of any discipline, a hatred of any law save that which her own whim, will, or desire imposes."

Then there is the question of apparel, which Dr. MACPHAIL describes as "the most oppressive burden a woman is called upon to bear, and an anomaly among created beings"—

"In the state of Nature, it is ordained that the female shall go quietly. The male is the gaudy strutting creature. But in the race to which we belong it is the woman who is glorious, and the burden of splendour, falling upon an organism which is unqualified for the task, breaks it down hopelessly and renders it unfit for the performance of its proper functions. The possession of splendid apparel involves the necessity for its display, and out of that arises vanity, jealousy, rivalry and all uncharitableness. This is the genesis of the thing which is known as society."

From the aim of the "American woman," which is, "speaking generally, to live a life of luxurious idleness," the writer passes to her conception of "freedom." As regards the principal function of woman—the part she plays in the propagation of the species—"there is some evidence that the 'American woman' is not doing her best, that she is following the example of that unprofitable servant who wrapped up his one talent in a napkin." Two pleas are commonly put forward in justification of this attitude (1) the species may not be worth reproducing; (2) the quality of offspring is more important than quantity. With regard to the first, the learned critic, while admitting that there may be some ground for that view of the case, points out that the time for proclaiming one's freedom is before, not after, one has consented to eat the bread of another." The second plea, again, is fallacious, for "it is a law of life discovered by experience that the individual degeneration of the offspring accompanies numerical diminution." And further, it has been shown by Professor KARL PEARSON that:—

"The earlier members of a large family are more apt to inherit disease than those born later and therefore the limitation of families to two children, which now appears to be the desirable number, is increasing the number of persons with weak constitutions. Thus is Nature's method of dealing with the fictitious law of Primogeniture."

The "American woman," it appears, retains her girlhood till comparatively late in life, and "then suddenly, to her grief and rage, falls into a condition of senility which no devices serve long to postpone." Mr. JAMES DOUGLAS, in the Morning Leader, thus describes the type—

"She is about 38 years of age and looks about 29. She has looked 29 for the last ten years, and will go on looking 29 for the next ten years. . . . She has a husband in New York who is very wealthy. . . . She spends six months of every year in Europe and he does not seem to grumble. . . . Men take her everywhere and shower costly knick-knacks upon her. . . . She flourishes in a false position and thrives on thin ice. . . . I suppose she has a heart behind her expensive gown, but she never lets you into its secrets. . . . She is triumphantly inscrutable. . . . It is her business to look prettier and dress better than any other woman, and well she knows the pleasure of making a whole room sick with envy. . . ."

But the criticism is not all destructive. The true and womanly woman is thus drawn by Dr. MACPHAIL:—

"The influence of women is the subject of all verse and is best expressed by the word 'charm' . . . Charm lies in what a woman is, not in what she does, nor in how she looks. . . . The woman who is happy is she who obeys the law of kindness, who goes quietly. Her husband yields her benevolence. His heart cloth safely trust in her and her children call her blessed. The woman who will prevail is the effeminate woman, who overcomes man by the force of continual quietness. She may understand all knowledge and have strength to remove all public grievances, yet she is nothing if she has not entered into the mystery of gentleness," and the Doctor concludes his conception of the ideal woman with the words of the great Apostle in his immortal description of true Charity.

It is not too much to say that the present age finds the sex on its trial. There are sinister influences at work to play havoc with the ideals of true womanhood, but there is reason to believe that the right will prevail. In England, amid the turmoil created by the Women's Suffrage movement, signs are not wanting that there are many of the sex who value its time-honoured status more highly than the doubtful boon of the Parliamentary Franchise. The President of the great American Republic has declared that, were a petition for the granting of female suffrage presented to him which bore the signatures of a million women, he would reject it. On the other hand, one publicist has gone so far as to picture, in a generation or two, a war between the men and women of the globe, instituted in desperation by the former to recover, by the ultimate resort to force, their lost ascendancy. So universal a calamity, too fearful to contemplate, will, however, never descend upon this distracted planet so long as Woman remains as God and Nature left her.

RAILWAYS IN JAPAN.

SPEAKING at the inaugural meeting of the Railway Young Men's Association on the 6th inst., Count OKUMA said that he felt quite ashamed (sanki ni tayeru) to be called the originator of Japanese railways, when in truth he had merely been one of those that turned the tide of enlightenment into a special channel. That kind of modesty is characteristic of the Japanese, but history is more discerning. It knows what part Count OKUMA acted in 1869 when he was Vice-Minister of Finance, with Prince ITO for Assistant Vice-Minister, and it knows what difficulties and perils these two statesmen had to encounter. Count OKUMA, indeed, told his hearers on Sunday last something about those obstacles: how a line of telegraph was first erected between Tokyo and Yokohama, only to be cut almost every day by the conservatives; how the project of raising money in England threw many patriots into a fever of alarm; how while some cried out that a portion of Japan's territory was about to be bartered away to foreigners, others declared that OKUMA SHIGENOBU was working solely for his own pocket; how he became an object of scrutiny to official detectives of the danjodai; and how a mountain of memorials impeaching the railway project were sent in to the Government, in whose archives they now lie. It is all actual history, but were we asked to tell the story, we should add the name of Sir HARRY PARKES to the list of Japan's railway creators, and we might even add the name of Providence who visited Kyushu with a rice famine, while the northern districts of the Empire rejoiced in a plentiful harvest, and thus afforded an opportunity which Sir HARRY adroitly used to point out how easily the south might have been succoured had the country possessed railways. Japan has been spoken of as having enjoyed special good luck or good guidance at all the crucial stages of her modern career, but she can not be said to have been wholly fortunate in her first choice of a financial agent, for Mr. HORATIO NELSON LAY, fresh from the fiasco of the LAY-OSBORN Flotilla, did not show himself altogether apt in his manner of dealing with the railway loan, nor did his methods help to smoothe the rugged road which Count OKUMA and Prince ITO had to tread. How the EMPEROR's consent was obtained we have never learned, but it certainly was obtained, though in later years His Majesty adopted an attitude of resolute disapproval towards the contracting of any monetary obligation abroad so long as Japan remained without judicial autonomy. Even after work had actually been commenced on the Tokyo-Yokohama line, strong hostile opposition continued, and of that opposition the railway itself bears palpable evidence, though the illustrative feature long ago ceased to be truly interpreted. We allude to the fact that at Shinagawa the line is carried along an embankment. The shore is now filled in, so that the road no longer suggests the impression of making a sea voyage; but none the less the embankment owed its construction originally to the fact that the Department of War absolutely refused to permit any building of a road along the Shinagawa shore. Inevitably as we speak of these things there rises to our recollection the form of Mr. MORRELL, the first English railway engineer in Japan. He died amid very sad circumstances before the consummation of his labour came in sight, but not before he had engaged the services of the numerous staff of able British experts who helped Japan so materially with her first railroads, and whose assistance she learned how to dispense with in a wonderfully short space of time. It will strike most persons as strange that Viscount INOUE was not present at the meeting last Sunday, for to him, after Count OKUMA and Prince ITO, and even before them in the matter of organization and technical management, Japan owes her railway system and her independent capacity in this kind of enterprise.

MONTHLY SUMMA Y OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

One great difficulty which independent Japanese Christian Churches have to encounter and overcome is connected with the supply and training of pastors. We gather from a good many articles we have perused on the subject that most of the Churches find it far easier to collect money than to secure suitable candidates for the ministry. The Fukui Shimpō (Presbyterian) writing on this subject expresses itself as follows: We are of opinion that it is better to do nothing than to employ unsuitable agents. We are for beginning nothing till the right kind of men are found and for stopping work that has already been commenced if it is being carried on in an unworthy manner owing to the inferiority of the workers. There is nothing that does more harm to Christianity than the employment of unsuitable men as a temporary expedient till better men are forthcoming. Resort to this practice tends to keep men of character and talent out of the ministry. As regards numbers, the supply of pastors and evangelists in our Nihon Kirisutokyōkai is not at all out of proportion to the number of Christians. Our ordained pastors number 116. To these are to be added 86 evangelists (Dendōsha). Taking the total number of Christians, men and women, young and old, we find that there is an ordained pastor for about every 170 persons. If the evangelists be included in the computation, then there is a pastor or evangelist for about every 80 persons. It is not then the fewness of the workers, but the fact that there are among them so many mere cumberers of the ground, that accounts for the poor results shown. Dendōsha no sū sukunaki ni arazu; dendōsha sono hito wo yōsaru nari. Dendō-kai wa mi wo musubazaru ichijiku nō ki wo motte munashiku chi too fusagaretari. This it is that keeps good men out of the ministry. During the past few years certain Protestant Churches have made great strides towards reaching a state of entire independence of foreign help, but there is one particular in which they have done next to nothing towards independence. They have made no serious attempt to found Divinity Schools of their own, where the doctrinal teaching of foreign missionaries shall no longer predominate. Our theological training schools are run with foreign money and managed by foreign teachers. The Kumiai Kyōkai, which glories so much in its independence, has as yet taken no satisfactory steps for establishing a Divinity Hall conducted on doctrinally and financially independent lines. It is only after this has been accomplished by various Churches that an adequate supply of properly trained pastors will be obtained.

There is perhaps nobody who is better acquainted with the inner history of the development of Protestant Christianity in this country than Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki. He has been intimately associated with all the leading men in the Protestant Church and has watched doctrinal and other developments with the keenest interest. In the fall of last year he began to compile a short history of the progress of thought in the Protestant Christian Church, and the work was published by the Keiseisha last June under the title of the Fukyū no Michi (The Everlasting Way). The work covers 290 small-sized pages. It is partly historical and partly doctrinal. In order to show the contents of the book we first give the headings of the 17 chapters of which it consists. Chap. I.—The Jews and Christ. II.—The state of the Japanese People. III.—Changes in Christianity during the Meiji Era. IV.—The Christianity of the Age of Christ. V.—The Christianity of the Apostolic Age. VI.—The Christianity of the Age of the Church Fathers. VII.—Medieval Christianity. VIII.—Protestant Christianity at the time of the Reformation. IX.—Modern Christianity. X.—The Merits and the Defects of Christianity. XI.—Progressive Churches. XII.—The Way, Religion and the Churches. XIII.—Articles of belief in our Church. XIV.—Our Forms and Work. XV.—Things that should change and things which never change. XVI.—Our Views on Preaching and Conversion. XVII.—Conclusions. A good many of the chapters in this work will not be of special interest to foreign readers, as they deal with history with which they are perfectly familiar. But Mr. Matsumura's account of the great changes which Christian belief has undergone in Protestant Churches deserves special attention, as he knows better than any foreigner can possibly know what teaching is accepted and what is rejected by leaders of thought in the Protestant Church. Chap. III., Mr. Matsumura informs us, contains a correct history of Japanese Protestant Christianity during the Meiji era. On the manner in which the early churches were founded by Dr. Verbeck, Bishop Williams, Dr. Brown, Captain James, Mr. Ballagh and a few others, Mr. Matsumura has nothing specially new to tell us. But what he says about the attitude of the converts to the teaching of the missionaries is full of interest. When he became a convert in 1877 he felt it to be his duty, he says, to obey the missionaries in everything. What they enjoined he did, what they prohibited he refrained from. They had come from enlightened countries and so of course they knew what ought to be believed and done. So all the orthodox doctrines were accepted without much reflection or inquiry. The Sabbath was strictly observed; sake and tobacco even were abstained from. Then there came a time when thoughtful Christians began to study Christianity and its teaching for themselves. This resulted in their reaching many conclusions bearing on doctrine, practices and forms which were quite irreconcilable with the teaching of the missionaries. Looking back, says Mr. Matsumura, we have come to the conclusion that the Christianity with which we were acquainted prior to the year 1887 was imperfect in form (Kayeri-mireba Meiji no jū nen yori nijū nen made no Kirisutokiyō wa jitsu ni kenkyū no tarazaru Kirisutokiyō nari). We, furthermore, perceive that the Japanese preaching of those days was the result of youthful spirits and excitement rather than of serious deliberation. But this preaching undoubtedly attracted much attention to Christianity. The whole nation at that time was full of the idea that in everything Europe and America are ahead of Japan. Our preachers did not pause to think whether the doctrines they were proclaiming were rational or irrational. They might have gone on living in a fool's paradise for a long time had there not come a sudden awakening. The Tōkyō Imperial University became the centre of a violent anti-Christian storm. The attack on orthodox Christianity was started by a foreign Professor, but was welcomed by Dr. Katō Hiroyuki and a large number of Japanese professors, who warned the students against accepting doctrines which were being given up as untenable in Western countries. Spencer, Mill and Darwin were eagerly studied by our educated men. In the meantime Unitarians arrived from America with their liberal ideas on Christianity and their respectful attitude towards other creeds. Books on German Neo-theology began to be circulated in our midst. And Japanese who had studied in America and Europe came back and informed us that many of the doctrines which, following in the wake of the missionaries, we were propagating and defending here had been discarded as out of date in the West. The Puritan form of Christianity, with its prohibition of tobacco and liquor and its strict Sunday observances, was, these Japanese Christian said, no longer popular in the West. These various influences coming one on the top of the other convinced all thoughtful Christians of the necessity of a thorough overhauling of the articles of belief that they had so blindly accepted second-hand. It was quite evident that such doctrines as that of eternal punishment would have to be discarded, and I for one sympathized with Mill when he said, "If there be a God of this kind who can send me to hell, to hell will I gladly go."* Every earnest-minded Christian had to ask himself which of the doctrines he had accepted were tenable and which untenable. And so a period of doubt, perplexity and misgiving followed an era of blind, unquestioning faith. During the period that began with the year 1887 and ended with the year 1897 the theological views of prominent Japanese Christians underwent radical changes. Kanamori, Yokoi, Ebina, Uemura and many others modified their opinions in various important particulars, and I myself did the same. But it was not only with the Christian theology which had been taught us that we became dissatisfied, we felt equal aversion to the morality in vogue among Christians at that time. It was true that smoking was condemned, and drinking was prohibited and concubinage was condemned, but in the culture of fine moral qualities, in the display of justice, impartiality, liberality and sincerity, Christians fell far short of the noble ideals held up to us by the Chinese sages and by Confucian Bushidō writers. They indulged in backbiting, they displayed all sorts of pettiness, jealousy and partisanship. They plotted and schemed one against another in secret, and yet these very plotters lacked the courage to acknowledge openly the opinions they were known to hold. Sneakiness and hypocrisy prevailed in the churches to a sickening extent. Seeing all this, I said, if this be Christianity, it is infinitely inferior to our Bushidō. I turned for relief to the teaching of the Chinese sages and to Buddhist priests. It seemed to me that we had in our own country far higher moral ideals than those followed in our Christian churches.

Coming to the subject of independence, financial and doctrinal, the closing decade of the twentieth century will ever be remembered by us Christians as a period in which our inborn Japanese manliness made itself felt in the Christian Church. It was Mr. Ebina who first pointed out to me that it was quite essential that Japanese Christian teachers should break loose from missionary control. Financial control meant doctrinal control. This control could no longer be endured. Japanese Christians must claim the right to believe what they please and to teach what they believed, however contrary it might be to the views of the missionaries. When once this notion had taken hold of the leaders of thought in the Congregational and Presbyterian churches Protestant Christianity in Japan began to enter on a new era. The new charter of liberty became popular everywhere. It was agreed that doctrinal differences should no longer be allowed to keep Christians apart from each other. It was plainly perceived that to run Christian churches with money subscribed abroad meant that those churches were to remain in bondage to the teaching of the missionaries sent by the subscribers or their Boards, and so in all parts of the empire efforts were made to render the independence of Japanese Christianity indelible. This has already been accomplished in the case of certain sects, and the example set will be followed by other Protestant sects, even by the Baptists and Episcopalians sooner or later.

During the past ten years the tendency in the churches has all been in the direction of less stringency. Sunday is no longer kept as it used to be. The crusade against smoking and drinking has been left to other bodies to carry on. The puritan dislike of secular music and dancing has given place to the open encouragement of these pastimes. Liberty in belief, liberty in thought, and freedom, above all, from sectarian prejudice and narrow-mindedness, have become more and more popular. Calvinists and Armenians not only mingle together, but they rub shoulders with Unitarians and German Neo-theologians without calling them by nasty names. The modern Japanese Church no longer regards such men as Mill, Spencer and Darwin as enemies. It willingly sits at the feet of all great teachers. It draws no distinctions between the orthodox and the heterodox. Each member of that Church accepts what commends itself to his or her mind as worthy of acceptance. It is recognized that Christianity may exist and prosper in many forms, and it is held that the Japanese type is likely to be dissimilar to any other. A levelling process has gone on, so that neither missionaries nor Japanese pastors can claim superiority of knowledge to other people. To the greatest variety of teaching and opinion we have all grown so accustomed that nothing we hear greatly astonishes us. Some will be found to object to ministers whose views are constantly changing, on the ground that it is likely to prove bewildering to their flocks. But anything is better than hypocrisy and stagnancy. There is no use in a minister's pretending to hold what in his heart of hearts he has rejected. A living faith demands the discarding of all dead forms and articles of belief that no longer represent men's actual convictions.

In Chap. X, Mr. Matsumura discusses in a fearless and rational manner the defects of Christianity. "Christianity," he says, "was never from its beginning a perfect religion (Kirisutokiyō naru mono wa tōshi yori kwanzen naru mono ni wa arazariki). Christ never claimed for himself what others have since his death claimed for him. "Why callest thou me good?" said Christ. "There is none good but one, that is God." To Mr. Matsumura it appears that Christianity has three great defects. (1) Its theology was originally so ill defined that immediately after the death of Christ great disputes arose between the Apostles. These disputes were carried on with great ardour by the Christian Fathers. So strong was the feeling between the different schools of thought that in later ages Europe witnessed bloody persecutions and the perpetration of horrible cruelties in the name of Christ. And the terrible conflict between Christian sects went on down to quite recent times, and still continues in various forms in some quarters of the globe. (2) The original Christian teaching was defective on the race question. Hence the disputes between St. Peter and St. Paul as to the different positions occupied by the Jew and the Gentile respectively. (3) Biblical teaching is morally defective, in that the greatest discrepancy appears between the teaching of Christ and that of St. James on the one hand and that of St. Paul on the other on the efficacy of good conduct as a means of salvation. Though Christ laid the greatest stress on the importance of upright conduct as a means of salvation, St. Paul distinctly asserts that prior to belief in Christ and salvation by means of the atonement nothing a man does will help him much. Mr. Matsumura dwells at considerable length on what he considers to be the five principal merits of Christianity: (1) Its views on God and Man; (2) its teaching on the home and the family; (3) the simplicity of its doctrines; (4) their great value to the world.

Among the things which most certainly ought to be changed dwelt on in Chapter XV. is the Bible. The age has outgrown it as it now stands. The notion that all the books in the Bible have equal authority is absurd on the face of it, as certain parts are in direct opposition to other parts. Belief in the inspiration of the Bible as a whole has gone, and men are asking now what there is left that is really authoritative.* The Bible as known to us and used by us having gone, what has the Christian Church to serve in its stead? The answer is nothing, at present, but sooner or later a substitute will be compiled. Shikaraba kongo no Kirisutokiyō naru mono wa ika naru keiten ni yotte iusu serarubeki mono naru ka? Iwaku, imada kore nashi; kanarazu ya sōban henjutsu seraruru mono arau.

In Chapter XIII., from p. 251 onwards Mr. Matsumura gives the articles of his belief as follows:—"Asked in what I believe, I reply. I believe in God, the Holy Spirit, prayer, communion with God, the culture of virtue, the love of neighbours and the future life." Each of these articles of belief is explained in clear language and with considerable definiteness by Mr. Matsumura. His belief in the future life consists of the conviction that he will have an individual existence after death and will meet all his friends and relatives in another world prior to absorption into the great Spirit of the Universe from which he originally proceeded. He does not believe, he says, in either the hell or the heaven of orthodox theology.

The Methodist organ, the Gokyo, in a leading article pleads for the better treatment of Christian ministers in Japan. It says that their poverty is so well known as to be referred to proverbially. We say "as poor as a church mouse," but here they say "as poor as a Christian pastor." Now and again, we are told by the Gokyo, churches recognize how inadequately remunerated their pastors are and by special gifts or by lenient treatment try to alleviate the hardness of their lot. The case of the Rev. T. Miyagawa of Osaka is quoted as a case in point. About eight years ago his church celebrated the 20th anniversary of his appointment as pastor by presenting him with a number of valuable gifts and several hundred yen in money and by granting him leave of absence for one year and a half to enable him to go to America, even subscribing money for his journey, and this year in celebration of his silver wedding they have again showered costly gifts on him. This constitutes a charming contrast to the treatment accorded to pastors generally throughout the country, says the Gokyo. The salaries received by these Christian workers are to-day what they were 10 years ago, while the cost of living has gone up by leaps and bounds. Families may grow bigger, but salaries are not increased. The wife may much need a new dress and the husband sadly want a new book, but the money all goes to meeting greater needs than these. If sickness comes it immediately brings debts, for no provision for such an emergency can be made. A wife of a pastor known to the writer earns a little money by pasting paper on match-boxes. If it happens that a pastor dies, the family is thrown into the greatest distress, the children become scattered. In foreign countries the same kind of thing no doubt exists to a certain extent. A tale concerning a poor minister appeared in an American paper some time ago. After serving as a pastor for 42 years this man lay down to die. Asked where he wished to be buried, he replied:—"What is the use of asking that? I have no home." He was eventually buried in ground belonging to an old convert of his.* Such cases are of course very rare. From the point of view of the pastor, if he be a true Christian, suffering for the cause is a lot that he cheerfully accepts. He is content to live poor and to die without fame in the service of God. But his flock should certainly show their high appreciation of his devotion in some such way as that adopted by Mr. Miyagawa's congregation in Osaka.

* * * It is stated in Japanese newspapers that steps are being taken by the Roman Catholics for founding a University in Tokyo. Three scholars arrived in this country a few months ago with the object of making the necessary arrangements. The lecturing is to be in English. The first subjects that will be taught will be Literature. Eventually, Law, Science and Philosophy, Ethics, Religion and Medicine will be added. The standard maintained will be on a level with that of the two Imperial Universities. Ability to read English text books will be a necessary qualification for admission to the classes. The institution will be run on broad cosmopolitan lines.

* * * The theory that religious belief is intimately connected with locality and physical surroundings is not new. We find that Mr. Katō Totsudō, an antiquarian, writing in the Nivoku Shinbun, has applied the theory to Japanese Buddhism, and what he says on this subject seems to us worth recording. Here is the substance of his remarks. It can hardly be denied that the acceptance of religious teaching largely depends on prevailing tastes and sentiments in different localities and among different classes of people. Speaking generally, it is true to say that the teaching of the Tendai and Shingon sects is most popular among well-disposed, dull-witted (ma no nuketa) people; that the Zen appeals find a hearty response among retiring, simple-minded, negligent (yarippanashi) sort of folks; the places which are considered the strongholds of the Shin Sect are inhabited partly by people of deep faith and partly by people who while professing adherence regard the tenets of the sect with aversion; where the Nichiren teaching is popular the people are invariably energetic, but they are also ignorant. Mountainous districts are favorable to the Tendai, Shingon and Zen Sects; plains to the Jōda and the Shin Sects, and the sea-coast to the Shin and the Nichiren Sects. Dividing Japanese Buddhism into three sections, according to the prominence given to certain practices, we may classify the sects thus:—The supplicating sects (kitoshū) are the Tendai, the Shingon and the Nichiren; the meditating sects (zenshū) are the Rinzaï, the Sōtō and the Obaku; and the Buddha invoking (nembutsu) sects are the Jōdo, the Shin and the Ji. The number of adherents of each group of sects is as follows:—The praying sects, 22,627; the meditating sects, 20,829, the nembutsu sects, 28,374. Since the majority of those who belong to the meditating sects certainly do their meditating by proxy and since the number of those who devote themselves to what is known as sazen (religious abstraction) and 親參實究, Shinsan Jikkō† is necessarily very limited, it is true to say that praying priests control religious belief in Japan. Dividing the sects according to their alleged connection with this world and the next, that is, according to the kind of prayers offered, it is true to say in a word, that the Kwantō Buddhists' religion is all connected with this world and that of the people residing in the Kwantō provinces with the world to come. Living near volcanoes and inured to earthquakes, the Kwantō people are content to offer up hearty prayers for deliverance from impending dangers. Of the distant future they never think. Even in the things of everyday life they are improvident, living hand to mouth, in striking contrast to the Kwantō folks who habitually lay by money for the rainy day that is sure to be encountered in the near future, while making provision for the life beyond the grave. In the Kwantō provinces the Tendai, Shingon and Nichiren Sects are the most popular. In snowy regions like the Hokurikudō the teaching of the Shin Sect, laying much stress as it does on the importance of the future life, is most acceptable. There are of course historical reasons why the teaching of one sect rather than that of another should prevail in any given province, but Geography accounts for a good deal. People are largely moulded by their physical surroundings and thus predisposed to be influenced by special doctrines. Chi wo hanarete hito naku, hito wo hanarete koto nashi de, shūkyō ga chi kara uketa eikyō wa keshite chisai koto de wa nai to omo.

* * * When Baron Kikuchi was lecturing in London on Japanese education he asserted that moral education in this country is based upon the Imperial Rescript on education. The truth of this assertion has been questioned by quite a number of writers. In the last number of the Seikyō Shimpō the whole question of the basis and origin of the system of morality prevailing in this country is discussed in a very clear way. It is stated by the Seikyō Shimpō that Baron Kikuchi's assertions on the subject in question caused some surprise among his English hearers. One of them said that if it were a fact that the high moral standard which Japan had displayed to the world during the past 5 or 6 years were actually traceable to the source named, he doubted whether such a standard could be maintained for any length of time. There are a good many people in this country, says the Seikyō Shimpō, who share this doubt. The Imperial Rescript unquestionably states in a concise manner the moral convictions of the Japanese nation. If we come to ask from what source these moral beliefs were derived, the answer is, observes the Seikyō Shimpō, that they are relics of our past history, they have been bequeathed to us by our ancestors. Whence did our ancestors derive them? From Confucianism, Buddhism and from a number of other enlightening influences that made themselves felt in old Japan, among which the influence of the State as then constituted is to be included. But the whole situation has changed. Neither Confucianism nor Buddhism hold sway over the Japanese mind to-day. The Japanese State has been remodelled on constitutional lines. The Government can no longer treat their subjects in the fatherly way they used to do. Morally Japan is living on the past. In physics when the impetus that sets a body in motion ceases to act, that body will go on moving as long any of the energy imparted to it remains. But when the energy-producing cause exists no longer, it is only a question of time as to how long the energy can remain. Morally we are now living on what is known as surplus energy (精力 daryoku *). The time when this energy will be wholly exhausted can not be far distant, and the question of questions is: what are we going to do then? Japanese morality can be traced to no simple origin. Subjectively considered, it is the result of Confucian and Buddhist teaching on the minds of men in past times, and, objectively considered, it can be traced to the State and the various laws and customs which the State has promulgated or openly encouraged. That moral sentiments and the moral sense have grown weaker in recent years owing to the non existence of the original impetus is acknowledged by our leading moralists. Anxiety about the future has been expressed again and again within the past few years. Society generally seems to have awakened to the fact that the nation no longer possesses moral impetus strong enough to render it proof against the working of the insidious undermining influences of modern times. The remedies for the present moral deterioration proposed are various. Some advocate the revival of Confucianism, others a revival of Buddhism or a recasting of that creed to suit the present age, others again the structure of a new religious and moral creed with material furnished by the historical religions. There is not the slightest chance of either of these devices proving adequate to suit the occasion. The only effectual remedy for the evil complained of is the adoption of Christianity, concludes the Seikyō Shimpō.

* A term applied to the energy or force that remains after the producing cause has ceased to act. This meaning of Daryoku is not given in Vol. I. of the new edition of Gubbins' Dictionary, we observe.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

The movable and immovable property of the Greek Church has now been placed under the ownership of a juridical person, we are told by the Rev. K. Ishikawa, the editor of the Seikyō Shimpō. Permission to make this arrangement has only just been given by the Home Office. It would seem that in the case of churches, temples and other property belonging to religious bodies the authorities have considered it necessary to enquire minutely into the nature of the alleged ownership, and that consequently until very recently permission has been refused to all religious bodies to appoint juridical persons as mere holders of property. There are two kinds of juridical persons, one known as saidan (財團) hōjin and the other as shadan (社団) hōjin. The Protestant sects have hitherto been content with leave to appoint the latter kind of juridical person only, who is the legal representative of a society or an association. Property formerly held by foreigners in various ways has in most cases now been registered under the ownership of Shadan hōjin *. This arrangement has never seemed to be altogether satisfactory to the Greek Church and so for some years they have been trying to get permission to appoint a juridical person who shall legally represent property only and not an Association, though of course as a matter of fact such person or persons are nominated by Greek Church authorities. It is maintained by Mr. Ishikawa that there are objections to the creation of the shadan hōjin which do not apply to the saidan hōjin, and on consulting a jurist on this point we are informed that this view is correct. The Greek Church representatives in Tokyo have found it no easy matter to obtain permission from the Home Office to create saidan hōjin. After months of negotiation they have the honour of establishing a precedent which will doubtless be followed by other religious bodies, Buddhist, Shintō and Christian. According to this arrangement the existence of property itself is the raison d'être for the existence of the juridical person. The property, it is alleged, when registered thus is legally more thoroughly inalienable than when registered in the name of a juridical person or persons who represent societies or associations only. The Greek Church property in Tokyo and elsewhere is of enormous value, and the fact that the Government of Japan has now granted to this Church as a Church the power to create a saidan hōjin has rightly caused no little rejoicing in that body, as it constitutes a public recognition of the position it occupies in the country.

* It goes without saying that the foreign juridical persons only have superfluous rights as owners of land. Most of the mission property in this country is held by Shadan hōjin, i.e., by juridical persons who represent societies.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

THE DIVIDEND of the Osaka Electric Light Co. for the latter half of this year will be declared at the rate of 16 per cent. per annum; and an interim dividend of the Osaka Gas Co. for the same period at the rate of 8 per cent. or a little more.

DOROTHY AT THE "GAITY."

Stephenson and Cellier's Comedy-Opera "Dorothy," beloved of British play-goers for a generation past, was produced on Monday night by the Amateur Dramatic Club of Yokohama at the transformed Public Hall, henceforth to be known as the "Gaiety." Verily with each successive venture the local A.D.C. excels itself, and Yokohama may well appreciate the efforts of the sixty ladies and gentlemen who, at such considerable labour and expense, provided so rich a musical and dramatic treat as the community was afforded on Monday, and is yet to enjoy on three succeeding occasions.

The play opens in the hop-gardens adjoining the Boots and Spurs Inn kept by old Jasper Tuppiitt near Chanticleer Hall in Kent, the demesne of Squire Bantam. The pickers are in high spirits at the near approach of the feasting which will mark the end of their labours, when Dorothy, the Squire's daughter, and Lydia Hawthorne, his niece, arrive on the scene dressed as country lasses. They learn that Phyllis, old Jasper's daughter, has promised to marry Tom Strutt, one of the local rustics, and the damsel persists in her resolve in spite of warnings from the young ladies, who (of course) have sworn to remain single. The Squire, however, has made up his mind that Dorothy is to marry his nephew and heir, Geoffrey Wilder, whom she has never seen and who has been living a wild life in London. As it happens, Wilder is that very day on his way to his uncle's house, resolved, under pressure of debt, to yield to the old man's wish, and the bailiff Lurcher is close on his heels. Dorothy and Lydia pass themselves off as old Tuppiitt's daughters and the impressionable young men fall victims to their charms. Lurcher now appears upon the scene, but, when Wilder saves him from the wrath of the villagers, whose indignation he has roused by serving a writ upon an old woman of the neighbourhood, the bailiff is ready to listen to a scheme of Wilder's for raising the money which is put into execution in the second Act.

The scene then changes to the gay cheerfulness of Chanticleer Hall, where Squire Bantam is entertaining his neighbours. The festivities are interrupted by Lurcher, disguised as the messenger of the Duke of Berkshire, who informs the Squire that his Grace's carriage has broken down near the Hall and that his Grace—who of course is none other than Geoffrey Wilder himself—craves the Squire's hospitality. The latter is only too glad to entertain a member of the nobility, and thus the "Duke," and his companion Harry Sherwood, find themselves under the Squire's roof. They fail to recognize the ladies, but despite their vows to their rustic lassies soon find themselves under the spell—Sherwood, of Dorothy, and Wilder, of her fair cousin Lydia—to whom respectively they render up as tokens the rings given them by Dorcas and Abigail,—thus proving the faithfulness of the mere man. Then, when the guests have retired to rest, follows the midnight alarm. Wilder and Sherwood, masked and armed, bind the Squire, after which Sherwood also binds his friend the "Duke." The household is roused, but after due investigation the only victim of the robbery appears to be the "Duke," whose money-box is empty. On this the Squire, who could not suffer a guest in his house to be a loser on that account, makes good the supposed loss—the amount as stated by the "secretary" Lurcher corresponding curiously enough to that of Wilder's debts. The "Duke" after some hesitation accepts the proffered sum as a loan. The scene ends with the early morning call of red-coated huntsmen to the chase.

Act. III contains the amusing scene of the duel at the Round Coppice. With the morning light prudence has returned. Wilder and Sherwood have intimated to the Squire's daughter and niece respectively their resolve to return to their rustic loves. Dorothy and Lydia determine to put these protestations to the test. Attired as young gallants they challenge the two swains to answer for their conduct to Miss Dorothy Bantam and Miss Lydia Hawthorne at the point of the pistol—unloaded, as they hope to contrive. But their adversaries, having been challenged, elect to use their own weapons, which doubtless would contain bullets. Flight is therefore the only resource of the two young "gallants," who nevertheless enjoy a secret sense of satisfaction from the fact that their would-be opponents are prepared to fight for the ladies of their former choice. Meanwhile Lurcher has let the Squire into the plot, but the old gentleman is prepared to forgive all if his nephew is willing to marry Dorothy. There is no difficulty about arranging this, Lydia pairs off with Sherwood, and all ends well.

Mrs. J. P. Mollison made a charming Dorothy, her magnificent voice being the delight of the evening and of invaluable assistance in the choruses. Great praise is due also to Miss Graff, who took the part of Lydia, and to Miss Booth, who played Phyllis with pretty innocence. Both these young ladies, who, we understand, made their debut on this occasion, deserve hearty congratulation. The part of the amorous widow, Mrs. Privett, was cleverly played by Mrs. McWilliams, whose love-passages with Lurcher in his capacity as an "officer" served as the most humorous interludes of the evening. Mr. Brady was, as ever, inimitable, whether as process server or duke's secretary, and his lightest words and acts were provocative of the keenest mirth. Mr. A. E. Cooper made a first-rate Wilder and was ably seconded by his friend Harry Sherwood (Mr. S. H. Somerton). The latter is to be congratulated on his excellent rendering of the ever-popular "I stand at your threshold sighing," with its even better known refrain. The rôle of the Squire was played by Mr. W. M. Stewart with great spirit, while Mr. Colchester as the landlord of "The Boots and Spurs" and Mr. Windett, as Tom Strutt, deserve unstinted praise for the careful rendering of their parts.

The choruses as a whole were capably rendered. If any criticism be called for, it may be remarked that the Altos were a shade weaker than the other parts—this is also true of the trios and quartets—and that now and again there was a tendency to slackness in time. One or two of the choruses would also be greatly improved if the Tenor was strengthened. These minor defects may, however, have been due to a very natural nervousness on the part of some of the singers, which subsequent performances will in all probability remove. Regarding both the production and the performance as a whole, the management, the orchestra, the principals and the entire company thoroughly deserve the highest praise.

SECOND PERFORMANCE.

"Dorothy's" second performance was a success in every respect. The house was large and enthusiastic and as might be expected Wednesday's performance as far transcended Monday's as second nights usually do firsts. It may perhaps be enough to say that the excellencies shown on the first night were developed and accentuated and that previous small defects were absent. The whole play went well and altogether the entertainment was most enjoyable.

A flashlight photo will be taken of the children selected in the Theatre at the Matinee on Saturday.

YOKOHAMA DOCK CO.

NEW MOORING BASIN OPENED.

The ceremony of opening the new mooring basin of the Yokohama Dock Co. took place on Saturday afternoon. The buildings were well decorated with flags. The mooring basin is 600 feet in length, 180 feet in width and 27 feet in depth, which dimensions render it hardly inferior in capacity to that of the Miike Ship-Building Yard, belonging to the Mitsu Bishi Co. There are three dry docks, No. 1, which is 515 feet and No. 2 376 feet in length; while No. 3, which is 481 feet in length, is still in course of construction.

Some five hundred foreign and Japanese guests were present, though the weather was quite cold. The company were received by Mr. Asada and a large staff of officials, and at about two o'clock the various officials and visitors connected with the ceremony ascended a temporary platform at the head of the new basin. Mr. Asada read an address in which he said the wet dock was begun in 1906, the latest improvements in foreign countries being availed of, and was completed without a hitch. No. 3 dry dock was expected to be completed in March, 1910. A brief description of the work was given by Mr. Tsunekawa in the course of which he said the total outlay was yen 175,700. Congratulatory speeches were delivered by Governor Sufu, Mayor Mitsuhashi, Messrs. Ishii, Kaneko and Ono, and an address was read from Mr. Masuda, President of the City Council. Mr. Kurusu, Vice-President of the Company, made a suitable reply, after which the guests proceeded to the new basin, where the formal ceremony of admitting the water from the sea into the basin was performed by Mr. Asada.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The fortnightly meeting of the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society was held at Van Schaick Hall on Friday evening at 8.45, when, in honour of the Milton Tercentenary, a lecture on the poet and his works was delivered by Mr. J. Carey Hall, I. S. O., British Consul-General at this port.

The musical programme comprised songs by Mrs. Richards and Mr. D. Mass, a piano solo by Mr. Pohl, and flute and piccolo solos by Professor Frederic Griffith, A.R.A.M.

For the Christmas meeting of the Society to be held at the Gaiety on Friday, the 18th instant, an excellent programme is being arranged. In addition to vocal and instrumental pieces, an amusing farce will be presented by Mrs. McWilliams, Mr. C. Aslet and Mr. A. H. J. Windett.

FIRE broke out at 3 p.m. on Dec. 7th in the district of Nasu, destroying some fifty houses.

"DOROTHY."

The production of "Dorothy" takes me back twenty years and more to the old Gaiety Theatre, London, and recalls to memory the ever fascinating personality of Marie Tempest in the title rôle, Hayden Coffin as Sherwood, Ben Davies as Wilder, Arthur Williams as Lurcher, and all the other members of a brilliant cast that made the town ring with the tuneful harmonies during a run that in those days was considered phenomenal, and that have maintained the opera in high favour with the public ever since. I can picture to myself the old fashioned courtesies of Squire Bantam in Chanticleer Hall, the hoydenish Dorothy and her cousin Lydia masquerading as farmers daughters and as such captivating the too susceptible Wilder and Sherwood; the charming Phyllis and her rustic lover; Lurcher and his antics with the antique (this is not a joke), Mrs. Privet; Mr. Tuppit and the ever present but always delightful chorus, notably in the famous Huntsman's "Tally Ho." Again I can see the Ball Room at Chanticleer Hall, the stately entrance of Dorothy and Lydia in their lovely dresses of the period, and their graceful minuet with Wilder and Sherwood; the night alarm and the frightened household in their "nighties," the famous duel scene in the wood, and the final clearing up of all misunderstandings, culminating in the union of Dorothy with Wilder and Lydia with Sherwood. All these scenes come back to me like a pleasant dream, and in the hands of such a cast and chorus as the A.D.C. have been able to secure, I look forward to my dream becoming a delightful reality when the curtain rises at the New Gaiety Theatre on Monday evening, the 7th Dec.—(Communicated.)

YOKOHAMA.

A number of leading business men of Yokohama held a meeting on the evening of Dec. 3rd at the Bankers' Club in Honcho dori. Baron Sakatani, formerly Minister for Finance, who recently returned from a visit to America and Europe, made a speech. In the course of the address, he said that all the Powers were encouraging the shipping business and accordingly competition between the shipping companies was growing serious. Referring to the perfect construction of harbours in foreign countries, the speaker advised Yokohama business men to accomplish the proposed improvement of the harbour for the benefit of foreign trade. In conclusion he said that Japan has to do much in order to maintain her position among the first Powers.

While a detective of the Isezaki cho Office was trying to arrest an old man on Dec. 3rd in front of the police station, the latter died suddenly from apoplexy. A little before his death, the old man stole several articles in Suyeyoshi-cho and was on his way to Nakamura-machi.

A man was arrested early on the morning of Dec. 5th at a hotel named the Toshino-ya, Yanagi-cho. It appears that while living at Aomori he stole yen 2,000 from the Hirosaki Bank and disappeared.

An armed man visited a tea house in Yokosuka early on the morning of Dec. 5th, and stole a small amount of money from the proprietress of the house.

At its meeting of Dec. 4th, the Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly passed a bill providing for the reconstruction of the prefectural government office at a cost of yen 435,935. As the project had been previously investigated, the second and third readings were dispensed with.

Two old persons were run over and killed by a train on the evening of Dec. 5th at Chigasaki while attempting to cross the railway.

Mr. K. Abe, a secretary of the Kanagawa Prefectural Office, has been transferred to Hyogo prefecture, and Mr. K. Tominaga, a secretary of the Hyogo Prefectural Government, to Yokohama.

Fire occurred early on the morning of Dec. 8th at Yokosuka burning down about 100 buildings. The flames originated in a bath-house at Ogawa-cho.

Mr. Millet, one of the American Committee for the Tokyo Grand Exhibition, left Yokohama on Dec. 9th, by the Nippon Maru for home.

The dead body of a man was found in the woods near Oiso on Dec. 6th. He was not identified. On the following day a geisha attempted to commit suicide by throwing herself into an old well at Hiratsuka. She was rescued by a passer-by. The cause is said to have been ill-treatment by her employer.

The health returns of Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended Dec. 6th are as follows:—

	Cholera.	Dysentery.	Typhus.	Diphtheria.	Scarlet fever.
Yokohama—
New cases .....	—	—	22	12	—
Died .....	—	—	2	2	—
Other Districts—
New cases .....	—	1	12	6	—
Died .....	—	—	9	2	—

On the evening of Dec. 7th a horse attached to a wagon took flight in Sakuragi-cho near the Railway Station, and trampled upon an old man, inflicting very severe injuries.

Mr. S. Nakanuma, the second alderman of the Yokohama City Office, has tendered his resignation. Formerly he was a lawyer in Kyoto. In 1906 he took his present position. At the general election which took place this spring he was elected representative for Oki Island.

Mr. H. Shimomura, director of the Yokohama Post and Telegraph Office, has resigned. Mr. T. Sakano, a secretary of the Department of Communications, has been appointed to the vacancy.

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha's European liner Kamo Maru is expected to arrive at Yokohama to day, Dec. 11th. The ship will bring the ashes of the Japanese soldiers who died in Russia while detained as prisoners during the war.

A workman employed by the printing office Shoyei sha, in Ota-machi, attempted to murder his wife with a large knife on Dec. 9th at their house. The man was arrested late the same evening. Prior to the tragedy they had a dispute on money matters after which the wife asked him for divorce.

Herr H. Koller has been appointed Consul in Yokohama for Austria-Hungary. On Dec. 5th the Japanese Foreign Office issued an exequatur to him.

Viscount Okabe, Minister for Justice, paid a visit to the Yokohama 1-istrict and Local Courts as well as the Negishi Jail on the morning of Dec. 10th. He inspected the proceedings of official business.

Late on the night of Dec. 8th a young man was found crushed to death on the railway near west Tobe-machi. He is believed to have laid himself on the permanent line for suicide.

Through a slight dispute, a carpenter named T. Yamanaka (54) attacked another carpenter, S. Hamura (55) by name, with a hatchet on Dec. 8th at a house in Okano-cho. The victim was at once removed to the Noge Hospital where he died on the following morning. The offender gave himself up to the Kanagawa Police Office.

The Yokohama Electric Light Co. and the Kyodo Transportation Co. will hold general meetings on Dec. 19th and 23rd respectively. Interim dividends of the companies for the second half of this year are reported to be declared at the rate of 10 per cent. each per annum.

THE LAW COURTS.

ALLEGED CUSTOMS SCANDAL.

The trial in the alleged Customs scandal in which S. Akiyama, assistant appraiser, and others, 10 in all, are defendants, was resumed on Dec. 5th in the Yokohama District Court.

The Public Prosecutor made a speech summarizing the evidence produced by the Judge. He concluded that there was no doubt about the crime committed by the accused.

Counsel for the defence contended that there was not sufficient evidence for the charge against his clients.

The proceedings will be resumed on Dec. 8th.

ALLEGED TREASON.

An appeal lodged by K. Kushiitani, formerly an assistant civil engineer of the Naval Department, and S. Ishiyama, a lawyer of Hakodate, against the decision passed in the Tokyo District Court sentencing them to 6 years' confinement with hard labour, was heard on Dec. 5th in the Tokyo Appeal Court.

The statement of Kushiitani was that in 1906 he received an order from the Naval Department to return to the office the photographs showing the whole zone of the Iwanai harbour and land constructions. He kept 13 of the photographs in a wall of his house when he was absent on official business. Later he handed over the remaining photographs to Ishiyama.

Ishiyama said that he had shown the photographs to a Russian officer in order to ascertain his views as to the value of the fortifications for the national defence.

The trial was adjourned sine die.

THE KAIEDA CASE.

A case instituted by Mr. Kokichi Kaieda, a son of the late Viscount Kaieda, against Mr. Torajiro, another son of the same nobleman, petitioning for restoration of succession rights, was brought up again in the Tokyo District Court on Dec. 4th. The Judge passed judgment in favour of Plaintiff and ordered Defendant to bear the costs. It is alleged that Plaintiff was the son of Viscountess Kaieda, who is a younger sister of Countess Togo, and Defendant, of a woman employed by the deceased nobleman.

ALLEGED INFRINGEMENT OF THE SPIRIT LAW.

A decision was passed on Dec. 8th in the Tokyo Appeal Court in a criminal case in which S. Okura, T. Ohara and T. Adzuma were defendants on a charge of having clandestinely manufactured about 14 koku of alcohol. The first two men were sentenced to a fine of yen 19,174.85 each, and the other to yen 5,600.60.

CLAIM AGAINST THE TOKYO JOCKEY CLUB.

F. Kanematsu, a trader of Kobe, has lodged a case in the Tokyo District Court against the Tokyo Jockey Club (of which Mr. Y. Ozaki, Mayor of Tokyo is the president) claiming yen 16,000. The hearing will shortly take place. According to the petition the Club issued a promissory note for the foregoing sum and at due time failed to pay for the note.

DEATH OF MR. G. CAMPREDON.

We regret to learn that telegraphic news was received in Yokohama on Wednesday announcing the death the same day of Mr. Gustave Campredon, representative partner in Bordeaux of the firm of Messrs. Adet, Campredon & Co.

Mr. Campredon, who was born in Bordeaux 46 years ago, came to Japan about 1884 and in conjunction with Mr. G. Adet, established the firm of Adet, Campredon & Co. at No. 95. During his stay in Yokohama he married a daughter of the late Mr. H. Moss, with whom, as well as with her two children, deep sympathy will be felt.

Leaving Yokohama in 1901 Mr. Campredon returned to France and has since then resided and carried on business at Bordeaux. It was known that he suffered from slight asthma, but the news of his demise comes upon his friends here with quite a shock.

MARRIAGE OF MR. H. M. LOOMIS.

Miss Eleanor Wigton Wallace, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Laird Wallace, and Henry Meech Loomis of Seattle, Wash., son of Rev. and Mrs. Henry Loomis of Yokohama were married on the 10th of November in Pine Street Presbyterian Church, Harrisburg, Pa., Rev. Dr. George S. Chambers, pastor of the church officiating. Tall palms, ferns and other plants effectively massed with vases of great nodding white chrysanthemums, completely hid the pulpit and choir rail, the effect of the leaves and plants against the delicate colors of the walls being beautiful. Promptly at half past six, to the strains of the Guilmant Nuptial March, played by David Crozier of Philadelphia, the maid of honor, Miss Margaret McLain, a niece of the bride, followed by the six bridal attendants, entered the church from the door at the right of the chancel. Advancing down the right centre aisle to the rear of the church, and passing through a second aisle formed by the six ushers—Dr. Robert Kingman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., William Aleck Faxon, of Buffalo, N. Y., Alfred Veomans, of Philadelphia; Evans Loomis of Forest Hill N. J., Robert Wallace of Harrisburg, and Justin Campbell of Steelton—they met the bride, and, turning, the entire bridal party moved down the aisle to the music of the Lohengrin Wedding March. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of ivory Duchesse satin, with trimmings of Princesse lace. Her veil was of tulle, and she carried a shower bouquet of bride roses and lilies of the valley. The groom was attended by Robert Hatfield Irons as best man. Following the ceremony was a reception for the relatives only at the Wallace residence. Chrysanthemums, potted plants and Southern smilax were used in the house decorations, and the bridal table looked most attractive with decorations of chrysanthemums. Mr. and Mrs. Loomis left late on a wedding trip, and will reside at Seattle, Washington, where the former has business in connection with the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D.C.

BRITAIN'S NEWEST SHIPS.

The Collingwood, the most powerful of all British battleships and the sixth vessel of the Dreadnought class to be placed in the water, was successfully launched at Devonport on Nov. 7th. Mrs. Asquith, who was accompanied by her husband, the prime minister, gave the signal which set the launching machinery in motion, and as the huge mass of steel plunged into the water she christened the vessel "Collingwood." On the same day the great cruiser Invincible in a trial under seven-tenths of her power attained a speed of 25 knots an hour. It is expected that the vessel when working under full power will reach a speed of 30 knots, a world's record.

The Invincible is the last to be completed of the three great cruiser-battleships which were laid down in the yards in 1906. First came the Indomitable, which carried the Prince of Wales to Canada at the time of the Quebec tercentenary, and which made record-breaking time on her return voyage to the Isle of Wight. The second was the Inflexible, which ran her speed trials a few weeks ago, reaching the rate of 27 1/4 knots an hour. It was thought that it would have been greater but for a hindering fog. Now comes the Invincible, to eclipse both her sister ships in the matter of speed.

RUGBY FOOTBALL.

Two games of football under Rugby rules were played on Saturday between 1st and 2nd teams respectively of Keio University and the Y. C. & A. C. The junior fifteens took the field first, and a fast but loose game resulted in a draw (2 tries, or 6 points, each). The second game showed better play, but the Y. C. and A. C., with their superior weight and combination, were too strong for their opponents. The passing on both sides, however, was often wild, and not a few chances of scoring were lost in this way. Passing low is one thing: passing along the ground another.

As the result showed (2 goals 2 tries, or 25 points, to ml), however, the Y. C. & A. C. could on this occasion afford to make mistakes which against more equal opponents would cost them dear. Buckle (3), Meere (2), Pollock and Ward succeeded in crossing the line. Only two of the seven tries were converted—by Lambert and Ward.

The Rugby games were preceded by a hockey-match—Y. C. & A. C. v. Keio 1st XI.—which after some interesting play resulted in a victory for the home team by 5 goals to nil.

The series of seven-a-side Rugby Football matches was continued on Thursday, when Mr. Foster's VII. met Mr. Ward's VII., the latter team winning by three goals to one. The teams were:—

B. C. Foster (Capt.)	J. Ward (Capt.)
G. K. Totton	L. Meere
V. G. Bowden	R. J. Bell
S. A. Vincent	A. W. S. Austen
S. R. Box	W. B. Mason
W. Graham	A. Gorman
L. Stornebrink	R. Bowden

Referee:—Mr. A. L. Kennedy.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A CASE of smallpox is reported in Tokyo, the patient being a woman living in Sarui cho, Fukagawa.

PLAGUE is prevalent in Nishinomiya, Kobe. There were 11 new cases from Dec. 1st to the 4th. All the patients died.

ON Dec. 3rd fire broke out at the Mesome coal mine in Yamaguchi prefecture, causing serious damage. No casualties were reported.

ON the evening of Dec. 24th the Metropolitan police visited the stables belonging to the French Embassy, Tokyo, and succeeded in arresting thirteen Japanese in the act of gambling.

FIRE occurred in the Benisawa Woods near Nikko on Dec. 6th, burning an area of about 50 acres. On the same morning another fire broke out in Shimo-Sawa, Nagano prefecture, destroying 10 licensed houses.

THE end of the year is fore-shadowed by the first flight of calendars. They are those of the Alliance Assurance Company and the Yorkshire Insurance Company, of which the local agents are Messrs. Dodwell & Co.

SOME OF THE PLUMES of Miss Madge Temple's are two yards long, and arranged "to droop gracefully and picturesquely over the hat." Miss Temple has taken the precaution to insure this mammoth "creation" to its full value (£125), and special measures have had to be taken by the police to prevent obstruction in front of the premises where the hat is on view.

EXTRAORDINARY indeed is the attraction which England presents to Germans of bellicose type. Herr Rudolf Martin, government councillor and author of "The Coming War in the Air," who is president of the recently formed German League for Motor-airship Navigation, treated his audience at a public meeting here to plan for the conquest of England by airships. He asserted that the principal duty of aerial navigators was to induce the combined Continental Powers to construct a fleet of 10,000 "Z ppeings," each to carry twenty soldiers, which should land and capture the sleeping Britons before they would realize what was taking place.

A CAMPAIGN against the wearing of hats by women in churches and chapels has been started in Brooklyn, and it promises, according to the Christian World, to be a remarkably vigorous campaign, too. In America, as in England, the absurdity of fashions dictates that women should now wear hats built on a colossal scale, with forms as large as umbrellas. Dr. Myers, an influential Baptist minister, leads the Brooklyn campaign. His argument is that the huge artificial flower decorations which the women carry on their heads obliterate the preacher from the view of most of the congregation. Moreover, the "glorious creations of the milliner's art" distract the wearers and their neighbors. Dr. Myers has succeeded in inducing the women of his church to surrender their hats and join with him in the crusade.

DR. SVEN Hedin arrived a little past noon on Dec. 7th at the Umeda Station, Osaka, where he was welcomed by the local governor, mayor and a number of the leading citizens, about 30 in all. The Swedish traveller put up at the Osaka Hotel. Later he visited the Osaka castle, and the well-known Buddhist temples Tennoji and Dotombori. On the same evening he was present at a dinner-party at the tea-house Kaibo-ro given by journalists in his honour.

A STORY has been going the round of the papers narrating how a golfer was aided in his game by a crow, which carried off his ball and dropped it on the green. To be of any advantage to the golfer I fancy that, according to the rules of the game, the crow must have picked up the ball while it was still moving, and that seems a most unlikely action on the part of a British crow. In India, however, says a writer in the Country, the uninvited part which kites may take in a round of golf, or even a cricket match, by carrying off a moving ball is a contingency which has to be reckoned with occasionally. Lizards have been known to carry golf balls into their holes also; and another feature of the royal and ancient game in the East is the caution which players have to observe in taking their balls out of the holes. Snakes coiled up therein or lively scorpions running round in the confined space are by no means unknown.

FURTHER details says an exchange, are to hand of the seizure by Venezuela of a British ship, reported by Reuter about three weeks ago. Word was received at St. Vincent on October 24 of the seizure by the Venezuelan authorities of a British trading vessel at Margarita, an island in the Caribbean Sea, belonging to Venezuela, and the imprisonment of the crew. The St. Vincent schooner Lady Kensington carrying livestock and vegetables for Trinidad, after sighting the Dragon's Mouth, was becalmed. The schooner was carried far out of her course, and while drifting off Margarita was seized by Venezuelan officers. This occurred on September 23, and the crew and passengers have been detained as prisoners since. The owner of the vessel has just received, through the Trinidad agent, a letter from the captain of the Lady Kensington, dated September 25, in which he says: "We are still imprisoned. Our own provisions have been exhausted, and the Government says that it has no food to give us." The Governor of Trinidad has communicated with Sir Vincent Corbett, the British Minister at Caracas, inquiring as to the circumstances of the case, and urging an official investigation.

RAILWAYS IN CHINA.

The Peking correspondent of The Times telegraphs on follows:—

Peking, October 26.

The Official Gazette publishes an exultant memorial from the Yu chuan pu, or Ministry of Communications, reporting the conclusion of the recent £5,000,000 Anglo-French loan negotiations and emphasizing the fact that the contract contains no reference to any control of the railway or special application of the proceeds. It cites it a new departure, as establishing a principle of great advantage, increasing the power of China at home, and strengthening confidence abroad.

While excuse can be found for the memorial, confidence abroad must soon be shaken if the present mismanagement of the railways by the Yu-chuan-pu continues. China is making such progress in so many directions that it is deplorable that the most important department of Railways and Telegraphs should be entrusted to the corrupt Minister Chen-pi. Complaints of violation of contract are being received from nearly every railway in China in which British capital is interested, and are engaging the serious attention of the British Legation. The Canton-Kowloon Railway is in constant difficulties. The Shanghai-Nanking Railway, owing to likin obstruction, is virtually forbidden to earn money by carrying freight, and the earnings are therefore insufficient to pay interest on the capital. The large deficit will, by the terms of the Government guarantee, have to be made good by the Chinese Government from an inelastic revenue.

The Shanghai-Ning-po Railway contract, signed on March 6, 1908, is wholly ignored. The Yu-chuan-pu borrowed £1,500,000 of British capital for the construction, under a British chief engineer, of this important railway of 210 miles in length within three years from the date of the signature of the contract. It has secured the surplus earnings of the Northern railways, whose chief engineer, Mr. Kinder, has just resigned. No attempt has been made to fulfil the terms of the contract for which money was borrowed. A British engineer was appointed by the managing director, but the Yu-chuan-pu has permitted the Provincial Railway Bureau to repudiate the director and repudiate his appointment of the Englishman. The Englishman, who was induced to leave a good appointment, has received one month's pay, is now in Shanghai without an agreement, and is forbidden to interfere in the construction of the railway, and the money borrowed is lying untouched in the bank. Some pretence to work is being done with local moneys under an engineer of Greek nationality, but the line constructed is an elementary one and is in a disgraceful condition. It will require rebuilding, while the rolling stock of various patterns, bought without expert supervision, causes amusement to those onlookers who are not shareholders.

As already reported, in the negotiations for the recent Anglo-French loan the Yu-chuan-pu declined to state the specific object of the loan, although it is known that it is for the redemption of the Peking-Hankau railway. The rescript now published in the Official Gazette permits the raising of additional money for this object by means of a domestic loan, the first issue of which is to be for $10,000,000 (about £1,000,000) redeemable in 12 years. The interest is to be 7 per cent., plus 25 per cent. of the profits. The bonds are to be to bearer and the scrip accepted as legal tender at its face value in all offices under the control of the Yu-chuan-pu. Imperial rewards are promised to large purchasers. One ominous clause, however, forbids any inspection of the accounts.

Peking, October 30.
Sir John Jordan, the British Minister, has promptly intervened on behalf of the English principal of the engineering college at Tongshan and the Englishmen dismissed from their positions on the Northern railways, who have obtained reasonable compensation or have made a compromise, which meets with the approval of Mr. Kinder and renders more secure in future the position of foreign employees of the railway. The English principal will leave the college, the unfettered control of which will remain in the hands of a young Cantonese without technical training.

The Chinese express much regret at the resignation of Mr. Kinder, and have endeavoured to induce him to reconsider his decision, which, however, he declines to do. When he retires on May 1 the Yu-chuan-pu will probably invite him to retain his connexion with the Chinese railways as engineering adviser in London.

THE TONGKING FRONTIER INCIDENT.

The result of the Joint Inquiry into the incident on the Tongking-Yunnan frontier last June is published in the Official Gazette to-night. As reported in The Times on June 26, China admitted that the Chinese regular troops had crossed the frontier and had caused the death of a French officer and six Tirailleurs Tonkinois on French soil. China promised after the inquiry to punish the guilty. The Imperial Edict issued to-night in reply to the memorial of the Viceroy Hsi-liang condemns three of the offenders to decapitation and sentences seven others to imprisonment, exile, or perpetual exclusion from office. The punishments are regarded here as sufficiently severe.

MR. KU HUNG-MING.

Mr. Ku Hung-ming, whose name is widely known through his able writings, sends us the following letter and asks us to re-publish it from the columns of the N.-C. Daily News, a request with which we gladly comply, for the letter has great interest:—

THE LATE EMPRESS-DOWAGER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "N.-C. DAILY NEWS."
Sir,—The articles and notices which have appeared in the N.-C. Daily News on the recent sad events in this country have been, it seems to me, so unsympathetic, and in the case of H. I. M., the late Empress-Dowager, so hostile and harsh, that I felt myself obliged to protest against them. A professor of natural history, describing an interesting specimen of some ferocious animal, could not have written with less feeling than you have done when giving an account of the life and career of the late Empress-Dowager. I have no wish here to dispute your right to form and express your opinion of her character; what I complain of is the tone of your articles. I would ask—is it decent at a time of national mourning in this country for a foreign newspaper published in China to rake up unauthenticated stories of cruelties, murder and atrocities, which idle rumour and gossip have imputed to the Imperial Lady who was but a few days ago the First Lady of the land where foreigners are living as privileged guests?

I have no desire—nor is it this time and place—to argue with you as to the real character of the late Empress-Dowager. My own deliberate opinion on that subject I have already expressed in a poor little book, to which you have done me the honour to refer your readers. To foreigners who have made up their minds that the late Empress-Dowager was an ambitious, wicked and cruel woman, I have nothing to say except to repeat with compassionate sorrow the words of the Gospel: Mortemini peccatis in vestris (you shall die in your sins). But to other foreigners who have not so made up their minds, I would like, with your permission, to offer a few considerations which may enable them to form a juster estimate of her character than you have done.

The first thing I wish to say is that with all deference to you, the controlling motive in the life of the late Empress-Dowager was not, as the life motive of all great characters in history never was—vulgar ambition. Carlyle speaking of ambition in connexion with his hero, Cromwell, said: "The flunkies in their abject flunkiedom think what a fine thing it is to have people carrying bundles of paper tied with red tape coming every day to see you." In the case of the Empress-Dowager in China, beside the pleasure of having to be bothered with people carrying bundles of paper tied in red or yellow tape, the additional benefit she gets from the realization of her ambition is the delightful pleasure of having to get up summer and winter every day at half past four o'clock in the morning. Besides, not like a New York Society woman, she has not even the compensation of seeing her name blazoned forth and her lavish banquets described in a hundred morning papers. A woman who would be ambitious at such a cost and with such a poor reward, must be a very singularly vulgar and stupid woman. But say what you like, the late Empress-Dowager was not a vulgar and stupid woman.

Now, if any man was not, what was her controlling motive in life? In order to answer this question let me describe a scene told me by a friend, which took place in the Palace Council Chamber in Peking, just before the outbreak of the Franco-Chinese war. The late Empress-Dowager who had all along been siding with Li Hung-Chang for peace at any price, on hearing the news of the French bombardment at Fochow, immediately summoned all the State Ministers to her presence. The Ministers all to one man declared for war. The Empress-Dowager, pointing to the then boy Emperor, said to the Minister: "when your Emperor there grows up to be a man and I am dead, then he may, if he likes, throw away the heritage of his ancestors. But as long as I am alive, I shall never allow it to be said that a woman threw away the heritage of her ancestors left to her keeping for the little boy."

This then, I say, was the controlling motive in the life of the late Empress-Dowager, to devote herself late and early to preserving as intact and unimpaired as possible the Imperial heritage of the House left to her charge. According to the code of morals in China, the essential duty of a woman is not to live solely for her husband, her essential duty is to live for the name and heritage of the family. The controlling motive in the life of the late Empress-Dowager, I say, therefore, was a single-minded devotion to the essential duty of a woman according to the code of morals in China.

When on her death bed, after fifty years of her matrilarchate, she had the satisfaction of being able to say in her valedictory decree: "We have shown ourselves not unworthy of our trust," it was not an empty boast. "The highest form of filial piety," according to Confucius, "is to carry out the unfinished work of our forefathers and to transmit their achievements to posterity," and this the late Empress-Dowager has done. To sum up in one word, the controlling motive of her life was not ambition, but duty.

The next thing I wish to speak of is her ability. The greatness of the late Empress-Dowager's ability consisted in her ability not to trust to her own cleverness, but to make use of other people's abilities. In the treatise on high education (known to foreigners as the Great Learning), the highest ideal statesman is thus described: "Let me have," said the Duke of Tsin, "a plain and simple man as my minister, who has absolutely no other qualification except a free and open mind and a broad and catholic spirit, who regards others possessing abilities as though he himself possessed them and in his heart takes delight in the superior intelligence of others as if it were his own. A man who has such a catholic spirit and magnanimous soul will be able to protect my children and grandchildren, the black-haired race, and other benefits may well be looked for from such a man."

Now the secret of the success of the late Empress-Dowager's able statesmanship lay, even here, in the broadness and catholicity of her mind and the magnanimity of her soul. She was never an autocrat in the sense of voluntas regis, suprema lex. With her it was always, judicium in conciliis regis, suprema lex—the supreme law was the combined wisdom of her councils. In fact, during the fifty years of her rule, the government in China was not the government by one man, but a government by council with herself at the head, more as a moderating, regulating and inspiring than a guiding spirit.

To sum up in one word, the greatness of her intellect comes from the greatness of her character, the greatness of her soul.

I now wish to speak of her tastes. The simple answer to the extravagant stories of lavish banquets and the traditional gorgeous adornments of Oriental despots of your futile imagination, is that the late Empress-Dowager was a person of exquisite and perfect good taste. A person of really artistic taste can never be lavish in eating and will never put up with gorgeous adornments. The imperious dictates of an artistic taste are a severer discipline more forcible than the injunctions or precepts of religion against tasteless expenditure and gorgeous adornments. I have myself been inside the Summer Palace, inspected her private apartments and even tasted the food that she had partaken of. From what I saw and heard in the Palace, she might even be considered an adherent of the simple life. The only things I saw in her apartments which could in any way be considered as gorgeous adornments were pyramids of rose-cheeked apples. I was told by the people in the Palace that in one thing only she really indulged herself rather excessively, that was in flowers, the planting and growing of peony flowers. I may incidentally here mention that a book I saw lying open on her table was a new and recent edition with notes of the shu ching, the Confucian canon of history, containing the maxims of government by the sages of China. When I visited the Palace, the Empress-Dowager was in her sixtieth year and yet she was still trying to learn how to give good government to her people.

It is true that the building of the Summer Palace with every possible beautification cost an immense sum of money.

Adus, en voulant son peuple heureux, il faut bien qu'en roi vive. Besides let it be remembered when the late Empress-Dowager began to spend the money to build her Palace, she had already worked hard to earn it. After the toil and anxiety of thirty years transforming the anarchy and misery of the China of the Taiping days to the comparatively prosperous China of the time when she handed over the reins of government to her nephew Emperor, was it such an extravagant thing for her to ask of her people, the people of the great Chinese Empire, to build for their Empress a worthy and dignified home wherein to pass the rest of her days? In fact I once told Sir Robert Hart to his face when he and Dr. Morrison were enlarging to me upon the extravagance of the Empress Dowager, that considering the relative stations of their lives, he, Sir Robert Hart, with his brass band, etc. in my opinion, lived in style far more extravagant than the Empress-Dowager.

The last thing I want to speak about is her family relations. Against your unauthenticated insinuation of the mysterious death of her own son, the late Emperor Tungchih, and the scarcely disguised fact that the Empress-Dowager was responsible for the death of the Empress Ahlué, I will only on behalf of Her Imperial Majesty reply in the words of the unfortunate Marie Antoinette who, when similar atrocious accusations were made against her, calmly replied "I appeal to all the mothers of the world." The stories of the "bitter winter night" and the dramatic addition "the child wept," can easily be shown to be pure myths. For if it was true that a plot was on foot to raise a son of Prince Kung to the Throne, how was it possible, I would ask, that the old Prince Kung was found to be still in high favour long after the accession of the late Emperor Kuang Hsu? If there had been such a plot, the son of the old Prince Kung would not now be kicking his legs full of life as I saw him do at the British Legation last year.

I come now to the last thing I want to say—her relation with her nephew, the late Emperor Kuang Hsu. It has been arranged against her that when her son died, instead of allowing the succession to go in due course, she adopted a baby Emperor of the same generation as her son in order that she might remain regent, because she was ambitious and wanted power. Now was there anything very wrong in this? Remember that the China then as well as of the present day was entirely her work. When she was first called upon to take charge of the Imperial heritage, the Chinese Empire, that Chinese Empire was not only a mass of anarchy, chaos and misery, but that Empire was nearly being lost to the Imperial House. After over twenty years of hard work she had not only completely recovered the possession of the Imperial heritage, but had transformed it from anarchy, chaos and misery to order, good government and even prosperity. Do you think she should be justified, with her eyes open, to run the risk of having all her work of twenty years undone and the Imperial heritage again wrecked, ruined, and perhaps lost for ever? No—she had too high a sense of duty—the duty of a woman according to the Chinese code to care for the name and heritage of the family.

It was also this high sense of duty and responsibility to the Imperial House that made her so angry with her nephew, the late Emperor Kuang Hsu. Her anger was not the result of personal spite. Her anger arose from her sense of duty. She had devoted her whole life to preserve the ancestral heritage and had chosen him with the full hope that he would be worthy of the sacrifice she had made to preserve the heritage for him. But he had not only disappointed her hopes, he was even guilty of lightly trying to wreck her work and throw the heritage away. She had during these last few years still hoped against hope that he might still be worthy of her choice even to the last moment. But when she saw him dead, him the chosen foster child of her early widowhood upon whom she centred all her hopes, dead before her—the light of her life suddenly went out. The poor unhappy child was dead, what could then the still unhappier mother do but follow him immediately to his grave.

*Hui, miserande puer, si qua fata aspera rumpas,
Tu Marcellus eris. Manibus date lilia plenis, Purpureo spargam flores.*

I am, etc., KU HUNG-MING.

[While we are glad to publish Mr. Ku Hung-ming's interesting appreciation of the late Empress Dowager, we cannot admit the accuracy of his premises. The references in the leading article of November 17 were not unsympathetic, much less were they hostile and harsh. They were certainly intended to convey a profound admiration for the commanding personality that has dominated Chinese history for nearly half a century. The deeds of men of action constitute the great events of history; and we may leave it to our readers to decide whether it is more complimentary to represent the late Empress Dowager as a mere womanly woman moving in an exalted position and wielding the vermillion pen at the behest of successive statesmen; or as one of the most notable women in history, whose genius could subordinate to her service the talent of a Li Hung-chang, a Prince Kung, a Prince Ching and a Yuan Shih-kai.

In regard to the obituary notice, regret must be expressed that our account of the wonderful life of her late Majesty the Empress Dowager should have given offence, most unwittingly on our part, to any Chinese readers. To make any detailed reply to Mr. Ku Hung-ming would be unbecoming in these circumstances; but we would venture on one or two points "in explanation if not in excuse." First, that the statements to which Mr. Ku Hung-ming takes exception were based on Chinese accounts of the events under review. Secondly, that in obituary-writing generally, the writer endeavours as far as possible to anticipate briefly the verdict of history, so thus passages may find their way in which would be more rigorously excluded from a leading article. And this is particularly the case in dealing with such a life as that of the Empress Dowager Tze Hsi, who was so wholly screened from outside gaze that she may have appeared, even to her own subjects, (how much more then to foreigners?) as an indefinable influence rather than as a living person.—Ed. J.M.]

CORRESPONDENCE.

"LAYMAN'S IMPOSSIBLE POSITION."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your Correspondent "Layman" persists in clinging to his impossible position. But as his premises are false his whole argument must go. His contention is that if a man draws his living from teaching a subject, he cannot be a reliable authority on that subject: in other words, no man can be depended upon to tell the truth when giving evidence on matters that affect his livelihood. From this obviously false assumption, "Layman" launches out with the false and sweeping proposition that the witness which clergymen bear to truth is biased and entirely unreliable. Now if the alleged bias of the clergy discredits them as witnesses, what of the undoubted bias of such an argument as "Layman" here advances? His opinion is thus completely discredited even on his own showing.

"Layman," however, presents a mistaken attitude to the whole question. He regards doctors, scientists and clergymen as speculators and explorers only, rather than teachers of the truth as it is already known; and asserts that while representatives of the two former subjects are rewarded for discoveries, the representative of the church is discouraged, if not punished. These are contentions that cannot be substantiated. What clergymen in modern times have ever discovered a truth and was put under disability for his discovery? But, as I have suggested, the attitude here assumed is a mistaken one. The average man of science, medicine or the Church, is not supposed to be a speculator looking for something to impart to others, but a man of authority who is already in possession of truth worth offering to others. In so far as he is a speculator, he keeps to himself, and devotes his talents to research. But if he sets himself up as public teacher in the Church, or the college of medicine or science, he thereby undertakes to teach only what the Church, or science, believes to be truth. Science, or religion, as the case may be, must be the authority to which he appeals, and not his own private opinion. Now in the Church, as commonly as in any other profession, does such a man teach only what he believes to be true, and this quite independently of its effect upon his living. If he is teaching heathen and others who have no faith in what he represents, he is called a missionary, that is, one sent and supported by those who do believe the truth he represents; if he is supported by the people he teaches, he is called simply clergyman. In either case the duty is the same; he has been sent to teach what the church believes to be true, and he cannot remain the Church's authoritative teacher after he ceases to believe in her teaching. All persons of common sense must admit the reasonableness and justice of these conditions.

As the main purpose of the science of medicine is to teach the laws of health, and to make the doctor an exponent of the old adage that prevention is better than cure, so the chief aim and use of the clergyman and the church is to organize and teach righteousness. In religions there is not the same room for speculation that there is in other branches of science, as the laws of righteousness are pretty well known, the main purpose being to lend them that divine sanction and personal devotion that assist in making them obeyed in daily life. The highest ideal of manhood has already been revealed to man; and the man, be he clergyman or any other person, who thinks he can supersede Jesus Christ, and set himself up as something either better or more authoritative, in teaching or example, than the master of men, must justly be open to the suspicion of all honest men, both in the Church and out of it. The doctor who claims to know it all, and denounces all who refuse to leave the old and established truths to follow him in his fancies, would be justly disowned by the medical fraternity. The man who would be open to the suspicion of working for fees, and distorting the truth to that end, would be dubbed a quack. I do not deny that there are quack persons; but I am sure there are not more quacks in the Church than outside of it. What I absolutely and utterly deny is that any man can be called a quack in his profession simply because he makes his living by it.

It may be argued by some that in religion truth is more a matter of opinion than in science, and that therefore the religious teacher is entitled to more liberty than the teacher of science. I do not think so. There can be no two opinions as to whether Jesus Christ is not a better and more reliable authority and example for man than any other teacher we know. The best people are pretty well agreed that Christian morality is not excelled by any. There is no difference of view among good men as to what is righteousness and what is wickedness. No one worth listening to doubts the laws of true manhood. The dogmas of Christianity have no reality or significance except as they bear on life. What every honest man should believe, and obey, is more established than even the dogmas of science. It requires much less faith to believe in the dogmas of Christianity, that is, in the fundamental facts for which the life of Jesus Christ stands, than it does to believe in all that the scientists allege true, and morally faith in Christ brings a much more desirable reward than faith in the scientists and rationalists, much as we respect them when they are exponents of truth. It makes no difference at all to a man's moral character whether he accepts scientific dogmas as to atoms, molecules, ether and the conservation of energy, and so on, but it does make a big difference to him morally whether he believes in what Christ represents of truth and righteousness.

New when a man enters the ministry of a Christian body he does so in the good faith that he believes the teaching of his church and on condition that he teach no other. If subsequently he finds he cannot comply with the condition, it is his duty to withdraw and set up for himself, or be dishonest. I am quite sure there is but an infinitesimal fraction of the clergy who do not take this step once they fall to believe. I further submit that for every dishonest clergyman known to "Layman," he will find hundreds of laymen making their living in ways that are known to be wrong, and will not go into an honest business because they think they can make more money as they are. Not only so, but there is not a clergyman to-day that is worth his salt, who could not at any time make more money outside of the church than in it. This cannot be said as truly of other professions, not even of that of "Layman." The assumption of "Layman" that a clergyman's career tends to dishonesty or that clergymen teach what they don't believe, just because they are paid for it, is both unwarranted and unjust. At the present time there is a contention in certain quarters that the foreign merchant and the foreign missionary are no longer necessary in Japan. The merchant does not admit that this contention can be supported by truth. Now who has the right to say that his witness is absolutely to be discredited because he cannot acquiesce in the contention of his enemies without affecting his living? Does not the foreign merchant know whether his services are needed in Japan as well as anyone else; and if he does, is his testimony not as likely to be honest as that of those who for interested motives are against him? Who has a right to deny to the foreign missionary the same honesty? It is only British fairplay that all men of all professions should be taken as honest, till they prove otherwise.

Yours, etc.,

JUSTICE.

THE MONTHLY RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It was not my intention to trouble you with any more remarks on this subject, but "Alpha's" letter, though it brings back the discussion to a high level, seems to me to really confuse the point at issue, and so I venture to ask you for a little more space.

The main question, surely, is whether Mr. Denning on account of his strong anti-Christian views and a certain partiality in his writings is—to put the matter quite plainly—a fit and proper person to be employed by you to write the religious summaries. That he is, on these accounts, not suitable was certainly Mr. Woodd's main contention.

Now Mr. Denning is doubtless quite able to take care of himself and will probably say of such a half-headed clerical auxiliary None tibi auxilio nec defensoribus. None the less I feel that fairness demands that those of us who feel this attack to be unreasonable should say so.

As to impartiality and bias, I can only say again that, supposing these summaries were done by Mr. Woodd or Alpha or myself, (assuming for a moment we had the necessary qualifications to do them), we would not have a definite Christian bias and be definitely partial? Speaking for myself I am sure they would. Now, a not inconsiderable number of the readers of the Mail are, I believe, people with views which more nearly approximate to Mr. Woodd's than to Mr. Denning's and mine, and in that case we might have indignant letters to the Mail demanding those summaries without a Christian bias.

To find the particular kind of amorphous creature, with the necessary Japanese scholarship, who would be absolutely free from bias is an impossibility. That being so, those of us who find that this bias is against our own opinions are—as much as we may regret it—unreasonable if we make it the ground for demanding that this work (which is admirably done) should cease.

Further, Mr. Woodd, "Alpha" and myself are agreed in thinking Mr. Denning's incidental criticisms are lacking in any constructive thought and crude in form and matter. But it is this is so, the obvious logical sequence is, why bother about them? To go so far as to try and suppress them gives them a fictitious importance which otherwise they would not possess. The vast majority of the readers of the Mail are, I suppose, educated people and it is insulting to their intelligence to consider that Mr. Denning's pre-historic flights can have much effect on them, unless they happen to be among those who already agree with him.

Lastly, "Alpha" bids Mr. Denning remember the Divine injunction to reverence expressed in the words "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet." If these words mean in their wisest sense that every thoughtful man should approach the great problems of life and death in a reverent spirit and also with a due regard for the susceptibilities of others it is, I think, unjust to Mr. Denning to imply that he offends in either of these respects. However crude one may think Mr. Denning's arguments and little as he conceals his contempt for and dislike of theological and orthodox folk, as such, there are no signs of anything but a reverent attitude towards the great subject matter with which he deals.

It is, Sir, because I feel so strongly that anything approaching unfairness, however unintentional, does an infinity of harm now, as it has so often done in past history, to the cause of Christ, that I have tried to put this view of the case before your readers.

It appears to me (1): That these summaries are a most valuable help to many of us who are interested in the current thought of Japan. (2). That a certain bias is inevitable whoever does them. (3). That the bias now evident in them—however much one may regret it—is not sufficient ground whereon to disparage their great value in other respects, or to demand their cessation.

Yours truly,

H. B. WALTON.

P.S.—To bring the matter for a moment as far as possible down to the level of "Layman's" style and comprehension.—His humorous suggestion that we should, when engaged in combat with him protect the top of our heads is I fear valueless advice. The only result of such a precaution, would—with "Layman's" ideas of fair play—be an unexpected and back handed blow on the nose. In any case, as the aroma of his controversial methods is a little peculiar I do not propose personally to obtrude that organ any further into his immediate proximity.

THE ART OF CLERICAL DEFENCE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The excuses and attempts at justification from one quarter, and the disingenuous cry of "foul," with little squirts of venom from another, are characteristic and self-revelatory enough,—there is no need for further comments. The point raised remains raised; and neither argument on the one hand nor subtle artifice on the other can keep it down, or juggle it out of sight.

Yours faithfully,

LAYMAN.

THE WRITER OF THE MONTHLY SUMMARIES AND HIS CONTROVERSIAL METHODS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Solomon says: "He that passeth by and meddeth with strife belonging not to him is like one that taketh a dog by the ears." In writing on the above subject some may think that I meddle with strife belonging not to me, and that it will serve me right if I get well bitten for my pains. But I cannot help thinking that as a regular reader of the Japan Mail it is to some degree my business to express myself in criticism of, and in earnest protest against, the use which is made of his position by the writer of your summaries.

Let me first, however, acknowledge my indebtedness to him, which is neither small nor recent. My file of the Weekly Japan Mail which is practically complete since 1893, is the pride of my library and my constant work of reference on all questions of contemporary history in the Far East as well as on questions of Japanese literary and religious opinion. The monthly summaries are the department by which I have profited most and which, until recent years, I enjoyed most. What I know about Japanese thought is largely due to the painstaking and scholarly work of their author. Not only that, but in cases where he has given the original with his translation, the English has often given me an insight into the vigor and flexibility of the Japanese which I could not have gained for myself. When, in America, I had to deliver a series of lectures at an institution of learning, I travelled a thousand miles that I might consult the files of the Japan Mail in the Astor Library.

I have said that in recent years I have read the summaries with less enjoyment. This is not because they are of less value, but because so frequently I find interspersed among the translations from Japanese sources and the discriminating remarks of the writer in regard to Japanese religious thought, other remarks which seem to me entirely out of place. These remarks contain dicta concerning the state of European or American religious opinion, or concerning various disputed points of religion and philosophy, generally made with an air of authority. Not only so, but they frequently are such as may be fairly called ungenerous flings at the backwardness, ignorance, or insincerity of such men as still, in spite of the enlightenment of the twentieth century, continue to believe, or at least profess to believe, in evangelical Christianity.

Whether his habit of doing this has grown of late years or whether it is only that my irritation has grown, I am not sure, but the result is that it has become almost unpleasant to take in hand the Japan Mail to peruse the monthly summaries. I find that I am not the only one who has this experience. Some years ago a friend, emphatic in his admiration of these translations, said to me that if he could afford to take only one journal, that one should be the Japan Mail. The other day this same friend expressed himself about the summaries and their writer in terms which it is better not to print.

It has always seemed to me inexplicable that Mr. Denning should thus persist in irritating a large number of people who would otherwise be his best friends. He must be aware that a large proportion, perhaps a majority, of those who peruse his work with attention, appreciation, and interest, are missionaries or other earnest Christians. I happen to know that in certain New York offices these summaries are given careful attention. Such being his audience, one would naturally expect the writer to make an effort to be on good terms with them. No one desires him to suppress the expression of his views, in the proper place. But at least he might, in his capacity as writer of the summaries, refrain from giving needless offence, even if he did not think it worth while to make an effort to win the admiration of his hearers for his courtesy and fairness as well as for his scholarship.

So far from doing this, however, he every now and then turns aside from his proper business of presenting Japanese opinion in order to express his own dislike and contempt for what many of his readers hold most dear.

Please note that I do not object to his making general statements in his proper field. No man of his calibre can be restricted to mere translation. In the preparation of these summaries he has read many times as much as he can reproduce in the columns of the Japan Mail, and by all this study he has made himself not only the first, but the only authority on these particular phases of Japanese life. In order to do us the most good, he must not only present translations, but must occasionally tell us in general what attitude the educated Japanese mind takes towards the various questions involved in religious faith. To no one will such a statement be more valuable than to a thoughtful missionary.

Mr. Denning's views on religion, however, do not appear to many of us so valuable as his statements in regard to Japanese opinion. Indeed, his views on religious questions, to be frank, seem to us of very little value indeed. That may surprise him, and he may explain it as he chooses, but it is a fact. Were he as much of an authority in this department, however, as he is acknowledged to be in the other, it would still be an impropriety for him to air his views in the columns devoted to summarizing the Japanese press. When a man calls for fowl he does not wish to be served with fish, however good the fish may be. We take the Mail and read the summaries to find out what the Japanese think, and it is irritating and annoying in the extreme to have the dish flavored with the ideas of Mr. Denning, which we do not care to read about, and to have our feelings ruffled by sneers against the Christian faith. If he wishes to write separately on religious subjects and the Mail sees fit to publish his articles, very good. We find no fault with that. We can then read those articles or leave them, as we choose. But to have him insist on telling us what fools we are to be Christians, when he professes to be telling us what the Japanese are saying in their press, is impertinent and offensive, and we very much wish Mr. Editor, that you would find some way to put a stop to it.

Having said this much about the monthly summaries, I wish to make a few remarks on another matter, although closely related. I mean his manner of answering those who venture to criticize his writings. The recent letter of his, entitled "Clergymen and Clergymen," is a case in point. Not content with having, to his own satisfaction, in a previous letter, answered Mr. Woodd's arguments, he apparently regretted that he had not expressed sufficient contempt for him, and took up his pen again to taunt him with receiving a salary from the C.M.S. Finally, he stooped to still more puerile personalities, and suggested that Mr. Woodd had probably not a copy of the "Encyclopedia Britannica." Such writing is redeemed from complete insignificance by its extremely bad taste. It is no wonder that Mr. Woodd promptly withdrew from the discussion. It was the only thing that a well-bred and self-respecting gentleman could do. To continue a discussion with one who violates good breeding in such a way is as offensive to a person of sensibility as to sit at table with one who does not respect the conventional proprieties of good dress and good manners.

Worse however, than Mr. Denning's offence against good taste, is his habit of attributing mercenary motives to those who espouse the cause of religion. In reply to the assertion that the majority of intelligent men in England and America are agnostics, and that evangelical faith is losing ground in those countries, proof has repeatedly been produced that many of the most distinguished scientists and public men, and that in increasing proportion, are earnest Christians. What is his reply? That the Christian profession of such men is only nominal, in obedience to the force of public opinion! When Mr. Balfour writes in support of religion, he, an Englishman in the Far East, does not hesitate to invite public contempt for one of his country's most distinguished statesmen by insinuating that he is insincere. Of Mr. Woodd he says: "Directly he makes up his mind to follow truth wherever it leads him, his salary will no longer be paid."

This attitude of Mr. Denning is to me a curious psychological phenomenon. No doubt he is sincere in his own opinions. Why can he not attribute sincerity to others? I am not an Englishman but I know too much about English history to suppose that Englishmen, whether clerical or lay, are so prone to sacrifice their convictions to their personal convenience. Or is it only in former centuries that Englishmen could follow truth though she led them to penury, the prison or the stake? Mr. Denning objects to bigotry, but his position is bigotry gone mad.

Undenially there are clergymen who, for personal profit profess and preach that which they do not believe. So there are lawyers and judges who justify the wicked for reward, physicians who accept fees for malpractice, editors who cater to a depraved public taste, and military men who sell their country's secrets. But who does not know that just because there are such scoundrels, therefore among the honorable men in every profession there is a sense of honor all the more delicate, and that the greatest insult one can offer such men is precisely to call in question their professional honor? Among all the different kinds of professional honor not the lowest is that of the Christian minister, who is bound by the most sacred pledge before God and man to be loyal to the truth.

Now, then, shall we account for Mr. Denning's words? I am very much puzzled what to think. I am under so great obligations to him, as stated above, and would personally so much like to retain my respect for him, that I have sought for some excuse, but I find none. Shall we say he did not realize how foul an insult his words contained, or that he did not care? The one reflects on his moral discernment and the other on his moral standards. Whichever it be, by the use of such weapons he makes it impossible for self-respecting men to engage in public discussion with him. Personally, I should like very much occasionally to break a lance with one who has shown himself in so many ways a worthy foe. In fact, I had an article written in reply to the very review which Mr. Woodd criticized, but it went into the waste-paper basket, because I expected precisely the treatment that Mr. Woodd got, and could not persuade myself to fence with a man who carries a poisoned blade. Neither is this letter intended to be the beginning of a discussion with him. It is intended as a protest to the Editor of the Japan Mail and to the impartial public against such violations of the decencies of public debate.

Very sincerely yours, ALBERTUS PIETERS.

Nagasaki, November 24, 1908.

THE CUSTOMS SCANDAL TRIAL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—With reference to the published reports of the Yokohama Customs Scandal Trial, it would appear therefrom that some of the parties were acting in our interest. Please note that in the one case the correct duty as prescribed in the Tariff was paid by us, and in the other case the goods in question were never ordered or imported by us.

It has been suggested that our name may have been used by Japanese in our employ to pass goods through the Customs on behalf of Japanese Direct Importers. Inasmuch as our firm has never imported Cables of any description, it would appear there has been ground for such suggestions.

Every assistance has been offered by us to the Customs in their investigations, and the so-called "Scandals" were brought to light by our giving in charge one of the accused for attempting to levy blackmail.

We must apologise for encroaching on your space, but we wish to remove any impression that this Company itself has been in any way implicated.

Yours truly,
NOWLSON PARHAM,
Director.

THE RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES ONCE MORE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—Many of your readers must be rather wearied of hearing about the Religious Summaries and the insignificant person who writes them. I of course am one of those readers. I am far too busy a man to discuss with your various correspondents the points they bring up, but there are one or two things connected with this controversy which deserve notice. (1) With the exception of one short quotation made by Mr. Woodd referring to Mr. Balfour; not one of your correspondents has done anything but make sweeping charges against me as a writer, unsupported by reference to my actual remarks on any subject. Mr. Walton says: "Further, Mr. Woodd, 'Alpha' and myself, are agreed in thinking Mr. Denning's incidental criticisms are lacking in any constructive thought* and crude in form and matter." Now a serious charge of that kind, sir, surely calls for the production of evidence. The evidence being stated, it is not conceivable that fair-minded readers whose opinions differ from those held by Mr. Walton would strenuously deny that the words used showed either crudeness of form or matter. What Mr. Walton means by "Mr. Denning's pre-historic flights" only Mr. Walton himself knows. This kind of controversy is utterly profitless to either side. It proves nothing and convinces nobody. It being my earnest wish to make the Summaries as perfect as it is possible for me to make them, I welcome, and am quite ready to act on, all friendly or even unfriendly hints given, but I must confess that, after reading all the letters you have published, I am at a loss to know what your correspondents have in mind when accusing me of unduly and improperly introducing my own personal opinions into the Summaries. If I have erred in this respect I have erred unconsciously, and I should be glad to know how and in what respects I have gone astray. (2) As to my making the Summaries an organ for expressing my own opinions on religion, the theory is palpably ridiculous. Every shade of opinion is given in these Summaries. The people who hold these opinions are quoted, the magazines which contain the articles epitomised are mentioned, the original language is occasionally inserted. How then can it be said that the opinions stated are in any case those of the writer of the Summary? I have endless opportunities for stating my opinions without resorting to a silly device of this kind.

Among the letters that have appeared, Mr. Walton's two communications undoubtedly show great fair-mindedness and liberality of thought. He alone seems to see the real difficulty of getting Summaries written that shall be absolutely colourless, and, I might add, flavourless. As he rightly says, such Summaries would not interest people, were they penned. But I agree with him in thinking that due limits should be placed on the colouring and the flavouring supplied by the writer. I am not conscious of going beyond those limits. If he thinks I have done so, it is for him to say where and how, either privately to me or through the medium of your columns—whichever he prefers. For his testimony to the value of the Summaries despite the "crude" remarks found in them I beg to tender him my thanks.

I am, Yours, etc.,
WALTER DENING.
December 6th, 1908.

THE RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—If I am to believe one or two of your correspondents, I have been of some little use in this discussion; and this comforting thought prompts me to again crave admission to your columns.

I am most anxious to remove one or two misapprehensions. It has come to my knowledge that many people who are interested in the discussion have divided the contributors to it into two groups; i.e., missionaries and their friends, and the writer of the summaries and those who think as he does. The summary writer may be of the opinion that I belong to the opposition, and that, in questioning him, I am merely endeavouring to "draw" him; and I therefore beg to assure him that I am not a missionary, nor am I acquainted with one. In this discussion I am not attempting to throw light on dark places, but wish to be enlightened. I am looking for a Gamaliel at whose feet I may sit.

Next I wish to disclaim any intention of accusing your contributor of trampling on the feelings of any.

* Thought may be very valuable without being constructive thought. Is it reasonable to expect to find the latter in a short note attached to a Summary?

one. A careful perusal of my previous letter will show that I have not done this.

I cannot agree that I am to be included among those who, according to Mr. Walton, are confusing the issue. Originally Mr. Woodd contended that the writer of the summaries was not a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the work. As there is ample and conclusive proof to the contrary, this point does not admit of, nor have I indulged in, argument. But the same gentleman further contended that, in a summary, expressions of individual opinions were out of place. This was the point at issue as far as I was concerned, and I was compelled to admit that Mr. Woodd's contention was sound and just.

From this point the other correspondents and I part company, for, as far as I can see, I am the only one who wishes to obtain something tangible from this discussion. "Why bother about the writer's opinions?" says Mr. Walton. But I do bother, and my only reason for joining in the discussion is that I may learn something. I have learned nothing whatever from such remarks as have been made by the writer of the summaries up to now; but I cannot believe that, after 40 years study, he has not something to teach me. He doubts certain things, he rejects others. So do I; but after 5 minutes serious thought, not as the result of 40 years study. It has not been necessary for me to pore over dusty tomes or read what a bishop or a superannuated public official has written on the subject. One man says to me "I have spent one minute in prayer with God, and I know." Your contributor exclaims "I have studied 40 years." Can he also add that he knows? That is what I want to get at; have the 40 years resulted merely in increasing his doubts only, or has he incontestably proved something?

Some men are content to bask in the rays of the sun, thankful for its warmth. Others have more interest in studying its spots and the eclipses. I am anxious to find out what the spot students know.

Your contributor could, in certain circumstances, refuse to impart information, but he has forfeited this right by having claimed that 40 years study entitles him to a certain amount of immunity from criticism.

Yours truly, ALPHA.

P.S.—I refer in a postscript to the letter from Beta since it really is not germane to the matter under discussion. I acknowledge and thank him for his correction, and, whilst pleading ignorance of the application as far as clergymen and missions are concerned, I confess that an American would no more have made the mistake I did, than an Englishman with a proper appreciation of the meaning of words would have indulged in the inexpressive and ugly Americanism Beta employed. It spoiled an otherwise admirable little letter.

CHESS.

[Correspondence relating to this column should be addressed to the CHESS EDITOR, The Japan Mail. Problem solutions should be handed in at the Japan Mail Office, or to Mr. W. B. Mason, not later than the evening of Thursday.]

Entries are now being posted both for the Handicap Tournament and the Championship Trophy. The giving of odds in the former, of course, makes it possible for a player of any class to win: the latter is a sterner struggle which has to be fought out among Class A players only.

Mr. Jordan's challenge for two correspondence games has been taken up by the Club. Another coming event is the Tokyo-Yokohama match, with five selected players on each side. The names of those who will be called upon to represent the Y.C.C. will shortly be announced by the Committee.

THE withdrawing of troops from North China, says the Asahi, will shortly be commenced. The soldiers will proceed by land to Dairen, as the harbour of Shanhai-kwan is frozen, and will embark at Dairen for home. The withdrawal will be completed about the middle of January.

TELEGRAMS

(REUTERS SERVICE.)

AMERICA AND CHINA.

London, December 4.

The Times Peking correspondent says that America, before signing it, communicated the Japanese-American Agreement to the Waiwupu in the hope that the latter would recognize America's traditional friendliness. China fully approved.

TANG SHAO I.

President Roosevelt has received Tang Shao-i and his suite at the White House. The Envoy presented a letter of thanks to America for cancelling a portion of the Boxer indemnity. He accompanied the letter with a speech couched in the most courteous terms. The President suitably replied, condoling with China on the deaths of the Emperor and Empress.

THE BALKANS.

The Pesther Lloyd states that twenty battalions have been ordered to Bosnia. The Turco-Montenegrin agreement, rounding the frontier so as to avoid future quarrels, has been concluded.

THE REICHSTAG.

London, December 3.

The Reichstag debate is concluded. All motions are referred to the Committee on Procedure.

THE INVASION OF BRITAIN.

Admiral Frank Finnis (C. V. O., of the Home Fleet) speaking at Dover, said that during the recent last manoeuvres he conveyed a force representing 70,000 men to the Scottish coast without seeing any sign of the British fleet owing to the fog.

HOUSE OF LORDS REFORM.

The report of the House of Lords Committee with reference to the reform of the Upper House, recommends that persons entitled to sit in the House of Lord be called Lords of Parliament, a peerage alone not carrying such a right; hereditary peers to elect 200 representatives for the duration of each Parliament; bishops to be represented by archbishops and eight elected bishops; the self-governing colonies by nominees of the respective governments. Also that the power of creating peers be restricted. Among persons entitled to sit without election are the ex-Governors of New Zealand, Cape Colony, Ceylon, Hong-kong and the Straits Settlements.

EDUCATION BILL DEAD.

December 4.

Owing to a further deadlock regarding grants to contracted-out schools Mr. Asquith announced that the Education Bill was withdrawn.

GERMANY IN CHINA.

A Berlin official telegram states that the Government will establish a high school for Chinese at Kiaochow, at a cost of 30,000 pounds sterling and a yearly expenditure of 7,500 pounds. The Chinese Government has promised a subsidy, to provide suitable scholars, and to admit the scholars to the examinations for Government posts.

NAVAL CONFERENCE.

An international naval conference has been opened at the Foreign Office to elaborate a code of International Law, by which the International Prize Court at the Hague has to decide cases. Six Great (European) Powers, (with) Spain, Holland, America and Japan, are represented.

TALKING IN THE FRENCH NAVY.

London, December 5.

M. Clemenceau summoned to Paris and severely reprimanded Admiral Germana, commander of the Mediterranean squadron, and an eminent naval authority, for a breach of discipline in granting an interview in which he declared that the ammunition of the fleet is 50% below requirements. It is expected that the officer will be severely dealt with.

HOLLAND AND VENEZUELA.

Dutch warships yesterday demonstrated before Puerto Cabelo, La Guayra, and Maracaibo. A blockade is expected.

ITALY AND THE BALKANS.

Later.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies voted confidence in the Government by 297 to 140, after a speech by Signor Tittoni sympathizing with Serbia and Montenegro, to whom, however, he said Italy was to give only diplomatic support. He strongly criticised Austria's procedure, and denied Signor Barzilai's enquiry on the 2nd as to whether the question of cession was ever raised in the negotiations preceding the Triple Alliance.

FAR EASTERN AGREEMENT-MAKING.

The morning Post's Shanghai correspondent says the Waiwupu have learned that Germany and Japan propose to conclude an agreement relating to the Far East.

ITALY AND THE TRIPLICE.

London, December 6.

Tittoni's speech denotes a marked departure from the tone of ready acquiescence adopted when the annexation of Bosnia was first proposed. The speech is likely to give considerable umbrage in Vienna and Berlin.

GERMANY AND JAPAN.

THE RUMOURED AGREEMENT DENIED.

It is semi-officially denied in Berlin that Germany and Japan propose to enter into an agreement. Germany has no intention of taking any such steps.

GERMAN BUDGET DEFICIT.

The German Budget statement shows a deficit of 13 million marks in 1907, with an estimated increased deficit of 112 million marks for the current financial year, owing to diminution of revenue and increased expenditure. The Navy estimates are the heaviest burden.

GERMAN MILITARY ESTIMATES.

London, December 7.

In the course of the Budget debate in the Reichstag on the general army and navy estimates the Centre urged, and the National Liberals protested against slackening of shipbuilding. Lord Roberts' invasion story was described as a fantasy the allusion to Germany being definitely denied. Austria the faithful ally was cheered.

AUSTRIA.

At Vienna where, long denials are published of mobilization and statements to the effect that Austria is merely retaining her supplementary reservists with the colours for arduous frontier duty.

ADMIRAL GERMINET.

London, December 7.

Admiral Germinet has been dismissed from the command of the Mediterranean squadron.

THE KING INDISPOSED.

King Edward has a cold, with slight rheumatism.

MULAI HAFID.

Mulai Hafid has replied to the Franco-Spanish note accepting the conditions of his recognition, with one minor exception.

RUSSIAN FINANCE.

The Budget Committee of the Duma have sanctioned a loan of forty-five millions sterling to redeem bonds and meet the deficit in expenditures for 1909.

THE AUSTRIAN BOYCOTT.

Later.

Constantinople.—The Austrian boycott has extended over the whole empire except Smyrna.

LIEUTENANT WOODS' CASE.

The case of Lieutenant Woods, second battalion Grenadier Guards (who, in December last year, was found by the British Army Council inefficient as a regimental officer, his retention in the service not being in the interests of the army) is being reopened. Writs have been served on Mr. Haldane, Gen. Sir N. G. Lyttelton and other three members of the Army Council on the ground that they exceeded their powers in requiring his resignation.

ADMIRAL FINNIS' STATEMENT.

London, December 8.

Mr. McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, being questioned as to the statement made by Admiral Finnis (that he had during a fog conveyed to the coast of Scotland a fleet representing a force of 70,000 men without being observed) declared that Admiral Finnis held no command in the recent manoeuvres, and that no such incident occurred.

Admiral Finnis explains that his words were misrepresented. Mr. McKenna is taking further steps to discover the precise language used.

BRITISH TRADE RETURNS.

The decrease in the November trade returns are—imports £7,237,650; exports £6,714,761.

THE CRISIS IN THE BALKANS.

The situation in the Near East is regarded as discouraging. The boycott continues unabated and the tension is increasing. Austria and Turkey, despite denials, are unquestionably preparing for emergencies. Italy's entente with Russia, which, though unwritten, is said to constitute a definite agreement mutually to support their respective interests in the Balkans, is hailed with satisfaction in St. Petersburg and with ill-concealed dismay in Vienna.

GERMAN DECLARATION OF ATTITUDE.

London, December 8.

In the Reichstag, Prince Bülau said Germany wished to see a new Turkey, strengthened politically and economically. With regard to the Balkans, Germany let others more interested among the Powers to lead through the diplomatic gate. He emphatically affirmed Germany's loyalty to Austria. M. Iswolsky, he said, had assured him that no Anglo-Russian understanding existed against Germany. He welcomed the Japanese-American agreement as absolutely in accord with the principles of German policy in the East, as expressed in the Anglo-German agreement of 1900, to which Japan adhered. In conclusion he declared that Germany would strenuously work for peace in the Balkans.

THE MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

London, December 9.

Roosevelt in his message to Congress dwells on the prosperity of the country; reiterates his views as to trusts, and advocates industrial co-partnerships. He condemns the delays and denials of justice through subservience on the part of the judges to petty technicalities. The foreign policy of the country is to be based on the principles prevailing between honourable individuals.

The President pays a high compliment to the progress of Japan and thanks that country for its generous hospitality to the Fleet. He urges the completion at the earliest possible date of four battleships, and the creation of a general staff for the navy. The Panama Canal, he added, was being rapidly built. A series of photographs were appended to the Message showing the appalling desolation of North China through deforestation.

THE "CHATTERING ADMIRAL."

Later.

The case of Admiral Germinet has been hotly debated in the French Chamber. The Government was accused of harshness. M. Clemenceau replied that the navy could not be reorganised by the chattering of admirals. The Chamber voted confidence in the Government's ability to rehabilitate the Navy.

THE KING.

The King of England is much better and has gone to Brighton.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

Later.

Ambassador Pallavicini has conferred with the Grand Vizier and has intimated that immediately on the cessation of the boycott. Austria will make preparations for the settlement of the Bosnia-Herzegovina affair.

The Grand Vizier replied that the boycott would cease immediately when Austria submitted satisfactory proposals.

RADICALS AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

London, December 9.

A Radical memorial has been presented to Mr. Asquith urging him to take steps to appeal to the country against the House of Lords.

THE MOVEMENT OF GOLD.

Mr. Cortelyou, U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, in his report suggests an international conference to consider means for obviating the necessity of transporting gold from country to country in times of stress.

KILLING LEGISLATION.

London, December 1.

Mr. Asquith has announced the withdrawal of the Scottish Land Values bill owing to the Lords' amendments. This is the second Scottish land bill that has been killed from the same cause in the present session.

THE CONGO.

Mr. McKinnon Wood, in reply to questions, said Great Britain had not yet recognized the annexation of the Congo. Belgium had undertaken to abide by the Congo's obligations under the Berlin act, including freedom of international trade.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

THE AGREEMENT

London, December 1.

New York.—Mr. Root and Baron Takahira have signed the agreement. President Roosevelt will probably submit it to the Senate next week, thus forestalling any call for it.

The St. Petersburg press acclaims the agreement as inspired by sound statesmanship.

GERMAN NAVY ESTIMATES.

December 3.

Berlin.—The navy estimates for 1909 show seven million pounds for new construction, of which 4¼ millions will be met by a loan.

There are abundant indications that the North Sea base at Wilhelmshafen is being developed with ambitions.

THE RACIAL FEELING IN AUSTRIA.

Vienna.—Czech and German animosity in Bohemia has become acute and a state of siege has been proclaimed at Prague, where there has been much rioting. A court of summary procedure has been established, with the public executioner in attendance.

CHANGES AT ST. PETERSBURG.

St. Petersburg.—Important changes are imminent in the War Office. It is expected that Sukhovlinoff, governor of Kieff, will succeed General Roediger as Minister of War.

THE CHANCELLOR'S CONFIDENCE.

Berlin.—It is understood that the Chancellor, in conversation with the representatives of the Powers, expressed complete confidence in the maintenance of peace and in a satisfactory settlement between Austria and her neighbour.

PRAGUE DISTURBERS OVER-AWED.

Prague.—Matters are quiet here, both Czechs and Germans being over-awed by martial law.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

There are large investments in Japanese bonds.

FRANCE AND CASTRO.

London, December 4.

Paris.—The Government will decide on Saturday the conditions on which it will allow President Castro, the despotic President of Venezuela, to land. Diplomatic relations between France and Venezuela were suspended several years ago, and the Foreign Office is preparing a list of grievances against Castro, who probably will not receive customary hospitality.

REFORM OF THE LORDS.

The Select Committee with regard to the reform of the House of Lords recommend a reduction of about two-thirds of the present strength, half the total representing the hereditary principle and half being elected by the whole body of peers for one parliament, besides bishops and a limited number of life peers.

SERVIA PEACEFUL.

Belgrade.—The Serbian Government is carrying out the pacific recommendations of the Powers, and all provocative tendencies are discouraged.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

New York.—The important questions to be discussed in the President's Message are: the currency system, corporation supervision, and labour courts. The President thinks the financial condition of the country is excellent. The currency system should be improved. He strongly favours aiding the merchant marine, especially in the Pacific, and he reiterates his recommendation to build more battleships.

ITALY'S ATTITUDE CAUSES SENSATION.

Later.

Paris.—A profound impression has been created by the debate on foreign affairs in the Italian Chamber, indicating the dissociation of Italy from the spirit of the Triple Alliance. Leaning towards the Anglo-Russian view regarding the Near Eastern Question, competent diplomats believe that Baron Aehrenthal's policy in annexing Bosnia and Herzegovina is drawing Austria to the verge of an abyss, and will ultimately lead to the active intervention of the Russian Government.

THE CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

London, December 7.

Ottawa.—An election protest has been lodged against the Premier by a German to whom he expressed in writing his approval of the proposed increases in the civil servants' salaries. The letter was distributed among the Government departments and is alleged to have influenced many wavering voters.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN AMERICA.

New York.—The woman suffrage movement is assuming large proportions, wealthy women copying the English example and giving largely in money and influence.

A TALKING ADMIRAL.

Later.

Paris.—The Council of Ministers has relieved Admiral Germinet from the command of the Mediterranean Squadron. It is believed that his indiscreet remarks in interviews with regard to the deficiency in ammunition have produced a good effect in inducing the Government to hasten the remedying of defects.

CHOLERA IN RUSSIAN CAPITAL.

London, December 8.

St. Petersburg.—The cholera is steadily increasing. It is unofficially asserted that the water supply is infected.

THE CRISIS IN THE BALKANS.

Paris.—Until Austria definitely proposes to compensate Turkey, nobody will feel reassured. Vague reports are current in Vienna and elsewhere of an improved situation in the Near East.

Constantinople.—The Reservists at Kuprili in Kossova (?), instigated by reactionaries, attacked a theatre and expelled the audience. The barracks were then surrounded by regulars, of whom sixteen were killed or wounded before the reservists surrendered.

PERSIA.

Tehran.—The nationalists have presented a circular to the corps diplomatique, thanking the Powers for sympathizing with their aspirations for liberty, and holding the Court responsible for the grave consequences which will ensue as the result of the refusal to grant a Constitution.

The nationalists have routed the garrison at Meshed and seized the Government offices.

THE AUSTRIAN BOYCOTT.

London, December 9.

Constantinople.—The Austrian Ambassador has made energetic representations to the Grand Vizier with reference to the continuance of the boycott of Austrian goods. It is believed that he has announced his intention of leaving Constantinople should the Government be unable to stop the boycott. Popular sentiment favours the continuance of the boycott.

ROOSEVELT'S MESSAGE.

London, December 9.

The Times, referring to President Roosevelt's message, sarcastically remarks that everyone must envy the immense leisure and repose enabling Americans to digest the voluminous and prolix document.

DEATH PENALTY IN FRANCE.

Paris.—The Chamber has decided to retain the death penalty in the code after a long debate.

TALKING IN THE FRENCH NAVY.

The suspension of Admiral Germinet, Commander of the Mediterranean Squadron, for publishing pessimistic views as to the condition of the French Navy, is generally thought to be too severe. The Premier spiritedly defended the policy of the Government, which had determined to terminate the existing naval irresponsibility and would insist on discipline. The Chamber would shortly receive the report of the Minister of Marine as to the state of the Navy, and meantime the Government asked for a vote of confidence. The vote was carried by 355 to 142.

AUSTRIA'S PREPARATIONS.

London, December 1.

Vienna.—It is announced that plans exist preparing Trieste for 20,000 ton battle-ships, of which three will be built when the 14,600 ton vessels now building have been launched.

PLOT IN MOROCCO.

Tangier.—A plot to place the Sultan's eldest brother on the throne has been discovered. Several notables have been tortured and imprisoned.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

JAPAN AND CHINA.

The Viceroy of the Two Kiang has issued a proclamation which sets out by saying that, according to information conveyed by the Waiwupu, the Japanese Government has warned all local officials and custom-house officers to exercise strict supervision so as to prevent the shipment of arms and ammunition for Chinese rebels by persons resident in Japan who sympathise with the latter. His Excellency goes on to say that in consequence of this friendly act on Japan's part, the rebels will lose confidence, and China will be greatly advantaged. He therefore earnestly desires that all Chinese subjects under his jurisdiction will lay aside any ill-feeling they may entertain towards Japan, will go in and out freely among the Japanese, and will promote trade with them.

DUTIES IN EASTERN RUSSIA.

The Bill for abolishing Russian free-ports in the Far East has gone through the process of examination by the Finance Committee and has been brought up in the Chamber where it is now being discussed. The amendments presented by the Committee, make little change in the original Bill. Taking the customs tariff for basis, the rates are made uniform with those imposed on goods imported over the frontier of European Russia, but account is taken of circumstances, especially in the case of hulled rice, on which 45 kopecks a pood is charged. According to this Bill the places where duties are levied, so far as the Maritime Province is concerned, are Nikolaefsk and ports south of it, as well as the Amur and Zakhalka, while Okotsk, the coast of Behring Sea and Kamchatka are free. Hence foreign merchandise which has been imported at duty-paying places and which is re-transported from Vladivostok or Nikolaefsk to any of the above free ports, will be entitled to receive a rebate; while Russian and foreign goods which have been carried across the Russo-Chinese frontier into China, need not undergo customs inspection, being free of duty at the time of import, while the condition which provides exemption from duty for Chinese goods imported across the frontier, namely, Art. 9:9 of the Amended Law, will be abolished. The time for giving effect to the new system is to be fixed by the Cabinet.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")
GERMANY AND AMERICA.

Prince Buelow, speaking in the Reichstag, said that he heartily approved of the American-Japanese Entente. He considered that it constituted a new guarantee for the preservation of peace. Germany was already a party to an Agreement bearing Japan's signature and having a similar purport, so that her interests were in no wise touched by the new Entente.

THE MURDER OF MR. STEVENS.

The Korean Chon, who is charged with the assassination of Mr. Stevens on the 24th of last March, and who was released unconditionally on bail, is found to have disappeared since September, and no trace of his whereabouts has been discovered. His accomplice, Chong, has been sent forward for trial by the High Court, but the proceedings have not yet commenced.

(We translate this telegram as published but the statement that Chon was released unconditionally on bail is scarcely credible. Nearly 9 months have elapsed since the perpetration of the murder, and the assassins, though arrested flagrante delicto, have not yet been judged. That is had enough, but if now the escape of the principal murderer has been suffered to take place, San Francisco's tribunals will be disgraced.—ED. J.M.)

THE HAYTI REVOLT.

Berlin, December 3.

In consequence of the new revolt at Hayti the President, who up to now has been victorious, has had to flee to a French man-of-war.

THE CHANGE IN THE CONSTITUTION.

The debate in the Reichstag as to a change in the Constitution has passed quietly.

DEBATE IN ITALIAN CHAMBER.

During a debate in the Italian Chamber violent attacks were made on Signor Tittoni, the Premier, for his Balkan policy.

The Triple Alliance was not the centre of these attacks.

OPENING OF TURKISH PARLIAMENT.

The opening of the Turkish Parliament will take place on December 14th.

STATEMENT ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

It is reported that M. Iswolski, the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, will give his promised speech in the Duma as to the situation on Wednesday next.

EULENBERG ILL.

The son of Prince Eulenburg has declared that his father is very ill.

No memoirs of a political character have been written by Eulenburg.

PENNY POST WITH GERMANY.

Penny postage between Germany and the United States will be established on January 1st.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH FRANCE.

A commercial treaty has been concluded and signed between France and Sweden.

GERMAN OFFICER KILLED.

A German officer (lieutenant) has been killed in a fight with natives in the Cameroons, West Africa.

ATTITUDE OF AUSTRIA.

Berlin, December 4.

The Austrian Government denies strongly the false rumours as to a mobilisation of troops being carried out on the Austrian side and that an ultimatum has been presented to Servia.

The situation at Constantinople has considerably improved in favour of Austria.

Signor Fortis, an ex-Minister, speaking in the Italian Chamber, vehemently attacked the Austrian Government for its Balkan policy. Amid the applause of the Chamber he demanded that armaments be prepared on the Italian side against Austria.

Reassuring declarations are expected from Signor Tittoni, the Italian Premier.

ALLEGED NEGOTIATIONS WITH HOLLAND.

The rumours of special negotiations between Holland and Great Britain are officially denied on both sides.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMERCIAL ATTACHES.

The French Senate has accepted the nomination of six commercial attaches to foreign countries.

RECOVERY FROM SICKNESS.

The Pope has fully recovered.

AUSTRO-TURKISH RELATIONS.

Berlin, December 5.

The British Government has expressed its sympathy with the conclusion of a direct understanding between Austria and Turkey. This has considerably improved the situation.

The rumours of fighting on the Servian frontier are denied by the Austrian Government.

STATEMENT BY ITALIAN PREMIER.

Signor Tittoni, the Italian Premier, speaking in the Chamber, made a speech in favour of the Triple Alliance, by which an unexpectedly large majority in the Chamber was led to vote in favour of the Government.

The Premier laid emphasis on the necessity of a full agreement with Austria, such as had existed up to now.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CHINA.

The Morning Post reports that negotiations are going on at Washington between the United States Government and China as to the conclusion of a entente similar to that concluded between Japan and the United States.

THE SULTAN AND THE CONSTITUTION.

The Committee of the Young Turks demands the opening of Parliament by the Sultan, with a new oath to observe the Constitution.

So far the Sultan has opposed the demand.

THE BOYCOTT.

Berlin, December 6.

The boycott of Austrian goods in Turkey has become more acute, the Government being powerless to stop it.

OBITUARY.

Admiral Coghlan has died at New York. RUMOURED NEGOTIATIONS WITH GERMANY.

The rumours as to negotiations between Germany and Japan as to an entente concerning East Asia are contradicted by the Kölnische Zeitung, which states that such an agreement is not necessary, Japan having already, in October 1900, joined the Anglo-German entente, which contains similar conditions to those in the Japan-America entente.

ADMIRAL GERMINET DISMISSED.

The French Ministry has released from his post Admiral Germinet, the Commander of the Mediterranean Squadron, owing to his revelations concerning the lack of ammunition in the French Navy.

RUSSIA AND THE AUSTRIAN PROPOSALS.

Berlin, December 7.

Through the efforts made by M. Kokorizow, the Minister of Finance, and M. Solopin, the Premier, the Russian Government is at last acceding to Austria's proposals with regards to the Balkan question.

The menace of M. Iswolsky, the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, as to an alliance between Russian Great Britain and France, is treated as "bluff" at Berlin and Vienna.

The Italian Government denies that it has made a written treaty with Russia. The French Government declares that it is not obliged to follow Russia in all the phases of her Balkan policy.

ORDER RESTORED AT PRAGUE.

Peace and order have at last been restored at Prague.

THE SIBERIAN MAIL.

The Siberian mail, with Yokohama date to 19th November, arrived at Berlin on the 7th inst.

GERMAN FOREIGN POLICY.

Berlin, December 8.

Prince Bülow, the Imperial Chancellor, speaking in the Reichstag on the Budget and on foreign politics, gave a general review of the Near Eastern question.

The Chancellor said that the movement of the Young Turks had always been followed with sympathy by the German Government and that its leaders had won his highest regard. The Young Turks had never been treated unfavourably by the Government, which had always recommended, when asked, the introduction of reforms, even to the old regime.

As to the Balkan question, the Chancellor said the German Government followed two principles, besides a desire for the political and economic improvement of Turkey. These were to leave the first place to the more interested Powers, and to be faithful to the allied countries.

The time and the form of the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Prince Bülow further stated, had not been communicated to the German Government by Austria. The German Government had only been generally informed of the plan of annexation, as had the Italian and Russian Governments.

Prince Bülow then explained that at his meetings with M. Iswolsky, the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, he had declared to him that Germany was inseparable from Austria, as far as the Conference question is concerned. The Conference held between them had convinced them both that the old friendly relations still existed between Russia and Germany.

Prince Bülow went on to refer to Italy's policy in a very cordial and sympathetic manner, saying the true interests of Italy demanded her adherence to the Triple Alliance. This had been proved by Signor Tittoni, the Italian Premier, in the Italian Chamber, in an excellent way, and he (Prince Bülow) was convinced that the differences now existing between Italy and Austria would soon be settled.

With reference to the Casablanca incident, the Chancellor stated that this had been satisfactorily settled, as far as the prudent elements of the French and German people were concerned. Many points of contact, Prince Bülow added, existed between the French and German Governments in their Near Eastern policy.

Turning to the Japan-America entente, Prince Bülow said the contents of this agreement had been communicated to the German Government by the Governments of both States, by which it was evident that the entente was in full accord with the principles of Germany's policy in the Far East, which also had as its aim and object the preservation of the status quo, the integrity of China, and the open door. The German Government had therefore declared its sympathy with the entente as a new support of such policy and a further guarantee of the peaceful development of the Far East.

Prince Bülow denied the suggestions, as he pointed out he had already done in his last speech of November 10th, that the German Government had such feelings towards Japan that the settlement of the difficulties between her and the United States was looked at with envious eyes by Germany. The Press had again stated that Germany's position in the Far East was an isolated one, and that she was the only Power interested in East Asia which had been purposely omitted from the circle of ententes. It had also been rumoured that the German Government was hurriedly planning a similar entente with Japan. In all these rumours it was forgotten that Germany had been the first Power which had made such an entente with Great Britain in 1900—an entente which had been joined by Japan in an exchange of Notes. Germany, therefore, had before this come to a certain understanding with Japan as to the Far Eastern question.

The objects of Germany's policy, Prince Bülow concluded, were to protect her own interests, to be faithful to the allied countries, and to support all efforts for the maintenance of peace.

Prince Bülow's statement is appreciated in Germany, and in Vienna, London and Paris, as supporting a peaceful solution of the Balkan question.

THE ANTI-AUSTRIAN MOVEMENT IN TURKEY.

A reaction against the anti-Austrian movement is recognisable in Turkey. Austria has declared that the steps which are said to have been proposed by Great Britain, France and Russia as to the Austrian measures to be taken in the Balkans will remain without success, the German and Italian Governments not being willing to participate.

MULAI HAFID AND THE POWERS.
The answer of Mulai Hafid to the Note of the Powers has caused satisfaction everywhere.

OBSERVANCE OF THE ANGLO-GERMAN ENTENTE.

Berlin, December 10.

The semi official Süddeutsche Reichskorrespondenz, in reply to other statements, emphasizes the fact that Japan has been faithful to the Anglo-German entente concerning the Far East, which she joined in 1900.

VENEZUELA AND HOLLAND.

Vice-President Gomez, who is in charge of Venezuelan affairs since the departure of President Castro, is at last acceding to Holland's demands.

WORK ON WAR PRESENTED TO TSAR.

General Kuropatkin has presented to the Tsar his book on the war with Japan, in six volumes.

THE GERMINET INCIDENT.

In the course of the debate on the dismissal of Admiral Germinet, M. Clémenceau, the French Premier, was accorded a strong vote of confidence.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN") THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE "ENTENTE."

San Francisco, December 2.

In reply to an interviewer, Baron Takahira, Japanese Ambassador in Washington, said that the note which was exchanged between Japan and the United States on Nov. 30th was not regarded as a convention or treaty. These several understandings and declarations existing between the two countries for some time past have now been cast into formality. The new agreement should be taken as an important development attained by the parties in the progress of accomplishing their policy in the Orient. The entente showed that mutual confidence had existed between the two Powers for a long time past. The present agreement was regarded as a transaction between individual friends.

RUSSIA AND THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE CONVENTION.

St. Petersburg, December 2.

Commenting on the American-Japanese entente, the Rossia, a semi-official organ, says that the convention agrees with the principle which has been approved by most of the Russian public, and the journal welcomes the agreement with much appreciation. The Russian paper adds that before the entente was signed by the representatives of the Powers, the whole of its features were intimated to Russia by them. The step taken by them shows that the relations between Russia, Japan and the United States were growing more friendly. The new entente will guarantee the maintenance of peace in the Orient.

POSTAL RATE.

New York, December 2.

A convention has been concluded between the United States and Germany providing for lowering the postal rate to 2 cents. The change will come into force on Jan. 1st, 1909.

VICEROY TANG SHAOI.

San Francisco, December 3.

On Dec. 2nd, at the White House, Viceroy Tang Shaoi, the special Chinese envoy, presented to President Roosevelt an autograph letter from the late Emperor of China. In the letter, His Majesty referred to the cordial relations between China and the United States and expressed gratitude for the voluntary reduction made by the United States in the indemnity payable by China in connection with the Boxer trouble. A desire was also expressed for closer relations between the two countries. President Roosevelt expressed his sincere condolence for the demise of the Emperor and Empress Dowager.

THE KAISER AND THE REICHSTAG.

The German Constitution Alteration Bill demanding that Ministers should be held responsible in future for all utterances of the Kaiser has been submitted to the Reichstag. The Central party endorses the proposal.

INTERNATIONAL NAVAL CONFERENCE.

San Francisco, December 4.

On Dec. 4th the International Naval Conference was held in the British Foreign Office. The delegates of Japan, Great Britain, the United States, France, Russia, Germany, Italy, Austria, Spain and Holland were present. Sir Edward Grey, British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, made an opening speech.

It is said that Japan, Great Britain and the United States have agreed to adopt a similar attitude with regard to important questions, and probably France will support them. Great Britain holds the view that vessels belonging to a neutral Power may be searched for contraband of war. She however will abandon this view, as it seems not to be admitted by most of the foreign representatives. The British Government will introduce another proposal instead of the foregoing contention.

The meetings will continue until February next.

VENEZUELA.

Three Dutch warships are making demonstrations off Venezuelan ports. It is generally believed that the warships are making preparations to establish a blockade. President Castro is absent. Anxiety is being felt in Venezuela.

THE BALKAN AFFAIR.

St. Petersburg, December 4.

M. Milovanovich, Premier of Serbia, has had an interview with a special correspondent of the Novoe Vremya, in the course of which the Premier said that M. Iswolsky, Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, had advised him to consent to the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to be satisfied with such concessions as were obtainable. Russia was not willing to create a war. The Serbian Premier went on to say that the views adopted by the other Powers were similar to that expressed by the Russian Minister and that the Serbian Government therefore decided to comply with the advice of M. Iswolsky. The policy thus adopted by the Serbian Government, however, was opposed by the public, and consequently a serious collision would take place between the Government and the people. M. Milovanowitch added that the Serbian Government would define its views after the return of M. Pacciotti, a special messenger to Russia.

On the evening of Dec. 3rd M. Pacciotti returned from Russia, arriving at Belgrade. In connexion with the return of the special envoy, a rumour has been afloat that the Serbian Cabinet would resign. The Novoe Vremya says that M. Milovanowitch has betrayed his country. It is, however, believed in certain circles that the Serbian Premier has been deceived by M. Iswolsky.

THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE ENTENTE.

San Francisco, December 5.

Mr. Manley, a Democratic Senator from Mississippi, has said that the American-Japanese entente was a treaty in its nature and that the Government disregarded the rights of the Senate by having not submitted the convention for sanction. He added that he intended to put a question to the Government at the Senate and thus to close the agreement.

It is generally believed that the demonstration of Mr. Manley will be fruitless as the Republicans have admitted the new convention.

CAPTAIN SIMPSON.

New York, December 5.

As candidate for the Secretary of the Navy under the Presidency of Mr. Taft, Captain Simpson is popular. Last year Captain Simpson visited Japan and is familiar with Japanese conditions.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg, December 5.

A change has taken place in the attitude adopted by Russia. She is trying to resolve the Balkan question as early as possible. With this view, Russia has advised Turkey to consent to the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to receive an indemnity. In consequence of provisional consent by Russia, Great Britain, France and Turkey, the Austrian Government intends to submit to the proposed international conference the question with regard to the annexation of the two provinces. No special attention is paid by the Powers to the interests of Serbia and Montenegro. The cause of the alteration in the international affair is attributed to an effort rendered by M. Kokoutsov, Russian Minister for Finance, who is trying to raise a foreign loan.

Vienna.—Austria will not oppose the international conference proposed by Russia, who is now adopting a strong attitude toward Serbia and Montenegro. Austria, however, will consent under certain conditions.

Constantinople.—The young Turkish Party will not be satisfied with an indemnity only.

Belgrade.—When the Crown Prince of Serbia returned from his visit to Russia, the Serbian public all rejoiced. Three weeks later when M. Pacciotti returned anxiety was being entertained by them.

PROPOSED RUSSIAN LOAN.

St. Petersburg, December 6.

The Budget committee in the Duma has considered a bill providing for the raising of a loan of 450,000,000 roubles. Of this amount, 30,000,000 roubles will be employed for redeeming an old loan and 150,000,000 roubles for making good the apparent insufficient income in the forthcoming fiscal year. The committee consented to the first mentioned sum but some of the committee refused to admit the last mentioned amount, saying that there was no necessity to discuss it as the Budget is left pending. After a debate the bill was passed by 30 to 12. The committee decided to authorize the Minister for Finance to draw up the conditions of issuing the bonds.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

The Serbian Premier denies a report which appeared in the Novoe Vremya with regard to the Balkan affair. He has said, in connexion with the report, that Serbia would demand a concession of territory if the Powers were going to recognize the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. He added that M. Iswolsky, Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, seemed merely to have anticipated a step which would probably have been taken before long by the Powers.

In reply to a Russian correspondent, M. Pacciotti, who recently returned from a visit in Russia, has said that Serbia desired to place Bosnia and Herzegovina under the sovereignty of the Sultan of Turkey, granting them, however, self governing rights.

CONGRESS.

San Francisco, December 7.

At noon on Dec. 7th Congress was opened. Subsequently the meeting was closed after motions of condolence in regard to some of the members of both Houses who have died since the conclusion of the previous sitting. On the following day a message from President Roosevelt was read. It is said that at the present sitting no special proposal will be introduced excepting the Budget and other ordinary bills. Attention is being paid by the public to a proposal relating to the revision of the tariff. Bills providing for the establishment of postal savings banks, a subsidy to shipping services, and the superintending of the telegraph and telephone business, will be introduced. In some circles the Government is condemned on account of the new entente between the United States and Japan, though the agreement itself is welcomed. They contend that the convention should have been introduced to the Senate for its sanction. Probably a warm debate will take place in the Senate on this subject. The whole expenditure for the forthcoming fiscal year has amounted to $824,408,948. The sum included $9,040,000 for establishing fortifications; $13,040,000 for Congress; $410,000 for the Ministry; $4,340,000 for the Department of State; $137,040,000 for the Department of Finance; $234,040,000 for the Army; $137,040,000 for the Navy; $200,040,000 for the Department of Home Affairs; $18,040,000 for the Department of Agriculture; $13,040,000 for the Department of Commerce and Labour; and $9,840,000 for the Department of Justice. The Naval outlays include $7,040,000 for ordinary expenditure; $5,000,000 for cruising purposes; and $9,040,000 for naval works.

JAPAN AND GERMANY.

New York, December 8.

Telegrams from Berlin have repeatedly denied the report that a special entente would be concluded between Japan and Germany. It is however believed in the United States that the denial is a diplomatic device resembling that adopted by President Roosevelt before the announcement of the American-Japanese agreement.

RUSSIA AND THE BALKAN AFFAIR.

St. Petersburg, December 7.

M. Iswolsky, Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, will shortly address the Duma in connexion with the Balkan crisis. The main features of his statement are said to be (1) Russia has not directly or indirectly attempted to induce Austria and Turkey to settle the question of the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. (2) Russia has not recognized the annexation. The question of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be settled after consideration by the Powers who participated in the Berlin Treaty. Russia has always upheld this view, and it is supported by Great Britain, France and Italy. (3) If the annexation is recognized by the conference, Russia will insist on the payment of compensation to the Balkan States. (4) Russia expresses her sincere satisfaction with the alliance among those States, which is of importance to Russia, to the Slavonic race and to Turkey. Russia merely desires to improve her friendly relations with Turkey. (5) Russia is conducting negotiations with Austria in view of the proposed international meeting. Russia has not consented to the annexation, but there is no reason to infer that she will always oppose it. As a matter of fact, Austria is in a difficult position. (6) Russia has advised Serbia and Montenegro to be self-restrained. She is not willing to participate in hostilities. There is no prospect of Serbia and Montenegro defeating Austria in war. Meanwhile it is best for Serbia and Montenegro to await the conclusion of the negotiations among the Powers.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND CONGRESS.

New York, December 8.

At noon on Dec. 8th a message from President Roosevelt was read in Congress. He referred to questions of the coinage system, trusts, railway labourers, judicial affairs, postal savings banks, and military affairs. He advocated the adjustment of military affairs and the education of officers, the establishing of a naval staff office, and the construction of 4 battleships and a number of destroyers. With regard to the Philippines, he said that self governing rights should be granted to the islands after an improvement is attained. Referring to relations with Japan, he went on to say that the Tokyo Exhibition was postponed until 1917 in order to make perfect preparations. During the period the United States would try to complete preparations. The American committee had already visited Japan in connexion with the exhibition. The year when the exhibition was to be opened would be marked by the 50th anniversary of the coronation of the Emperor. During the half century, Japan had attained extraordinary progress, rare in the history of the world. She now classified herself among the first Powers. Doubtless the exhibition was a proper means to commemorate the special improvement accomplished in Japan. He added that most sincere relations existed between Japan and the United States for a long time past. The commerce of the two countries was growing in the Pacific. He expressed profound admiration as to the success accomplished by Japan. Finally the President referred to the cruise of the Battleship Fleet and expressed thanks for the courteous receptions in Japan, Australia and the various countries in South America. The message covered 44 pages.

EUROPEAN IMMIGRANTS.

Owing to revival in business, immigrants from Europe are entering the United States.

THE AMERICAN-JAPANESE "ENTENTE" AND THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

It is contended among the Democrats that the American-Japanese entente is regarded as an infringement of the constitution. The party, it is believed, will submit a question in Congress.

THE SHUN-IN COMMERCIAL SCHOOL.

THE OPENING CEREMONY.

The opening ceremony of the Shun-in Commercial School was conducted last Saturday afternoon under a pavilion specially erected for the occasion on the premises. Among those present were Prince Ito, Viscount Sone, the Korean Ministers of State, and a large number of the leading residents of Seoul, Japanese and Korean. Among the representatives of the Westerners were Bishop Mutel, Mr. Millet, the American Commissioner-General to the Japanese Exhibition, Dr. Scranton, Rev. Bauker, and Mr. Dolljahn.

Dr. Ichihara opened the function with an address. After thanking the guests, he remarked that the two things most urgently need in Korea were the reform of the administration and the spread of education, especially technical and commercial education. It was to fill this want in some measure this school had been brought into existence. It was, the speaker proceeded, about the time Prince Ito was appointed Resident-General that Mr. Okura announced his intention of giving money for the maintenance of a commercial school in Korea. On the matter being submitted through Prince Ito, the Korean Government was so pleased with the donation that it turned over for the use of the institution the premises which it occupies and further promised to give a grant of money annually. The school was therefore, a joint Japanese-Korean undertaking and the name of Shun-in (善因 good neighbourliness) was a most appropriate one. The school commenced its work in April, 1907, but its formal opening had been delayed to the present in order to secure the presence of the noble donor, Mr. Kihachiro Okura.

Mr. M. Tawara, Vice-Minister of Education, who is one of the two auditors of the school, spoke on the origin and history of the institution. Immediately on his assumption of office Prince Ito had started many useful things in Korea, and not least important among these was the reorganization of the educational system of the country. The speaker was at that time a secretary of the Residency-General and it fell to his lot to render his assistance in educational matters. The only school of a practical nature under the Government management in those days was the Agricultural, Industrial and Commercial School, which, although apparently very ambitious in its scope, was in a very imperfect condition with only a handful of students. With the object of securing efficient instruction in these useful branches of knowledge, it was decided to separate the different sections of that school into independent institutions. The first result was the establishment of the Agricultural School at Suwan, and it was soon after followed by the Technical Training Institute in Seoul. In order to establish a commercial school, the present premises, which had been presented to the Korean Government by the Japanese Association for Education Abroad, were extended and new buildings erected. When they were nearly completed in the autumn of 1906, the Korean Government was apprised of Mr. Okura's scheme. Accepting it as a godsend, the Korean Government turned over the new buildings together with the land to Mr. Okura, and the school proposed by him was organized as a juridical foundation under the Korean law, the name Shun-in being given it by Prince Ito. Such were the circumstances under which the school came into existence. It began work in April, 1907, with five students turned over from the commercial section of the former Government School of Agriculture, Industry and Commerce. The present number of the students in the Regular Course was 31 in the second year and 48 in the first year. Mr. Okura being also desirous of affording educational facilities to Japanese boys, an evening course was established for their benefit. Proceeding, Mr. Tawara was pained to observe that private schools in this country were now under the influence of political propaganda to a lamentable degree. He hoped that the students of this school would keep themselves clear of the objectionable infection, and devote their whole energies to the acquisition of useful knowledge and discipline, thus preparing themselves for the great task that awaits them, namely the development of their country's commerce.

Mr. Kihachiro Okura, who spoke next, said that when he had entered upon his seventeenth year early in 1906, he decided to set aside a sum of money to be given for some purposes of public utility. He was at first undecided exactly for what purpose to employ the money. Just then Prince Ito was ordered to come here as Resident-General in order to assist the Koreans in the work of reform and improvement. That helped to settle the question, he at once decided to use part of the money for the benefit of the Korean people and for the furtherance in however small measure, of the great work which the illustrious statesman had chosen to undertake. He decided to employ it for the purpose of commercial education in this country, a decision which met with the hearty approval of His Excellency the Resident-General. Mr. Okura said he was sorry he could not spare more for this worthy purpose. He hoped that the institution would make a hearty growth. In conclusion he offered hearty thanks to all present for their courtesy in attending the ceremony.

His Excellency Prince Ito said that he did not think it necessary to add anything to what had already been stated concerning the origin and history of the important institution whose opening ceremony he considered it his privilege to attend. Commerce, he said, was one of the most important spheres of human activity. It benefited all the parties engaged in it, and chiefly through its development has it been made possible for the human race to attain the present progress in its prosperity and welfare. It was therefore but natural and proper that all civilized nations were vying with each other in the development of their commerce. The development of commerce, indeed, had a specially deep meaning for the advancement of human welfare, for commerce from the very nature of things went hand in hand with peace. Without peace commerce could not thrive. So in promoting its commerce a nation promoted peace which was the greatest desideratum for the good of mankind. In Korea, continued the noble speaker, commerce was still in a state of infancy, but such as it was, it was already assuming vast importance in the life of the people. It was hardly necessary for him to emphasize the importance of affording the rising generation of Korea the opportunity of equipping itself for the important career of business. He hoped that the bright looking young men before him would properly appreciate the great importance of the career for which they are preparing themselves and the seriousness of the responsibility resting upon their shoulders as pioneers in the development of the commerce of their country. He earnestly urged them to prosecute their studies in such a way as might be best calculated to make them practical and efficient men of business. In conclusion he hoped for the lasting prosperity of the School.

Addresses were then read by the Korean Prime Minister, the Minister of Education, and the President of the Privy Council. They all expressed hearty appreciation of Mr. Okura's magnificent gift. Congratulatory telegrams from the principals of Mr. Okura's Commercial Schools in Tokyo and Osaka were then read. Representatives of students, one Korean and one Japanese, also read addresses. The last address was by the principal of the institution, Mr. Honjuku.

The formal part of the function over, the company adjourned to the Japanese Club, where they were treated to refreshments.

MANY WEEKS OF PERFECT AGONY

With Eczema on Arm and Legs—
Could Scarcely Sleep for Months — Tried Many Treatments Without Result—Did Not Work for 11 Weeks—Relieved in Ten Days and

COMPLETELY CURED BY TWO SETS OF CUTICURA

"My trouble began with irritation on the legs and right arm which developed into eczema. It became so bad in a few weeks' time that I was in perfect agony. I was prevented from attending work, and, although I was only too pleased to try remedies suggested by my friends, they were all used without any effect. I became pessimistic, especially so considering that I had been through the hands of two doctors, who failed to do any good. One day I decided to make another attempt to get rid of my complaint and purchased a full set of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills, and in ten days I found the irritation disappearing. I would not have believed it possible for any remedy to afford such comfort in so short a time. I was able to sleep at night—a thing which I had not been able to do for months—and in the course of another week there were unmistakable signs of the eczema being mastered. I persevered with Cuticura, and in six weeks, using two supplies, I was cured. I have every reason to be grateful to Cuticura, for I was able to return to work after eleven weeks' idleness. The chief priest of the well-known Buddhist temple Choun-ji at Hayama committed suicide on Dec. 13th by hanging himself. He was 70 years of age and had suffered from illness for some weeks past.

THE autumn meeting of the Tokyo Race association was opened at Ikegami on Dec. 18th and will last three days.

SOME 70 persons were arrested on Dec. 16th at Otaru on a charge of infringement of the Rice Exchange Regulations.

A GALE was experienced in the Nikko district on Dec. 15th. Six houses were destroyed and about thirty damaged, including several hotels.

AT 8.50 a.m. on Dec. 16th fire broke out in the office of a drug merchant at Yayegaki-cho, Nedzu, Tokyo. Forty-five houses were destroyed.

A CASE of bubonic plague is reported in Osaka. The patient, who is a young woman, living in Hon-cho, East urban division, died on Dec. 13th.

PRINCES MICHU, Atsu, and Teru, the sons of the Crown Prince, will proceed to Numadzu about Dec. 30th. They will stay there during the cold season.

A FREIGHT train was overturned at 11 a.m. on Dec. 11th near Asahigawa station on the Hokkaido Railway. Much damage was caused to some wagons.

AN official telegram from Taipeh says that the aborigines in the districts of Taito and Kwasen have attacked the Aiyu army. The rioters killed a number of Japanese.

ACCORDING to a telegram, the second reading of the bill as to free trade ports in the Far East took place on Dec. 14th at the Duma. The date of enforcing the law is not known.

A MOJI telegram says that the autumn meeting of the Toyo Race Society was held on Dec. 12th, and that the only attendance consisted of the horse owners and the society's officials, 40 in all.

ON Dec. 10th a storm was experienced in Giran, Formosa. About 300 houses were damaged and 8 collapsed. An extensive area of cultivated land was flooded. Several persons are missing.

THE Sakura Maru, the first steamer of the Imperial Volunteer Ship Society, which is now employed by the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, will be chartered by the Railway Department in April next.

MR. KINGO ISHII, the Yokohama Harbour Master, has been honoured with the Italian decoration of the Fourth Order of the Crown, and received permission to accept and wear the same on Dec. 11th.

GENERAL VISCOUNT TERAUCHI, Minister for the Army, says the Asahi intends to grant a subsidy to the various horse breeding unions in the provinces with a view to encouraging the improvement of horses.

THE editor of the Chinese periodical Min Pao, in Ushigome, Tokyo, has been punished with a fine of yen 200 in the Tokyo District Court on a charge of having published comments injurious to the public peace.

ABOUT noon on Dec. 16th a passenger train collided with an empty freight train at Orio Station on the Kyushu Railway. The locomotives and some of the wagons were damaged. Two passengers sustained injuries.

THE condition of General Baron Inouye, commanding the Fourth Division, is reported by a telegram from Kyoto to be still serious. Colonel Uyeda, an aide-de-camp to the Emperor who visited the Baron, returned to Tokyo on the morning of Dec. 14th and informed His Majesty as to his condition. On the same day His Majesty sent a present to the invalid.

A NUMBER of men and women were arrested on Dec. 22th at a house in Yoshiwara, Tokyo, while betting on the results of the races at the Nippon Keiba Kai, Meguro. The results were sent by telephone to them after every race.

EARLY on the morning of Dec. 16th fire broke out in the Seiya Academy, Kyoto. The flames spread to the Kyoto Colleges of Law and Politics, destroying both institutions. The college was insured with the Meiji Fire Insurance Co. for yen 20,000.

SURGEON-INSPECTOR K. Okamoto, of the Naval Reserve, living in the village of Honjo, Hyogo prefecture, committed suicide on the night of Dec. 9th by stabbing himself with a sword. He had been suffering from brain complaint for some months past.

MRS. KATHERIN Leut Stevenson, President of the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in America, World's Superintendent of the citizenship department, also an ordained minister, is expected to arrive on the Mongolia Dec. 18. A welcome meeting in her honor is to be held at the Baptist Tabernacle, Saturday, Dec. 19, at 1.30 o'clock. The Public is cordially invited.

THE Asahi reports that two well-known Japanese sugar importers of Yokohama have imported a large lot of foreign sugar at Yokkaichi through fraudulent means, thus escaping the imposition of duty. Some officials from the Yokohama and Kobe Customs have seized a portion of the sugar in question. The paper adds that the duty which the two traders escaped amounted to yen 468,000.

THERE are further reports with reference to yen 1,750,000 to be paid by the Finance Department toward the proposed improvement of the Yokohama Water Works. It is now stated that in 1909 yen 10,000 will be paid; in 1910 yen 20,000; in 1911 yen 30,000; in 1912 yen 60,000. The remaining amount will be paid within the next eight years. It is believed that the Yokohama Municipality will raise as a loan the amount needed for the enterprise, and that it will appropriate the subsidy from the Treasury for interest on the loan.

S. TANABE, a Customs broker, No. 43, Yama-shita-cho, Yokohama, was arrested by the Harbour police on Dec. 11th on a charge of fraud by means of forged documents. It appears that on Nov. 25th he received an order from Messrs Kelly & Walsh, No. 60, to pass three cases of cargo through the Customs, receiving a sum of yen 100 on account. The broker got the goods passed on payment of a fee amounting to yen 13.50, defrauding the firm of the balance, yen 86.50, by producing false receipts of the Yokohama Customs, etc., altogether amounting to yen 100.

AT a recent meeting of the Silk Woven Goods Guild of Yokohama Mr. K. Yamaguchi, of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, made a speech as to improvement in the silk industry. Mr. K. Sugawa, who recently returned from a visit to Europe and America, also gave his impressions of what he had seen abroad. The meeting considered the question of duties in Japan and the United States and the fact that, in America, Japanese silks are classified in several grades, in consequence of which complications continually arose as to the imposition of duty. The union agreed to a resolution that 30 per cent. on an average should be taken off the present duty.

CHINA.

Friday, December 11.

Judging from the extremely severe measures adopted by the Chinese Authorities, they seem to entertain some apprehension of an internal disturbance. Shanghai wires that, in order to prevent the dissemination of seditious matter, all correspondence reaching China from Chinese subjects abroad is subjected to the strictest censorship, and that the customs authorities are adopting extraordinary measures to prevent the landing of revolutionists. It will be remembered that we published in our last issue a telegram from Tielhing in the sense that the Viceroy of Manchuria had issued an order for the censorship of mail matter, and it may consequently be assumed that the censorship has been extended to all the littoral provinces of the Chinese Empire. Japan's geographical position at this juncture is somewhat unfortunate, for she can neither prevent Chinese revolutionists from seeking asylum within her borders; nor can she subject their writings to any efficient censorship. This is pretty certain to lead to misunderstandings on the part of the Chinese nation, and it is quite on the cards that we shall soon hear of Korea being similarly utilized by the revolutionists.

The troops engaged in quelling the Anking mutiny have returned to their quarters, order having been fully restored. But the telegram says that the leader or leaders of the mutiny have not yet been arrested, and that strict orders to search for them have been issued to the various authorities.

Viceroy Chang seems to be interesting himself very vigorously in the construction of railways in Hunan and Hupeh. With the express permission of the Throne he has invited to Peking the Railway Committee for the purpose of discussing the expediency of a foreign loan. Further, Mr. Ying, President of the Hanlin College, has memorialized the Throne urging the vital importance of railways as factors of national development.

Saturday, December 12.

It appears from telegrams received on Saturday in Tokyo that the railway in which his Excellency Chang Chihlung is interesting himself so strenuously is the Yei-Han line, namely, that between Hankow and Canton, and also the line from Hankow to Szchuan. There are, it is said, three groups of capitalists in the market seeking the business of financing these lines, so there is likely to be keen competition. China appears to have unlimited credit in Western markets, and yet her financial affairs are wrapt in impenetrable mystery. Nobody knows what income the State collects, or how it spends it, and in the absence of such information we doubt whether any other country in the world would command similar credit. Then there is the question of the stability of the Manchu Dynasty. Probably very few thoughtful people have any immediate concern about that topic, but it is nevertheless certain that China rivals even Russia in the matter of domestic disquiet, and that there is no telling what a day may bring forth. Yet she has always fulfilled her pecuniary obligations with entire good faith, and European capitalists seem content to rest upon that fact.

Mr. Nakane, who acted as interpreter to General Feng Shan on the occasion of the latter's recent visit to Japan in connexion with the autumn manoeuvres, is quoted as saying that the General conceived a very high opinion of Japanese progress in general and of her military science in particular. General Feng is in chief command of the Peichili forces, and he hastened back to Peking on the receipt of news that the Emperor and Empress Dowager had died, as he was naturally unwilling to be absent from his post at a moment of possible crisis. General Aoki has spoken of him as the most competent military officer in China and as likely to make a mark in history. Mr. Nakane, who accompanied General Feng to China, further reports that the prompt action taken by Japan in connexion with recent events in Peking produced an excellent effect on the Chinese Government, which is now imbued with most friendly sentiments towards Japan.

The Hochi Shimbun has a telegram from Dairen which speaks in a most hopeful strain about the prospects of the Penhsifu coal mine. This mine, as most of our readers probably know, is situated near the line of railway connecting Mukden with Antung. It was in this vicinity that the Russian forces essayed a great turning movement in the interval between the Battle of Liaoyang and that of Mukden. Japan's title to the mine was at first disputed by China, but the trouble was finally settled by a compromise which provided that the mine should be worked jointly by the Okura Company of Tokyo and a Chinese company. The telegram referred to above says that the prospects of the mine are now most hopeful. Its coal has been examined scientifically, and found superior to that even of Fushun, so that the authorities of the East China Railway have decided to use this mineral solely. It is stated that their decision signifies a demand for 2,000 tons daily.

The appointed period of 27 days' mourning for the deaths of the Emperor and Empress Dowager of China came to an end on the 11th inst. and the long half-masted flags were raised once more. It is surprising to reflect on the almost perfect calm which has marked the progress of events so momentous that a few months ago the bare possibility of their recurrence was anticipated with something like trepidation. The reflection suggests itself that if China's statesmen can handle such a crisis so successfully, they may be trusted to lead the country quietly to the threshold of constitutional government.

It is again rumoured that Mr. Wu, Chinese Minister in Washington, is to be recalled and appointed to the post of English Tutor to the Emperor. Mr. Wu's career has been watched with great interest by Englishmen in the East since the days when he returned from eating his dinners at the Middle Temple and became a member of the Legislative Council in Hongkong, where he was known as the Honourable Mr. Ng Choi. He subsequently spent some years in Tsientsin as Secretary to the late Viceroy Li, and it is now very much to China's advantage that a man of such wide knowledge and liberal views should be present in the capital to advise the Throne at this important juncture in China's history.

Monday, December 14.

It appears that a brief telegram received in Tokyo on the 13th inst. must be read literally as to the fact that Dr. Hattori and seven other Japanese teachers in the Peking University have received notice that their service is no longer required. The Hochi Shimbun represents this measure as an outcome of the struggle that has been going on for some time in Peking between the Japanese school and the Western school. Further, the Hochi, more so, has a great deal to say about German participation in this matter. It alleges that the Germans have been working with might and main to undermine Japanese influence, one feature of their programme being the establishment of a highly endowed college at Tsingtao. They have succeeded, very much to the chagrin of our Tokyo contemporary. The Chinese authorities assign reorganization as a reason for this dismissal, but that of course is a mere pretext. The Hochi suggests that Count Komura's policy towards China is perhaps too lenient. There are some publicists who still believe in the omnipotence of diplomacy. Their bland confidence is to be envied.

The uneasiness produced in Chinese circles at Tielhing in connexion with recent events in Peking is said to have disappeared. It led to a complete cessation of business for the moment, but the Chinese merchants have now begun to make large purchases of beans so that prices have risen and activity has been restored.

The Chinese authorities continue their active search for Dr. Sun Yat-sing. The Viceroy of the two Kiang, acting upon a rumour to the effect that Sun with two followers will soon reach Shanghai, has despatched constables and detectives to that port for the purpose of apprehending him.

Tuesday, December 15.

A long telegram has reached the Mainichi Shimpō and the Jiji Shimpō from Peking detailing in 16 articles the powers vested in the new Regent, Prince Chun. They are, in effect, the powers pertaining to a sovereign, with the reservation that their most important exercise must have the formal sanction of an Imperial edict. With this restriction the Prince is entitled to declare war or make peace; to appoint and dismiss officials (in the clause containing this provision it is provided that the Prince is to take counsel of the Empress); to perform all rites of worship at the Imperial Tombs; to administer the affairs of the army and navy; to educate and bring up the young Emperor; to determine the order of precedence at Imperial ceremonies; to fix all matters relating to Imperial audiences; to sign all Imperial edicts, which, however, will receive the collateral signatures of the Ministers of State; to represent the Emperor in the Constitutional Assembly; to control everything relating to treaties with foreign countries and to the despatch of representatives to foreign Courts; to have fixed by the Waiwupu all details connected with the receipt of diplomatic notes and audiences granted to foreign delegates; to receive an allowance of 250,000 taels per annum as well as a residence, and not to make any changes in the Governmental system without consulting the Sovereign.

It may be mentioned here that the Peking correspondent of the German newspaper in Shanghai takes a very pessimistic view of the state of affairs in the Chinese capital. He says that although things are superficially quiet there is a strong undercurrent of unrest, flowing mainly from the fact that the power of Yuan Shihkai has been gravely impaired since the demise of the Empress Dowager. The Prince Regent, though a man of impetuous character and very active intelligence, is disposed to defer to the advice of Chang Chihlung in everything, but unfortunately Chang is so debilitated by the weight of his years that he is scarcely capable any longer of keeping an account of events. This correspondent adds that the opinion held in well-informed circles is that from three to six months hence a grave disturbance may be looked for in the capital. He further states that now at last knowledge has been acquired of the events which occurred at the time of the decease of the Imperial personages. The date of the Emperor's death was either the 10th or the 11th of November, and that of the Empress Dowager the 15th. Up to the 13th no decision had been taken with regard to a successor to the Throne, but on that day a Grand Council was held, at which were present all the leading statesmen in the capital except Prince Ching and Yuan Shikkai. The absence of these two was significant, inasmuch as Yuan and his fellow-thinkers advocated the nomination of Prince Ching's grandson, whereas the other party were in favour of Prince Pu Yi, and of course a decision on that point had been reached before the council met to confirm it.

Wednesday, December 16.

The Asahi's Peking telegrams state that from the date of the announcement of the Emperor's death until the 14th inst. no audiences were granted to Chinese Ministers. So soon, however, as the Imperial decree was published defining the powers of the Regent, as set forth in our issue of the 15th inst., the granting of audiences was resumed.

It is stated that the original idea of borrowing 6 million taiels from the people for the purpose of paying off the remainder of the debt on the Lu-Han Railway has been abandoned, as the operation would be hopeless during the period of Court mourning. The money has therefore been obtained from the leading foreign banks; namely, from the Hongkong Shanghai Bank 2 millions; from the French Bank 2 millions, from the Yokohama Specie Bank one million and from the German Bank one million.

The Viceroy at Canton is said to have forbidden the emigration of Chinese subjects to Mexico. No reason is assigned by the telegraph for this veto, but we presume that Mexico has proved as unfavourable a field for Chinese immigrants as for Japanese.

Telegrams from Nagasaki refer to the incident which recently took place on the S.S. Fatshan. Our readers will remember that a Chinese passenger by that vessel was said to have been so much injured by a kick from the Portuguese purser that death ensued. It was proved in court when the case came up for trial that the body showed no marks whatever of violence and that death had probably ensued from natural causes. But it was not very conclusively proved that the purser had not kicked the Chinese passenger when attempting to collect the latter's ticket or the price of his passage. It appears that this affair has developed just the same disposition among the Cantonese as was evinced 50 years ago on an analogous occasion. The Autonomous Society has issued an incendiary circular, and has sent a present of gold cups to the four Chinese witnesses who at the trial testified on behalf of the deceased. Demonstrations are also said to have been made against the offices of Messrs. Butterfield & Swire, the owners of the steamer.

The Chinese Chamber of Commerce at Hongkong seems to have directly associated itself with the boycott. It is said (Mainichi Dempo's telegrams) to have adopted a resolution condemning the action taken by the Colonial authorities in dealing with the propagandists of the boycott, and to have forwarded a copy of this resolution to Peking.

A Japanese who has just returned from Peking is quoted by the Mainichi Dempo as speaking in a sense diametrically opposed to the report recently forwarded to the Shanghai German journal by its Peking correspondent. This informant states that remarkable unanimity of opinion and unexampled coöperation among Chinese statesmen are the prominent feature of the moment. So far from prompting dissensions, the recent crisis has helped materially to consolidate the administration, and there is even talk of re-appointing to membership of the State Council a number of high officials whose services had been dispensed with prior to the death of the Empress Dowager. It is not yet certain that this latter step will be taken, but the fact that it has been mooted is a significant indication of the mood prevailing in the Chinese capital. This informant adds that the advice tendered by Japan to the Chinese Government has helped to promote the above spirit of solidarity. He alleges that the Japanese Government offered friendly counsel as to the paramount advisability of avoiding all discord which might add to the embarrassment of the situation, and as to the necessity of adopting most stringent measures to check the machinations of the disaffected party. It would seem, in fact, that one effect of this crisis has been to draw Japan and China much closer together, and to prove—to the Chinese Government at all events, whatever may be the case with the bulk of the people—that Japan is genuinely disposed towards her Western neighbour.

Thursday, December 17.

The death is announced of Mr. Wang Wen-shao; who had been before the public since the year 1864, when he served as Taotai of Hupeh. He has been Viceroy of Yunnan and Kweichow, Viceroy of Chihli, Grand Secretary and Director General of Railways and Mines. He retired from public life in 1905.

The Shanghai Cotton Spinning Company has just held its semi-annual meeting in Shanghai. A dividend of 10 per cent. was declared and a very favourable report was made by the board of directors. They said that the returns for the past four months had been excellent, and that the prospects for the future were bright.

JAPAN'S ECONOMICS.

Mr. Tsukada, Head of the National Debts Bureau in the Department of Finance, in a lecture recently delivered to the Yōka-kai in the Fujimi-ken, Tokyo, divided the Meiji era into three periods of 20 years each. The first of these periods he distinguished as that of the Imperial Rescript declaring the inauguration of modern reform; the second was the period of the Imperial Rescript on Education; and the third is the period of the recent Imperial Rescript enjoining economy. Having prefaced his remarks with this somewhat sentimental declaration, Mr. Tsukada—who is certainly one of the rising financiers of the time—passed on to say that from the end of March next year until the end of May, a period of two months, public loan bonds to the face value of 268 million yen will be paid over to the shareholders of the nationalized railways, which measure will augment the volume of negotiable securities and to that extent increase the people's borrowing power. Thus the amount which these bonds now represent as security at present rates is 190 million yen, and as, according to the Government's recent ruling, they will represent their full face value when they have taken the form of exchequer bonds, there is here an increase of security to the extent of 78 million yen.

Applying, then, the Banks' rule of lending up to 80 per cent. of the negotiable value, it results that the borrowing power of the bond-holders will be increased to the extent of 63 millions. But then comes the question, will the issue of these bonds produce a slump in the market for State securities? Of course, even though that injurious effect were produced, the negotiable value of the bonds for borrowing purposes would not be impaired, in view of the Government's recent ruling. But still the question is very interesting. Mr. Tsukada answers in the negative. He calculates that out of the total of 268 millions, the amount which may be put upon the market, namely, the amount held by financiers, will be 179 millions, of which total the Bank of Japan has 72 millions, leaving only 107 millions to be disposed of. Probably of the latter figure something like from 20 to 40 per cent. will be offered for sale. Suppose 30 per cent. be so offered. That means that 31,600,000 yen worth will be dealt with. But foreign capitalists have already bought about 30 millions as an investment, and since they are not likely to put up any of these for sale, the prospect narrows down to something very small. Concerning his manner of reaching the estimate of 179 millions, Mr. Tsukada is not very lucidly reported, but we understand him to calculate thus:—There is a steady annual increase in the demand for such securities on the part of banks, companies and the people at large. Thus the banks take about 10½ millions every year in addition to their old stock; companies, including insurance companies, take 2½ millions, and individual investors, who have incomes of 1,000 yen and upwards, absorb 23 millions. This accounts for 36 millions, and we must assume that Mr. Tsukada bases his calculations on official statistics. Then there is the Government's redemption scheme, which absorbs 50 millions annually, so that the digestive capacity of the nation may be put at from 80 to 90 millions per year. Subtracting that sum from the aggregate issue, we have a remainder of 178 or 179 millions. But where Mr. Tsukada gets his data for assuming that only from 20 to 40 per cent. of the latter figure is likely to be put on the market, we can not find any indication. At all events, if his figures be correct, there does not appear to be much reason to apprehend any slump when the bonds are issued. The Treasury's measure in declaring their security value to be equal to their face value can not fail to have a considerable effect.

THE JAPANESE-AMERICAN "ENTENTE."

The Japanese Tradal Association held a banquet on the 16th inst. to celebrate the recent interchange of notes between the Governments of Tokyo and Washington. The meeting passed with acclaim a document stating that the Association most heartily welcomed an Entente which could not fail to contribute to the neighbourly friendship of the contracting Powers; to furnish a fresh guarantee for the preservation of the peace of the world, and to promote the commercial and industrial relations between the two nations. A copy of this resolution was sent to the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, the United States Ambassador in Tokyo, and the Japanese Ambassador in Washington.

The Tokyo Jockey Club will open an autumn meeting at the Itabashi course on Dec. 22nd lasting for three days.

KOREA.

Friday, December 11.

The Kokumin Shimbun says that, according to the latest statistics, the number of Japanese residing in Korea shows a very marked increase. There are now 35,595 households, representing 133,455 individuals, among whom 34,504 are living in the capital. This means that the Japanese residents have more than doubled during the past three years. After the War with Russia, the Japanese in Korea were estimated as totalling about 60,000, and statements published last spring estimated that they had increased to 100,000. Now we have a positive assertion that they number 135,000. Evidently when the insurrection is fully subdued, and when the Eastern Development Company gets fairly to work, quite a considerable element of the population of Korea will be furnished by Japan.

The Dai Han Mai il Shimpō has again been getting itself into trouble. Telegrams from Seoul say that it has been suspended for publishing matter prejudicial to public peace and good order.

One of the principal insurgent leaders has been seized at Yangdok in Southern Pyongyang.

Saturday, December 12.

There are confused and perplexing accounts about the affairs of a forest at Wang-do in the province of Chihollado. This is one of the important forests of Korea. It covers an area of some 12,000 acres and its value has been variously estimated at from half a million to a million yen. The gist of the stories now circulating is that a Japanese capitalist named Eto has been manoeuvring since last year to get possession of this forest, and that, in the spring of the current year, he had nearly succeeded, when a shifting of portfolios in the Cabinet interfered with his project. Subsequently he followed Prince Ito to Japan and endeavoured to secure the latter's support, but receiving no encouragement whatever, he returned to Seoul and recommenced his operations in that city. It is now alleged that he has secured considerable support in high places, although he has offered only 38,000 yen for the concession. But one statement is that Prince Ito recently despatched experts to examine and report upon the forest, and that they estimated its value at a figure very far in excess of Mr. Eto's proposal. There is a great deal of fringe attached to these facts by newspaper reporters, but we suspect that the whole affair will prove to be something of a storm in a teapot. During Prince Ito's tenure of power in Korea the laws have been so altered and revised that anything like a fraudulent concession on the part of the Authorities is scarcely within the range of possibility. Three or four years ago a very different story would have had to be told. Many concessions have been made to foreigners which would not for a moment bear close scrutiny, but the day of such things is past.

The Asahi Shimbun has a telegram from Seoul which describes a strike at the Technical Instruction School. Our contemporary's correspondent sets out by alleging that the Christian converts have of late been busily seeking to instil anti-Japanese sentiments into the minds of the students in the capital, and that this strike was proved to have been inspired by that feeling. Apparently the trouble began with a drinking bout from which three or four students, returning in a somewhat pugnacious mood, had a quarrel with one of the managers of the School. This was taken up by the first-year students en masse, and the procedure adopted by the School authorities being inefficient, the trouble spread to the second-year students also. Quiet was subsequently restored, but unfortunately the affair seems to have furnished fresh food for the suspicion so loudly heard some time ago that Christianity is being perverted into a political weapon in Korea. The missionaries have done everything in their power to dispel this suspicion; foreign Governments have not been remiss in issuing injunctions, and Prince Ito has abundantly shown that he at all events recognises in Christianity a factor of peaceful progress. But it is impossible to suppose that all the talk about this abuse has no foundation. What seems probable is that the agitators are endeavouring to utilise the foreign faith as an instrument of sedition.

Tuesday, December 15.

It is reported from Korea that an important leader of the insurgents has been killed by the people at Yongdok. This man is said to have been the chief instrument in the deeds of plunder and bloodshed of which two Korean provinces have been the scene for some time back.

With regard to the Korean Budget for next year, a telegram from Seoul says that the expenditures have been reduced by about 3 million yen so as to bring them into equilibrium with the income.

Prince Ito was to set out on the 15th inst. to visit Kaison, which is the situation of the principal ginseng farm.

The Asahi's correspondent still continues to send sensational telegrams about the Wando forest affair. Thus far he has a monopoly of the news, no other correspondent having devoted any attention to it, which reticence certainly does not suggest that the affair has very serious import. This correspondent, however, alleges that it has created more excitement in Korea than any incident since the secret mission to the Hague. The story told is that the sale of the forest was distinctly refused some months ago, on the ground of illegality, and that to re-entertain the project is the acme of contradiction. It appears to us that this tale must be received with a good deal of reserve. It has probably passed through the usual mill of exaggeration.

The Mainichi Dempo publishes a telegram from Seoul saying that Prince Yamagata took occasion to convey to Prince Ito an urgent message through the medium of General Hasegawa, who has just returned to Korea. The message strongly urged Prince Ito not to remain in Seoul during the winter, but at least to spend the cold weather at Shimonoseki. It is thought not impossible that His Highness may comply with this suggestion.

Dr. Sven Hedin seems to have received a very hearty welcome at the hands of the Japanese residents in Seoul. Several entertainments were given in his honour, among others a banquet at the Residency General.

The leader of the body of insurgents who recently gave so much trouble on the island of Kanghwa, has been found hiding in Seoul and has been arrested by the police. His name is given as Yi.

THE BOYCOTT.

The Mainichi Dempo has a telegram from Nagasaki which says that the Hongkong authorities are adopting most stringent measures to avert anything like a boycott of British goods. It is understood that such a boycott is threatened in consequence of the vigorous action recently taken by the authorities to check lawless acts in connexion with the anti-Japanese boycott. The Mainichi Dempo's informant alleges that men are arrested even if they are overheard consulting about the boycott, and fined 5 dollars when brought before the magistrate. A little of this wholesome severity is very much to be applauded. What boycotting, as practised by the Chinese, means, is that the ignorant masses of the people constitute themselves directors of the Empire's diplomacy, and one need hardly pause to reflect on the great peril attending such an unintelligent arrangement. Japan is very unfortunately circumstanced in this matter. She can not take measures to protect herself without provoking criticism and condemnation at the hands of men who expect her to exercise in her international affairs such a measure of altruism as they certainly would not think of themselves exercising. It was in the power of the United States, however, to nip these mischievous proceedings in the bud when America was their victim some time ago. A small exercise of timely resolution on that occasion would have taught the Chinese people that no self-respecting foreign nation will allow the agreements concluded between itself and the Government of China to be deliberately nullified by mob machinations. In the case of the Tatsu Maru the Chinese Government definitely agreed to a reasonable settlement, and if it can not oblige its subjects to accept that settlement, it must accept the opprobrium of governing without administering. We may note here a characteristic fact that, speaking generally, the foreign newspapers published in Japan have never once raised their voices against this anti-Japanese boycott, though we presume that they would be very much hurt if the ordinary rule that silence gives consent were applied to their case.

GENERAL-VISCOUNT OKAZAWA.

We regret to have to announce that on the 12th inst. at 3 p.m. General-Viscount Okazawa died from the effects of the injuries received by him in a carriage accident on the 23rd of November when returning from the interment of the late Dowager Princess Kwacho. The Viscount sustained a fracture of the skull on that occasion, but it was not diagnosed as a dangerous wound and at first the patient was treated in his own house. Subsequently, however, symptoms of erysipelas supervened, and he was taken into the hospital on the 9th inst. for the purposes of an operation. Blood poisoning, however, ensued and the end came speedily. The deceased was in his 60th year. His early career was very distinguished, and after performing the duties of Vice-Minister of War, in which capacity he accompanied the Emperor to Hiroshima during the China-Japan War, he was appointed in 1896 to be the chief Imperial Military Chamberlain at the Court. His untimely death will be much mourned by the Sovereign, with whom he was always persona grata. He is said to have acted a most useful and diligent part in keeping the Emperor accurately informed about everything relating to the Army. Every change of arms or accoutrements, and every meritorious act even on the part of a common soldier was brought by him to the Sovereign's notice, and this solicitude is believed to have had a great effect in raising the spirit of the troops and increasing their affection for the Sovereign.

DOMESTIC POLITICS.

According to the investigations of the Secretariat of the Lower House, which of course is the most trustworthy source of information on such a matter, the following table shows the strength of the various political parties in the House:—

	Old.	New.	Totals.
Seiyu-kai .....	85	106	191
Progressists .....	24	32	66
Daido .....	21	9	30
Boshin .....	1	41	42
New Element .....	21	23	44
Unattached .....	1	5	6
	163	216	379

It will be observed from the above that while the strength of the Progressists has dwindled from 87 to 66 and that of the Daido from 59 to 30, in the sequel of the late general elections, the Seiyu kai have grown from 180 to 191, and now these last constitute a bare majority of the whole House. Our readers may be under some misapprehension about the political complexion of the Boshin Club, as it has been more or less associated with the names of Mr. Kono Hironaka and his followers. It will be well therefore to explain that Mr. Kono and his henchmen do not belong to the Boshin Club, which is an association mainly of business men, but that they are included in the so-called "New Elements." These latter comprise in fact the components of the old Yuko-kai, and they have not formed any new organisation since the elections. The Boshin Club may be expected to support the Government, but the "New Elements," which are to hold their general meeting on the 21st inst. when they will christen themselves, must be expected to play their usual role of free lances, and rumour says that the chief plank in their platform will be the abolition of the Three Taxes. In fact this problem of the Three Taxes is expected to be the most vehemently discussed of all the issues brought before the Diet next session, but the general opinion seems to be that the supporters of abolition will content themselves with an official promise of compliance as soon as possible.

We expect that the foreign public is a little weary of hearing about dissensions in the ranks of the Progressist Party. Some time ago it was confidently stated that the two opposing sections of the Party had composed their differences through the mediation of the members elected at the last general election. Indeed, the movement of reconciliation went so far that a friendly reunion was held to celebrate it. But apparently the trouble has broken out again worse than ever. According to Tokyo newspapers, the Reform Section, namely that under the leadership of Mr. Oishi, has accused the new members of acting in collusion with the Anti-Reform Section under Mr. Inukai, and the latter Section has declared that the quarrel is now between the new members and the Reform Section, which declaration has naturally not helped to abate the friction. It was hoped that a better spirit would have been promoted by appointing Messrs. Inukai and Oishi to be joint leaders of the Party in the House, but the latter politician is said to have emphatically declined the post, and thus the impasse is worse than ever.

On the 15th inst. the Finance Committee of the above Party held a meeting and decided to recommend the adoption of a bill for dealing with the Three Taxes in the following manner, namely:—abolishing the salt monopoly (10½ million yen); abolishing the transport tax (2,600,000 yen), and reducing by one-fourth (6,900,000 yen) the tax on textile fabrics. This would involve a reduction of 20 million yen in the State's income, and the idea is to obtain that amount by diverting 10 millions from the Debt Redemption Fund, and by effecting economies to the extent of 10 millions by administrative reforms. We should say that this bill has very little prospect of becoming law.

It will be remembered that the Boshin Club was in a state of some perplexity with regard to the choice of two members to make up the number (5) of its standing committee. Three names—those of Messrs. Tomizu, Nakano and Sengoku—were clearly indicated as the choice of the party, but there was an obvious difference of opinion about the remaining two. The Party met on the 15th inst. to consider this question, and solved it by deciding that only three members should be chosen, and that the duty of choosing them should be delegated to a committee specially elected for the purpose. The committee was then elected, and it forthwith nominated the three gentlemen above indicated, so that a satisfactory settlement was finally reached, although by a somewhat circuitous route.

Mr. Sugita Teichi, President of the Lower House, has announced his unwillingness to serve any longer in that capacity, even if the House does him the honour of re-electing him. Neither will he serve as Inui Sori (Party Leader in the House). For this latter position the Seiyukai have decided to nominate three of their members, although two have hitherto been the limit. Dr. Hatoyama and Mr. Motoda have already been chosen, and it is thought probable that the third will be Mr. Ooka Ikuzo, proprietor of the Chuo Shinbun. It is the custom in Japan, unlike other countries, for political parties to hold frequent counsel with each other as to their attitude towards any question of vital importance, and it is evident that for the purposes of such conferences between the Seiyukai and the Progressists, Dr. Hatoyama would not be a very suitable go-between in view of his old relations with the latter Party. Probably in this fact there is to be found an explanation of the appointment of three Parliamentary leaders instead of two.

Mr. Oishi's refusal to serve with Mr. Inukai as Parliamentary leader of the Progressists seems to have considerably incensed the newly elected members of the Lower House, who hoped that by this arrangement concord would be re-established between the two politicians. These new members held a meeting on the 15th inst., and the reports show that some strong feeling manifested itself. There was even a proposition to take extreme measures in Mr. Oishi's case, but this was overruled, and it was decided to send another deputation to urge Mr. Oishi's acceptance of the post. This step, however, was not successful, as Mr. Oishi refused to recognise the representative qualification of the delegates. We record these events as they are exciting some interest in Tokyo at present, but for our own part we entertain very little doubt that this dissension will be composed as all its predecessors have been.

According to present expectations, the official opening of the Diet will take place on the 24th inst. The Houses are to meet on the 22nd, when the chief business will be to elect new presidents. The 23rd will see the Emperor's choice of presidents from among the nominees submitted, and will also see the organisation of the two Houses. On the 25th, then, the official opening will take place, and probably in the afternoon the replies to the speech from the Throne will be discussed. Finally, on the 25th the Standing Committees and the Budget Committee will be elected, and the Lower House will receive the Budget. The two Houses will then probably rise for the New Year's recess, but whether the recess will last as usual until the 20th of January, or whether it will terminate on the 15th or even the 10th is still uncertain.

THE PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGE.

President Roosevelt seems to have stirred up a veritable storm by his last Message to Congress. On the 11th inst., the House of Representatives adopted a resolution censuring his action as insulting to Congress, and it is thought probable that the Senate will pass a similar resolution. The Asahi's telegrams say that various efforts have been made to induce the President to withdraw the incriminated language before the question comes up for discussion in the Senate, but it is not Mr. Roosevelt's fashion to lower his flag in the presence of any emergency. He is standing by his guns as usual, though the press also appears to be marshalled against him. It is said that 7 or 8 newspapers out of every 10 condemn the language used in the Address, some asking whether Mr. Roosevelt really thinks himself the only able man in the United States, and others wanting to know whether, on the verge of leaving office, he has adopted the motto après moi le déluge.

The House of Representatives appears to have weakened in its project of censuring President Roosevelt. The appointment of a committee for the purposes of the censure, which was to have come up for discussion on the 14th inst., is said to have been postponed to the 26th, and this is interpreted to signify that the committee will never come into existence at all. If that be the denouement, President Roosevelt will be in a position to carry his head higher than ever.

MANCHURIA.

Manchuria seems to have been rejoicing in an exceptionally warm winter up to the present. The climate in Dairen is said to have been warmer than that of Tokyo, and the Sungari River is not yet completely frozen. On the whole the climate in Japan also has been exceptionally fine, though the snowfall in the northern districts has been earlier and heavier than ever.

There appears a paragraph in the Hochi Shinbun which is not easy to understand immediately. It says that communications having been now established between Dairen and Shanghai for the carriage of merchandise, the cheapness of this route will render it a formidable competitor of the route via Newchwang. We imagined that such communications had existed ever since the South Manchurian Railway Company placed the Kobe Maru on the Dairen-Shanghai route, but apparently some more effective arrangement has now been made. Of course during the winter months it is inevitable that Dairen should possess a signal advantage over Newchwang. It is not to this, however, that the telegram alludes for we know that the Liao River is still unfrozen.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIA RAILWAY.

We read in the Asahi some interesting statements attributed to a high official of the South Manchuria Railway Company. This informant refers to the extensive reforms that are about to be undertaken in the organisation of the Railway. He says that the general staff numbers 6,000 Japanese and 4,000 Chinese employees; 3,000 officials of hanin rank and 150 officials of sonin rank and upwards. The pay of the workmen amounts to about 9,000 yen daily, and that of the officials to 150,000 yen monthly, so that the total pay list is about 5 million per annum. Of course among the labourers employed on the line a large number are engaged on work of construction, and therefore their services are not permanently required. Re-organisation will affect chiefly the employees of low rank, and although the Asahi's informant says nothing about the number that will be dismissed, other journals put it at 3,000. As to the news received on the 10th inst., suggesting that this re-organisation was likely to cause a strike, the Asahi's informant denies that anything of the kind need be apprehended, for it is intended to deal most liberally with the discharged men, giving them as much as from six months to a year's salary by way of solatium. It is evident that at this rate of remuneration the finances of the Railway will not derive any immediate benefit from the economies thus effected. At least half a year must elapse before any diminution is seen in the Company's pay roll.

With regard to the Fushun mine also this informant makes some interesting statements. He says that the mine at the outset was worked to the extent of only 1,000 tons a day, which figure was subsequently raised to 1,200 and has now reached 1,700. This, however, is still very far from the 5,000 tons per diem originally contemplated by the Railway Company. Nor has there hitherto been seen any prospect for largely increasing the output. The principal market for the coal, apart from purely local demand, has been in South China, and there strong competition has had to be encountered on the part of the mine owners of Japan proper. The outlook was therefore anything but brilliant. Now, however, a change for the better has been effected, owing to the fact that the Russian railway authorities have reduced the transport charge for a ton of coal from 5 yen to 3.10 yen. All the inhabitants of Russian Asia east of Harbin have hitherto been obliged to depend upon wood for fuel, the price of coal being at least 12.00 yen a ton, whereas two tons of coal do not represent a greater heating power than one pood of fire wood which can be purchased for 22 yen. In consequence, however, of the reduced charge for transport it will now be possible to sell a ton of Fushun coal throughout the above district at a little over 9 yen, since it can be delivered at Kwangchengsz for 6 yen per ton, allowing a fair profit to the mine. The announcement of this new scale of charges is said to have caused a marked increase in the demand for the Fushun mineral. It is also mentioned that the mills at Harbin have now begun to use Fushun coal in preference to fire wood.

We find a very singular piece of intelligence among the Mainichi Dempo's telegrams. Tieling wires that there is much dissatisfaction among Chinese merchants owing to frequent delays in the transport of goods by the South Manchurian Railway. That is intelligible enough, but the incredible part of the telegram is that in answer to these complaints the Railway Authorities have replied that, if they employ all possible expedition in forwarding the merchandise now offering for transport, the Railway will have nothing to do next spring. We have not the least doubt that this explanation emanated from someone who desired to bring the Railway Authorities into ridicule.

The rumour which we published in our last issue with regard to the last installment of the South Manchuria Railway Loan has been confirmed. The terms are: amount 2 millions sterling; interest 5 per cent, issue price 97½, and period 25 years. It is explained that the present occasion was taken on various accounts, the principal being the readiness shown by the British and French public to subscribe the recent Korean loan guaranteed by Japan; the fact that unless the transaction be finished before Christmas, it must be postponed until next spring; the apprehension that Russia may then be placing a large loan, and the consideration that the Manchuria Railway Company will need the money after March next. An official of the Industrial Bank is quoted as saying that the Bank first approached Messrs. Panmure Gordon & Co. with reference to this loan on the 20th November, and that the transaction thence proceeded without the slightest hitch. In fact the attitude of the European money market towards Japan has undergone a radical change since last spring, when the second installment (2 million sterling) of the Railway Loan had to be issued as a three years' transaction.

THE TOKYO RAILWAY.

The directors of the Tokyo Railway held a meeting on the 11th inst. when the following accounts were passed:—

	Yen.
Gross Income .....	3,367,528
Expenditures.....	1,724,855
Net Profit .....	1,642,402

The Directors decided to recommend the appropriation of the above in the following manner:—

	Yen.
Reserve against wear and tear .....	500,000
Sinking Fund .....	175,000
Dividend (at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum) .....	870,000
Carried forward .....	97,402

It should be mentioned that in consideration of the above figures the Directors have foregone their own usual rewards, which means a very heavy sacrifice on their part. The reserve against wear and tear means that the time has now come when considerable expense must be incurred on account of repairs and renewals, and the sinking fund means that full provision has to be made for the surrender of the property to the authorities in 1952. It is understood that, had not these reserves been set aside, the Company would have been able to declare a dividend of 6.8 per cent., but of course such procedure would have been merely putting off the evil day. The Asahi Shimbun, which has always been inimical to the Company, writes as though considerable dissensions were taking place among the principal shareholders and the Directors, but the public has learned by this time that very little credence can be attached to such stories. The simple fact seems to be that the Company's officials erred in their original estimates. They looked forward to a development of business which has not taken place; they underestimated the expenditure which would be required on account of wear and tear, and they failed to see that, while the suburban extensions would cost very nearly as much as the city lines, the returns obtained from them must be comparatively insignificant. The views of the Mayor of Tokyo have been inquired, but he has not much to say, except to express regret that, whereas the city originally counted on getting an income of at least 350,000 yen annually from the Railway, it is getting nothing at all. Mr. Ozaki does not think that there is anything behind these accounts. He regards them as bona fide. If the City had any doubts on the subject, there is a remedy provided, but in his opinion no occasion exists for recourse to that remedy. There is no alternative except to raise the rates of fare.

According to several of the Tokyo journals, there is a measure of doubt whether the Directors of the Tokyo Railway Company will be able to carry out their programme of reducing the dividend immediately. Some of the shareholders are said to be in favour of postponing the reduction until next summer. On what grounds they base this idea we do not learn, but the somewhat unprosperous fact seems to be that several of them are not prepared to have their income from shares reduced so considerably and suddenly. It is therefore doubtful what will be the outcome of the general meeting on the 28th inst. As for foreign onlookers, it may be taken for granted that their sympathies will be entirely with the step proposed by the Directors. There can be no second opinion about the duty of the Company to refrain from paying even one sen in the way of dividend until it has laid aside ample sums to provide for depreciation of property and sinking funds. So long as the accounts are not placed on that sound basis, the Company occupies an altogether false position towards the public, and the Department of Home Affairs, or the new Railway Bureau, whichever has jurisdiction, would, it appears to us, be quite justified in requiring the Company to comply with this elementary rule of sound business.

The public are evidently perplexed about the affairs of the Tokyo Railway. The Asahi Shimbun repeats the strange rumour that the appreciation which the shares of the Company showed on the 16th inst. was owing to a resolution to postpone the reduction of dividend until next June. But we fail wholly to comprehend such an explanation. If any resolution in the sense of postponement had been made, the only persons to benefit by it would be those whose names were registered as owners on the last day of November. These would receive 6 or 7 per cent, but owners of December, January or February shares would have to look forward to a dividend of only 4 per cent. Yet we are asked to believe that this prospect drove up the February shares by two points on the 16th inst. It is noticeable that the Yfi Shimpō keeps editorial silence towards this problem at present, but its mantle has fallen upon the Asahi Shimbun, which writes as though to raise the fares would be a criminal act on the part of the Company. To sober minded Englishmen it will appear that the criminality rests entirely with those who assist to rob private capitalists in the interest of the Tokyo citizens.

The Christmas meeting of the Tokyo Literary and Musical Society will be held at the Methodist Publishing House, Ginza, on Monday, Dec. 21st, when scenes from "Pride and Prejudice" will be given.

A CUSTOMS QUESTION.

There is quite a commotion about a consignment of 12,000 bags of sugar which was imported at Yokkaichi by a firm of Nagoya. The firm declared the sugar as belonging to one class, whereas it really belonged to another. This meant a difference of 60 sen per bag in import duty. The Custom House officials, having come to the conclusion that the sugar was falsely invoiced, impounded the whole consignment. If the Customs officials be right in their judgment, the firm will have to pay three times the difference in the duty, and further the whole of the sugar will be liable to confiscation. It does not appear to be denied that the sugar was wrongly described, but the claim is that as the first and second classes of this staple are very difficult to distinguish, the affair should be treated as a mere mistake not as an attempted fraud. What makes the matter suspicious, however, is that a Nagoya firm should have chosen Yokkaichi as the port of destination, instead of Atsuta, which is the natural harbour for Nagoya. This choice is believed to have been suggested by the fact that the Custom House at Yokkaichi has a very small staff, and there was consequently reason to hope that the false invoice would be saved from close scrutiny owing to stress of business. At all events the authorities seem determined to take a resolute view, and it is only right that they should do so. Very unpleasant rumours are in circulation among the foreign merchants as to wholesale evasions of the consumption tax on sugar by Japanese importers. It is even stated that the fine dividend recently declared by the leading Japanese sugar refining company would have been impossible without such manoeuvres. Thus the subject is very unsavoury, and conclusive evidence of vigilance on the part of the Custom House authorities would have its advantages.

The affair at the Yokkaichi Customs does not lose anything of its gravity upon fuller examination. The plea now set up on behalf of the importing merchant is that he had no cognisance of the attempt to defraud the Customs, and that it was entirely the work of his banto. Full credit, however, is not given to this excuse. It is pointed out that the head of the incriminated firm is a man with long experience in the sugar trade, who was not at all likely to entrust a matter of such importance to the sole discretion of a banto. The Asahi Shimbun remarks that the three ports proverbially chosen for these manoeuvres are Moji, Yokkaichi and Taketoyo, where, the Customs staff being very small, the difficulty of eluding their vigilance is not formidable. The loss which the Nagoya Firm will incur is variously stated at from 130,000 to 200,000 yen, but it is not clear how either of these calculations is reached. At all events, the Firm should be well able to bear the penalty, so far as the mere question of money is concerned. Meanwhile, to mark its regret, the Firm has closed its doors and dismissed its banto.

The Asahi Shimbun has a very strong article upon the question of commercial morality in Japan as illustrated by this attempt to defraud the Customs. We fear that, judged by such a standard, a great many heads will be found to bear an accumulation of ashes. Nevertheless, every homily is commendable which tends to promote upright and fair dealing.

As might have been anticipated, the Yokkaichi sugar question has proved to be a great exaggeration. Careful examination shows that out of the 13,000 bags imported at Yokkaichi, not the whole, but only 4,212 were wrongly invoiced, having been placed in the first class instead of the second. These bags, however, were largely overweighted, and it is difficult to avoid the conviction that a deliberate attempt was made by some parties to evade the customs dues. So far as the actual quantity falsely invoiced is concerned, the matter ends with the confiscation of the 4,000 odd bags, and the payment of a fine of 11,404 yen, the consumption tax not coming into the question. It is said to have been distinctly ascertained that the head of the Masuda-ya Firm was not at all implicated in this attempt to defraud the Customs, the only person culpable being the banto of the Firm's Nayoya branch, a Mr. Katagiri.

The Asahi Shimbun, which has made itself conspicuously active in ventilating this affair, says that there has been a strange sequel. On learning of the Yokkaichi fraud the Osaka Custom House, of which Yokkaichi is a branch, caused an examination to be made of all the raw sugar—tens of thousands of bags are spoken of—stored in the bonded warehouses in that city. This examination disclosed the fact that the greater part of the sugar had been passed through the Customs as class one, whereas it really belonged to class two. If the law were strictly applied to this case the result must be an almost fatal blow to the whole sugar trade of Japan, and therefore, the Asahi adds, the customs authorities decided to overlook the fraud on this occasion. All the importers were summoned to the Osaka office, and warned that the slightest attempt to repeat such practices would be visited with the extreme penalties of the law.

SUBSIDIES TO S.S. SERVICES.

Now that so much discussion is going on with regard to the question of subsidies to steamship services, it is interesting to note exactly what this country is actually paying on that account. The following are the figures:—

Service.	Amount in yen .	Company.
European ... ..	2,674,000	Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Seattle... ..	654,000	do
San Francisco ... ..	1,010,000	Toyo Kisen Kaisha.
Australia ... ..	425,000	Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Adjacent Eastern Seas.	530,000	do
Hakodate-Aghalien...	150,000	do
Dairen... ..	140,000	Osaka Shosen Kaisha.
Hokkaido-Vladivostok	325,000	do
Yangtze ... ..	800,000	Nisshin Kisen Kaisha.

It appears to us very probable that, in the case of some of the above services, the Government will give the companies concerned the option of having their subsidies reduced or adding to their lines without any addition to the subsidies. In both cases the companies would receive less in practice, for either their subvention would be cut down or they would have to work harder to earn it. Of course, in addition to the above figures there are the sums paid by the Treasury for encouraging navigation and shipbuilding, but as the laws providing for these payments have still some years to run, there is no pressing necessity to consider them now.

FORMOSA.

There has been a rather serious affair in Formosa. It appears that a number of aborigines were employed in two of the Aiyu lines of advance, and that when these lines effected a junction at a place called Shichikiyakuten, the aborigines plotted an insurrection and attacked the regular force of Aiyu, which seems to have numbered only 30. The fate of the Aiyu is not definitely ascertained, but it is believed that they were all butchered. It is evident that the insurgents must be in considerable force, for they surrounded and completely checked the advance of a detachment which was proceeding to the relief of the above 30 men. This detachment lost 9 of its number, and would have been destroyed had not another force succeeded in breaking the investing line and effected a timely rescue. A body of troops consisting of artillery and infantry—2 batteries of the former and 2 companies of the latter are spoken of—have been sent from Taipei by forced marches to the scene of the catastrophe. It appears to be thought that the putting of arms into the hands of the aborigines who had surrendered, and their enrollment among the Aiyu must be considered to have been premature. The above may prove to be only a partial account of the disaster, for the insurgents have succeeded in cutting the telegraph wires communicating with a place called Gozenjo, where a number of labourers are employed on works of reclamation. It may turn out that these men also have been murdered. The place of these incidents will be more familiar to our readers if we describe it as the neighbourhood of Karenko, which is near the east coast of the Island, and was for some time the principal stronghold of the insurgents.

SUGAR.

With regard to the violent fall which took place in the shares of the big sugar company on the 14th inst., the explanation furnished is simply that the sugar refining enterprise shows no sign of returning a profit. It will be remembered that some time ago the three leading companies, namely the Dai Nihon, the Yokohama and the Kobe, formed a species of trust, and entered into an agreement that they would reduce their production so as to correct whatever part of the falling market was due to excess of supply over demand. That policy has not proved fully effective. According to Tokyo journals, the price of the raw sugar landed in Japan after duty has been paid is 7.50 yen per picul. To this has to be added the consumption tax of 10 yen, and refining expenses which amount to 1.70 or 1.80 yen. Thus the refined sugar must fetch at least 19.50 yen in the market in order to leave any profit. The combination between the three Companies had the effect of pushing the price up to 18.50 yen, but thereafter it began to decline, and the prospect is now very black, inasmuch as consumers are showing a strong disposition to prefer cheap unrefined sugar, which, although its price has appreciated in the presence of this demand, may still be had at 12.50 yen per picul. It will therefore be seen that the sugar refining business is in a parlous condition.

Mr. T. TAKASE, of the Tokyo Echo, was run over by a locomotive while trying to cross the railway near Shimbashi late on the night of Dec. 14th. He sustained severe injuries.

THE JAPANESE PROFESSORS AT THE PEKING UNIVERSITY.

With regard to the dismissal of Prof. Hattori and several other Japanese professors hitherto serving in the Peking University, a representative of the Asahi Shimbun has made inquiries of the Chinese Legation, where it is strenuously denied that the measure is to be interpreted in the sense given to it by Japanese newspapers, namely, that the disposition in China is to dispense with the aid of Japanese teachers and to employ German. The facts are, according to the explanation given by these officials, that the University in Peking has hitherto been a University in name only, the function really discharged by it being that of a normal school. The idea now is to transform it into a proper university with duly affiliated colleges, and it is in connexion with that reform that the services of all the teachers hitherto employed at the so-called University have been dispensed with. Considering the high repute in which the Japanese professors at the Law School and elsewhere are held, it is evidently incorrect to draw from the case of Prof. Hattori and his fellow Professors the inference published by Japanese newspapers.

It must be confessed that the above explanation might easily be more convincing. If the idea were to dispense altogether with a normal school, then the fate of Prof. Hattori and his comrades would be explicable. But a normal school is at least as important as a university from certain points of view, and there is no indication that Peking is no longer to possess such an institution. Thus the obvious aspect of the incident is that the reorganisation of the University has furnished a pretext for the step now taken, and is not the real cause of it. We can not endorse the Hochi Shimbun's somewhat extreme view that foreigners in Peking have been intriguing against the Japanese and have succeeded in persuading the Chinese that the Japanese man of science stands on a much lower plane than his Occidental confrère, and is not by any means qualified to be an instructor. Neither can we agree with the Hochi that a question of this kind is altogether solvable by diplomatic interference. Such interference might very well do mischief rather than prove of advantage. But the Chinese Government may certainly be asked in a friendly manner to furnish some explanation of this very marked step, for the explanation attributed to the Legation in Tokyo is distinctly inadequate.

There is in the Nippon of the 15th inst. an interesting statement with respect to the dismissal of Prof. Hattori and seven other Japanese subjects who have hitherto been serving as teachers in the Peking university. The Nippon's informant denies that this dismissal is to be interpreted as an evidence of discrimination against Japan. He regards it simply as an outcome of the rights recovery spirit which pervades all ranks of the Chinese people at present. The idea is that every possible effort should be made to manage Chinese affairs with Chinese hands and without recourse to foreign aid. Moreover, the Japanese instructors are not in the best possible odour. Among them there are certainly men of large erudition and single-hearted devotion to the interests of knowledge, but there are also others who not only lack the quality of scholarship, but are also animated chiefly by selfish motives. Among the Chinese who have been educated in Japan some are better qualified to act as teachers than certain of the Japanese now discharging that task in China, and the same remark applies with still greater force to Chinese educated in Europe and America. In short, the dominant tendency of the Chinese at present is to build their own house with their own materials. The time will come for opening the edifice, and there will probably then be a more liberal demand for foreign assistance, but at present the policy of dispensing with alien aid may be expected to be pursued steadily in China.

THE BETHELL CASE.

Telegrams received in Tokyo state that the trial of the Bethell action against the North China Daily News for libel in publishing a telegram from its Tokyo correspondent was tried on the 10th instant at the British Court, and ended in a verdict for Mr. Bethell, to whom the jury awarded damages to the amount of three thousand dollars. It will be remembered that the Shanghai journal's Tokyo correspondent wired in the sense that there existed a belief in Japan as to Mr. Bethell having misappropriated a part of the fund subscribed for the redemption of the national debt, such belief being founded on admissions made by Mr. Bethell himself in open Court. Of course that was incorrect, but it will be very interesting to learn how Mr. Bethell justified his action in using a portion of the money for the purchase of mining shares and in lending another portion without proper security to a hotel-keeper. Meanwhile we heartily commiserate the Shanghai newspaper. This is the second time that it has been defeated in a case of libel within the past few months, and no one can conscientiously say that on either occasion anything like malice prepense could be charged against it.

From Nagasaki comes news furnished by Mr. Zumoto, who called at that port on his way back from Shanghai, whither he had been summoned to give evidence in the libel suit brought by Mr. Bethell against the N.C. Daily News. There is a little confusion in the accounts, but so far as we can make out, the damages claimed originally were 25,000 dollars. The presiding judge, however, seems to have pointed out to the jury that Mr. Bethell's conduct was distinctly open to question, in that he had lent without security a considerable part of the money entrusted to his custody. The Judge therefore thought that the case would be fully met by very light damages, as for example 500 dollars, but the jury assessed the injury done to Mr. Bethell's fair fame at 3000 dollars. It would appear that the plaintiff is quite content to have his claim reduced to less than  $\frac{1}{8}$  of the original demand, but, of course, in saying this we do not intend to reflect upon him in any way, for all persons who pose as having been libelled make it a habit to assert their high character by asking for a great deal more money than they are prepared to take. Nobody can for a moment question the justice of the view that to lend a large sum of trust-money to a hotel-keeper without security was an act not falling much short of criminal carelessness.

PROFESSOR JOHN MILNE has been awarded a Royal medal by the Royal Society on the ground of his pre-eminent services in the modern development of seismological science. It will be recalled that for twenty years he was in the employment of the Japanese Government, and that he undertook the important task of establishing the seismic survey of Japan, embracing nearly one thousand stations.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, December 11.

Yesterday saw a revival on the Stock Exchange, mainly owing to the receipt of news that the trade returns for the first ten days of the month were favourable and that silver had moved up. All stocks appreciated except those of the Tokyo Railway, about which the public seems to have again fallen into a pessimistic mood.

Saturday, December 12.

The market was dull on the 12th instant during both sessions. No particular factors of depression were noticeable except profit-taking sales.

Monday, December 14.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange was somewhat demoralized on the 14th instant by a débâcle in sugar shares. Rumours were rife to the effect that a hitch had occurred with reference to rebate duties, and that the Yokkaichi affair would entail heavy loss. It resulted that the sugars fell 3 points in the forenoon session and 4 in the afternoon, dragging down many other shares in their wake.

Tuesday, December 15.

The market opened dull on the 15th, but some recovery was witnessed in the afternoon session. Heavy sales drove down the quotation for Tokyo Railways, an impression having got abroad that a considerable time must still elapse before a rise of fares receives official sanction.

Wednesday, December 16.

The market opened weak but towards the close of the morning session an impression began to prevail that next spring would see a better state of things, and buying became the order of the day. In the afternoon this upward move was strengthened by a rumour that the last 20 million yen of the Manchuria Railway loan had been placed in London on very advantageous terms. The shares of the Tokyo Railway leaped up two points, of which fact the explanation given is that the reduction of the dividend to 4 per cent. has been postponed until next July. But it is obvious that such postponement would have precisely the opposite effect on ex-div stock, as all the Tokyo Railway shares now are.

Thursday, December 17.

The 17th instant was a dull day on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, the prices of shares in general declining, though not to a very marked extent. Hesitation to invest within a few days of the closing of the Exchange—which takes place on the 26th instant for a recess lasting to the 4th proximo—is thought to be responsible for the depression. The sugars, however, rose, by way of reaction from their recent débâcle and owing to a persistent rumour that stocks are inadequate. We append the quotations for February delivery:—

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, December 11.

A deputation from the United Chambers of Commerce now in session in Tokyo has waited upon Mr. Hirai, Chief of the Railway Bureau, with reference to hastening the work of construction on three railways, namely, the Chiyo-Nishi, the Gan-Yetsu and the Toyama-Naotsu. Mr. Hirai is quoted as having said that nothing substantial could be effected this year but that the work would be carried on next year. With regard to the Usui tunnel, he said that the necessary steps were already in progress, and that it is intended to convert that section of the line into an electric railway.

The affairs of the Naigai Fire Insurance Company have finally proved irretrievable. Various efforts made to re-habilitate the Company have all failed and the President resigned on the 8th inst. A peculiar feature of the failure is that all the employees of the Yokohama Office, with the exception of one servant, fled on the evening of the 9th, an evidently preconceived disappearance. The Company is a small affair with a capital of only 200,000 yen of which 96,000 is paid up, but there is one unhappy feature of the failure, namely that the Company had been receiving deposits of one sen daily from poor people under promise of paying to each depositor 3 yen at the end of the year. It is said that there were no less than 20,000 of such depositors.

We read in the Kokumin Shimbun that at the meeting of the directors of the Tokyo Railway on the 10th instant it was decided to declare a dividend for the current half year at the rate of only 4 7 per cent. per annum, but this account seems somewhat apocryphal. The Chuo says that no decision was come to, and that it was decided to continue the meeting on the 11th inst.

Saturday, December 12.

It is stated that the authorities have issued instructions as to the advisability of linking up the three electric railway systems, namely, the Tokyo Railway, the Keihin Railway and the Yokohama Railway. At present the railways run within a short distance of each other at their terminal points, but passengers who wish to utilise the lines are obliged to change cars. The Keihin Company has already signified its consent to comply with this injunction and the other two companies are expected to follow promptly.

On the 18th inst. a meeting is to be held in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce by representatives of the 11 Fishery Companies of Japan. The united capitals of these Companies amount to 3,200,000 yen, and they own 27 vessels. It is believed that not only would great economies be effected, but also profits would be largely increased if the Companies combined into one. There has been talk of this for some time and the meeting on the 18th inst. is to discuss the question.

The long expected has at last happened in the meat market. Beef in Japan having now risen to prices varying from 70 sen to 45 per pound, a unique opportunity evidently offers for the import of meat from Australia by the cold storage process. Accordingly, companies with the latter object were formed, and one of them, which has its store at Akashi-cho in the Tsukiji district, is said to have imported 108,000 pounds of Australian beef with the intention of placing it on the market at 27 or 28 sen per pound. This naturally threw the Tokyo butchers into a ferment of consternation. They immediately imported 400 beasts from Korea and placed them on a farm in Okayama Prefecture with the object of offering Korean beef at 30 sen a pound, a price at which they expected to be able to recoup their expenses. Learning of this project, the cold storage men fell back upon the simple expedient of postponing their intended sale, and thus the butchers had to choose between feeding their imported beasts until the moment of competition came or killing them at once without regard to the Australian commodity. They chose the latter course, and when the process had ended, the Cold Storage Company quietly stepped into the field and began its sales on the 11th inst. with such success that at one of its stores alone over 2,000 pounds were said to have been sold in the day. Naturally the butchers are endeavouring to throw doubts upon the wholesomeness and tastefulness of the cold storage beef, but in that attempt they are not likely to have much success.

The affairs of the Nai-gai Fire Insurance Company do not seem likely to be settled, and the Authorities are expected to order the dissolution of the Company in a few days. It appears that this Company has branches at over 40 places in Japan, and that it has been accepting risks at much lower rates than those charged by the five leading Insurance Companies. Quite an animated scene was witnessed at the Tokyo office on the 11th inst. when a crowd of poor people thronged to the place, clamorously demanding restitution of their hard-earned savings.

It is stated that the Government contemplates further methods of encouraging deposits in the Post Office Saving Banks. Not so long ago the deposits in these banks aggregated only 60 million yen, and they now stand at 105 millions.

The Chambers of Commerce at their united meeting in Tokyo have decided that it would be premature to introduce the message-charge system in the telephonic service at present, and they have also decided that the Three Taxes ought to be abolished.

Sunday, December 13.

The Official Gazette has finally announced that 4 out of the 14 Government timber stations will be let to private individuals. This is one of the petty industries against whose official prosecution Marquis Inouye recently raised his voice with much vigour. The decision means in effect that the Government abandons the enterprise altogether, for although we have spoken above of 14 stations, work has actually been commenced at only four of them, and these four are now to be let. The four are in Aomori, Akita, Kyushu and Miyazaki, and among them that in Akita is said to be the most valuable. The term of lease is to be 5 years, and it is provided that a lessee must own property at least equal to the value of that leased; and that he must be in a position to dispose of fully one-half of the yearly output of timber or that he must have had a minimum of two years' experience in placing lumber on the market.

It is stated semi-officially that the abandonment of this enterprise by the Government will not appreciably effect the revenue of the State.

Tokyo newspapers quote Mr. Tanaka, Japanese Consul at Seattle, as saying that there is much talk of the probability of the steamer Minnesota passing into the hands of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. She has never made any profit since she began to run between Seattle and Japan. Mr. Hill recently visited Seattle, and is said to have contradicted a rumour that the ship was about to be transferred to the Atlantic. He added, however, that she might possibly change her flag, though Seattle would continue to be one of her terminal points. This is interpreted to mean her acquisition by the Japanese Company.

The Cotton Spinners Union have decided that any company which, during the four months ended on the 31st of October, exported more than 12,000 bales monthly, shall be relieved from the limit of production, and shall be allowed to spin a quantity equal to the surplus export; or, in the event of unwillingness to manufacture that amount, such company shall receive encouragement money to the extent of from 3 to 5 yen per bale of the said surplus. This applies to counts of 20 or under.

Of course a great deal of comment has been evoked by the announcement that the Directors of the Tokyo Railway Company have decided to declare a dividend at the rate of only 4 per cent. per annum, and to set aside a million yen each year against depreciation of property as well as 350,000 yen to form a sinking fund. The general opinion appears to be that the Company has acted wisely in taking this decided step, and that it would have done better had it made a clean breast of the state of its affairs at an earlier date. Of course, there is some skepticism as to the finality of these accounts, for people not unnaturally say that, if the facts have not been made known until now, it is possible that the revelation may not yet be complete. People who held this latter view are those that have long insisted on a radical change in the personnel of the directorate. But the principal shareholders all seem to be thoroughly assured and to have complete confidence in the Directors. It is significant that the shares of the Company show very little sign of depreciation in spite of this signal fall in the rate of dividend. They declined somewhat in the afternoon session on Saturday, but if they had dropped 10 or 15 points, it would not have been extravagant. From this we infer that the public anticipates a revision of the schedule of fares, and indeed it is hard to see how that can be avoided. The Hochi Shimbun thinks that, possibly, some of the banks which are now carrying shares may close down upon their debtors, and that consequently a large block of shares may be thrown upon the market, thus leading to sudden and sharp depreciation.

It is alleged that London investors have placed with Messrs. Momiji-ya, the well-known brokers, an order for 2 million yen worth of railway bonds, and that the order has been filled.

Monday, December 14.

All the Japanese newspapers of Tokyo contain an article couched in exactly the same language and therefore evidently emanating from one and the same source, though its simultaneous publication by a number of journals will of course have the effect of misleading a great many people. The main fact is doubtless correct, namely, that the four lumber stations hitherto worked by the Government have been leased to the Okura Company without being put up to public tender. It will be remembered that the lessee of this property was required to possess three qualifications: first, that he must possess an estate at least equal to the value of the leased property; secondly, that he must have fully two years' experience in the lumber business; and, thirdly, that he must be in a position to dispose of at least one third of the timber taken from the forests. Messrs. Okura and Co. is the only firm that satisfies these conditions, and therefore it was a foregone conclusion that the lease would fall to that firm. From the Government's point of view the conditions are perfectly comprehensible and legitimate, but they have afforded an opportunity to the numerous enemies of this great firm, and the news agency which has supplied the facts to the Tokyo press seizes the opportunity to declare that the whole business is a deliberate attempt to recoup the losses sustained by the firm during the past two years of commercial depression. This illustrates the disadvantage of all State incursions into the realm of trade or industry: occasion is inevitably afforded to throw doubts upon the integrity of the officials concerned. There has been a great deal of that sort of thing in Japan, and, indeed, when we look back over the history of the Meiji Era and recall the multitudinous businesses in which the Government has been engaged directly or indirectly, we can not be surprised that there should have been a great deal of criticism, especially on the part of foreign observers. Nothing succeeds, however, like success. Had the Government folded its hands and left the people to work out their own development with their own disorganised resources, there can be no doubt that a very different result would now have to be recorded.

The Jiji Shimpō and the Hochi are much pleased by the new Treaty of Commerce and Friendship with the Republic of Columbia. They note that while Columbia has three times the area of Japan, its population numbers only 4¼ millions. Certainly the agricultural potentialities are not in full proportion to the size, but they are none the less very great, and since Japanese immigrants have had the doors of North America closed in their faces, it is well that they should be able to enter the southern half of the great Continent. When the South American steamship service is organized—a consummation which seems to be regarded as certain—there can be no doubt that numerous enterprising Japanese will find their way to Brazil, Chile and Colombia.

With regard to the above South American line, it is stated that the Government will subsidize it with money obtained by cutting down the amounts now granted to the European and Seattle lines of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the San Francisco line of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha. A sum of a quarter of a million yen will thus become available, and whatever part of it is devoted to the South American service, a corresponding sum will be granted by the Government of Chile. The Toyo Kisen Kaisha's two new vessels, the Tenyo Maru and the Chiyo Maru, will soon be running on the San Francisco line, and this will enable the Company to divert the America Maru to the South American line from March next. This will be followed by the placing of the Manchu Maru and Hongkong Maru on the same route, and by the end of next year the Toyo Kisen Kaisha will have five ships plying between Chile and Japan.

There is naturally much interest felt in the affairs of the Tokyo Railway Company. There are two points which are said to present difficulty. One relates to the new shares whose holders have not yet paid up the second call. It was arranged at the time of making this call, in connexion with the proposed municipalization of the line, that the holders of the shares might choose between paying up the call or paying interest on it at the rate of 2 sen per diem, that is to say 7.3 per cent. annually. Against this interest, however, the dividend would be set, and the latter being seven per cent., the holders of the shares need not have put up more than a fractional amount. But now that the dividend is to be reduced to 4 per cent. the shareholders will be called upon to make a heavy payment. The second difficulty is that some of the shareholders are desirous of postponing the new system until June next, in consideration of the fact that a sweeping reduction of the dividend at the close of the year will be particularly inconvenient. The Directors justly point out, however, that this postponement would involve carrying on for another half year at the present rate of fares, which would be ruinous. It is not thought likely that either of these difficulties will prove insuperable. As to the possibility of obtaining official permission to raise the fare, opinions seem to be divided, some onlookers alleging that official assent can not well be refused, and others, notably the Asahi Shimbun, holding a different view. The Asahi goes so far as to say that the Directors of the Company are befuddled by political loafers who misrepresent the Government's attitude. But it is very noticeable that neither the Asahi Shimbun nor anyone of its fellow-thinkers, stoops to discuss the very obvious question whether any Government has the smallest right to condemn a body of private capitalists to perform an expensive service for the public at altogether unremunerative rates of pay.

There was another demonstration at the office of the Domestic and Foreign Fire Insurance Company on the 13th. It had been announced that the office would re-open its doors on that day, but when the unfortunate depositors repaired to the place they found a new announcement postponing the day until the 20th. Such a clamour arose that the police were obliged to interfere, and at their instance one of the officers of the Company attempted to calm the people. But this effort was unsuccessful, and finally the claimants decided to send a deputation to Tokyo, where they obtained a promise that payment would be made on the 14th inst. There does not seem to be much expectation of the fulfilment of this latter pledge.

Tuesday, December 15.

The promise made by the defaulting Insurance Company to commence payments to its depositors from the 14th inst. proved to be merely the prelude to an entreaty for further postponement, the 20th or the 25th being named as the new day. Many of the unfortunate depositors had repaired to Tokyo relying upon the former promise, but they seem to have refrained from making any disturbance. Official investigations are now proceeding, and, according to present appearances, the Company's fate is sealed.

Wednesday, December 16.

It is stated, according to figures compiled by the Yokohama Customs, that the export of silk this year has been a record so far as quantity is concerned. The number of catties sent abroad from the 1st of January to the 14th of December was 9,958,079, whereas the total export in 1907 was only 9,354,092 catties. On the other hand, owing to the comparatively low prices ruling this year, the monetary value of the export up to the 14th inst. was only 100,743,135 yen, against 116,886,852 yen for the whole of last year. It is hoped, however, that the difference of 16 millions will be made good during the remaining 17 days of the current month. The above figures bear out the statement frequently made by foreign experts in Yokohama, notably by Mr. J. Griffin, that, if Japanese sericulturists choose to be moderate in their prices, they can find an almost unlimited market for their staple abroad.

It will be remembered by our readers that, in connexion with the violent depreciation of sugars on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, reference was made to the question of customs rebates. We read that this has to do with the period of the existing law's operation. The amount of the rebate is 1.95 yen per picul, and the law ceases to be operative from the 31st of March next. A rumour got abroad that the law would be repealed in the pending session of the Diet, but this appears to be incorrect. There may be some modification, but it is confidently stated that the period will be prolonged until the new tariff comes into force.

The order for the dissolution of the Naitai Insurance Company has been finally issued. It appears that the Company's troubles began with the Hakodate fire, when it lost 150,000 yen, and was able to pay up only 120,000. Then followed the conflagrations at Utsunomiya and Yokosuka, as well as minor catastrophes in various localities, the final upshot being that the Company stands indebted to its policy holders in a total sum of half a million yen, against which the only asset is a small sum of 80 or 90 thousand yen which remains unpaid on the shares.

Thursday, December 17.

It does not seem that the unhappy people who deposited their hardly earned savings of one sen per diem with the Naitai Insurance Company are likely to obtain any redress. The Yokohama creditors sent a deputation of 12 representatives to the Tokyo office, with instructions that they should divide themselves into four parties of 3 each, and take it in turn to watch the office. No sooner did they appear upon the scene, however, than the Manager, who appears to have divined their purpose, politely requested them to wait a moment and utilised that moment to effect his escape through a trap-door in the roof. Meanwhile the Osaka representatives of the company have been arrested, and as the Authorities are now closely scrutinising the books, it may at least be hoped that the defaulters will not go wholly unpunished.

CUSTOMS PROTEST.

Mr. S. Yamazaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs, passed a decision on a protest instituted by the Yonei Shokai. The Japanese imported "accumulator," on which the appraisers imposed 20 per cent ad val. duty in accordance with No. 430 of the tariff. The importers contended that the article was part of a dynamo and should be dealt with under No. 453 of the same tariff which provided 15 per cent. duty. The Director dismissed the protest on the ground that an "accumulator" was able to be used apart from a dynamo and was regarded as a kind of electric battery.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Appeal Court of British Columbia is reported (Mainichi Dempo's telegrams) to have decided against the legality of the attempt recently made by the local authorities to restrict the employment of Japanese boatmen in the Fraser River fisheries. The local officials took the view that only naturalised Japanese could be lawfully employed in any capacity connected with the fisheries, and the Court of first instance upheld that view. The employers of labour then appealed, and the Appeal Court has decided that, while the local authorities have full competence to impose and collect taxes in connexion with the fisheries, they have no competence to dictate the method of carrying on that business. This does not terminate the question of course. The local authorities have appealed to the Supreme Court.

The following are the figures for Japan's foreign trade during the first ten days of December:—

	Yen.
Exports.....	11,821,000
Imports.....	8,924,000
Excess of Exports.....	2,897,000	Yen.

Total Reduction in Trade.....	108,395,000

The Emperor has been pleased to confer the patent of Baron on Mr. Tsuji Shinji, whose name has been associated with educational progress since the earliest days of the Meiji Era. He has received his education mostly in France, and his first position of distinction was that of instructor at the Kaisai Gakko, the parent of the present Imperial University of Tokyo. He served as Vice-Minister of Education under several distinguished men, notably Viscount Mori, and he is the founder of the Imperial Education Society, which celebrated the 25th anniversary of its existence on the 12th inst. with great éclat, in the presence of the President, Prince Arisugawa, the Prime Minister and many other distinguished personages, who attended the meeting for the sake of signifying their satisfaction at Baron Tsuji's elevation to the peerage. For the past few years the Baron has held no official position, having served merely as an Imperial nominee in the House of Peers.

The Official Gazette of the 12th inst. contained the Japanese version of the Treaty just concluded between the Empire of Japan and the Republic of Columbia. So far as concerns any trade hitherto conducted between the two countries, this treaty seems somewhat superfluous, but the forecast is that it will be found a useful instrument so soon as the expected steamship service is opened between Japan and South America.

It appears after all to be more than doubtful whether the Okura Company has any intention of renting the Government's lumber stations. Mr. Okura is quoted by the Jiji Shimpō as saying that the timber business requires most expert management. Very few people have ever succeeded in making it profitable, and under official control the outlook is anything but bright. As for renting these Government stations, Mr. Okura doubts whether he would receive them even as a free gift were the gifts saddled with an obligation to work them. His experience at the Otaru lumber station has taught him what this sort of work entails.

His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi has made an entirely new departure by inviting the principal business men and bankers of Tokyo to luncheon on the 14th inst., and questioning them about the progress of commerce and industry. This is the first example on record in Japan of an Imperial Prince paying such a compliment to men of affairs.

The people of Venezuela are naturally in a state of great excitement about the action taken by the Netherlands Government in seizing a Venezuelan coast-guard ship and sending her to Curacao. They have a great deal to say about violation of territorial integrity and about the purely defensive attitude of the Republic. But we can not easily forget that the quality of that attitude has been distinctly defiant for some months past, and that President Castro has been figuratively snapping his fingers in the face of all foreign protests. What is to be done in these circumstances? The Power which resorts to violence inevitably exposes itself to the reproach always attaching to the striker of the first blow, and the Hague statesmen must be supposed to be perfectly cognisant of that fact. On the other hand, they can not tamely submit to have their claims treated with contumely, and the interests of their nationals ignored.

San Francisco sends a wild telegram with reference to a measure said to have been arranged between Tokyo and Washington for absolutely restricting the emigration of Japanese labourers to the United States. We can not discover that there is a word of truth in the story.

Referring to the canard that the Tokyo Government had concluded with the United States an agreement for the control of Japanese emigrants to the United States, the Kokumin Shimbun denounces the story as wholly baseless, and says that there has been no development whatever of the policy of strict supervision inaugurated in Japan since last spring. The view of the Japanese Government evidently is that while not attempting to procure for its subjects a welcome in countries where there is no disposition to welcome them, it will not conclude any public engagement discriminating against Japanese nationals as compared with the subjects or citizens of other States. The Kokumin notes that in consequence of the strict scrutiny now exercised by the Government to check the emigration of labourers, there has been a very marked reduction in their number during the current year. Thus whereas the emigrants to the United States totalled 259 last April, there were only 75 in October and 52 in November. With regard to Hawaii, again, the figure for January last was 699, that for October 125 and that for November 95.

THE T.R.K. S.S. "CHIYO MARU."

The Toyo Kisen Kaisha's new turbine liner Chiyo Maru, sister ship to the Tenyo Maru, was thrown open on Saturday to invited guests and representatives of the Press. The big vessel, drawing 25 1/2 feet of water forward and 28 aft, lay alongside the Custom's Pier, and, despite the indifferent weather—the first day of rain for seven weeks past—a number of people availed themselves of the Company's hospitality.

The Chiyo ("Earth and Sea") compares favourably in general appearance with her sister the Tenyo ("Heaven and Sea"), and, indeed, owing to the disposition and apparently reduced height of her funnels, seems even more graceful in her proportions than her already famous twin. On board, the comfort and tasteful decoration of her state-rooms and saloons delight mind and eye alike. The panelling of the Dining and Social Saloons, the Ladies' Lounge and the suites of rooms is in light-hued American maple, and this, with the varied colours of the upholstery, gives a pleasing effect. A very spacious and comfortable smoking room abait on the Promenade Deck, a gymnasium, a children's play room, a hospital, a dark room for amateur photographers, these are but a few of her many attractive features, and there is even, for the refractory, a gaol. Her bridge stands at a height of 52 feet above the water, and beneath it successively run six decks for passenger accommodation. Ample room is thus provided, as indeed is needed, for, when carrying her full complement, the Chiyo Maru is the floating home of 258 first class, 50 second-class and 1000 third-class passengers.

Undoubtedly, however, the greatest recommendation possessed by the new liner—and one which contributes in no small degree to the comfort of her passengers—lies below deck in the engine-room. For here are stored, in three great cylindrical cases, the turbines which, with an almost entire lack of vibration and throbbing, drive the vessel faster than could any engines of the old reciprocating type, and all but silently. Here are generated the 25,000 horse-power which can impel the Chiyo's 21,000 tons of dead weight at a speed of 21 knots. Three shafts pass from the engine room astern, one each from the low-pressure turbines and the third, between them, from the high-pressure. The steering gear is of the last design (similar indeed to that of the two great and latest Cunarders, the Lusitania and Mauritania) and enables the vessel, when steaming at full speed, to turn a complete circle in little over five minutes.

The extreme length of the Chiyo Maru is 575 feet—17 feet shorter than the Campania—her breadth, 63 feet and her depth from shelter deck to keel 46ft. 6in. The vessel leaves, under the command of Captain W. W. Greene (late of the Nippon Maru) on her maiden trip for Hongkong on the 15th instant.

"DOROTHY."

THIRD PERFORMANCE.

The third performance of "Dorothy" was given on Thursday evening to a house which, if not crowded, was very fairly well filled. The audience was as appreciative as any which has yet assembled to witness this ambitious production of the A.D.C., and the performance went with as much "swing" and life as the most critical observer could wish. The slight traces of nervousness which the first night showed had vanished, while in the quartettes and choruses, tenors and altos rose to the occasion and removed the weakness previously noticeable in their respective parts. Specially well rendered in this respect were the tuneless trio "Be wise in time, O Phyllis mine," the quartette "You swear to be good and true," and the chorus at the finale. At the conclusion of the performance many of the ladies were the recipients of charming floral tributes, and in response to an insistent call the Stage Manager, Mr. W. H. Lewis, came to the front and made a neat little speech of thanks in acknowledgment of the evident good wishes of the audience.

On Saturday afternoon a matinee performance of "Dorothy" was given at the Gaiety, many young people being present. The piece went splendidly and the players were rewarded with frequent applause flags. At the close Miss Gräff ("Lydia") was the recipient of a handsome basket of flowers decorated with the American flag. During the evening a flashlight photograph of the audience was taken by Mr. Karl Lewis.

"Dorothy's" last performance in Yokohama on Monday was quite on a par with the previous efforts of the actors, and was highly appreciated. The house was not large but was none the less enthusiastic.

THE CURRENCY IN CHINA.

NEWS received from China indicates that there is really a practical determination to carry into effect the recently announced scheme for the standardization and unification of the currency. China has lived for centuries in a kind of cloud-land so far as her coins are concerned. It may reasonably be doubted whether any other country, in ancient or modern times, has been content to transact all the business of accounts with an imaginary coin. For the "tael" is a kind of Mrs. Harris. Everybody speaks of it glibly, but no one has ever seen it, the very sufficient reason being that it never had any actual existence. It is simply an appellation for an ounce of silver, so called from the Hindu word "tola" through the Malayan "tahil." Divided into equally imaginary decimal parts, namely, ten mace to the tael, ten candarins to the mace and ten li to the candarin, it has always served as the money of accounts, though for purposes of actual buying and selling the token employed has for centuries been the "cash," which is said to have been coined for the first time in 136 B.C. as a substitute for the pearl-oyster shells employed as currency up to that period. Primarily the idea was that a thousand cash should be the equivalent of one tael, and thus the cash—which was about the size, but only about one-third the thickness, of an English halfpenny—became the tangible incarnation of the intangible "li." But when the Mexican dollar entered the field to serve as the unit of currency in the country's foreign trade, the silver value of the cash began to vary, and it ceased to be such a faithful monetary servant as it had always hitherto been. Although, however, the tael had no real existence as such, and although millions of the Chinese people had never seen a silver token until the Mexican dollar arrived, there was actually in occasional use for large transactions a silver ingot to which foreigners gave the name "shoe," because of its resemblance to the foot-gear of a Chinaman. This shoe varied in weight from one ounce or even less to 50 or 100 ounces, and it bore an assayer's and a banker's stamps in token of purity. To augment the confusion there were three kinds of tael, the standard, the Ku-ping and the Shanghai; 102 of the last being equal to 98 of the second and to 100 of the first. Finally there was lump silver called "sycee," a term meaning "fine silk," the origin of which curious name is uncertain, some attributing it to the possibility of drawing pure silver into threads, and others to the film of silk-like lines which cover the surface of molten silver when solidifying. This sycee was used mainly as subsidiary coin. It has been called wonderful that a highly civilized and essentially commerce-loving nation could go on so long employing such a system, but, after all, the copper cash may be said to have been the only token of exchange for nearly 20 centuries.

The fundamental feature of the system to be now introduced is that the hitherto imaginary Ku-ping tael is to take form and substance, and be really a silver token weighing one ounce and having a pureness of 980. There will also be a five-mace silver coin representing half a tael, of the same fineness; and there will be subsidiary silver coins of 880 purity and having the denominations of one mace and of five candarins (ten-sen and five-sen pieces). The Decree instituting this system speaks of it as preliminary to adopting the gold monometallism:—

A standard currency is the fundamental principle of public finance, and various countries have adopted a gold coin as their unit of value, with a subsidiary currency of silver and copper tokens. Under well-framed regulations such currencies have been found convenient and profitable. But it requires years of preparation to be ready for such a measure, which can by no means be attained at one step. The finances of China are in confusion and the standardising of the currency is an urgent necessity. If actual gold coins were to be taken as the standard unit, it would be difficult to raise the necessary amount; while if gold were merely taken nominally as the standard unit, grave dangers would be incurred. It is evident therefore that we should first standardise and render uniform the silver currency, and then carefully proceed to take measures for a further advance; with a view to assuring the adoption of a gold standard in the future.

The day when this great reform is consummated will inaugurate a new era in the trade of the Far East. There was no lack of deliberation on China's part. TANG SHAO I, CHANG CHIH-TUNG, LU CHU'AN LIN and YUAN SHIH-KAI had all addressed the Throne on the subject of a sound currency, and the matter had received the fullest attention at the hands of the Government Council on whose Memorial the EMPEROR finally acted. Some passages of the Memorial are worth quoting:—

Tang Tach'en in his Memorial also favoured the tael currency; and from the point of view of national dignity it seems to us that we ought to try and stand alone, and that we cannot afford to throw away our sovereign rights in order to gratify the wishes of others; while from the point of view of the people we should follow a course suitable to the greater number, and not change a tradition of the country for the convenience of open ports or trading ports. This is as much a fundamental principle for our guidance in making the enactment to-day, as it will be an essential factor for the future success of the measure itself and as we have dealt with this point in previous Memorials there is no need to elaborate it further. We now propose merely to present a few of the principal arguments on both sides in the problem of adopting a dollar or a tael currency.

From the point of view of public convenience it has been said that as a large supply of dollars already exists, it would be simpler to extend their use than to adopt a tael currency. But it must be borne in mind that in every place where dollars are used it is always in combination with sycee: while in all the places where sycee is used it by no means follows that dollars are also current.

Chinese dollars were originally coined in order to oppose the invasion of the Mexican dollar, and it seems to us that if a national currency is specially established, everyone will have perfect confidence therein.

As regards the objection that the higher denomination will tend to raise the cost of living, while a small denomination will tend to economy in prices, it must not be forgotten that besides the unit of value there must be fractional currency, and that a 5-mace piece will prove more convenient than one of 7 mace. Moreover the bulk of the people in their daily life mostly rely upon the copper currency, and if this has an unimpeded circulation there is no reason why habits of extravagance should be engendered.

It has been argued also that the value of a dollar approximates to that of 1000 cash, and that with the principal and fractional coin so conveniently related calculations are simplified. But as long as the legal ratios of the currency are not fixed the market rates must constantly vary, and as nearly all the public and private transactions involve exchange between silver and cash the substitution of dollar values in place of the tael would only result in producing a complication.

One can sympathise with the sentimental desire of Chinese statesmen that their country should have a coin of its very own, as nearly all other countries have, though no doubt an essential preliminary to the federation of the world would be the universal adoption of a uniform currency. Speaking of uniformity, however, one is disposed to speculate on the provenance of the weight of silver contained in the Ku-ping tael. The Chinese, of course, have no such weight as an ounce to-day, any more than they had when they adopted the tael, and as for the "dollar," it is simply the German thaler, said to have been derived in the 15th century from the name of the place, JOACHIMO-THAL, when the Counts of SCHLICK coined into one-ounce pieces the silver extracted from their mines. Surely it is a strange coincidence that the Occident and the Orient should have chosen the same weight for their unit of silver currency at a time when the intercourse between them was exceedingly limited.

THE DESTINIES OF NATIONS.

DR. T. P. MACDONALD, an Australian physician many years of whose active life have been spent in the hottest parts of Queensland, recently delivered, at the London School of Tropical Medicine, a lecture some parts of which are quoted by the Hongkong Daily Press. The Doctor's main thesis is an emphatic denial of the theory hitherto held by many scientific men that the pigment which imparts degrees of dark colour to the skins of nations living in tropical climates is a heaven-sent protection against the actinic rays of the sun, and does not in any sense indicate either physical or moral inferiority. Doctor MACDONALD thinks, on the contrary, that the colour of the skin is a true measure of the distance separating any race of men from their simian progenitors. In other words, he holds that the darker a man's skin, the closer is his kinship with the apes. Some of the arguments advanced in support of this novel theory do not entirely carry conviction. Thus, with regard to Japan, the learned Doctor denies that the comparative darkness of Japanese complexion can be properly ascribed to climatic influences, for Japan does not extend into the tropics, and has an average temperature the same as that of England. But, as our Hongkong contemporary justly remarks, no Englishman who has lived in Japan would think of bracketting its summers with those of England. Any European who attempted to take liberties with the Japanese Doyō as he does with the English Dog-days would soon find himself in hospital. It is further alleged that, though China has a higher average temperature than Japan, the Chinese are "several degrees lighter in colour than the Japanese." Has China a higher average temperature than Japan, and how have these averages been calculated? In Peking the hottest month in the year has a mean temperature of  $26^{\circ}6'$  C., and the coldest month a mean temperature of  $5^{\circ}56'$  below zero, while the corresponding figures for Tokyo are  $26^{\circ}2'$  and  $2^{\circ}24'$  above zero, respectively. Then again, even granting, though the point is open to doubt, that the Chinese are "several degrees" whiter than the Japanese, how, if climatic influence be excluded, can we account for the fact that the inhabitants of southern China are darker than those of northern China? Have we not the indisputable evidence of tens of centuries' observation that exposure to the sun changes the colour of the skin, and why should we reject this palpable proof in favour of a fanciful connexion with anthropoid ancestors? Dr. MACDONALD certainly puts his case very strongly when he says:—"If skin pigmentation or colour is an adaptation to sunlight, we may well ask why are the Eskimos, inhabitants of the Arctic regions, brown in colour, or the Finlanders dusky, the Indians of the American and Canadian prairies red, the Maories of New Zealand black, and the Eugeans from the ice-bound straits of Magellan, black, or why are some of the races of India, the so-called Dravidians, much darker in colour than many other races of India who have equally been exposed for countless generations to the same hot sun?"

The answer seems to be that, until we know the origins of all these races and can trace their exact parentage, we are hardly justified in formulating any conclusions as to the climatic influences to which their progenitors were exposed. Dr. MACDONALD's assertion that "pigment is dissolved by time out of the human skin and that climate plays no part in the operation" rests, we think, on conjecture. There is not so much as one authenticated instance of time performing such an operation. It may be so, and Dr. MACDONALD may be perfectly right in his hypotheses, but let us not forget that they are hypotheses, and let us not further neglect to note that they involve the conception of an inverse process of evolution among the apes themselves. The practical application of the Doctor's theory to modern conditions is that no valid reason exists against the colonization of tropical countries by white men. In short, he advocates a white Australia, especially in relation to a conviction which, he says, exists among some people in Japan that "the Japanese race is ultimately destined to colonize and control a large part of Northern Australia;" and in relation to "an uneasy feeling" which exists in Europe that Australia is not adapted by Nature for the production or continuance of a vigorous white race. If any such conviction exists in Japan, it has hitherto been most successfully hidden from all dwellers in this country, and if the "ultimate colonization and control" is to take place, events appear to be moving in quite the opposite direction at present. The tide of Japanese emigration is setting northward, not southward. England may be said to have enjoyed a monopoly of the colonizing business for several centuries, and the apprehensions excited by Japan's emergence upon the stage seem rather a "fine fear."

THE INTERVIEW AGAIN.

AMONG the correspondence prompted by the celebrated Interview there were two letters to The Times which are specially worthy of consideration. The first is from Mr. A. MOSELY. It runs thus, in part:—

The remarks, however, that strike me as being of most vital consequence are these:—"Germany would always keep aloof from politics that could bring her into complications with a sea Power like England." Surely this important sentence should be taken to heart by the nation at large, for what does it imply? That, England being the greatest sea Power in the world, Germany was not inclined to take any steps that might necessitate her being brought into conflict with us at sea. In other words, Germany's navy was not strong enough. Now, seeing the enormous efforts she is at present making to vastly strengthen that navy, I trust our statesmen and the public in general will bear well in mind the words I have referred to. What would have been Germany's answer and attitude had she felt herself strong enough at sea? I think it is contained in the Kaiser's own words.

Now let us turn for a moment to the position to-day in the Near East, where we see Germany standing by her ally, who has practically torn up the Treaty of Berlin and has annexed Herzegovina, thus giving to Austria an extended seaboard. This will enable her likewise to become a sea Power, and we shall probably find in the near future Austria creating as powerful a navy as Germany can persuade her to develop, and in a few years' time Germany and Austria combined becoming a formidable foe. We, of course, have no right to criticize other countries for increasing their navies; but it is well for the public to be alive to the situation, and to the responsibility resting upon our statesmen at the present juncture to bear this probability in mind, and on no account to allow our first line of defence to become relatively weakened.

I myself do not pretend to know anything of naval matters, but I read with alarm the references so often made by experts to the present condition of our navy and its proportionate position in the near future. England, it is true, desires the friendship of Germany, as she does that of all other nations; but do not let us lull ourselves into a false sense of security by professed friendship or even by alliances. The real strength of England is her self-reliance and the knowledge that she can defend herself against all comers who may attack what we honestly believe to be our just rights.

Mr. MOSELY's views are precisely those frequently expressed in our own columns. We do not criticise Germany for equipping herself with a powerful fleet. That is her own business, and it would be a piece of pure impertinence on the part of any foreigner to question her right to manage her own affairs as seems best in her eyes. There are, it is true, some publicists in Yokohama whose disposition is to sneer at Englishmen whenever the latter refer to Germany's Navy in a spirit of uneasiness. These critics profess to think that such references are intended to cast doubts upon the propriety of Germany's doings, and they indulge in a measure of glib sarcasm at the expense of folks who, living themselves in glass houses, throw stones at Germany. "Why," they ask with a fine display of ingenuousness, "why should not Germany have a big navy? What conceivable title does England possess to dictate to others about such matters when she herself has the biggest navy in the world?" Of course Germany is competent to build as many Dreadnoughts as she pleases, and of course Englishmen have no title to condemn her for indulging that ambition. Neither do they condemn her. It is mere persiflage to misconstrue them as doing so. What they say is precisely what Mr. MOSELY says, namely, that they are warranted in inquiring with the utmost earnestness the purpose to which the German Navy may be applied, and in considering with all the intelligence and foresight they possess how the existence of such a powerful new agency will affect the political situation. Mr. MOSELY's interpretation of the Kaiser's words may be somewhat too literal. We think it is. We think that his Majesty did not intend to suggest that England's big navy is the only thing which deters an attack from Germany. But subtleties of interpretation are out of place in such a context. The broad fact, standing out in sharp, clear outlines, is that it is very much England's business to reckon up the forces which she may one day find ranged in the lists against her, and to prepare herself for obvious contingencies. The process naturally involves a good deal of speculation as to what Germany has in view when she equips herself with such immense sea-strength, for, if any thoroughly intelligible object could be discovered apart from a desire to rival Great Britain, the situation would be correspondingly easier. As for the Far-Eastern figment, Punch puts the matter in a nutshell when he says:—"It is satisfactory to know that work on our new naval base at Rosyth is to be pushed forward at once. It will prove a handy spot from which to fit out expeditions for the Far East, as the Kaiser would say."

The second letter referred to above is from Mr. HAROLD SPENDER. It contains these passages:—

The fury caused in Germany by the Emperor's interview is not altogether surprising, especially if the Emperor's own estimate of German feeling towards England be correct.

The Emperor of Germany has deliberately brought that fury on himself by an effort, ill-starred if you like, but clearly well-meant, to prove by definite evidence of deeds his friendliness towards England. The anger of his own people is a sorry symptom of the times, but can we doubt that it was foreseen by the Emperor?

What was probably not foreseen by him, and is certainly a most surprising and extraordinary fact, is that England should contemplate that fury with satisfaction, and should even applaud the denunciations of one whose worst fault it is that he has dared to proclaim himself before the world the friend of England.

The effect must inevitably be to drive the Emperor back into the arms of the war party in Germany, and to cure him finally of his desire to be guided in policy by his personal feelings towards England and Englishmen.

Is there no leading Englishman large enough in brain and heart to respond to the Emperor's overtures? Or is it the design of Englishmen to prove to the Emperor that they are really "mad"?

The Times alludes to the above editorially as follows:—

Mr. HAROLD SPENDER, in the letter he writes us to-day, appeals to some great Englishman to recognize the magnanimity with which the Emperor has faced the wrath of his own subjects, out of his deep affection for England. Perhaps the Emperor did not quite foresee the effects of his action, either upon his own subjects or upon others. At all events, we doubt whether the great Englishman will be forthcoming just at present. What the vast majority of Englishmen will have stamped upon their minds is the Emperor's admission that the majority of the German nation are unfriendly to us, and his contention that this hostile nation mean to go on indefinitely enlarging their navy. That part of the conversation will not, we trust, escape the earnest attention of the British Government. An immediate announcement in Parliament that they intend to proceed next year with the number of Drendnoughts and Invincibles necessary to keep our fleets well up to the two-Power standard would be very acceptable to the country, after the plain warning it has received on such unimpeachable authority.

Here in far-away Yokohama it was very resolutely insisted that the KAISER'S utterances were inspired by friendly feeling towards England, and it was also confidently predicted that Englishmen would one day recognise the fact. We still believe that they will. In the meanwhile, however, it may well be asked whether the excitement caused in Germany by the KAISER'S unguarded utterances can fairly be construed as a protest against the pro-English tone of those utterances. Has the subsequent course of events borne out such a hypothesis? Assuredly it has not.

LIST OF IMPERIAL POST OFFICES IN CHINA.

We have received from Mr. J. C. Ferguson No. 8 of the seventh volume of the Reports compiled by the staff of the Imperial Maritime Customs of China. It is a list of the Imperial Post Offices throughout China in the year 1906. The Romanized names of the officers are arranged in alphabetical order, according to a system of transliteration elaborated by a joint Commission of the Imperial Posts and the Imperial Telegraphs, which Commission was formed at Shanghai for the purpose. As convenience for purposes of telegraphing was essential, all hyphens, aspirates and diacritic marks had to be avoided, but for the rest forms sanctioned by usage were followed as far as possible. In the resulting list, the old names—that is to say, the names before they underwent this sublimating process—are given in a column opposite the new; then follow the corresponding ideographs; then the province and then the district in which the office is situated. The list covers 88 pages and each page contains about 24 names, so that there are, roughly speaking, something like 2,100 post offices throughout China. That fact alone is sufficient to indicate what was involved in organizing the system. If now we turn to the result already obtained, we find them set forth with much clearness in a "Report of the Working of the Imperial Post Office," during the year 1907, which Report has just been published by Mr. A. E. Hippisley, who is acting as Postal Secretary. We select from the document certain specially interesting passages:—

The number of parcels received and despatched shows a remarkable increase, having advanced from 1,063,724 in 1906 to 1,424,738; while the weight increased from 3,562,000 to 4,417,000 kilos. Among the receiving Offices Shanghai heads the list, with 84,000; while Tientsin received 79,000; Peking, 66,000, Kai-feng, 48,000; and Chinkiang, 45,000. Among the despatching Offices Shanghai again heads the list, with 150,000; Canton comes next (longo intervallo), with 48,000; then Tientsin, with 47,000; and Peking, with 42,000. The average weight is slightly below that in 1906, but still is somewhat over 3 kilos. The parcels despatched taxed with trade charges (included in the above) increased in number from under 4,000 to 3,700, and the charges to be collected, from $21,000 to $34,000. Insured parcels despatched aggregated over 21,000, of a value of $1,458,000 against nearly 19,000, of a value of $909,000, in 1906. It is, however, to be remarked that insurance of all domestic parcels of a value of $30 or upwards was made compulsory in November last. As will be seen from the above figures, the value of parcels sent by post has been rapidly increasing, the average value being over $70 during the year, as compared with less than $40 in 1906; and at times the parcels reaching Peking in a single day represent a money value of $50,000 or $60,000. The risk of loss and damage in the course of a long overland journey is great, and when such did occur, it was found that the Chinese, who are accustomed to register their parcels, with acknowledgment of receipt, regarded registration as insurance and insisted upon compensation in full. To explain the difference between registration and insurance, and to appeal to the published rule—that the Post Office is not responsible for uninsured parcels, but in case of loss would, as an act of grace, grant an indemnity of $5,—was useless; the senders insisted that a parcel entrusted to the Post Office must be delivered, or if it were not, the sender must be indemnified in full, and in this contention they were upheld by their national authorities. Under these circumstances compulsory insurance becomes a necessity. It was anticipated that the introduction of this measure would result in a considerable diminution of the number of parcels. But this has not occurred; the fact being that the Chinese held the belief that the parcel tariff was too low to ensure security, and therefore regard the enhanced cost of transmission caused by insurance fees as a nothing more than a reasonable charge for work done.

The money order system shows an astonishing development during the last three years. Representing $473,000 in 1901, the value of money orders issued had by 1904 only risen to $752,000; in 1905, however, it leapt to $123,000, the following year to $2,336,000, and during the current year has advanced another million to $3,341,000.

* * *

In certain respects postal experience in India and in China presents curious contrasts. The use of honorific titles and of hyperbole, or the greetings and good wishes with which it seemed appropriate to the Indian mind to load the outside of letters, increased the work of the post office sorter to such an extent that it became necessary to teach the proper way of addressing letters in the primary schools. In China no such difficulties have had to be met, the practical and business like turn of Chinese mind supplying exactly the indications required, and no more. In India, probably because it used to be customary to epitomise the contents of a letter on the outside, postcards have proved an immense success; in China, where secretiveness is the rule even in ordinary and unimportant matters, there is a national repugnance to adopting a form of correspondence which is open to the eyes of everyone through whose hands it passes. On the other hand, lessons may be learnt from experience in India. Envelopes bearing an embossed stamp have proved there an unqualified success; and the introduction of such an envelope in China would probably meet with equal favour, for experience has shown that in some localities, especially throughout the province of Szechuan, there is a strong repugnance to the use of the gummed stamp.

It has recently been stated by a French authority that in the United Kingdom each person writes 78 letters in the year, in the United States 67, in Germany 55, in Denmark 41, in Austria 38, in Holland 31, in Belgium 29, in France and in Sweden 26, and in Norway 20. The sedentary habits of the Chinese will for a long while yet militate against correspondence being conducted in this country on a scale in any way comparable with the figures just given. The number and density of the population in any given district should, however, afford some criterion of the volume of correspondence which, it may be anticipated, is likely to emanate from that district: for population is apt to be densest in those which are the most productive, where commerce is carried on with the greatest ease, and means of transport are most convenient. It is also in the most densely populous sections that, as a rule, the necessity of striking out to gain a livelihood elsewhere is most apt to make itself felt. And all these factors tend to develop correspondence. Appendix N, therefore, showing the density of population in each province and the number of letters now sent by every thousand of the inhabitants, is not without interest. In no province of China does each inhabitant send one letter in a year—at least, not through the Government Post Office. Kiangsu heads the list, with 807 letters to each thousand of the inhabitants; Chihli comes next, with 445; even the highly educated natives of Kwangtung and of Chekiang send only 172 and 156 respectively; while the largest, richest, and most populous province—Szechwan,—with 13 only, is not far ahead of the present and most sparsely populated—Kwangsi,—with but 3, the lowest of all.

TREATY OF AMITY, COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION BETWEEN THE EMPIRE OF JAPAN AND THE COLOMBIAN REPUBLIC.

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and His Excellency the President of the Colombian Republic, being equally animated by the desire to establish upon a firm and lasting foundation relations of friendship and commerce between their respective States and subjects and citizens, have resolved to conclude a Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation, and have for that purpose named their respective Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, Baron Takahira Kogoro, Shosami, 1st Class Order of the Rising Sun, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary near the Government of the United States of America; and

His Excellency the President of the Colombian Republic, Senor Don Enrique Cortes, Envoys Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Colombian Republic near the Government of the United States of America; who having communicated to each other their respective Full Powers, and found them in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

Article I.—There shall be firm and perpetual peace and amity between the Empire of Japan and the Colombian Republic, and their respective subjects and citizens.

Article II.—His Majesty the Emperor of Japan may, if he think proper, accredit a Diplomatic Agent to the Government of the Colombian Republic; and, in like manner, His Excellency the President of the Colombian Republic may, if he see fit, accredit a Diplomatic Agent to the Court of Tokyo; and each of the High Contracting Parties shall have the right to appoint Consul-General, Consuls, Vice-Consuls and Consular Agents, for the convenience of trade, to reside in all the ports and places within the territories of the other Contracting Party where similar Consular officers of other nations are permitted to reside; but before any Consul General, Consul, Vice-Consul or Consular Agent shall act as such he shall, in the usual form, be approved and admitted by the Government to which he is sent.

The Diplomatic and Consular officers of each of the two High Contracting Parties shall, subject to the rule of reciprocity, enjoy in the territories of the other whatever rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities, are or shall be granted there to officers of corresponding rank of any European country or of the United States of America.

Article III.—There shall be between the Territories and Possessions of the two High Contracting Parties reciprocal freedom of commerce and navigation. The subjects and citizens, respectively, of each of the High Contracting Parties shall have the right to come freely and securely with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports, rivers and straits in the Territories and Possessions of the other, where subjects or citizens of other nations are permitted so to come; they may remain and reside at all the places or ports where subjects or citizens of other nations are permitted to remain and reside, and they may there hire and occupy houses and warehouses, and may there trade by wholesale or retail in all kinds of products, manufactures and merchandise of lawful commerce.

Article IV.—The two High Contracting Parties hereby agree that any favour, privilege or immunity whatever in matters relating to commerce, navigation, trade, occupation, travel through or residence in their Territories or Possessions which either Contracting Party has actually granted, or may hereafter grant to the subjects or citizens of any European country or of the United States of America, exclusive of colonial subjects or citizens, shall be extended to the subjects or citizens of the other Contracting Party, gratuitously, if the concession in favour of that European country or the United States of America shall have been gratuitous and on the same or equivalent condition, if the concession shall have been conditional.

Article V.—No other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into Japan of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the Colombian Republic, and no other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into the Colombian Republic of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of Japan, whether such importation be for the purpose of consumption, warehousing, re-exportation or transit, than are or shall be payable on the importation for the same purpose of the like article being the growth, produce or manufacture of any European country or of the United States of America.

Nor shall any other or higher duties or charges be imposed in the Territories or Possessions of either of the two High Contracting Parties on the exportation of any article to the Territories or Possessions of the other than such as are or may be payable on the exportation of the like article to any European country or the United States of America. No prohibition shall be imposed on the importation or transit of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the Territories of either of the High Contracting Parties into or through Territories or Possessions of the other, which shall not equally extend to the like article being the growth, produce or manufacture of any European country or of the United States of America. Nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the exportation of any article from the Territories or Possessions of either of the High Contracting Parties to the Territories or Possessions of the other, which shall not equally extend to the exportation of the like article to the territories of all European countries and the United States of America.

Article VI.—In all that relates to transit, warehousing, bounties, facilities, drawbacks, re-exports and transit duties, the subjects, citizens, merchandise and shipping of each of the High Contracting Parties, shall, in the Territories and Possessions of the other, be placed in all respects upon the same footing as the subjects, citizens, merchandise and shipping of European countries and the United States of America.

Article VII.—No other or higher duties or account of tonnage, light or harbour dues, pilotage, quarantine, salvage in case of damage, or any other similar or corresponding duties or charges of whatever denomination levied in the name or for the profit of Government, public functionaries, private individuals, corporations or establishments, shall be imposed in any of the ports, rivers or straits of the Colombian Republic on vessels of Japan, than are or may hereafter be payable in like cases in the same ports, rivers and straits on vessels of European countries or the United States of America.

Article VIII.—The coasting trade of both the High Contracting Parties is excepted from the provisions of the present Treaty, and shall be regulated according to the laws of Japan and the Colombian Republic respectively.

Article IX.—All vessels which, according to Japanese laws and ordinances, are to be deemed Japanese vessels, and all vessels which, according to Colombian laws and regulations, are to be deemed Colombian vessels, shall, for the purposes of this Treaty, be deemed Japanese and Colombian vessels, respectively.

Article X.—The subjects and citizens of each of the High Contracting Parties shall, in the Territories and Possessions of the other, reciprocally receive and enjoy the same full and perfect protection for their persons and property that is granted to native subjects or citizens, and they shall have free and open access to the Courts of Courts of Justice in said countries, respectively, for the prosecution and defense of their just rights; and they shall, equally with native subjects or citizens, be at liberty to employ advocates attorneys or agents to represent them before such Courts of Justice.

They shall also enjoy entire liberty of conscience, and subject to the laws for the time being in force, shall enjoy the right of private or public exercise of their worship, and also the right of burying their respective countrymen according to their religious customs in such suitable and convenient places as may be established and maintained for the purpose subject to the regulations in force.

Article XI.—In regard to billeting; forced or compulsory military service, whether by land or sea; contributions of war; military exactions or forced loans, the subjects and citizens of each of the two High Contracting Parties, shall, in the Territories and Possessions of the other, enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions as may now or may hereafter be granted to the subjects or citizens of European countries or of the United States of America.

Article XII.—The present Treaty shall go into operation immediately after the exchange of ratifications, and shall continue in force until the expiration of six (6) months after either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, and no longer.

Article XIII.—The present Treaty shall be signed in duplicate in the Japanese, Spanish and English languages, and in case there should be found any discrepancy between the Japanese and Spanish texts, it will be decided in conformity with the English text, which is binding upon both Governments.

Article XIV.—The present Treaty shall be ratified by the two High Contracting Parties and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Treaty and hereunto affixed their respective seals.

Done in sextuplicate at Washington, this twenty-fifth day of the fifth month of the forty-first year of Meiji, corresponding to the twenty-fifth day of May of the year one thousand nine hundred and eight.

YOKOHAMA.

A woman living in Hagoromo-cho has been arrested on a charge of incendiarism. It appears that on Dec. 7th she attempted to set fire to her house, which she held on lease. She had previously insured her movable property with an insurance company for yen 300.

On the morning of Dec. 11th a man was found to have hung himself in the Public Garden. He was not identified. The corpse was handed over to the City Office.

According to a report received at the Yokohama Chief Police Office, a sailing vessel ran down a fishing boat off Uraga on Dec. 8th. The boat was smashed. The fishermen, 3 in all, were rescued by the steamer Santo Maru from Tokyo.

The Yokohama Stock and Rice Exchange will hold a general meeting on Dec. 23rd. The net income of the second half of this year was yen 18,286.50. An interim dividend will be declared at the rate of 8 per cent per annum.

On Dec. 11th a sailing vessel was discovered drifting along the coast of Nishimura, near Yokohama. Nothing was found on board excepting an empty kerosene oil tin and a quantity of charcoal.

Baron Goto, Minister for Communications, visited the Chiyo Maru, now at the pier, on the afternoon of Dec. 13th. He arrived in Yokohama by the 12.06 p. m. train.

S. Matsuwa, a small merchant living in South Yoshida-machi, committed suicide on Dec. 12th by hanging. A heavy debt is reported to have been the cause.

There is a further report with reference to the Yokohama branch of the Nai-gai Fire Insurance Co. which recently closed its doors. On Dec. 13th about 1,000 policy holders assembled in front of the branch office and were becoming disorderly when the police and gendarmes dispersed the crowd. The policy holders finally elected seven representatives with a view to conducting negotiations with the head office in Tokyo.

Mr. S. Nakanuma, who recently resigned his post in the Yokohama City Office as second alderman in consequence of the fact that he was elected a representative for Shimane prefecture, has joined the Seiyu-kai.

Judge T. Miyake, chief of the first civil section in the Yokohama District Court, has been transferred to the Tokyo District Court.

The new Japanese Ambassador to the British Court and Mrs. Kato will leave Yokohama on the evening of Dec. 17th by the Hirano Maru for London.

A special committee of the Yokohama City Assembly will shortly meet at the Social Club to consider the petition of the Yokohama Electric Railway Co. for permission to reclaim a part of the Yoshida creek. It is said that the committee will consent to the request.

The health returns of Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended Dec. 13th are as follows:—

	Cholera.	Dysentery.	Typhus.	Diphtheria.	Scarlet fever.

The Tobe police have arrested two Buddhist priests, one at a hotel in Honcho and another at Fujisawa, on a charge of having infringed the Patent Medicine Regulations.

In connexion with the recent Paris report that a proposal to increase the duty on unbleached habutae imported from Japan had been introduced in the Chamber of Deputies, the Yokohama Silk guild has presented a memorial to the Foreign Office and to the Department of Agriculture and Commerce asking them to convey to the French Government the views of Japanese traders as to the silk business. The other silk unions in the provinces intend to present similar petitions to the Central Government. It is said in Yokohama that the bill in the French Chamber of Deputies will not be carried on the ground that the imposition of a heavy duty on unbleached habutae will be injurious to the French silk industry.

K. Ono and 190 men representing citizens living in West Hiranuma-cho and adjacent streets presented a complaint on Dec. 15th to the Prefectural Government Office with regard to the Gas Works improvements which are going on. They assert that the dense smoke from the works is injurious to public health.

On the evening of Dec. 15th a man broke into the house of a Japanese woman (the employee of an American gentleman) living in Kitagata, and demanded money from her. A policeman appeared on the scene, having been summoned by a female servant, but the intruder escaped.

A saké dealer of Aoki machi, Kanagawa, attempted to commit suicide on Dec. 16th by drinking poison. Debt is said to have been the cause.

A report has been received by the Yokohama Chief Police Office to the effect that a young woman who was living in the house of an employee of a foreign firm at No. 24, Yamashita-cho, was found on Dec. 16th dead in the sea near Odawara. She had been sick for some days past and on Dec. 14th she left the house without giving notice to the family. She is believed to have committed suicide by throwing herself into the sea.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE
CURRENT LITERATURE.

More than twenty years ago a few Japanese linguists affirmed that they had serious doubts as to the correctness of the assertion that Japanese belongs to the Turanian family of languages. They were inclined to think that the subject of the origin of Japanese had not been sufficiently studied by competent philologists. In October, 1904, there began to appear in the Shin Karon a series of articles which maintained that there are a good many reasons for thinking that Japanese is an Aryan tongue. Lists of words, consisting of some 400 examples, were given and grammatical similarities between Japanese and Aryan languages were dwelt on. The writer of those articles was Mr. Hirai Kinzō, who has for many years past been investigating this interesting question. After going on for nearly a year, to the regret of some readers of the magazine, the articles ceased to appear. This was unavoidable, Mr. Hirai now tells us in the pages of the Michi, Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki's new literary and religious organ. But the subject is to be thoroughly thrashed out in successive numbers of the Michi. An Appendix to the Magazine is being devoted to the publication of long lists of Aryan and Japanese words which in pronunciation and meaning resemble each other so closely that it is reasonable to infer that they had a common origin. As we understand Mr. Hirai, this is all he claims to prove. As Mr. Aston conjectured in 1874, when he read a paper before the Asiatic Society on this subject, Japanese and Aryan may be both traceable to a very ancient linguistic ancestor. If this be the case, after a separation of thousands of years, it would be very surprising to find any considerable part of the vocabulary the same. "All that we can reasonably expect to find," says Mr. Aston, "is that a number of the more essential roots in Japanese and in Aryan languages should upon examination appear to be identical, and if this were shown to be the case, enough would have been proved to substantiate the hypothesis above suggested"—that is, the hypothesis that the Japanese and the Aryan tongues have a common ancestor. Mr. Hirai claims that he has in his possession abundant material for demonstrating the truth of this theory. He seems to us to have made a very judicious selection of words. The lists he furnishes can be obtained from the Keiseisha, the publishers of the Michi, by purchasing copies of the Magazine the opening number of which appeared May 1st.*

The publication of big dictionaries and encyclopaedia seems to be the order of the day. The cost of preparing such works is very great, but bad as business is supposed to be in Japan to-day, capital representing many thousands of yen in each case is forthcoming when the publication of valuable books of reference is on the tapis. Reference has already been made in these columns to the publication of a Japanese Encyclopaedia of General Knowledge. The Dōbunkan have just issued a large Encyclopaedia of Pedagogy called Kyōiku Daijishō. Here are the particulars bearing on its publication. It has been printed in No. 6 type (Vide Brinkley's Dictionary under Kuatsuiji) on large-size pages, which number over 2,000. Some 2,000 subjects connected with education are discussed by 78 different writers. The ordinary price of the work will be 17 yen, but the subscription price is 12 yen, rather, was 12 yen, for the time limit expired on Nov. 25th. The titles of the subjects treated are in each case given in Japanese, English, French and German, thus 美術 [ビョウ]. Aesthetic Culture, L'éducation esthétique, Aesthetische Bildung. The work is supplied with 4 indexes, Japanese, English, French

* Philologists seem to agree in thinking that the materials available for instituting comparisons between different Turanian languages are extremely deficient compared to those available in the case of Aryan languages. This fact affects the issue, in deciding whether Japanese is a member of the Turanian family of languages or belongs to the Aryan stock.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

and German. The names of the writers of articles are in every case given. The History of Education in the Meiji era has been penned by Mr. T. Tanimoto. Biographical sketches of the lives of prominent teachers of former ages, such as Nakae Tōjū, and accounts of schools that no longer exist like the Terakoya, form an interesting feature in the book. As a work of reference on Japanese ancient and modern educational methods and educationists this Dictionary will certainly prove to be invaluable. The range of subjects is very wide, including many topics that are only indirectly connected with education. Philosophical, religious, logical and other technical terms are explained. Under the letter "M" we find Major concept (Taigainen), Major premiss (Taiseitei), Major term (Taimetiji), Manual Alphabet, Manual training, Melancholy, Mental Arithmetic, Metaphysics, Methodology, and scores of other topics with the page given on which they are treated. The dictionary constitutes a thesaurus of technical terms, embracing every important word connected with psychology, education and philosophy. Copies of this work will doubtless henceforth find a place on the shelves of every big school library throughout the empire. The writers who have contributed to it are well known scholars. In these busy times it will prove a great boon to be able to consult a dictionary of this kind on any subject connected with Japanese education past and present.

* * *

To No. 2 of the Shintenshi, a new magazine whose appearance and objects were noticed by us in these columns a few months ago, six well known writers contribute short essays on "The Connection of authorship with Birth places and Local influence." Here is the gist of Mr. Natsume Sōseki's remarks on this subject. It is true to say that in Japan the impression made on authors' minds by local influences has been very slight. There are special reasons for this. In ancient times men were not free to write as they pleased. In point of style they were taught to keep as close as possible to classical models, and as to matter the Government exercised a very strict control over that, often forbidding the notice of facts and incidents which they did not wish to be made generally known. So it happened that, though the Nihon Gwaishi and the Nihon Seiki were written by Rai San'yō in Kyōto, there is nothing in them to indicate the fact. Sokken's writings were entirely without local colouring and nobody could have told from them that he lived in Kyūshū. In modern times various influences have had the effect of nullifying local differences and peculiarities in authors. Authors have all received the same kind of education, the same ideas have circulated among them and novelists at any rate are invariably imitators of the same foreign writers of fiction. Take the naturalistic school of writers as an example of what I mean. They are all cast in the same mould. Whether a novelist belonging to this school resides in Hokkaidō or Kyūshū makes no difference in the character of the work produced. The influence of the ideas which fill the minds of men of this school is at present so strong that local effects are not seen at all. (Konnichi no Nihon no jōtai wa seikoku [生國] ya, kōkyō de sakubutsu no rubetsu nado no yaru jiki de wa arimasen). Later on we shall no doubt reach a stage when differentiation will take place; when writers will no longer be distinguished by naming the schools to which they belong, when they will represent various localities. In our writing to-day there is far too little individuality and originality. We have not yet reached the time for the display of these qualities. Since the beginning of the present era we have been engaged in the unification and centralization of everything. Provincialism and clanism have been replaced by nationalism. "We hear no more of the Satsuma Japan or the Chōshū Japan, but only of the Japanese Japan." What we need now is not a return to provincialism, but the development of strong personality in literature.

"Fragrance, new and strong" is the title given to Mr. Yanagigawa Shun'yō's remarks on local influences on authors. Up until quite recently Tokyō was regarded as the centre and the source of all light literature of any importance, says Mr. Yanagigawa. The scenes of our novels, were invariably well known Tokyō resorts, the language used by the speakers introduced was Tokyō colloquial. If a man could not write in this dialect he was considered to be disqualified from novel writing a together. But a big change has come. The efforts of the naturalistic school of fiction-writers have entirely ousted Tokyō from the prominent position it occupied in the world of fiction and have produced a number of books which are characterized by much local colouring. This is the new and strong fragrance which fills the air of our literary world. Of course the metropolis contributes its quota of local peculiarities to authors, but it no longer succeeds in lording it over the provinces in the way it did for a couple of decades or so. I myself am a Tokyō man; which means that I am an optimist, but an optimist of rather a shallow kind. The Tokyō way is to endeavour to make things look cheerful however much cause there may be for gloom when their real nature is examined. It is a part of the etiquette of the metropolis that a man should conceal his feelings as much as possible. (Kurō ga atte mo, hiai ga atte mo, hito no maye de wa moku shite oru. Nomi narasu ōku wa sono wa too tsutsunde, omote wo misele sumasu na da). Combined with this there is fickleness, undue levity and a lack of tenacity. I have reached the conclusion that the effect of Tokyō life as a whole is such that I can not but regard it as somewhat of a calamity that I happened to be born and brought up there. The life one lives is artificial. One is not brought into contact with nature and all it has to teach in the way that is the case with men who pass their days in the country. To me it seems that writing is very much affected by one's surroundings and by the ways of the people with whom one associates. The minds of men living in the Western part of Japan are cast in an entirely different mould from those of the inhabitants of the North-Eastern provinces, and this reveals itself in their literary productions. Mr. Koyama Osanai, writing on the same subject, says that the ways of people residing on high ground away from the bustle of streets are quite different from those residing on low ground surrounded by houses. He goes so far as to say that anybody well acquainted with Tokyō life can tell the difference between a man who lives on a hill and the man who lives below even though he only meets him in the street. (Michi wo aruite oru demo, sukoshi Tokyō no jōtai ni akurui hito wa yama-no-te no hito ka, shita machi no hito ka wa sugu wakaru). He goes on to contend that places of residence certainly do affect authors in various ways.

Mr. Shimamura Hogetsu, the editor of the Iwasada Bungaku, agrees with Mr. Koyama in thinking that locality influences writing very markedly throughout Japan. Books written by Northerners are certainly more gloomy and serious than books composed by Southerners, says Mr. Shimamura. But a book takes its character principally from the personality of its author, and when we ask what are the factors that go to make up personality, the reply is that certain qualities are inherited, others derived from surroundings and associates in early life, others from education and reading. The various influences combine to produce a marked type of character. When once this has been produced it is transmitted from parent to child and changes of locality do not affect it very much. Put an Anglo-Saxon where you will and he will display the peculiarities which differentiate him from all other types of humanity. And books written by Anglo-Saxons all display to a greater or less extent the prominent traits of Anglo-Saxon character. We have not yet reached the stage of giving to the world books which nobody could take for anything but Japanese productions. In Russian, French, German and English literature the local colouring is very strong. In our modern literature it is so faint as scarcely to be perceptible. This is one of the drawbacks of the transition through which we are now passing.

There are writers, says Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō in the Bunshō Sekai who maintain that at the present time the semi-colloquial written style technically known as Gembun-itchi is so much in vogue that it is unnecessary to teach any other method of writing in schools or to require students to understand books written in classical language. The learned Doctor is entirely opposed to this view. He points out that though it is true to affirm that in ephemeral literature large resort is had to the Gembun-itchi style, Imperial Rescripts, Government notices, Official orders and notifications, laws, addresses read at important functions, and most of the leading articles in newspapers, to say nothing of all the high class text-books and books of reference in the country, are not composed in that style. There is a general feeling among scholars that this style lacks dignity and is unsuitable for use on solemn occasions. It also very frequently lacks conciseness and accuracy of statement. Dr. Inoue says that it is often asserted by Japanese that in Europe and America there is no difference between the book language and the colloquial, but that this is a mistaken idea, as in every country there are words and phrases used in conversation which outside works of fiction, plays and the like, are not to be found in books. The Gembun-itchi style should, Dr. Inoue thinks, only be taught in schools as a preparation for acquiring a knowledge of higher-class writing.

In the November number of the Bunshō Sekai, from which the above is taken, other scholars give their opinions on the same subject. Mr. S. Iwaya says that there is the greatest difference in the world between the semi-colloquial written style as practised by well read men like Ozaki Kōyō and the style as employed by men of no literary culture. Mr. Iwaya is in favour of the exclusive adoption of this style. Here are his very words Ita-takushi wa mō kore kara Gembun-itchi igwai no bunshō wo tsukutte yuku hitoyo wa nai to shin-jite oru. But to write successfully in this style a man must have a good knowledge of rhetoric, says Mr. Iwaya, and this can only be obtained by wide reading. As things are to-day, the style is certainly gaining ground all the time. Letters are largely composed in it. So are novels, new style verses, essays, articles in magazines and books on some technical subjects. For laws the style seems unsuitable, owing to a certain discursiveness that it has. As for Western countries, the difference between the spoken and the written languages is in all cases very slight. Whereas in English they use the one personal pronoun "I," we have about twenty different ones for the first person and as many for the second.

Dr. Ueda Mannen believes, he tells us, that 50 or 100 years hence the Gembun-itchi style will even in law books supplant the mode of writing now followed. The old Classical style will, he thinks, be still employed in Imperial Ordinances and for what is known as Chōibun (condolence letters, or addresses to the spirits of the departed), but for no other species of writing. He is strongly in favour of making the study of this style only compulsory in schools, and leaving other methods of writing to be studied by specialists.

Mr. Takekoshi is of opinion that now the masses have taken to reading, books should be prepared in large numbers for their perusal in the popular semi-colloquial style.

Dr. Y. Haga is not in favour of the exclusive adoption of the Gembun-itchi style. He agrees in the main with Dr. Inoue.

Mr. Yamaji Aizan thinks that the only thing that is needed to make the semi-colloquial written style triumphant is refinement and fuller development. It is, he holds, capable of being rendered a very perfect organ for expressing thought. But he is not for discontinuing abruptly the use of the traditional style of writing.

Our own studies have convinced us that the style has made the most wonderful progress during the past 10 or 12 years, since we began to write these Summaries. Most of the articles read by us now are in this style—formerly it was not so. The style being essentially discursive, compared to the ordinary book language style, the number of pages to be gone through to get the gist of an article has been doubled in recent years.

The views of Count Okuma on Japan's relations with China were published at considerable length in the November Taiyō under the title Tai Shin Gwaikō no Kumō Mondai (A Fundamental Question connected with our diplomatic policy towards China). The article is in reality an accurate report of a speech delivered by the Count on Oct. 12th, which was taken down by a stenographer. The general tone of the Count's remarks is one of dissatisfaction with Japan's way of treating China since the Portsmouth Treaty was signed. According to Count Okuma, Japan has made two great mistakes in recent years. She has neglected to study the political and economic condition of that vast country and she has relied too much on her military strength as compared with that of China, allowing the consciousness of her possession of superior physical force to betray her into haughtiness of manner when negotiating with her neighbour. European and Americans engaged in business with Chinese make a point of assiduously studying the whole state of affairs in that country. In this study England for a long time took the lead, but other Western Countries have gradually come to the front in this matter. Though the Chinese are near neighbours, says Count Okuma, we know far less about their ways than Occidentals. We are suffering to-day from boycotting. Without defending Chinese outrages, it is true to say that the boycotting is the result of the hostility caused by our action in the Tatsu Maru affair. We put on too much side on that occasion, assuming a haut en bas attitude which sorely offended the Chinese people. In days gone by Western countries time and again obtained what they demanded from weaker states by assuming a blustering attitude, but this way of getting over diplomatic difficulties has now been abandoned by the majority of the great Powers. But there have been signs in our negotiations with China that we do not quite realise this. Western Powers, it seems to me, treat China more liberally and indulgently than we do, and here is where our diplomats have lost ground in past years.* The present disturbed state of China and her many difficulties are taken into consideration by Europeans and Americans, and they perceive that the situation calls for patience and leniency on their part. But there are a good many people in this country who think that because we have come out top in two wars fought on Chinese soil we are in a position to dictate to China how she shall act. These people say that whatever China may become later on, at present she is no match for us in war and so by a display of power we can get things our own way.† But the fact is that our relations to England, France and Russia and our promise to adopt the open door policy make it exceedingly difficult for us to push our own special interests at Peking. We could not resort to force without consulting England and perhaps several other countries. The situation in China is such that the Treaty Powers are compelled to co-operate in almost everything. The maintenance of the integrity of the country and the preservation of order are indispensable conditions of the prosperity of the trade and industry in which Occidentals as well as ourselves are so keenly interested. All Treaty Powers are alike concerned in the spread of enlightenment throughout the Chinese empire; as the more civilised the country becomes the greater will be the facilities she offers for the carrying on of business of all sorts. The time has passed for any country however powerful it may be to try to force concessions out of China. England and Japan have agreed to oppose that kind of procedure. It is plain that what they keep others from doing they cannot either separately or jointly do themselves. But not only must we refrain from over self-assertion in our dealings with China, we must take steps to convince the Chinese that we are their true friends. The boycotting has temporarily ceased, but anti-Japanese feeling is still strong in certain parts of Southern China. Financially we are losing heavily on this account. Business and politics are closely connected. When international business relations are strained, it is impossible for the diplomatic relations between countries to be very harmonious. Economic loss is political loss. (Kokusai-teki kwankei to iu mono wa keisai-teki kwankei ga kiso ni naru no de, keisai-teki no kwankei ga nakereba kokusai-teki no kwankei to iu mono wa yohodo hakujaku ni natte shimō no de aru) Now when we come to compare the feelings of the Chinese towards us to-day with what they were during the Boxer disturbances and after the rebellion had been put down by the Allied forces, we perceive that whereas then we were trusted implicitly now we are widely distrusted. What has caused the change? Our policy towards China since the Portsmouth Treaty. This policy has been lacking in conciliatoriness. Even granting that China has been wrong in many things and that we have had right on our side, it does not pay with a country like China to be always pushing our rights. Indulgent treatment was called for. Strong nations can afford to treat weaker Powers with leniency, and it often is to their advantage to do so. China is not a difficult Power for us to get on with if we go the right way about it. In past times the Chinese have shown great readiness to bury the hatchet and begin afresh in their dealings with us. We went to war with them and after inflicting heavy losses on them by land and by sea, we required them to pay a big indemnity. Not so very long after the conclusion of the war they had to contend with rebels whom unaided they could not put down. In company with Western Powers we came to the assistance of the Peking Government and order was restored. This entirely removed their feeling of hostility to us. The soreness caused by their defeats was no longer felt and they began to employ Japanese as Army instructors, school teachers and in other ways. We were more popular then than Europeans or Americans. But our treatment of them since the conclusion of our war against Russia has changed all this. We adopted for some time a kind of pin-prick policy in dealing with them. Realizing how much we have suffered in the past from the injustice of certain Western Powers, we ought to feel no little pity for China in her present struggle to assert her independence, but instead of this there have been times when we have either separately or in conjunction with other Powers brought pressure to bear on her in one way or the other. This has led the Chinese to doubt the sincerity of our friendship. Now regard the matter from whatever point of view we may, this is much to be regretted; because to-day there is no country in the world that is so important to us as China. Our whole future will depend largely on our trade with that huge country. That our trade is to-day very seriously interrupted in various parts by strong anti-Japanese feeling among the Chinese is undeniable. To remove that feeling we must be prepared to make big sacrifices if such be necessary. Just at present the Chinese trust Europeans and Americans more than they do us. Positions hitherto occupied by Japanese are being given to Germans or other Europeans.* There are indications that our Government is now trying its best to conciliate the Chinese. But the Tatsu Maru affair is not yet settled, and China thinks Japan is demanding too big a sum as indemnity (Ima nao shōkin no dampan wo yatte aru ga sono yōkyū ni tai shite kare (China) wa yohodo kuaō (very excessive) de aru to omotte oru). In the railway question too our demands quite reasonable? I have my doubts about it, and so have the Chinese, I am told? We make far too much fuss over comparatively trifling affairs. The creation of a better state of feeling towards us in China is to-day of much greater importance than a few thousand yen. But since our Government seems to realize that its diplomatic policy in China during the past few years has been wrong we hope to see changes. We must study China more. Our blunders in dealing with the Chinese have mostly resulted from ignorance and indifference.

* It was reported a few days ago in Tōkyō that the Chinese educational authorities have decided not to renew any contracts made with Japanese teachers in schools or colleges.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

Count Okuma is quite an authority on Chinese affairs. He makes a point of holding long conversations with Chinese who visit Tokyo, and he encourages the students and Professors of the Waseda University to obtain all the information they can relative to the present state of China from the Chinese who are studying at Waseda.

The competition between the crowds of magazine in circulation is very keen. A great many organs are started with insufficient capital, and hence are discontinued within 12 months of their birth. This was the case with the Daitō (The Great East) a Sendai magazine noticed in these columns some months ago. Schools and universities manage to keep their organs running by drawing on school funds of various kinds. Great publishing houses like the Hakubunkan and the Kinkōdo are content to run some of their magazines at a loss rather than give up publishing them. The rates paid for articles are still very low in Japan; most of the articles published are not paid for at all. They consist of the reports of speeches or of conversations held with the interviewers sent to the houses of prominent men by newspaper offices or by the editors of magazines. A magazine whose existence depends principally on its circulation has to be always publishing something especially attractive. About this time last year the Chūō Kōron scored on some striking political articles supplied to it by an anonymous writer, which were reproduced in these columns. But this only lasted a few months. After that the magazine began to fall off as a semi-political organ. During the past few months it has created a certain amount of interest among its readers by publishing the opinions of literary men about each other. A is chosen as a subject for free comment. B, C, D, E, F, G, H, all dissect A and endeavour to show where he is weak and where strong. The following month B's turn comes to be stretched out on the operating table and to submit to the cutting up process. To many of the victims the process is of course very distasteful. But protest is of no use. Money is to be made out of this kind of thing, and so it will continue till the list of men worth discussing has been exhausted. The adoption of this plan presupposes that men understand each other, but it is asserted by some writers that a great many of the popular sketches of the characters of great men are largely founded on misapprehension. Every man's character is a riddle that is by no means easily solved by anybody not intimately associated with the subject of study. The Chūō Kōron last month editorially discussed the character of Mr. Kuroiwa Shiroku, the proprietor and chief editor of the Yorobaku Chōhō. Mr. Kuroiwa and his domestic affairs have been much before the public during the past few months. He has divorced his wife in a most open manner. The Tokyo Echo has published a great deal on this subject. The Chūō Kōron maintains that Mr. Kuroiwa is a man about whose real character the public knows very little indeed. The article dealing with Mr. Kuroiwa's whole life runs into 12 pages. About half of it is devoted to pointing out weaknesses and defects, and the remainder to a discussion of the traits that account for Mr. Kuroiwa's reputation as an author and a journalist. Mr. Kuroiwa, we are told, though lacking in courage, is a man who values independence above wealth or rank. He refused an offer made by the Iwasaki family to provide ground and all the capital required for starting a newspaper, because he feared that he would not be free to conduct the paper as he pleased, despite a promise that he should not be interfered with. Mr. Kuroiwa, in a word, is described as a great reader, as full of commonsense, as a man who has dabbled in all sorts of subjects and followed many pursuits; as fond of change, a first-class billiard player, and an authority on wrestling; as the master of a literary style that is not surpassed for beauty and lucidity; as a man of strong feeling, but whose emotions are subject to the control of reason; as a journalist who has drawn public attention to himself by his numerous eccentricities, but who is in no sense a great man.

THE HIGHEST IDEAL IN COMPOSITION.

Mr. Omachi Keigetsu is a writer whose style is greatly admired. In an article bearing the above title published in the Bunshō Sekai he states the conclusions which after studying Chinese and European books he has reached respecting the secret of high-class writing. Whether his theory is altogether borne out by facts may be questioned, but since it is undoubtedly of considerable interest and since there is certainly much to be said in its favour, I have taken the trouble to prepare a literal translation of the whole article, hoping thus to show in what way the mind of a highly educated Japanese works. In this country there is much hero-worship. The views expressed so pointedly by Mr. Omachi are held very strongly by a large number of scholars whom it has been my privilege to meet and converse with. I will now let Mr. Omachi speak for himself.

The realization of the highest ideal in arts and accomplishments of all kinds depends on personality and not on skill, or, rather, on personality and skill harmoniously blended. It is only when a man reaches the stage of being able to blend personality and skill that he becomes truly great. In speaking of writing all we can say is that it is subject to this principle. It is only when there is a great personality that a great literary work comes into existence. It seems to me that in the Eastern world there is no writer to be compared to 司馬遷 Sse-mu Ts'ien. His mind was so comprehensive that it took in the whole universe. And as for human life, he seems to have swallowed it all at one draught. He understood the most diverse types of human character and the bent of mind of each separate class of men. That he read the thoughts of kings, princes, generals, statesmen, public benefactors and scholars goes without saying. But the minds of money-makers and even assassins were equally familiar to him. Nothing either great or small escaped him. He kept himself in close touch with everything. His sympathies went out in every direction. His judgment was impartial, his observation keen, his views comprehensive. And so there came into existence that great work the Shiki (史記). The book was the man. Ts'ien being a great man, produced a great work. Style and personality can not be separated from each other. Apart from personality there is no such thing as style. To say that the cultivation of character is necessary to the man who would become a great author is to go to the very root of the subject of authorship.

People judge of things by themselves. Man's mind is the standard of all things. The stupid man judges by his stupidity; the clever but small-minded man by his talented small-mindedness, the great-minded man by his great-mindedness. Therefore it happens that though the incidents (considered) are the same, the decisions arrived at (the verdicts given) are diverse. Though writers may be reviewing the life of the same great hero of ancient times, the descriptions of each writer will differ. A's account of this hero will only go as far as his observation carries him, and so his portrait will not be a true picture of the man, but only one special kind of caricature (yobac). B's description of the same hero will only go as far as his perception carries him, so it too will not be a true picture, but only another kind of caricature. The clever small-minded man has not the wherewithal to comprehend the ancient hero. In order to sketch the character of a great man a writer must himself have corresponding greatness. Though an author may not have sufficient talent and capacity to enable him to act as great men have acted, he must himself be made of the same stuff as great men are made of. Sse-mu Ts'ien, it may be, would not have made a good prime minister nor a good general. But irrespective of the question whether he would have filled either of these offices creditably, in order to convey to readers a true idea of the real character of each minister and each general of whom he wrote, his mind must have been akin to theirs (lit. his mind must have contained theirs). A clever small-minded man can never fathom the mind of a great man. To the eyes of the clever small-minded man the finest qualities of a great man are a blank.

If this be so, is it then certain that a great man will become a great author? By no means. Composing being an art, proficiency in it requires practice. Even a man who possesses no great personal traits at all, by dint of hard training may advance a certain distance towards becoming a good writer. Beyond that it comes to be a question of personality and not a question of art. The man with a great personality will develop into a great writer, while the man with an inferior personality will make no literary progress at all until his personality reaches a higher standard.

I delight in the stateliness of the language of Mencius, and once I thought I should like to imitate his style. But in the end I decided that for me to write in his grand way is an impossibility, because I am a very ordinary man with neither the intelligence nor the courage that Mencius possessed. Again, I admire immensely the profundity and mysteriousness that characterize the writings of Chuang-tse, and in his footsteps I once tried to walk, but eventually I gave up the attempt as beyond the powers of a man who possesses little intellectual strength and whose imagination is deficient. My writing accords well with my personality, and it is not for me to try to imitate others. A camellia tree can't become a pine nor can a dove change itself into a hawk. If I and my style agree and the art of writing acquired by me helps me to write in a manner that is natural to me, even though I be a man of very limited capacity, I have become initiated in the first principles of the art of composing (lit. I have entered the vestibule of the temple of literature). A man's writing being his very self, the one thing that all would-be composers must bear in mind is the necessity of their dealing honestly with themselves, expressing only what they really feel. If a writer, in order to please the public, tries to give a plaintive air to things which do not appear to be at all sad to him, readers will not be moved by his words. A man whose mind is chiefly dominated by reason should in his writing appeal to reason in an unimpassioned manner; for it is only emotion in the heart of the writer that begets emotion in the heart of the reader—the tears of the one produce the tears of the other.

To repeat what I have already said in other words, the beautiful in literary style is distinctly ethnological beauty. In reference to this ethnological or moral beauty, verdicts differ according to country, age and the degree of intelligence possessed by those who pass judgment on it, but the inhabitants of each country have their own national character, their own perceptive faculties, and so, despite the fact that there may be a few who disagree with the general verdict, what the majority of people consider to be beautiful is most certainly so. There are men who refuse to bow to national sentiment in regard to what is beautiful, who being puffed up with self-conceit, claim for themselves a certain superiority to other people, saying that posterity will appreciate them if their contemporaries do not; but this is nothing else but the chagrin at their failure to win renown which is often displayed by unenlightened small-minded men.

With plants it is a certain vital energy that makes them flourish; animals, too, owe their activity to the same vital energy. Since good writing is nothing but great personalities revealing themselves, it also has its spirit or vital energy.

It is said that good writers pass from extreme flashiness and elaborateness of style to the use of plain and simple language. But this language has life in it. It can not be compared to a withered tree, rather does it resemble a tree, which, though it may have no blossom to attract the eyes of ordinary people, is full of vitality in its very topmost branches. The undiscerning reader mistakes apparent spirit for real spirit. The spirit which ordinary people perceive is artificial. The spirit attached to words attracts attention, but soon produces satiety in readers. But there is spirit that lies deep down in a man's personality. This shows itself in his writing often quite unconsciously to himself. This is the spirit which is most worthy of esteem. In the case of men of strong personality, they need not depend on artificial excitement of any sort, as they have a kind of self-possessed resolution (which serves them in better stead). This calm resolution is not perceptible to vulgar eyes. Writing that is not permeated by this resolution may in style either be ornate or simple. If the former, there will be a great show of linguistic flowers, not of the real but the artificial sort; if the latter, the simplicity will not be the true kind of simplicity of which I spoke above, since it will have lost all vitality.

To sum up what I have said, good writing is not something that anybody who can put sentences together can produce at will. He who would write well must be intelligent, must have resolution, keen powers of observation, richness of thought, lofty views on men and things, a variety of tastes, deep emotion and self-confidence. It is only when these qualities are all present that really high class writing becomes possible.

But the majority of the men known to the world as writers are hypersensitive small minded persons. Whatever wonderful feats the puppet language may be made to perform when they pull the strings,* without the charm of character what they write will fail to impress men deeply. Their observation is superficial. They see all things through the medium of their own narrow minds; so what they perceive is not of sufficient importance to attract the notice of the real scholar. Because they are hypersensitive their emotions are at once affected by any event that concerns them personally, but nothing prompts them to shed tears of compassion on account of the wrongs of society. For themselves they can weep, but not for others. Their discontent and distress all come from personal foolish attachment of some kind or other and resemble the bitter tears shed by women and fretful children when crossed. Such writers are silly, undisciplined, whimsical, self-interested and quite lacking in sympathy for others. With no sense of shame they expose their vulgarity of mind to the gaze of the world. Though they string many fine words together, there is nothing beautiful in their productions. Such men are literary hacks, but not true authors. W.D.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The fortnightly meeting of the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society on Dec. 10th was devoted to the life and work of John Milton, whose tercentenary occurred on the 9th. There was a good attendance and the paper of the evening was followed with much attention and marked by much applause. The lecturer, Mr. J. Carey Hall, I.S.O., was introduced by the President, Mr. J. P. Mollison.

Mr. HALL, who was received with much applause, noted at the outset that the Literary and Musical Society were during the present session celebrating another tercentenary, the founding of the city of Quebec. The development during recent years of the celebration of these centenary anniversaries, both of the birth of eminent men and the founding of great cities, was an encouraging sign of the times, showing as it did that public opinion was gradually beginning to recognise the debt of gratitude which men of the present day owed to past generations and to the great men who led and guided the movements of those times. Mr. Hall then proceeded to deal with leading events in the life of Milton—"a man who is acknowledged to be second in the long roll of English poets, the first, of course, being Shakespeare."

* The allusion is to one of those performing dolls or figures moved by strings attached to it, like our punch and Judy shows.

Milton, like many other English poets, was a citizen of London, being born in Bread Street on December 9th, 1608. Here the lecturer referred to the arguments of scientific men of recent years that genius is transmitted by heredity. He confessed he was not at all convinced by the arguments brought forward to support this idea, and if the abstract scientific theory was brought to the test of crude cases as they arise, he thought they would find the idea would scarcely stand examination. Let them take the case of Milton. He was undoubtedly a poetic genius of the first order and born of distinguished ancestry, but it was not until he had spent many years of hard work that he succeeded in establishing himself in Cheapside, London, as a scrivener, combining the practice of solicitor and law stationer. His father was a man of refined tastes, and was not only a musician of a high order, but a composer of great ability. Music was predominant in the home in which the young poet was trained. He (the lecturer) believed it was not by the transmission of heredity but by social traditions and by a process of education that ability is fostered, and that theory, he held, accounted for Milton's abilities. At the age of twelve Milton was sent to St. Paul's School, London, and afterwards to Christ's College, Cambridge, where, at the age of twenty-four, he graduated. When a man reached the age of twenty-four he was generally considered ready to adopt a profession, but that was not the idea of Milton. From his boyhood, Milton had considered his avocation in life to be a great poet, to voice the feelings and ideas of his age in verse, and for that purpose the young man strenuously trained himself. Six years of school life and seven years at college were not sufficient for the purpose, and after discussing the matter with the father Milton took six years more to complete his education. By that time his father had acquired sufficient money to retire into private life at Horton, near Windsor (in Buckinghamshire), and at his country home the young poet prepared himself, by a diligent study of all that was best in the classical poetry of the world, for the production of the great poem he contemplated. But this retirement to the country village life at Horton was not entirely devoted to preparation of the poet's greatest achievement, for here he produced his splendid poems "Comus," "Lycidas," "Arcades," "L'Allegro," and "Il Penseroso." The first period of the poet's life closed with the production of the above-mentioned works, and in 1638 he set out on a tour to the continent, where he visited the chief Italian cities. At that time, culture seemed to bind the peoples of Western Europe in bonds of close friendship. With France in the centre, Italy and Spain to the south, and Germany and England to the north, these five great nations had for a thousand years previous formed a family group, and the sense of family relationship was more vivid than at the present time. It was during this tour the poet made the acquaintance of Grotius and Galileo, and other eminent men. The visit, however, was curtailed by the news reaching Milton of the troubles occurring in his native land, when in the reign of Charles the First the great crucial fight for English freedom was waged between the king on the one side and the parliament and people on the other. In that struggle Milton played a prominent part, devoting his energies to the production of political pamphlets and in other ways furthering the cause of liberty. To understand the importance of this sacrifice, Mr. Hall recounted the struggle which took place for twenty years—a struggle which was to decide whether the English people were to be governed by a king who claimed to rule over the nation because God had set him there, or whether the ancient liberties should be respected. Milton took the popular side of the war, which ended in the disastrous defeat of the king and his flight to Scotland. Referring to Milton's justification of the execution of the king, the lecturer remarked that Milton had been condemned for his attitude, but how could the moralist do other than admire the self-abnegation and heroism of a man who for twenty years abandoned the set purpose of his life and threw his humble efforts on the side of his countrymen, fighting for their liberties. (Loud applause.) Milton was not only a poet, but a true patriot. "Imperialism" had not been heard of in those days, and the sympathies of the poet extended beyond his own country to the countries of Europe.

Dealing with the poet's work, Mr. Hall remarked that while his lyrics were of the first order, his sonnets had no superior in the English language, and as an example quoted that written on the attainment of his twenty-third year, and those dedicated to General Fairfax, to Cromwell, and to Cyriac Skinner.

Quotations were also given from "Arcades" and "Comus," and other works, and then the lecturer turned to the two great poems "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained," written when the poet retired to London disheartened, blind, ruined and impoverished. It had often been wondered why Milton chose such a subject. To men of the present day there was a certain unreality about "Paradise Lost," but in the time of Milton it was not so. Milton had not to create his personages, for in his day they were very real to the Puritans and the people—far more real than historical characters. Milton's theory was that the gods of the heathen were real spirits: fallen angels who in this form had been allowed to deceive mankind. Mr. Hall next referred to another aspect of Milton's life, his religious views. The religious opinions of great men were necessarily a subject of interest, and this was especially so in the case of Milton, with whom religion was the dominating influence of his life, and who was undoubtedly a Christian of the first order. In a manuscript discovered 150 years after his death it was discovered that Milton was an anti-Sabbatarian, and a strong anti-Trinitarian. Milton's theory about the soul would not be tolerated by many Christians of the present day. He held that the body and the soul were not two distinct entities, but that they were inseparably mixed together, and that when man died there was an end of him, and it was not until the resurrection that the soul and body were brought together. But it was not as a moralist nor as a politician that they celebrated that evening the tercentenary of Milton's birth; it was as a poet. The lecturer concluded by quoting the well-known lines of Tennyson on the great English poet.

On the motion of Mr. Mollison a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer was passed.

An excellent musical programme had been arranged by Mr. D. Maas: who was very warmly received in his own numbers. Mr. W. Pahl was also applauded for his piano-forte solo. Mrs. Richards sang two numbers in excellent style, two items by Professor Griffith were rendered in that performer's usual finished way and two songs by Mr. Maas brought an enjoyable evening to a close.

During the evening the President, Mr. J. P. Mollison, announced that the next meeting—the Annual Christmas Entertainment—will be held on the 18th instant at the Gaiety Theatre, when a very attractive programme will be presented. Tickets are to be issued to members, and non-members will be admitted by ticket, which will be on sale at Messrs. Thwaites, the price being 1s.

DEATH OF SIR EWEN CAMERON.

We regret to state that Mr. H. D. C. Jones, the Manager of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, Yokohama, has received news by cable of the death in London, on Thursday, Dec. 10th, of Sir Ewen Cameron, K.C.M.G., for many years Manager of the Corporation in Shanghai, and afterwards Manager in London until the beginning of 1905, when he retired owing to ill health.

Born in Invernesshire in 1841, the deceased gentleman was the son of the late Mr. William Cameron, Muckovie. He was married in 1878 to Josephine, daughter of the late Mr. John Honchen, Thetford, Norfolk. Sir Ewen who had latterly resided at South Hampstead, was F.R.G.S., and a member of the Japan Society.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

The Annual General Meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held at 4 p.m., Thursday, Dec. 10, at the British Embassy, Kojimachi, Tokyo. H. E. Sir Claude MacDonald, British Ambassador, President of the Society, occupied the chair. The minutes of the last General Meeting, having been printed in the papers, were taken as read. The reports of the Corresponding Secretary (for the Council), of the Librarian, and of the Treasurer, were then read and adopted. The Society then proceeded to ballot for Officers for the ensuing year. While the tellers (Messrs. Coates and Hagin) were counting the ballots, Prof. Arthur Lloyd delivered a very interesting Lecture on "The Oriental Congress in Copenhagen," together with an account of his visits in Russia, Germany and England with learned scholars and at the meetings of other learned societies, especially those dealing with Oriental topics. The President, in behalf of the Society, then extended thanks to Prof. Lloyd for his interesting and instructive remarks. The Corresponding Secretary then read the result of the ballot, as follows:—

President.—H. E. Sir Claude MacDonald, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., G.C.V.O.
Vice President.—For Tokyo—Prof. E. H. Vickers. For Yokohama—J. C. Hall, Esq.
Corresponding Secretary.—Rev. T. M. MacNair.
Recording Secretaries.—For Tokyo—Prof. E. W. Clement. For Yokohama—W. B. Mason, Esq.
Treasurer.—Prof. J. T. Swift.
Librarian.—Prof. Arthur Lloyd, M.A.
Members of Council.—Prof. M. Anesaki, Ph. D., Galen M. Fisher, Esq., Prof. K. Florenz, Ph. D., J. McD. Gardiner, Esq., Rev. A. F. King, R. J. Kirby, Esq., Rev. E. R. Miller, R. S. Miller, Esq., Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, M. W. de Visser, Ph. D.

Prof. J. T. Swift proposed, and the Society unanimously passed a vote of thanks to H. E. Sir Claude MacDonald for his hospitality in throwing open the Embassy for this meeting. The meeting then adjourned.

The above-mentioned reports are hereto appended.

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY FOR THE YEAR 1908.

During the past year the Council has met fourteen times, and the Society has held nine general meetings and with papers read as follows:

GENERAL MEETINGS.

- Jan. 29, 1908.—Lecture on "Some of the Problems of Life in New China," by Dr. Timothy Richard of Shanghai.
Feb. 19.—"The Life and Teachings of Nakai Toju, the Sage of Umi," by Galen M. Fisher, Esq.
March 18.—"Dazai on Rules of Life," by R. J. Kirby, Esq.
April 15.—"The Ancient Shinto God, Ame-no-mikoto-nushi-no-kami, Seen in the Light of To-day," by Prof. G. Kato.
May 20.—"Japanese Feudal Laws: The Ashikaga Code," by John Carey Hall, Esq.
June 17.—"The Tengu," by Dr. M. W. de Visser.
Oct. 28.—"Confucian Philosophy in Japan," by Walter Denning, Esq.
Nov. 4.—"The Fox and the Badger in Japanese Folk-lore," by Dr. M. W. de Visser.
Dec. 10.—Lecture by Prof. Arthur Lloyd, on "The Congress of Orientalists at Copenhagen."

One additional paper was furnished to the Society early in the year by the Rev. J. L. Atkinson, D.D., since deceased, on the subject, "The Ten Buddhist Virtues: Not committing adultery," and was ordered to be printed in the Transactions.

Of these several papers, the one just mentioned and the lecture by Dr. Timothy Richard have been printed, and will appear shortly, together with Mr. Fisher's paper on Nakai Toju and Mr. Kirby's on Dazai, &c., as Part I. of Vol. XXXVI of the Transactions. The remainder of the material in hand, as above, will be divided between Parts II. and III. of the same volume. A small new edition of the Constitution and By-Laws, as amended to date, and a new list of members and Catalogue of Transactions has just been received from the printer. The only amendment made during the year was to the effect that after May 20th ordinary membership fees should be the same for resident and non-resident members, viz. five yen a year and that the cost of life membership should be raised to sixty yen, plus entrance fee in the case of new members, and less two and a half yen for each year of membership in the case of others; but that after twenty-five years of ordinary membership life membership should be obtainable on application to the Treasurer without further payment.

Although work is thus begun on Vol. XXXVI, the printing of Vol. XXXV. is not yet finished, Parts II. and III. being still in press. They comprise the papers by Dr. M. Anesaki and F. N. Dickens, Esq., on "The Four Buddhist Ogawas in Chinese" and "The Makura Kotoba of Primitive Japanese Verse," respectively. They would both have been issued long since but for the occurrence of a fire in the Fukuin Publishing House which caused much confusion, and was supposed for a time to have destroyed the manuscript of the former and the stereo-plates of most of the latter. A report was made to this effect, but after some months had elapsed the Society was informed of the safety of the materials, both manuscript and plates, and of the printer's ability and readiness to proceed with the work. This he was instructed to do, in accordance with previous arrangements. New proofs of the Makura Kotoba were furnished, and were forwarded to England for the author's personal revision. They have not yet been returned, though word has come that they may be expected in a fortnight. The paper on the Four Ogawas is about half completed at this date.

Parts I. and II. of the transactions, Vol. XXXV., were issued to members of the Society and to the public during the spring and summer, after delay in the case of the latter, which was likewise caused by the fire. The part was in fact got out by a different establishment. The lectures on "Formative Elements of Japanese Buddhism," by Prof. Arthur Lloyd, with which this second Part of Vol. XXXV. was concluded, are deserving of special notice in this connection. The manuscripts of all were reported as lost, but were happily restored to the society later on and in time for insertion in Part II. A more extended treatment of the subject, however, which Prof. Lloyd was printing privately was entirely burned, and this loss was quite irreparable, save by an entire rewriting on Prof. Lloyd's part, which could not be undertaken, as a matter of course, prior to his departure for Europe to attend, as the Society's representative, the Fifteenth Session of the International Congress of Orientalists, meeting at Copenhagen in August. The Society was therefore disappointed in its expectation, as expressed in the last Annual Report of the Council, that the four lectures, and with them the larger statement, would "serve as a means of bringing the society and Prof. Lloyd prominently before students of Oriental matters on that occasion." This end was none the less gained, however, by Prof. Lloyd personally, who was present at the Congress and made valuable contributions to its proceedings.

With regard, further, to the printing of the transactions, the Council would express regret that the work has not gone forward with greater rapidity and with more definite and apparent results, but the delay has been due to circumstances over which the Publication Committee have had no control.

The membership roll of the Society has been considerably extended during the year. Only two members have resigned, viz., Messrs. H. Latham and A. A. Williamson. Basil Hall Chamberlain, Esq., has been made an honorary member, on account of his long continued and exceptionally valuable services to the Society. James Hague Hyde was made a life member, and the following names have been added to the list of ordinary members, all of them resident in Japan except the two last:—Lt. Col. F. C. Bortels, Henry P. Bowie, Esq., Rev. L. Byrde, J. M. Davis, Esq., J. Edalji, Esq., J. Gasco, Esq., Rev. Bishop M. C. Harris, D.D., Rev. H. Jowett, J. R. Kennedy, Esq., Miss Z. Kincaid, Rev. J. H. Lloyd, Howard May, Esq., Dr. W. W. McLaren, Miss C. J. Neely, Lieut. C. H. Niell-James, Dr. Irazo Nitobe, Dr. Paravicini, Dr. Rachel Read, F. G. Sale, Esq., G. A. Scott, Esq., W. F. L. Sweet, Esq., Dr. M. W. de Visser, J. C. Ward, Esq., E. A. Wiedemann, Esq., E. R. Kellogg, Esq. and Mrs. Murray Warner.

The Council would call attention to the fact, as reported by Prof. Lloyd on his recent return from England, that members of the Society when in London are welcome to make use of the Library and rooms of the Royal Asiatic Society there located, a courtesy which Prof. Lloyd had himself experienced and of which he had received the assurance that it was open alike to other members of the Society who might be in a position to take advantage of it.

It remains only to state that the vacancies in the Council, made necessary by the departure from Japan of Dr. D. C. Greene and Prof. B. H. Chamberlain were filled by the appointment of Rev. A. F. King and E. R. Miller, and that the latter was asked to perform the duties of Librarian during the absence of Prof. Lloyd.

Hon. Librarian's Report is as follows:—

The Hon. Librarian begs to report that the orders for Transactions during the year just closing have amounted to yen 964.95, of which an unprecedentedly large number have been received from Japan, through Japanese booksellers, showing that the work of the Society is being appreciated by the scholars of this land.

During the same period the expenses of the Library have come to yen 216.39, of which yen 144 have been for the Assistant Librarian, the rest for postage and sundries.

A sum of 250 yen for the purchase of books in England was entrusted in the Hon. Librarian during the early summer. Of the books bought with this money one small consignment (of which a list is appended) has arrived and been put on the shelves. Notice has been received of the arrival within a few days of a second consignment. A third list was ordered in October, and should arrive by the end of this month or early in January. No statement of accounts can be given until all the books have arrived.

Two consignments of pamphlets, books and proceedings of Scientific Societies and Institutions have been sent to the Library of the Keioijuku.

The Hon. Librarian also wishes to express his thanks to the Rev. E. Rothery Miller, for kindly undertaking the charge of the Library during his absence this summer.

Respectfully submitted,

A. LLOYD,
Hon. Librarian

We have nearly 1,000 yen more in hand now than we had this time last year, but before long heavy printing bills must be paid, so really we are not in any better position financially. There is about 1,000 yen due us from Members for Subscriptions and Entrance Fees. Ultimately the bulk of this will no doubt be paid, as it is owing by people well able to pay.

NIPPON RACE CLUB.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Nippon Race Club was held at the Grand Hotel on Thursday. In the absence of the President, Sir Claude MacDonald, the chair was occupied by the Vice-President, Dr. Wheeler, and among those present were Messrs. S. Isaacs, J. Williamson Jones, H. T. S. Green, K. Mori, F. M. Tegner, J. de Cuers de Cogolin, A. J. Easton, M. Pors, G. G. Samuel, B. C. Howard, P. C. Colman, J. M. Spencer Smith, A. R. Catto, J. A. Harnssen, G. W. Hawkins, J. Rosenthal, R. Ward, J. de Courcy, F. L. Elliott, A. J. McClure, etc.

The annual report and accounts were presented, as already published, and passed.

Mr. S. ISAACS, chairman of the Executive Committee, said in reference to the report and accounts that members doubtless already had some idea of the difficulties the Committee had had to meet since the last meeting. As they would see from the accounts the receipts had only been a little over yen 620 as against yen 14,000. The main difficulty before the Committee was to frame a programme and meet the expenses of the last meeting without drawing too heavily on the Reserve Fund. He approached the Basei Kyoku immediately he heard that the pari-mutuel was to be stopped, i.e., on the 8th or 9th of October. On the 6th October without due warning they had received a notification from the Basei Kyoku to the effect that the pari-mutuel was prohibited. A meeting of the Permanent Committee was called and they sanctioned the expenditure of yen 20,000 for prizes—about half of what was originally proposed for the Autumn Meeting. The owners on being communicated with agreed to race their horses with the reduced prizes. On the 16th November new rules and regulations were issued in the Official Gazette. On November 21st he wrote a letter to the Basei Kyoku telling them that their Autumn Meeting was held at a considerable loss and they trusted the Basei Kyoku would see their way to allowing a subsidy in accordance with Art. 19 of the said regulations. The reply received was that as the Meeting of the Nippon Race Club had been held before the new Rules were promulgated it was not possible for a subsidy to be given to them, but that they would grant a subsidy for the Spring Meeting, and a larger one than to the other clubs. The exact amount of the subsidy they could not say.

Subsequently, with regard to the breed of horses for racing, the Basei Kyoku told him they hardly thought anybody would import thoroughbred horses to race, now that the pari-mutuel had been stopped. Horses now in the country would be allowed to race, but no new importations. Moreover, China Ponies were not to be allowed to race. For the benefit of the incoming Committee he had requested that communications from the Authorities should come in writing, but up to the present the Club had had no letters or instructions whatsoever from them in writing, nor had he had any reply to his letter asking them to put their instructions in writing.

With reference to the subsidies that had been granted to the different Race Clubs and the amounts the different Clubs were giving in prize-money, he found that with the exception of the Kawasaki Club they had only given about one-half of the subsidy. The Kawasaki Club had given more than half, about yen 15,500 as against the yen 25,000 granted. Of the other Clubs the Itabashi had paid yen 7,887 out of yen 15,000 received, the Meguro yen 12,540 out of yen 25,000, the Omori yen 12,875 out of yen 25,000, the Kyoto yen 7,475 out of yen 14,000 and the Kokura yen 7,000 out of yen 12,000. He was afraid that on the basis of these figures, and the encouragement given by the Basei Kyoku, racing, as far as the better class of horses were concerned, was coming to an end.

In the report there was an item of yen 7,284 for charities. He would like to mention that, included in that amount, the sum of yen 5,000 was given to the General Hospital. To mark their appreciation of that donation the General Hospital had set aside a bed which was at the disposal of the Nippon Race Club at any time. The Club had been giving to Japanese charities but not to foreign, to any extent. It was, however, thought well when the scheme for rebuilding came forward to give some assistance to the General Hospital, and the Club at that time being in a flourishing condition had voted the sum mentioned. With reference to saddlery, the Committee, desirous of making the expenses of racing men as light as possible, decided to import a lot of saddlery from England. This had now arrived, and was now on view at the Race Course. (Applause.)

Some suggestions and discussion then followed with regard to the rules, titles and entrance fees of certain races, after which the election of officers took place. The following were appointed for the Committee—Messrs. S. Isaacs, K. Mori, H. T. S. Green, F. L. Elliott, F. H. Bugbird, F. M. Tegner and H. D. C. Jones.

ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1908.

The Committee have the pleasure of submitting to the Club the Report and Accounts for 1908.

His Imperial Majesty, the Emperor, graciously honoured the Club by presenting Prizes both for the Spring and Autumn Races, His Imperial Highness the Crown Prince and His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi were present at the Spring and Autumn Meetings respectively.

The Autumn Meeting of the Club was held under very trying circumstances owing to the closing of the Pari-Mutuel by the Government; the result of this act of the responsible authorities being that all Prize money had to be considerably reduced and the income from Gate money etc. amounted to only yen 625.80 as against yen 114,454.70 at the Spring Meeting.

Strong representations have been made to the Basei Kyoku with the view of obtaining some subsidy as given to Japanese Race Clubs, towards reducing the heavy loss sustained by this Club, but the Committee regret that no grant has so far been obtained.

The Second Day of the Autumn Meeting had to be postponed from the 31st October to the 2nd November, owing to inclement weather.

The Basei Kyoku kindly presented yen 1,100.00 at the Spring Meeting and yen 1,400.00 at the Autumn Meeting as Special Prizes.

The Executive, in concordance with the Permanent Committee, subscribed towards charities during the early part of the year the sum of yen 7,284.00; but such expenditures will in the future naturally have to be dispensed with owing to the altered financial conditions of the Club.

A New Road has been opened, running behind the Race Course from the Aizawa village and joining the road near the furlong post. Towards expenses of this, the Club have donated the sum of yen 1,500.00.

With a view to reducing the racing expenses of owners, the Committee thought it advisable to import an assortment of Saddlery, and this has now arrived and will be for sale to Members only.

The Committee have succeeded in obtaining permission from the Basei Kyoku to give "Extra Races" for specially imported horses, now in Japan, at the coming Spring Meeting and are desirous of pointing out that these horses should prove a most valuable addition to Japan's breeding stock; the animals being all very high class horses.

After many interviews with the Basei Kyoku the Committee have likewise succeeded in obtaining permission to continue the racing of China Ponies, this special permission granted to the Club in view of the object set forth in Article 1 of the Constitution, viz.—encouraging the art of riding. In this connection a Gymkhana Meeting was held on the 6th June, 1908, which attracted a large attendance and proved highly successful.

The Committee beg to call the attention of the incoming Committee to the fact that ways and means must be found to increase the ordinary revenue of the Club, the funds having been considerably reduced by recent events.

The thanks of the Committee are due to those gentlemen who, as stewards of the Meetings, did much to bring the racing to a successful conclusion.

In accordance with Rule to the Executive Committee now retire.

The Dempo reports that General Viscount Kawamura will shortly be appointed Chief Aide-de-camp to the Emperor as successor of the late Viscount Okazawa.

THE UNION ESTATE AND INVESTMENT COMPANY.

The second annual general meeting of the Union Estate and Investment Company was held at the offices of the agents, Messrs. Hutchison & Co., No. 183, Yamachita cho, Yokohama, on Dec. 10th. The chair was occupied by Mr. E. Rogers (managing director), there being also present Messrs. D. Marshall (director), B. M. Ward, J. E. Drummond and Sudoh Hatsugoro.

The notice convening the meeting having been read, the minutes of the last annual meeting were passed on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Marshall.

The Chairman said:—The annual report and accounts for the year ended September 30th, 1908, have been in your hands for some days, and with your permission we will take them as read. Notwithstanding the period of depression we are now passing through, the Company is still in a position to pay a dividend of 7 per cent., which proves conclusively its earning power. On reference to the accounts it will be noted that yen 7,143.10 has been written off for "repairs and allowance for wear and tear." Of this sum yen 4,969.89 is for wear and tear to bring valuation of the different properties to even figures, and yen 2,173.71, amount actually expended on repairs. There is also a sum of yen 875 (lawyer's fees) for preliminary expenses, which will not appear in future accounts. Turning to the balance-sheet, I will say that the overdrafts due the Anglo-Japanese Bank and the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank on September 30th have since been considerably reduced. I will now formally propose the adoption of the report and accounts as printed, and if some one will kindly second the proposition the report and accounts will be open for comment.

The motion was seconded by Mr. J. E. Drummond and carried unanimously.

On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. B. M. Ward, Mr. D. H. Blake was re-elected a director.

On the motion of Mr. Marshall, seconded by Mr. Drummond, Messrs. Miller, Pearson, and Mackie were re-elected auditors of the Company.

The Chairman announced that dividend warrants would be ready at once, and the proceedings terminated.

A DESERVING FAMILY.

Rev. W. H. Smart writes to us from Kasumi-cho, Yamagata-shi, Yamagata Ken:—

I venture to assume it is well known that as the result of the late famine in the N.E. of Japan, while living in Fukushima, I adopted as my own some twelve poor destitute boys, many of them orphans. All the children I found in the most pitiable state of want, cold, poverty and hunger. I have made these children my family who live with me; they attend daily the common schools and are doing well. They are under direct Christian home influence and it is the intention to make them good Christian Japanese. At home there is regular daily worship and Christian instruction. The children are all well and happy. I earnestly appeal for your sympathy and support in order to lighten the responsibility which devolves upon me. I shall be grateful for contributions in money or in kind: clothing old or new. Ages of children, 7 to 14.

P.S.—We are now in the depth of winter with deep snow and often bitter cold. Any little consideration you can give us will help not only to make the children happy, but will reduce the heavy burden which rests upon me.

WEDDING IN YOKOHAMA.

The marriage took place on Wednesday in Yokohama of Miss Moto Yamada, a graduate of Ferris Seminary, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kota Yamada, of Annaka, Joshi, with Mr. Satoru Kondo, of Atlantic City, N.J., America, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kumajuro Kondo, of Saltama-ken. The civil service was witnessed at the Kanagawa Kencho by Mr. Fukuaburo Yamada, L.L.D., and Mrs. Yozo Nomura, while the religious ceremony was performed at Union Church by Rev. E. S. Booth, assisted by the Rev. K. Hoshino of Tokyo. The Church was beautifully decorated and Mr. W. Karl Vincent and Miss J. Booth gave instrumental and vocal selections of music.

After the marriage a reception was held at the Club Hotel, where various healths were honoured. After a honeymoon spent in the provinces the happy couple proceed on the 27th for Atlantic City.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The Christmas meeting of the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society will be held at the Gaiety this evening, commencing at nine o'clock. The first part of the programme will comprise a one-act play entitled "That Brute Simmona," presented by Mrs. McWilliams, Mr. C. Asle, and Mr. A. H. Windett. In the second part, songs will be rendered by Miss Hargreaves and Miss Ruse, of Tokyo, Messrs. W. H. Lewis and A. Ruinat, and two musical sketches will be given by Mr. W. E. Gooch. Selections will be played during the evening by the Bijou Orchestra.

We are asked to remind members that admission will be by tickets, already issued. Non-members will be admitted on payment of yen 1, tickets being obtainable of Messrs. C. Thwaites & Co., No. 61, or at the Gaiety this evening.

THE CHRONOPHONE AT THE GAITY.

An excellent performance was given at the Gaiety on Tuesday by the Chronophone and Cinematograph Gaumont. The house, owing doubtless to the number of entertainments recently, was not large. The Safe of the American, with which the programme opened, was quite amusing, and Wynona, as danced at the Folies Bergeres in Paris, was certainly the best piece in the entertainment. The Marathon Race promoted by the Evening News was very good, though some of the spectators were mistakenly disappointed to find that it was not the Olympic race. The Fantastic Drawings were clever, and the Silent Morning was very funny. La Creola, danced and sung by La Tortajada, was excellent, and so was Fido's Taking Away, in an amusing fashion. The Gordon Bennett Aeronautic race was quite good, and altogether the show was well worth seeing and listening to.

THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM BY AN ARCHITECT.

The hearing of a case in which K. Shimoda, of the Shimoda Construction Co., claims yen 875 from the Standard Oil Co. was resumed on Dec. 17th in the Yokohama District Court.

Two witness were examined. S. Tokito said that a dispute arose between Plaintiff and T. Koyama an employee of the defendant as to the specifications of the buildings at Itosaki. Witness tried to settle the matter amicably but his efforts were unsuccessful.

T. Koyama stated that the Standard Oil Co. did not ask Plaintiff to make specifications for the warehouses built at Itosaki and accordingly the firm did not promise to pay to Plaintiff a fee of 2½ per cent. on the cost of the buildings.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Judge for leave to examine Mr. H. A. Ensworth of the Standard Oil Co. as a witness. The Judge decided to examine him on Jan. 20th.

FOOTBALL.

The match between "Born in Japan" and "The Rest" arranged for Saturday did not take place, doubtless on account of the wet weather. A game, however, was arranged between scratch teams designed "Colours" and "White," and resulted in a win for the latter by 8 goals to 1. The goals for the victors were scored by Hornstein (4), Hayward (2), Levack (1) and Neville (1) while Vincent was responsible for the only goal scored by "Colours."

HOME NEWS AND OPINION.

THE KAISER'S INTERVIEW.

As might have been expected, the greatest—and, apparently, one may add the last—of the German Emperor's indiscretions has been an absorbing topic, and by no means in England only. "The remarkable conversation between the Emperor William and an unnamed British diplomatist, which appeared in the Daily Telegraph of Oct. 28th, has naturally created," says The Times, "as it was no doubt intended to do, a considerable stir."

"Obviously, the remarks attributed to His Majesty are designed to dissipate the feelings of distrust which German policy for many years back has gradually created in this country. They seem to be singularly ill-adapted to accomplish this end. The Emperor is in fact represented as making admissions which tend very strongly to justify and to confirm that distrust. He bears witness, for example, to the unfriendliness of German feeling towards England not merely at the time of the Boer war, but at the present day. He testifies that this unfriendly feeling prevails amongst large sections of the middle and lower classes of his people. That it exists quite as strongly amongst sections of the upper and highly cultivated classes we know from other sources."

The Spectator takes a similar line. A propos of the Emperor's allusion to the difficulty of his task of maintaining friendly relations between the two nations because "the prevailing sentiment among large sections of the middle and lower classes of my own people is not friendly to England," that leading weekly review says:—

It is rather difficult to deal with a declaration of this kind when we are told, in effect, that to call in doubt any statement made by the Emperor is to insult him, but we trust that without exposing ourselves to such an accusation we may point out that, in our opinion, it is not the lower class in Germany who are hostile to this country, but rather the upper class, the official class and the professional class, and in an especial degree what we may term the governing class. This, however, is a question the discussion of which may easily cause ill blood, and we are therefore unwilling to labour the point.

The above admission of the Emperor's is generally regarded as the most damaging and dangerous part of the whole interview, for it asseverates what most people in both countries would hesitate to consider a fact—that the great bulk of the German people is unfriendly to England. Such a suggestion, even were it in accordance with the truth, should never have received the Imperial imprimatur.

THE NAVAL ASPECT OF THE QUESTION.

That part of the "conversation" which constitutes the Kaiser's apology for the immense fleet he is constructing with such unrelenting haste is regarded by The Times as "the weakest part of all."

"The expansion of the German navy is being carried out, we are asked to believe, for use in the Pacific. It is for eventualities there, that Germany is arming—eventualities for which all 'European' Powers with Far Eastern interests should make ready. That really seems a surprising reason for the accumulation of a great naval force in the Baltic and in the North Sea, many units of which notoriously lack coal-capacity to make lengthy cruises of any kind."

Indeed, the net result of the Interview, as far as the British public is concerned, is the realization to a greater degree than ever of the necessity for increasing at all costs the strength of the British navy. The feeling is crystallized, as it were, in an article in the Observer headed "Ships, ships, ships," and while the angry outcry with which this "blunder upon blunder" has been greeted in Germany will probably ensure a complete cessation of the "impulsive personal policy" of the Kaiser with its baneful effects in "uniting our enemies, injuring our prestige, and destroying foreign confidence" (Tägliche Rundschau), it will be long before the chief lesson to be derived from the incident is lost on the English people. As the London Outlook, in a leading article, puts it:—

The Anglo-German problem is essentially one of large and fundamental facts and is not to be changed, though it may be modified, by the private attitude and volition of this or that individual, however exalted. The growth of the German navy, operating upon the Anglophobia of the bulk of the German masses, is the vital and enduring fact. No declarations of personal goodwill, however sincere, can alter that fact or disguise its profound significance. It governs all British policy in Europe, and must long continue to govern it."

THE MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

In the North Country, as a set-off against the aspersions cast by Londoners on provincial ignorance of affairs, there runs a saying that "what Lancashire thinks to day London will think to-morrow." Doubtless then the Lancashire lads will take credit to themselves over the results of the Municipal elections of Nov. 2nd, for it was in cotton-land that the rout of the Liberals was most pronounced.

Unionist gains were, however, the order of the day all over the country, Radical, Labour, and Socialist candidates alike suffering overwhelming defeat. The returns are as follow:—

SUMMARY OF GAINS.

Unionists .....	136
Radicals .....	27
Labour .....	12
Socialists .....	9
Independents .....	8

In many towns there was no change in the relative strength of parties, and in others the contests were not fought on party lines. In East Ham the Municipal Alliance candidates were defeated.

THE AMERICAN FLEET AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The eyes of more than one part of the world are at present turned with more than a passing interest on that large but comparatively unexploited division of the globe, South America. A London journal couples the suggestion of a welcome to the American battleship fleet with sundry reflections roaming over a somewhat wide horizon:—

If Mr. Hearst and other fiery anti-British Americans would not lash their fellow-citizens into a frenzy with the suggestion that our act was an insult to the United States Navy, it would be a useful object-lesson, both for the Americans and the British, if Lord Charles Beresford with the Channel Fleet, the Atlantic Fleet, and the Nore division of the Home Fleet, including the completed "Dreadnoughts," was delegated to welcome the American Fleet at Gibraltar on their homeward bound cruise in January next. Maybe the election fever will have sufficiently subsided in America by that time to permit of this international courtesy being paid, without inflammatory oratory being loosed. The Americans are beginning to see that the rapid rise of the naval strength of an ambitious and not over scrupulous European Power, seeking colonies, may one day be a menace to the Monroe doctrine that warns all Europe off the South American Republics. These latter are rich lands for a country seeking outlets for its enterprising and thrifty sons, and America may only be able to hold the Western Continent sacred to its present population by means of force. Here American interests would coincide with our own, seeing what a large amount of British capital is invested in such countries as Brazil, Chili, Peru, and other Republics on the American Continent. A combined Anglo-Saxon fleet might, therefore, be a warning as to the force that lay between any ambition to turn these Republics into Colonies, and its realisation.

THE INVASION OF ENGLAND: LORD ROBERT'S SPEECH.

As already reported by telegraph, the resolution moved by Lord Roberts in the House of Lords to the effect that "the defence of these islands necessitates the immediate attention of the Government to make the army so strong and efficient that the most formidable nation will hesitate before making an attempt at landing," was adopted by a vote of 74 to 33. In his speech, fuller reports of which have come to hand by mail, Lord Roberts, who spoke with studied deliberation, said:—

"It is my conviction that the lack of a military force sufficient to make hopeless the attempt of an invasion will in all probability be the cause of loss of Great Britain's supremacy at sea. It is with comparative ease that Germany can land an army on the shores of England. Under present conditions this country would be forced to submit to most humiliating demands."

I wish emphatically to disclaim all hostility to or fear of Germany; but the defence of these islands is a matter which calls for immediate attention. There must be an army so strong in numbers and efficient in quality that the most formidable of foreign nations would hesitate to make a landing in England. Vessels capable of accommodating 200,000 men are always available in the northern ports of Germany. As a result of the new German service law 200,000 men can be collected in the districts adjoining the nearest port without trouble. The great German steamship lines are in constant practice embarking and disembarking, and as the railroads are the property of the State, all preliminaries to the actual dispatch of troops can be carried out with the utmost secrecy.

"It is not absolutely essential for a nation to command the sea in order to carry out an invasion. A temporary local command would suffice, and this is perfectly understood in Germany."

"It would be folly," continued Lord Roberts, "to shut our eyes to these possibilities, however much we may desire to do so. Startling events in the Near East have brought home to the most careless observer that nothing can save that country which is not prepared to protect itself. If Great Britain continues to neglect the most ordinary precautions she may some day find herself in the hands of the invader. This danger is daily becoming more threatening. Within a decade Germany has created the greatest sea power that ever existed except that of Great Britain, and at the present moment it is formidable. Great measures are being taken to increase that power. It is calculated that there are 80,000 Germans in employment in Great Britain. They are trained soldiers, and if a German force once landed on these shores they would be ready to help."

"The main temptation to the invasion of Great Britain is the want of a home army, which should consist of at least 1,000,000 men. The navy under present conditions is fettered in home waters and is unsupported by a military force sufficient to render any invasion hopeless."

Lord Roberts' speech, as we know, created some sensation, and not only in the House. A protest was made from the Government benches against the making of such statements at a time when the nerves of Europe were already in a state of tension, but the motion was put, and as indicated above, was passed by a large majority.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AT 9.30 a.m. on Dec. 19th the Emperor will visit the Artillery School.

An explosion occurred on Dec. 9th at the Runoi Coal Mine near Sapporo. Five persons were injured.

An explosion occurred in the engine room of the destroyer Suirayuki, at Saseho, on Dec. 13th. Two of the crew were injured.

On the evening of Dec. 13th fire broke out in a branch factory in 'Tsu belonging to the Miyu Cotton Spinning Co., destroying the buildings.

A REPORT via Kyoto to the Asahi says that General Viscount Hasegawa commanding the army in Korea will resign this month and probably will be appointed to the Military Council.

In the Tokyo Appeal Court judgment has been given in the Geerts-Klingen case in favour of plaintiff. It will be remembered that an action was last year brought by Mrs. K. Geerts against Mr. H. Klingen for the recovery of yen 372.23 and that the Yokohama District Court dismissed the claim.

FIRE occurred on the British steamer Tsainang (1,400 gross tons) while on her way off Saitama, Wakayama prefecture, at 3 a.m. on Dec. 16th. On the previous evening the ship left Kobe for Yokohama. On account of the accident, she returned to the original port at 2 p.m. on Wednesday and anchored off Onohama where she hoisted a signal for assistance. The Harbour Police Office, etc., sent pumps to the steamer and about five hours later the flames were put out. As to the cause it is said that a coolie named Y. Goto, a stowaway, had accommodation in the hold where the fire originated. After smoking he left ashes through which the accident took place, burning the cargo—most of it cotton. The damage is estimated at yen 80,000.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The Christmas meeting of the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society will be held on Friday this evening, commencing at 7.30. The first part of the programme will consist of a play entitled "The Brass Band," presented by Mrs. McWilliam, Mr. McWilliam, and Mr. A. H. Winter. In the second part, songs will be rendered by Mr. McWilliam, Mrs. McWilliam, and Miss Rose, of Tokyo. Mrs. McWilliam and A. Ruman, and two vocalists will be given by Mr. W. E. Goss. The programme will be played during the evening.

We are asked to remind members that tickets will be by tickets, and that members will be admitted to the concert being held at the Gaiety Theatre, No. 61, of the Gaiety Theatre.

THE CHRONOPHONE AT THE GAIETY.

An excellent performance of the Chronophone was given on Tuesday by the Chronophone Company. The programme was very long, but the performance was very good. ## CORRESPONDENCE.

AN INVITATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the course of the somewhat animated discussion which has been running in the Mail, I noticed a reference to an antiquated, whiskered and anachronistic survival, i.e., the hell fire atrocity. That one solitary contributor to this discussion believes in hell fire in the monstrous literal signification of the words, I think very unlikely. It would, however be interesting to know whether there are in Japan at the present time clergymen sufficiently entangled in barbarism to teach that there is a God so tender, so loving and so thoughtful in providing for his creatures that he has created a sweet spot where souls who behave in a certain way are to be eternally subjected to agonising torture. If there are any such clergymen in this country, let them kindly state their names, and then I hope that sensible people who have children with susceptible minds will forbid them entry to churches where they are liable to be injured by having to listen to blasphemous and preposterous nonsense.

Faithfully,

C. D.

Yokohama, December 8th, 1908.

"ALPHA" AND "BETA."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—There will probably not be absolute agreement even among Englishmen as to the term "a bad break" being the "inexpressive and ugly" Americanism that Alpha denominates it; but there will hardly be two opinions as to the incongruity of a man who splits the infinitive and uses such an expression as "I cannot agree that I am to be included" posing as a purist.

If, in some other connection, I had used, not the simple term "a bad break," but the distinctly unsavoury one "a bad egg," and had even applied it to an individual, Alpha would probably have seen nothing to call for criticism, as the extremely "ugly" secondary application of that expression is not what an Englishman calls an Americanism, but what an American, with perfect propriety, calls an Anglicism.

As for Alpha's confessed inability to understand why with his grotesque misquotation before me I should come to the conclusion that he is not a clergyman, I think it will be admitted that not even Mr. Denning himself has given the clergy a harder knock than Alpha gives them in this confession.

Yours faithfully,

BETA.

REV. A. PIETERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I find it quite impossible to get leisure to discuss the points brought up against me by Mr. Albert Pieters. But I feel sure that there are a great many readers of your paper who will at once perceive that Mr. Pieters puts a grossly unfair interpretation on both my words and my actions. I have never denied Mr. Woodd's sincerity. Like Professor Huxley I strongly disapprove of the endorsement of certain doctrines, and so when Mr. Woodd answered in a phrasitic manner at my attempts to find out the truth, and assumed that he was in a better position to know what is true than I am, is it to be wondered at that I should remind him of the glass house in which he lived and warn him against throwing stones? I have accused nobody of insincerity. I have never said the missionaries are fools. Nobody has produced more evidence of the ability and sincerity of the missionaries in your columns than I have. This testimony comes pouring out month after month. Personal attacks lead to personal retorts. Had not Mr. Woodd taunted me with ignorance of Christian Theology and the trend of modern thought relating thereto, and tried to represent me as a man whose opinion was quite unworthy of attention, I should not have asked him to show his credentials. It was not the Encyclopædia Britannica, as wrongly printed, but the Encyclopædia Biblica, to which I referred in my letter, many articles from which I have read. I did not say Mr. Woodd was insincere, but simply that as a politician he makes remarks which can not carry the weight attached to the remarks of Roman Catholic Divines on the attitude of modern science to orthodox Christianity. That, sir, is strictly true. Yes, Mr. Pieters, irritability grows on us as we get older, and I accept this explanation of the extremely vexed tone of your letter. To live, write and speak so as to annoy no one, to tread on nobody's corns year in and year out—this would be, from some points of view, a highly desirable state of existence. But have men with deep convictions of their own, convictions reached after decades of hard study and thought, ever succeeded in attaining to this peaceful state? I hold pronounced opinions on religion after beginning life as a clergyman. These opinions annoy you and many others. I am sorry, but I do not feel called on to suppress them. Out of the Summaries, I maintain, these opinions are as a rule kept. Let those who think they are not quote chapter and verse when complaining. For you, sir, and all who think with you I have great respect, and whenever it may fall to my lot to have to interpret your writings it will be my earnest endeavour to read into your words better feelings than you have seen fit to read into mine, and to forbear from imputing motives to you that are unworthy of a gentleman and a sincere earnest-minded thinker. That my views on religion are of no value to you is not my fault. We esteem what accords with our own views and feel antagonism to what is opposed to them. It is the way of mankind and surprises nobody who has studied human nature. The attacks made on me, Mr. Pieters, call for no lengthy reply. I am content to be judged by my work as a whole, and in the face of such strictures as yours I recall the numerous appreciative notices of my writing which in the course of 12 years have come from men and women whose opinion is no whit less valuable than yours. That I resent fair criticism I have never shown, but personal attacks on me such as Mr. Woodd made I do and always shall resent, and reply to in whatever way I deem proper. There are certain Christians who preach meekness to opponents, but never practise it themselves. This seemed to me to be Mr. Woodd's frailty. I told him so, and shall do the same to anybody who writes in the same tone of clerical hauteur. No man of spirit will stand that kind of thing.

I am yours, etc.

WALTER DENING.

THE "ADHERENTS" OF THE DIFFERENT BUDDHIST SECTS IN JAPAN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the Monthly Summary of the Japanese Religious Press published in the Mail this morning reference is made to an article in the Nihoku Shinbun on certain aspects of Japanese Buddhism, and it is stated that the "adherents" of the three groups into which the different sects are divided number 22,627, 20,829, and 28,374, respectively. As these figures agree almost exactly with the numbers of the temples of the three groups named, the coincidence is an interesting one, and I feel sure there are other readers of the Mail than myself who would like to know to what particular class of "adherents" reference is made. Will the writer of the Summaries kindly state?

Yours truly,

J. H.

THE WRITER OF THE RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES AND HIS OPINIONS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Although the writer of the Religious Summaries makes no attempt to conceal or disguise his aversion to Christianity, I am inclined to the opinion that many of the objectionable or at least uncalled-for personal comments that find their way into the Summaries are due not so much to that aversion per se, as to an uncontrollable propensity for pronouncing a pontifical judgment upon everything that attracts his attention, however limited his knowledge of it.

The Summary published in the Mail of this morning furnishes a good illustration of this singular characteristic. In an article in the Gakyo on the subject of ministerial stipends, reference is made to a minister in America who, after 42 years' work in the ministry, was so poor that he had to be buried in ground belonging to one of his converts. The writer of the Summary says in a footnote "This story sounds very apocryphal, for surely cemeteries exist almost everywhere in the States, and burial elsewhere must, we should say, be most unusual."

In this statement, notwithstanding its qualifying phrases, the writer not merely makes a lavish exhibition of his ignorance, but he does so without the slightest excuse. Three-fourths of his readers are Americans and know more about it than he does, and even as to those of other nationalities it is an insult to their intelligence to assume that they need his guidance in judging as to the credibility of the story.

No American city, great or small, is without a cemetery, and when a discovery of gold or the throwing open to settlement of a tract of public land leads to the upspringing of a new "city," a public school and a cemetery are among the first institutions to be recognized as indispensable.

Nevertheless, in the sparsely populated districts of the Far West and also in innumerable districts, not in all cases so sparsely populated, in the South, it is quite a common thing for the dead to be interred in private ground, and the monuments that may be seen from the windows of a passing train are such as to make it very evident that it is not alone the poor who are laid to rest in ground whose only consecration is the act of burial itself. This is a matter of fact and the Writer of the Summaries will have to seek refuge in something else than his forty years' study of theology.

Yours truly,

AN AMERICAN.

THE ATTACK ON THE WRITER OF THE RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Reluctant as I am to occupy your valuable space with comments on the remarks made by correspondents against me or my writing, there are certain things that the public ought to know in order to judge between me and my opponents. The controversy has become very confused, as such controversies are apt to become, and it seems necessary to make the points at issue stand out more clearly than they now do. First let me state a few facts. I began life as a clergyman of the Church of England and a Missionary. I was ordained by Archbishop Tait in Sept. 1869, having passed Dr. Lightfoot's examination in Theology, Church History, New Testament Greek and other subjects. I laboured in Madagascar as a C. M. S. Missionary three years and reached Japan Dec. 14th, 1873. For 10 years I served my Society as a Missionary in Hakodade and made a good many converts. In 1884 I was dismissed by the C. M. S. because I refused to teach the doctrine of eternal punishment. This dismissal caused great indignation among liberal-minded people in England and became the subject of lengthy correspondence in the Guardian, Record, Spectator, Christian World, and many other papers. It ended in the formation of a Committee which undertook to send me back to Japan as a Missionary to continue my labours here. The Committee consisted of the following well known scholars: Dr. Swanson, Professor G. G. Stokes, Professor J. C. Adams, Dr. J. J. S. Perowne, Professor Archibald Geikie, Dr. T. G. Bonney, Rev. W. Hay Aiken, Professor P. G. Tait, A. H. Simmonds, Esq., Edward Clifford, Esq. and Professor H. J. S. Smith. The small Society formed soon fell to pieces, as I foresaw it would, and I was thrown on my own resources for making a living. This I found easy enough. The late Viscount Mori set me to write readers for the Mombusho. One thing led to another and I was soon placed in a position of financial independence. The subjects I claim to have specially studied are religion, ethics, philosophy, psychology, education and English literature. For more than 25 years, with a few short intervals, I have been contributing articles on all these subjects to this journal. All collected, they would fill several good-sized books. It seems important that the public should know that you, sir, have never interfered with me as regards the views expressed. When you have not yourself agreed with those views, my articles have gone in as "Contributed," when they have not been initiated by me. Your readers are now informed that I am not a fit person to be employed for reviewing theological books. Incompetence that your dull mind, sir, has not been able to discover after acquaintance with my writing stretching over a quarter of a century now appears to be quite indispensible to the keen-eyed Mr. Woodd. But you erred in good company, sir, for the Committee referred to above failed to discover any theological deficiencies. My replies to Mr. Woodd have been misunderstood by Mr. Pieters. Hence the bitterness of some of his remarks. Now it must be quite plain to everybody that had I remained a C. M. S. Missionary, Mr. Woodd, instead of condemning me as he now does, would have been loud in my praises. I have been informed by a Church Missionary man that the missionaries of that Society are praying to God for my return to their ranks. A man who has tasted liberty rarely returns to slavery. But Mr. Woodd is not content with prayers, he has commenced to try what goading will do. Now, sir, a goaded ox is apt to kick. When he does so, Mr. Pieters exclaims "How unmanly!" I had prepared a goad for this stubborn animal, the writer of the Summaries, myself, but when I saw the blow he dealt Mr. Woodd, I burnt my goad. It must all be very amusing to outsiders, if, indeed, it does not appear to be quite childish. I have never accused Mr. Woodd of insincerity, but what I did say and what I repeat is that a man who is paid to teach certain fixed doctrines only is not so advantageously situated for finding out what is true and what false as the man who is free to believe and teach what he pleases without the risk of pecuniary loss. This point was elaborated by Professor Huxley in his famous battle with Dr. Wace, a Protestant Orthodox Divine, in 1889. A full account of that controversy was written by me for the Japan Mail and appeared as a leader in this journal in September of that year. Professor Huxley spoke of English orthodox Divines as "Counsel for creeds," and said that the serious question is whether theological men of science (the Germans and the Dutch) or theological special pleaders are to have the confidence of the general public. Having observed that "every-one of the propositions for which he contended were to be found in the works of scholars and theologians of the highest repute in the only two countries, Holland and Germany, in which at the present time professors of theology are to be found whose tenure of their posts does not depend upon the results to which their inquiries lead them," he adds, "Imagine that all our chairs of astronomy had been founded in the fourteenth century, and that their incumbents were bound to sign Ptolemaic articles. In that case, with every respect for the efforts of persons thus hampered to attain and expound the truth, I think men of common-sense would go elsewhere to learn astronomy." All over the world people are refusing more and more to submit to clerical teaching. The English bishops and clergy have repeatedly complained of this. The conviction that men who are free to investigate, believe and teach what they please are more likely to find out what is true in religion than the men who are paid to teach certain fixed dogmas is very widespread to-day. In Mr. Walton's reply to "Layman" he obscured the point at issue. "Layman's" arguments were incautiously stated, but he was right in affirming that a lawyer who lives on his knowledge and use of law, or a doctor who lives on his knowledge of the healing art is free to adopt what theories he pleases, to fundamentally alter his opinions. No such freedom is allowed in the orthodox church. The restrictions enforced may be quite necessary. Those who teach the doctrines they are paid to teach may of course be and often are perfectly sincere, but as truth-seekers they are placed at a disadvantage, and so it happens that when talented laymen like Professor Huxley write on religion they command a hearing such as is not granted to any ecclesiastic, be he ever so learned. This accounts for the avidity with which anti-Christian books are read by the laity all the world over. The notion of a layman figuring as an authority on Theology is most repugnant to such people. They brand thinkers like myself with the name of "infidel." They tell us that religious error is in itself of an immoral nature. With them the attainment of faith, not the ascertainment of truth, is the highest aim of mental life. With Huxley I believe that faith in this sense is an abomination. Between agnosticism and clericalism there can be neither peace nor truce. With Scientific theology agnosticism has no quarrel, but with Ecclesiasticism, the championship of a foregone conclusion, she never can come to terms.

One word in conclusion. Mr. Pieters and others are quite sure that the writer of the Religious Summaries knows very little about religion. He has produced say 144 readable Summaries of the Religious Press, stating every shade of opinion on religion in a manner that on the whole has given satisfaction to the people who hold these opinions, while himself profoundly ignorant of what real religion is and entirely without any views of his own that are worth stating in print. Some people are very credulous, but few will credit such an assertion as this. They will naturally ask how a writer could possibly keep up his interest in the subject for 12 long years had he no personal convictions as to what is true and what false in the doctrines taught under the name of religion. Is it not conceivable that the secret of the writer's interest in the subjects he treats is to be found in the fact that he warmly sympathizes with all earnest minded, sincere searchers for truth, regardless of the sects to which they belong? I can assert without fear of contradiction that the noblest feelings, aspirations and actions which religion has produced have been well written up in these Summaries. On the whole the selection of matter made has brought prominently into view the grander and sublimer aspects of religion. The ideals held up by the writers quoted have on the whole been noble ideals. In big pieces of work, often hastily put together, weak points will be found, but anybody who knows what immense labour the Literary and Religious Summaries involve will be the last to sympathize with the tone of some of the letters that have appeared in these columns. It has been to me a very unpleasant task to have to write so much about myself and my work. I trust now that the whole subject may be allowed to drop, as both sides have had a pretty good long say, and the general public must be wearied of a discussion that only concerns one insignificant individual, who in a sphere he has created for himself is extremely likely to insist on following his own course.

I am, Yours, etc., WALTER DENING.

BETA'S LANGUAGE AND LOGIC.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL")
SIR,—In his letter of 11th inst., Beta makes several assumptions, but since all of them are false, his deductions are necessarily worthless.

He accuses me of posing as a purist. He is entirely wrong, for I do not pose as anything; I merely object to an ugly and meaningless expression.

He next assumes that I see nothing to object to in the expression "a bad egg," but he has no right to assume any such thing. I am quite prepared to argue however that whereas such expressions as "a bad egg," "a broken reel," etc., are permissible as conveying definite impressions of persons, yet "a bad break" suggests nothing but a game of billiards or something broken. Americans apply it indiscriminately to a misquotation, bad manners, gaucheries and so on, but it does not convey any definite impression of any of them.

Beta is equally at fault in assuming, as he appears to do, that the use of the split infinitive is ungrammatical; but no rule of grammar is broken by those who use it, and very frequently sentences in which it is employed are more euphonious than they would be if what Beta assumes to be the correct arrangement were used. There is no real objection to the placing of a modifying word between the to and the remaining part of the infinitive, there is merely a prejudice on the part of 'superior persons' that is fast dying out.

Then comes the question of my misquotation. I split infinitives, and may I split hairs and ask Beta to assure me that either "boots" or "shoes" is the correct translation of the Hebrew word?

I now really do believe that Beta actually meant something that was so obviously absurd that I thought too highly of his reasoning powers to attribute it to him. It is difficult to believe, even now, that Beta should start with the assumption that no clergyman ever misquotes Holy Writ and that consequently one who does misquote is not in Holy orders; yet such would appear to be the case. Could anything be more absurd? I hope for Beta's sake that I am on the wrong track still. Finally Beta takes exception to a sentence of mine. It is strictly grammatical, it can be parsed and analysed, it says exactly what I meant to say and I therefore see no reason to amend it in any way. Beta would doubtless have me say "I am dead in this act" or "Cut me out."

Yours truly,

Tokyo, December 16th, 1908.

ADHERENTS OF THE DIFFERENT BUDDHIST SECTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL")

SIR,—In reply to J. H. I beg to say that the numbers given by me are those of the writer quoted. No mention of temples was made. I myself was surprised at the lowness of the figures, but I am in no way responsible for the statements I quote either on this or any other subject. Direct reference to the writer of the article quoted is, I fear, the only course open to "J. H."

I am yours, &c.,

"THE ATTEMPT TO EVADE CUSTOMS DUTIES."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL")

SIR,—Referring to your remarks under the above heading in your issue of the 16th inst., may I be permitted to call your attention to the injustice of speaking of an attempted swindle by a "Nagoya Firm" without mentioning the name of the firm (it is mentioned by the Japanese papers) and so allowing the stigma to attach to any Nagoya Firm?

I pray excuse my venturing to censure your attitude in this matter, but it seems to me that you are doing little to add to Japan's fair fame by shewing such reticence in exposing attempted fraud. Surely you do not wish it to be thought that you consider the fact of the firm being "well able to bear the penalty" is any palliation of an offence, the making light of which has such a direct tendency to sap the morality of the whole nation.

If having the money wherewith to pay forfeit in case of being detected in a fraudulent transaction is to be considered the measure of upright and fair dealing, then indeed the low estimation in which the Japanese used to hold their mercantile classes must stand good to-day; and honest men unable to make a living in such company will be driven to follow other occupations and leave trade to those whose thievish instincts have been more highly developed.

I enclose my card.

Yours faithfully,

Yokohama, 16th December, 1908.

A.O.

[We do not think that our comments were open to the construction put upon them by "A. O." Certainly they were not intended to palliate or conceal. But we have learned to be cautious in giving credence to early rumours. In this particular case caution proves to have been wise.—Ed. J.M.]

"J. H.'s" QUERY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Last night when replying to "J. H.'s" question relating to statistics given in my last Religious Summary, I was not able to refer to the passage in the Niroku Shinbun the accuracy of which "J. H." doubts. I have now done so and find that only figures are given. Since these figures would be approximately accurate if taken to refer to temples I think the correction suggested by "J. H." may be made. The passage in the Niroku Shinbun is one of those many obscure statements so often found in Japanese newspapers. There is nothing to indicate whether temples or adherents are referred to. I am much obliged to "J. H." for calling my attention to the matter.

I am, yours, etc.,

"THE WRITER OF THE SUMMARY."

THE BETHEL LIBEL CASE.

The libel action at the instance of E. T. Bethell against the North-China Daily News was concluded on Dec. 10th. Mr. J. C. E. Douglas and Mr. H. Browett appeared on behalf of the plaintiff, and Mr. T. Morgan Phillips and Mr. R. N. Macleod on behalf of the defendants.

Evidence was led on this and the previous day at considerable length and at its close Mr. Macleod addressed the jury for the defence. The question for them to decide was, as had already been stated, a very simple one, viz, how much would they award Mr. Bethell as damages? Referring to Mr. Bethell, counsel said it was an undoubted fact that he was a public character, having made himself so in Korea of his own accord. Mr. Macleod then dealt with the libel and the apology, the latter of which, he submitted, as published in the Daily News and contained in Mr. Anderson's letter, was ample. Mr. Bethell was only entitled to recover damages which he had either already suffered or was reasonably likely to suffer. Mr. Bethell had not proved to them that he had suffered any damages or that he was likely to suffer damages, and this being so counsel asked the jury to say that he had not been damaged. At the conclusion of his address Mr. Macleod asked the jury to mark their opinion of Mr. Bethell's behaviour and award to him only nominal damages.

Mr. Douglas next addressed the jury. They had heard Mr. Bethell and they could not be of any other opinion than that he was a straight-forward and honourable man and as far as journalism was concerned he stood for all that was best in journalism. He had been editing an independent paper and writing what he believed to be true in the interests of people and a country not strictly his own. Mr. Douglas referred the jury to the serious nature of the libel itself in saying that Mr. Bethell had confessed to a criminal offence, and contended that the defendants ought to have known of the press campaign which was being made by the Japanese against Mr. Bethell. The whole gist of the action was that Mr. Bethell had been guilty of graft in Korea, and to this the defendants had lent themselves by frequently accepting the telegrams from their Japanese correspondent in Tokio without first ascertaining whether they were based upon true or false statements. Mr. Douglas asked the jury to consider the conduct of the defendants at the trial, and submitted that on the words of the defendant's counsel alone in the conduct of the case the jury would be disposed to award very heavy damages. For two and a half hours Mr. Bethell had been kept in the witness-box undergoing a most bitter cross-examination. Mr. Douglas referred to the remarks which Mr. Phillips had made about himself in connection with the previous libel action in which he was a party, and said those remarks would have been better not made.

In summing up His Lordship said that the jury would have to remember that they had a kind of problem in moral algebra. They had to arrive at two things—what was the amount of reputation Mr. Bethell had lost, and what was the amount that should be paid to him? First what was Mr. Bethell's character before this libel? So far as they knew he was of the average character of the Englishman in the East, and apart from that the only evidence that had been given was that in October, 1907; he had been tried by Mr. Cockburn and bound over and in June last had been tried and found guilty of conduct calculated to stir up enmity between the Government and subjects of Korea. His Lordship could not see the least evidence in Mr. Bethell's character of a man who would be likely to misappropriate funds. It might make him a very is-eligible member of a "Peace at Any Price" Society or a Quakers Society, but it did not show the least bit that he was dishonest in the way that this libel represented him to be dishonest. They would then start off with a man of an average good character. Proceeding they must give value to the fact that in the telegram they had mentioned the authority of Japanese telegrams, and the phrase "reported from Japanese sources." They had to consider what effect that would have on the mind of an average Englishman reading it. Would he look on that telegram in the same way, would he give it the same value as he would to a telegram stating that the correspondent of the paper reported it, or The Times in London said so? Was there not a very great difference in the nature or conclusion in as much as Japanese sources and Japanese telegrams were referred to? His Lordship then passed on to deal with the evidence in mitigation. There was the argument of Mr. Phillips, which seemed to be supported by the evidence, that the libel was due a great deal to Mr. Bethell's own indiscretion in the way in which he dealt with these funds. If they thought so it would be something presumably in mitigation of damages. In the next place they had to consider the apology and other contradictions. If the apology had been frank, without shirking or casuistry it would go a long way to wipe out the effect of the libel. After hearing Mr. Green's evidence the conclusion His Lordship came to was that at the very worst they had been negligent. They would have seriously to consider whether Mr. Bethell ought not to have accepted the offer of the N.C. Daily News, and if they held so it seemed to him that they could not give him very much more than he would have received then. After a short absence the jury returned with a verdict of $3000 for the plaintiff. His Lordship gave judgment accordingly.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIAN RAILWAY LOAN.

London, 5.10 p.m., Dec. 16.
Two million sterling five per cent. bonds of the South Manchurian Railway, guaranteed by Japan, have been issued at £97.10.

(REUTERS'S SERVICE.)

BRITAIN LENDS AN ADMIRAL.

London, December 11.
Britain has agreed to lend Turkey an Admiral to reorganize her navy.

BULOW'S ADVICE TO AUSTRIA.

The Vienna Neue Freie Presse reports from Constantinople that the Ottoman ambassador at Berlin telegraphs that Bülow has strongly advised Aehrenthal to come to an agreement with Turkey, because perilous developments may arise at any moment.

THE KING'S HEALTH.

Later
The Lancet states on the best authority that there is no cause for anxiety as to the King's health.

THE NOBEL PRIZES.

The Nobel peace prize has been awarded to a Swede named Arnoldson. Dager, a Dane, receives the Chemistry prize. Professor Rutherford, of Manchester, is also the recipient of a prize, and the others are Frenchman and Germans.

THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

London, December 11.
Prince Buelow in the Reichstag said that the limitation of armaments was desirable but the difficulties in the way were considerable. Moreover, Germany was strategically in the most unfavourably situated position in the world. The foreign situation may become worse at any moment and Germany's peace would be seriously threatened if her armaments were below the standard the European situation demanded.

The Chancellor deprecated criticism of the difficulties of Austria. The interests of peace were best served by a clear pronouncement of the seriousness with which Germany regarded her duties as an ally.

The speech was received with cheers.

THE CRISIS IN THE BALKANS.

London, December 12.
Austria's attitude has undergone a change during the past few days, it is supposed under the influence of Berlin. The central Power is manifesting a conciliatory disposition and a willingness to negotiate with Turkey.

WHITE AUSTRALIA.

Melbourne.—The House of Representatives has passed a Bill rendering shipowners liable to a fine of £100 for every Chinese stowaway.

GERMAN TROOPS IN CHINA.

Later.
The Foreign Minister has stated in the Reichstag that it is deemed expedient to refrain from the immediate withdrawal of troops from China, as this might have a disquieting effect upon the population at the present juncture. Still the Government is determined to decrease considerably their forces in North China as soon as possible.

HOLLAND AND VENEZUELA.

London, December 12.
The Dutch men-of-war Steensberg (?) and Gelderland have left Willemstadt (Curacao, V.I.) for La Guayra cleared for action.

TO SAVE AUSTRIA'S FACE.

Austria's reply to the last Russian note proposes negotiations among the Powers with a view to recognizing the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina by a protocol which may then be submitted to the Conference. This procedure is calculated to save Austria's face.

ASQUITH AND THE LORDS.

Later.
Mr. Asquith, speaking at the National Liberal Club, declared that the veto of the Lords must be made the dominating issue in British politics, but it would be absurd for the Lords to presume to dictate to the Government the time for dissolution. The Government would choose its own time and would stand or fall by the Budget, which would raise in the acutest form the controversy as to whether a policy of social reform is needed by the country, whether free trade or protection.

THE RUSSIAN DEFICIT.

The Duma has adopted the Bill, which includes a vote of 150 million roubles to cover the estimated deficit for 1909.

SIR THOMAS SUTHERLAND ON CHINA.

London, December 13.
Sir Thomas Sutherland, speaking at the meeting of the P. & O. Company, said China is one of the most promising fields for the extension of railways, which promises to effect immeasurable changes. He stated that in the course of next year thousands upon thousands of Chinese pigs are likely to be imported into Britain, thanks to the services of refrigeration.

ROOSEVELT'S MESSAGE.

Congressmen are incensed at the passage in Roosevelt's message where he scathingly criticises Congress for restricting the duties of secret service police, hinting that Congress objected to investigation into the malpractices of certain legislators. The House has appointed a Committee to consider the steps to be taken to rebuke Roosevelt, who appears eager to fight and is prepared to produce a mass of material justifying his strictures.

BRITISH COLUMBIA AND THE JAPANESE.

A mass meeting at Vancouver has resolved upon urging the Dominion Government to abrogate the treaty with Japan, and to legislate for the exclusion of Asiatics from Canada.

CHINESE CONSUL GENERAL IN LONDON.

Mr. Forster, manager of the engineering firm of Forster & Sons, St. Helens, has been appointed Chinese Consul General in London.

THE BALKAN CRISIS:

MUTUAL CONCESSIONS FORESHADOWED.

London, December 14.
Semi-official statements from Vienna announce that Turkey is undertaking to do her utmost to put an end to the boycott. Austria is negotiating with the Porte in a spirit of willingness to grant compensation for the annexations.

AMERICAN NATIONAL DEFENCE.

Washington.—The Chairman of the House of Representatives' Committee for Military Affairs has introduced a bill providing for an emergency Volunteer army of two million men.

GERMAN NAVAL EXPANSION.

The fourth German Dreadnought has been launched at Kiel.

TAFT TO VISIT PANAMA.

Later.
Prior to his inauguration Mr. Taft is to visit Panama. It is reported that his visit is in connection with the disquieting reports as to the prospects of the Canal works.

MONTENEGRO AND AUSTRIA.

Montenegro has imposed the maximum tariff rate on Austrian imports.

HOLLAND AND VENEZUELA.

Later.
A Dutch cruiser has seized a Venezuelan coast-guard ship outside Puerto Cabello. She sent the crew ashore and took the vessel to Curacao.

A WAR-CLAIM REJECTED.

St. Petersburg.—The Supreme Prize Court has rejected the claim of £100,000 as compensation for the Oldhamia, which was sunk during the Japanese war with a cargo of petroleum.

ENGLISH POLITICIANS AND THE TURKISH PARLIAMENT.

London, December 14.
An address signed by 350 leading members of the House of Commons, including Mr. Asquith and Mr. Balfour, is being sent to the Turkish Parliament on the occasion of its assembling on December 17th. It expresses the hope that the child of peaceful revolution will herald peace, liberty and prosperity.

AN INTERNATIONAL ENGAGEMENT.

Earl Granard is engaged to Beatrice, daughter of the American millionaire banker, Ogden Mills.

TROUBLE ON A BRITISH CRUISER.

Later.
All leave has been stopped on board the cruiser Amethyst at Portsmouth owing to some of the gun-fittings having been thrown overboard.

HOLLAND AND VENEZUELA.

Holland denies that she is at war with Venezuela. She is merely adopting a policy of reprisals and captures against Castro's Government.

COMMOTION AT CARACAS.

London, December 15.
The Dutch naval demonstration and the seizure of a Venezuelan vessel have given rise to some excitement at Caracas. Conflicts have taken place between Castro's supporters and opponents. Several persons have been killed and others wounded. Vice-President Gomez has proclaimed the action of the Dutch as equivalent to an invasion and has declared martial law.

OBITUARY.

Count Muravieff, Russian Ambassador to Rome, has died suddenly from apoplexy.

AUSTRIA AND TURKEY.

Later.

The Austrian Ambassador, in an interview with the Grand Vizier, proposed as compensation for the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina an increase in the customs to 15 per cent (to which Germany has also agreed) the introduction of five monopolies, the abolition of Austrian post offices, the withdrawal of Austrian protection from Catholics in Albania, and a guarantee of the integrity of Novibazar. The possibility is also hinted at of compensation on account of the share of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the Ottoman debt.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

Colonel Seely, replying to Mr. Taylor in the House of Commons, said the reports of the Straits Opium Commission had just been received and would be laid on the table in due course. The Government was now considering the Governor of Hongkong's opium recommendations, and the correspondence would also be laid before Parliament in due course.

ANOTHER MARATHON RACE.

The Canadian Longboat beat Durando in the Marathon race at New York. Durando collapsed at the end of the 26th mile.

TROUBLE IN ALGERIA.

Fifty foreign legionaries and German recruits held up a train in which was General Vigny in Southern Algeria. No violence was done. They fled towards Morocco, and 49 of them were made prisoners.

THE DUTCH AND VENEZUELA.

The Dutch have captured a small Venezuelan gunboat called the Maya.

THE FIVE PER CENT LOAN.

December 15.

The London Standard states that two million sterling five per cent. South Manchurian Railway Bonds will be issued shortly, guaranteed by the Japanese Government.

SIR ROBERT HART ON CHINA.

The London Chamber of Commerce have given a banquet to Sir Robert Hart, who, in the course of a speech, predicted a great future for China. He said he believed the Regent was unceasing in the work of progress. Mr. McKinnon Wood said China must rejoice at the Japan-America agreement, which guarantees peace and the open door.

THE PANAMA CANAL ALLEGATIONS.

ANOTHER MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

London, December 17.

President Roosevelt in a special message to Congress denounces in the most vehement manner the allegations of corruption in the acquisition of the Panama Canal as infamous libels upon the individual officials concerned, as well as upon the Government. The real offender, he declares, is Pulitzer, Editor of the New York World, and it is therefore a high national duty to bring to justice this wicked vilifier of the American people.

SIR ROBERT HART.

Later.

Sir Robert Hart was presented with the freedom of the City of London yesterday evening.

STORMY DEBATE IN THE DUMA.

There has been a stormy debate in the Duma with reference to the Bill for the indemnification of the victims of the terrorists and Socialists. The Labourites denounced the executions and the tortures. The President resigned in consequence of the attitude of the Conservatives and demanded an apology from the Labourites.

GERMAN COUNT IN A STRANGE ROLE.

Later.

The ringleader of the Algerian revolutionaries has been arrested. He is stated to be a German Count employed by the desertion agencies.

The French Press is most indignant. Le Temps asks whether foreigners have a right to sow disorder in the French Army.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

The Times correspondent at St. Petersburg telegraphs that Russia, after consultation with Great Britain and France, accepts Austria's proposal for a preliminary exchange of views by the Cabinets with reference to the question of the annexations, but the acceptance only concerns the modus procedendi without prejudicing the programme of the Conference.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

GERMAN FINANCE.

London, December 10.

Berlin.—The Reichstag Committee dealing with finance and the Ministerial reform scheme has rejected the proposal to transfer to the Debt account of the Empire the matricular contributions of federal states, amounting to £7,000,000. The Committee ignored the Minister's protest, and did not arrange to make any provision for reduction of the Debt.

"THINKING IMPERIALLY."

London, December 11.

Melbourne.—The Commonwealth premier favours a plan for the mobilization of the troops of the whole Empire, provided the Australian section can retain its own identity and control.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg.—The Austrian reply to the Russian Note with reference to a Conference on Balkan affairs displays a conciliatory tendency. The prospects of peace are improved.

Vienna.—Aehrenthal appears disposed to shut his eyes to the Turkish boycott and to consider the Turkish demand for financial compensation. The public desires the prompt conclusion of an Austro-Turkish agreement.

THE NEW "ENTENTE."

New York.—The Democratic senators are dissatisfied with the recent American-Japanese Notes. Some declare the exchange amounts to an alliance. Secretary Root voluntarily sent the Notes to the Senate, as if desirous of giving information.

PERSIA.

London, December 12.

Teheran.—The Court is endeavouring to confuse the new Council of 50 courtiers demanded by the Shah, with the reformed Parliament demanded by Great Britain and Russia.

THE DUMA.

St. Petersburg.—The Duma has adopted the bill for a loan of 45 million pounds.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

On the Stock Exchange all Japanese securities are higher. Chinese are fairly supported. Russians are active.

ANTI-ANARCHISM IN INDIA.

Later.

Calcutta.—The Summary Justice Bill has passed in the vice-regal Council with practical unanimity. Immediate action will be taken against certain associations notorious for systematic lawlessness. An impression prevails that the new anti-anarchist legislation will surprise the Indians by its moderation. The Europeans are disappointed at the absence of any provision facilitating the detection of crime.

PRIZE COURT DECISION CONFIRMED.

London, December 14.

St. Petersburg.—The Admiralty Appeal Court has confirmed the judgment given by the Libau Prize Court justifying the capture and destruction of the British steamer Oltchamnia by Russian warships on May 18th, 1905.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

AUSTRIA AND THE BRITISH PRESS.

The Vienna Government has declared its readiness to resume negotiations with Turkey in reference to Bosnia and Herzegovina. The official Fremdenblatt violently denounces the British press as the source of all evils afflicting Austrian foreign policy.

THE AMERICAN TARIFF.

New York.—Inquiries made by manufacturers everywhere indicate that they favour a reduction of the duty on raw materials for their industries. They are also unanimous in their desire for a reduction of the duty on manufactured articles.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Ottawa.—The Government representative visiting Shanghai in February will investigate the extraordinary increase in Chinese immigration.

THE STATE OF IRELAND.

London, December 15.

The Times calls serious attention to the increasing lawlessness in Ireland and declares that the inaction of the Executive practically amounts to complicity in the land war and the unconfined agitation against the letting of lands. Individual liberties are everywhere threatened and ordinary law is treated with open contempt. The police patrols are being attacked by armed peasants.

INDIA.

Calcutta.—There is little objection on the part of the Bengal native press to the new summary justice act. The Bombay papers heartily approve of the utility of the measure as is shown by the bolder action of the Bengal police in arresting several violent agitators.

THE BALKANS.

London, December 16.

St. Petersburg.—Russia accepts Austria's proposal for a preliminary exchange of views between the European Cabinets with reference to the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The accord between England, Russia and France, and the harmony with their views displayed by Italy and Turkey, produce confidence in the result of the negotiations.

AMENITIES OF THE PRESS.

London, December 17.

Berlin.—Signs of concern are being manifested at the efforts made daily by the German press to cast suspicion on England. The British Government is accused of fomenting the trouble in the Near East with the express object of hindering an Austro-Turkish agreement and benefiting by European quarrels.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

JAPAN-COLOMBIA.

The Treaty concluded between Japan and the Republic of Colombia was signed yesterday in Washington.

THE DEBATE IN THE DUMA.

On the 11th instant the Duma was called upon to debate the Bill presented by the Government providing for the issue of a loan of from 400 to 500 millions of roubles, namely, 300 millions to redeem short-period state loans, and 150 millions to meet extraordinary expenditures. The Opposition, especially the Socialist Popular Party and the Labour Party, ranged themselves against the measure, and a section of the Constitutional Popular Party were for limiting the Bill to the redemption clause. But when the Minister of Finance gave an explanation of the measure, he was vehemently applauded by the Octoberists and the Right—namely, the Government Party—and when the question was put to the vote, a large majority declared for the Government Bill in its entirety.

(From the Japanese Consul at Chicago.)

AMERICAN RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. Thomas Brooke, who recently visited Japan on business connected with the Seattle Exhibition, has arrived in this city. On the evening of the 9th instant he attended a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, and made a strong speech to the effect that the recent raising of rates on the American railways had done much injury to the trade of the United States with East Asia, and that if the law in question was to be interpreted as the officials had interpreted it, there was urgent necessity to amend its provisions.

FISHING BOAT DISASTER.

According to a telegram from Sydney, six or seven fishing boats have foundered in the neighbourhood of Broome, West Australia, and six or seven Japanese subjects have been lost.

(RECEIVED BY THE "HOCHI SHIMBUN.")

BULOW ON ARMAMENTS.

Prince Bülow states that he is entirely opposed to any international agreement for restricting armaments. He considers that the time demands expansion, as things can not be regarded with confidence.

(“DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST” SERVICE.)

ALLEGED NEGOTIATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Berlin, December 10.

Herr Dernburg, Secretary of State for the Colonies, speaking in the Reichstag, stated that the report in the Standard that negotiations are proceeding between Germany and Great Britain as to the purchase of Walfish Bay, is a pure invention.

AUSTRIA AND THE RUSSIAN PROPOSALS.

The answer of the Austrian Government, according to the Russian proposals as presented in the Russian Note, has been at last forwarded to St. Petersburg.

Austria, in the reply, consents to the discussion of the question of the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, provided the annexation itself is unquestionably taken as accomplished.

Mr. Buxton, President of the Balkan Committee, is inciting the boycott against Austria at Constantinople and agitating in favour of a Balkan alliance. The ports on the Levant have warned Germany against shipping German merchandise through Austrian ports or by Austrian ships. The Austrian Ambassador at Constantinople has been definitely ordered to remain at his post.

CLOSING OF RUSSIAN PORTS.

The Duma has passed the Bill concerning the closing of Trans-Baikal and the Amur Province against Free Trade.

M. Kokowitzow, the Russian Minister of Finance, proved the profitableness of the Amur Railway, built at an expense of 300 million roubles.

CURTAILMENT OF ARMAMENTS.

Berlin, December 11.

Prince Bülow, speaking again in the Reichstag, emphasized the desirability of a curtailment of international armaments.

The armaments of Germany, said Prince Bülow, were of a defensive character, offensive armaments being unnecessary.

Prince Bülow refused to admit any secondary influence or undercurrent in the Foreign Office, and concluded by repeating his former assertion, that the alliance with Austria was unshakable.

Herr von Schoen, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, speaking after Prince Bülow, said that a further reduction of the German troops in North China is planned.

RETIREMENT OF GERMAN AMBASSADOR.

Count Monts, the German Ambassador at Rome, will retire early next year, his successor being Herr von Fagow, now Minister at Luxembourg.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH TURKEY.

The Austrian Ambassador at Constantinople has been instructed to further negotiate with the Sublime Porte as to a political understanding on the basis of economic concessions, with the exclusion of the boycott question.

THE ALLEGED ALLIANCE WITH ENGLAND.

It is officially stated at St. Petersburg that M. Iswolski, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, has not made any statement regarding the formal conclusion of an Anglo-Russian alliance.

ALLEGED ASSISTANCE TO AUSTRIA

Berlin, December 12.

Herr von Schoen, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, speaking in the Reichstag, denied absolutely that Germany had offered to Austria German troops for war or any other purpose. The Reichstag has been adjourned to the 12th of January.

THE DIAMOND MINING INDUSTRY.

Herr Dernburg, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, speaking in the Reichstag, expressed himself confident as to the development of the diamond-mining industry in Luederitzland, in South-West Africa.

THE BALKAN QUESTION:

THE ATTITUDE OF RUSSIA.

In a Communiqué from St. Petersburg the Russian Government expresses itself favourably as to the speech of Prince Bülow, and states that there are no differences between Russia and Germany with regard to the Balkan question.

PRESIDENT CASTRO IN PARIS.

President Castro of Venezuela has arrived at Paris. The French Government has asked the President to be reserved in his statements to the Press.

Two Dutch men-of-war, cleared for action, have arrived at La Guayra.

THE NEW PERSIAN PARLIAMENT.

The Shah has nominated the members of the new Parliament with a period of office of two years and the right of control over the actions of the Ministers.

THE POSITION OF THE AUSTRIAN PREMIER

Berlin, December 14.

The truth of the rumours as to the uncertainty of the position of Freiherr von Aehrenthal as Austrian Premier is absolutely denied at Vienna.

RUSSIAN FOREIGN POLICY.

Very sharp attacks against M. Iswolski, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, are expected in the debate in the Duma.

CAPTURE OF A GUARDSHIP.

The Dutch warship Geldermann has captured a Venezuelan coast guardship at Puerto Caballo without any fighting.

President Castro has arrived at Berlin for surgical treatment.

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN AUSTRIA AND TURKEY.

Negotiations have commenced between Austria and Turkey as to an understanding on the annexation question.

PRINCE LEOPOLD OF BAVARIA.

The fiftieth anniversary of military service of Prince Leopold of Bavaria has been celebrated at Munich in a very enthusiastic manner.

CASTOR'S RECEPTION AT BERLIN.

Berlin, December 15.

President Castro has been received at Berlin in a friendly way, but not officially.

He has sent a telegram of salutation to the Kaiser.

MARTIAL LAW SUSPENDED.

Martial law, which was declared some weeks ago at Prague, has been suspended.

AUSTRO-TURKISH NEGOTIATIONS.

The Sublime Porte has thanked the German Government for the efforts at mediation made by it to cause a change of attitude of Austria towards Turkey.

The Russian Note in answer to that sent by Austria is couched in conciliatory terms.

Austria will concede to demands and agree to the payment of financial compensation to Turkey.

THE NEW MILITARY ATTACHE TO BERLIN.

Enver Bey, the author of the Turkish movement for liberty, has been nominated Military Attaché at Berlin.

EXPORT DUTY ON DIAMONDS.

An export duty of ten marks per carat has been imposed in South-West Africa on uncut diamonds.

ANNEXATION OF KOMORO ISLANDS.

The French Chamber has declared the Komoro Islands (N.W. of Madagascar) a French colony.

PRESENT TO KING EDWARD.

The Kaiser will send as a Christmas present to King Edward some pieces of art work from the imperial manufactory at Cadinen.

AUSTRO-TURKISH NEGOTIATIONS.

Berlin, December 16.

The prospects of a compromise between Austria and Turkey as to the financial side of the Bosnian question are favourable.

ADHERENCE TO THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

The letter of King Victor Emanuel of Italy in answer to the letter of the Emperor Francis Joseph, sent last October, is couched in very cordial terms and expresses the King's willingness to be faithful to the Triple Alliance.

THE NEW PRESIDENT'S POLICY.

Mr. Taft, the President elect of the United States, has declared to German journalists that he is willing to prosecute the policy of President Roosevelt towards Germany, and that there are well founded prospects of a satisfactory revision of the tariff.

HOLLAND AND VENEZUELA.

A second vessel of the Government of Venezuela has been captured by Dutch warships.

More Dutch warships are leaving for Venezuela. Great enthusiasm prevails at the Hague.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

VLADIVOSTOCK.

St. Petersburg, December 9.

The second reading of a bill providing the abolition of Vladivostok as a free port took place on Dec. 9th in the Duma. M. Schintieff a leader of the October Party said that the bill had been passed by the committee. Discussion followed, after which M. Schipoff made a speech. The Poland Party and some other sections opposed the bill. The majority however, were in its favour.

JAPANESE IN VLADIVOSTOCK.

Vladivostok, December 10.

Two Japanese in Vladivostok were ordered on Dec. 9th, by the Russian officer commanding the Naval station, to retire from the city. The officer did not give an explanation as to the expulsion. The Japanese Consul is about to lodge a protest with the Governor of the district.

THE SENATE.

San Francisco, December 10.

The Senate has demanded of President Roosevelt the submission of the documents regarding the American-Japanese Notes to the Senate. He complied with the request. While introducing the documents, he said that they were submitted simply as information but not for discussion, and Secretary Root ordered Mr. Cannon, a delegate of the State Office, to give an explanation of the documents to a special committee. The Democrats declare that since the notes were not regarded as a treaty they should be open to public discussion, while the Republicans maintain that, being of the nature of a treaty, they should be submitted to a secret meeting. Though the Democrats are endeavouring to oppose this arrangement on the ground that it has not obtained the ratification of the Senate, there is little prospect of their success.

CONGRESS.

The hope expressed in the Presidential message that the force of secret agents be enlarged in order that the movements of Congressmen should be closely watched has given offence to the members of the lower House. The leaders of the Republican party have appointed a committee for investigating the cause of Mr. Roosevelt's words on this subject.

AMERICAN NATIONAL DEFENCE.

Mr. Luke E. Wright, Secretary of State for War, explaining the Military budget, said that if war were to break out with a first-class Power, 350,000 men as a defending army would be necessary, and therefore besides the standing army, at least 250,000 of the militia must be thoroughly disciplined and reserved in readiness for emergencies. He urged Congress to pass the Bill.

THE AMERICAN BATTLESHIP SQUADRON.

New York, December 11.

The American Fleet will undergo repairs immediately after its return from its long cruise. The Naval Department has asked the Government to disburse $4,000,000 for the necessary expenses.

CONGRESS.

New York, December 12.

In consequence of the allegation that President Roosevelt has insulted the members of the House of Representatives in his message, they passed, on Dec. 11th, a resolution of censure. The resolution was hailed with sympathy in the Senate, where, on Dec. 14th, a similar motion will probably be raised. On the other hand, the President has implied that the rejection of a bill providing for the defraying of expenses connected with the employment of detectives meant that the members were guilty of unlawful actions. He added that most of the Judges were constantly taking measures favourable to millionaires. It is said that Mr. Roosevelt's confidential secretary and others connected with the Government departments have advised him to withdraw the words in question. The President, however, refuses to do so. Many of the newspapers express antagonistic views, and some say that President Roosevelt seems to consider himself the only wise man in the world. Other journals aver that the early expiration of his term has engendered a sense of irresponsibility which has led him to add the objectionable passage to the Presidential Message. It is generally believed that President Roosevelt will at length expunge the clause in question.

RUSSIAN LOAN.

St. Petersburg, December 13.

In the Duma, the bill providing for issuing a loan of 450,000,000 roubles has been passed in spite of opposition from the Constitutional Democratic Party, who maintained that there was no necessity to consider the bill while the Budget was left pending.

CONGRESS AND PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

New York, December 13.

The dispute between Congress and President Roosevelt has become more serious. On Dec. 14th the House of Representatives will appoint a special committee in order to enforce the recent resolution adopted against the President. He is reported to have declared that there was no necessity to reiterate his insistence toward the representatives who were about to censure him, and that he would rather disclose unlawful actions committed by them.

There is condemnation among the public of President Roosevelt because a clear report has not been given as to a portion of the money which was said to have been paid for the Panama Canal work. A large number of lawyers who were connected with the affair, however, gave explicit explanations. The suspicion was therefore cleared. The President has decided to send Mr. Taft to carry out further investigations as to the canal work and expense paid.

CONGRESS AND PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

New York, December 14.

On Dec. 14th the proposal to elect a special committee in order to censure President Roosevelt was considered in the House of Representatives. After a debate, they decided to re-consider the proposal on Dec. 25th or 26th. It is said that the postponement was attributable to the strong attitude of the President towards Congress. It is also said that the agitation in Congress will be abandoned.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

According to a Washington telegram, a convention has been concluded between Japan and the United States in reference to the immigration affair. Count Komura, Minister for Foreign Affairs, will make a speech on the treaty at the first sitting of the Diet and will explain that the entry of Asiatic immigrants is strictly prohibited in the United States. It is said in America that the prohibition means a diplomatic success on the part of the United States.

THE AMERICAN NAVY.

San Francisco, December 15.

In connexion with comment on the American Navy, Rear-Admiral Evans has said that the battleships which were built last year were superior to the Dreadnought in every respect, which fact was well known to all naval experts. Referring to the criticism that the positions of the guns on the ships were low, he said that the barbette was regarded as being too elevated.

THE PANAMA CANAL AFFAIR.

President Roosevelt sent a note to the Senate on Dec. 15th in which memorandum he referred to the serious comments of the various newspapers with regard to the Panama Canal works and said he intended to lodge a prosecution in Court.

NOTES BY MR. J. H. BLACKBURN.

(a) This move was introduced by Teichmann soon after his return from South America, and it has been named the Rio de Janeiro defence. Lasker thinks it the best.

(b) Up to this point the moves are identical y the same as in the eighth game, and this move is certainly an improvement upon Q-R 5, as played on that occasion.

(c) The plausible looking move is B x P ch. but it would not have turned out satisfactorily, for suppose B x P ch. 17. K x B, Q-R 5 ch. 18. K-Kt sq, Q x Kt. 19. B x P, Q x Q, 20. R x Q, B-R 3, 21. R-K 7 K-R B sq. 22. P-R 4, intending R-Q sq or R 3, according to Black's play.

(d) White must have seen that he could have taken the B. P. but probably dismissed it as not being decisive enough. Something like the following might have happened:—17. B x P (not Kt x P, for in that case B x Kt followed by Q-K 4 would win a piece) B x B, 18. Kt x B, B x P, 19. Q-R-Q sq, Q-Kt 4, 20. Q-K 3 Q-Kt 3, 21. Q-Kt 3, and White has a slight advantage, but perhaps not sufficient to win. Black could also, in reply to B x P, play B-K sq, then follows 18. B x B, R x Kt, 19. Q-Kt 5 R-Kt sq, 20. B-Kt 3 with the better game.

(e) Black's Q P is now very weak.

(f) On the same lines as the eighth game, but in this position it does not turn out so well; if Black had played R-K sq and then to K 3, supporting the weak Q P, and at the same time threatening R-Kt 3, it would have been more to the purpose.

(g) Taking immediate advantage of Black's weak play.

(h) Of course he cannot allow White to play Q-Q 7.

(i) If instead of this Black had played R x P, then White would have obtained the better position as follows:—22. R x P, 23. R x P, R-Kt 3, 24. R x R ch Q x R, 25. P-K R 3 P-K B 3, 26. R-Q 2, and ought to win.

(j) This is all very pretty, and must have somewhat startled the onlookers, for if Q x B then Q x R, B-B 4 would have been equally effective, but Tarrasch, no doubt, considered that it would be better first to force the queen off the king's file by the threatened mate.

(k) He could also have played P-Kt 3.

(l) It appears Lasker was short of time, which probably accounts for his not seeing that P-K R 4 would still have given drawing chances.

BABY BORN WITH TERRIBLE ECZEMA

Which Spread Over Body, Head and Limbs—No Rest or Sleep for Mother or Child—Doctor Would Not Let Him be Bathed—Tiny Sufferer Grew Worse Every Day.

FOUND A PERFECT CURE IN CUTICURA

"My little boy was born with his legs and the lower part of his body covered with eczema. I told the doctor about it. He gave me a lotion for it and told me not to wash the little one. I carried out my orders until his head, face and shoulders were covered with the humor. Then I informed the doctor that the lotion was doing no good. He gave me a different lotion and an ointment, but still insisted on saying not to bathe the baby. I used the remedies but he got no better. There was no rest, no sleep for baby or myself and I was worn out. Baby was very thin and seemed to be getting worse every day. I resolved to give the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment a trial. I am thankful to-day that I did for one set cured him. He is as fat now and sleeps as well as any child of fifteen months and I still use Cuticura Soap for his bath. ## EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

Filatures are still weak, buyers standing aloof as usual at this season. Business in "Velvet Woman" Kadedas and "one horse" chops is brisk. A rise has taken place owing to scarcity of stocks. "Two horse" and "three horse" chops also have been moderately engaged.

On Dec. 17th stocks were: filatures 33,959 bales Re-reels, 7,395 bales; Kakeda 2,308 bales; and Sundry, 74 bales.

Groom, representing the Oriental Hotel, Ltd., Kobe, against Mr. Yabe Kunitaro, a building contractor, of Yokohama, asking for a declaration by the Court cancelling the compulsory execution which was enforced by Defendant upon Plaintiff's properties. The Court gave judgment for Defendant, the claim being dismissed with costs.

DOMESTIC POLITICS.

Saturday, December 19.

On the 19th inst. the Parliamentary members of the Seiyun-kai held a general meeting in Tokyo. Marquis Saionji was unable to be present, but for the rest the meeting was largely attended. Mr. Matsuda took the chair, and made a report showing that the Party has now 194 followers in the Lower House. An address from Marquis Saionji was then read. It congratulated the Party heartily on having secured such a substantial majority at the general elections; it spoke of the correspondingly great responsibilities that devolved on them, and it promised that all matters relating to their attitude in the House should be determined by consultation as heretofore. The Marquis spoke of his own health as not yet fully restored, though he hoped for recovery. Mr. Sugita Teiichi then announced his resignation of the Presidency of the House of Representatives, and asked the meeting to entrust to him the honour of nominating his successor. This proposal was accepted by acclaim, and Mr. Sugita then named Mr. Haseba Junko. With regard to the post of Vice-President there was some discussion, certain members being evidently of the opinion that the Party which possessed a majority of the whole House was entitled to gather all the plums. This view did not, however, commend itself to the meeting, and the matter was finally left to headquarters; which means, we imagine, that the post of Vice-President will go to one of the other parties. Indeed it is already stated that conferences have taken place on the subject, and that it has been proposed to the Progressists to nominate Mr. Taketomi, and to the Daido Club to nominate Mr. Shiba Shiro. The Progressists do not seem disposed to adopt the former suggestion, and if the Daido Club also disagree, the duty of appointing the Vice-President may revert to the Seiyun-kai also.

The Progressists have not yet arranged their internal disputes. Everything now seems to rest with Mr. Oishi. On the one hand the new members are said to have determined that an amicable arrangement is possible along one route only, namely, the appointment of two leaders in the House, Mr. Inukai and Mr. Oishi. But the latter persists in his refusal to work with the former, and if Mr. Inukai stepped down at this stage it would be a complete lowering of his flag. Count Okuma is said to be in a very despondent frame of mind on account of the affair.

Meanwhile the Yukokai has dissolved its organisation with the intention of joining the new and as yet nameless party which is to be under the leadership of Messrs. Kono Hironaka and Shimada Saburo, and which hopes to attract Mr. Ozaki Yukio into its ranks.

Our readers will remember that a dispute recently took place among certain members of the House of Peers with regard to the election of a new member, and that it eventuated in some secessions from the ranks of the Kenkyu-kai. These seceders and their friends have now formed a club called the Fuso-kai, which is expected eventually to number 20 members. Among the leaders are Counts Tokugawa and Hirosawa.

Monday, December 21.

The Parliamentary members of the Progressist Party held a meeting on the 20th inst. to compose if possible the dissensions by which the Party is now torn. In behalf of the new members Mr. Fukuda made a statement to the effect that he and his confreres, having gathered from the newspapers that a split existed among the foremost men in the Party, appreciated the necessity of putting a stop to such a suicidal state of affairs, and therefore proposed as the best remedy that the leadership in the Lower House should be entrusted to the two heads of the nominally opposing sections, so as to restore genuine coöperation.

This proposal brought Mr. Oishi to his feet with a speech which amounted virtually to an indictment of Mr. Inukai. He set out by saying that whether he were elected sole leader in the House, or leader in combination with others, he did not intend to serve. No one regretted the existence of dissensions more than he did, and seeing that they were due primarily to the formation of an anti-progressive faction, he had proposed to Mr. Inukai, the leader of that faction, that it should abandon its dissentient attitude. Unfortunately Mr. Inukai had not consented. For his own part, the possession or the non-possession of office in the Party did not make any difference to him, and he was quite ready to coöperate frankly under the sole leadership of Mr. Inukai. He thought that the question of office was altogether of minor importance.

Mr. Inukai said that he had not intended to speak at this meeting but he felt that silence might promote misconception of what Mr. Oishi had said. He agreed entirely that the question of office was wholly secondary. So far as he himself was concerned, he thought that all his hearers would bear him out when he said that he had never struggled for office in any shape or form. He did not desire to be chosen one of the leaders of the party in the Lower House. In fact he had rather not be chosen, for the position was more troublesome than honourable. At all events it was a merely nominal post, for, when he had held it in former years, he had never taken any step without consulting his colleagues, and Mr. Oishi also, during his tenure of the office, had adopted a similar consultative course. The office being thus unimportant, except in the event of some great public question arising—an event which there was no reason to apprehend during the coming session—he could not appreciate the logic of making a fuss about acceptance or refusal. As for the statement that during a meeting at Count Okuma's residence some time ago, he had declined to accede to certain proposals which would have made for the concord of the Party, he had no recollection of anything of the kind. Various matters had indeed been discussed, but as it had been agreed, at Mr. Oishi's instance, that they should remain private, he did not deem it expedient to make any statement now. The whole question of leadership in the House ought, in his opinion, to be entirely subordinated to the wishes of the majority.

Various speeches and proposals followed, but finally Mr. Fukuda's motion was put to the meeting and was carried by 36 votes against 25, the majority thus declaring in favour of dual leadership. This, however, did not settle the question, for Mr. Oishi again signified his determination not to accept the post, and some of the members roundly charged him with inconsistency since, in his opening speech, he had avowed willingness to abide by the wishes of the majority. It may be said that the meeting broke up re infecta, for everything thereafter depended upon the possibility of overcoming Mr. Oishi's resolve. It looks very much as though the difference between these two politicians is incapable of being adjusted, and in that case a national misfortune will have to be recorded, namely, a permanent split in the ranks of the Progressists and the creation of another ineffective political section.

The Daido Club also held a meeting on the 20th inst., but the only business was a proclamation of the Party's disinterestedness in refraining from all attempts to secure for itself any of the plums of Parliament. The Asahi Shimbun laughs at this declaration of unselfishness by a body of men whose weakness entitles them to hope for nothing better than the crumbs which may fall from the Seiyun-kai's table. Nevertheless even among the members of the Daido Club satisfaction cannot be said to reign supreme. Some of them want to be up and making a show of doing even though there is nothing to do. However much they may be a Government Party, these restless spirits can not easily reconcile themselves to the rôle of merely echoing the thunder: they want to have a hand also in forging the bolts.

Meanwhile the Seiyun-kai are pursuing the even tenor of their way in conscious strength. They have elected three members to be their leaders in the Lower House, namely, Mr. Motoda Hajime, Dr. Hatoyama Kazuo and Mr. Oka Ikuzo; three barristers, of whom the last has abandoned the law in favour of journalism.

We may mention here that one result of the visit recently paid to Europe by Messrs. Ota and Hayashida, Secretaries of the Upper and the Lower House, respectively, is that greater facilities are to be extended to journalists and news agencies in the approaching session of the Diet. Hitherto only one ticket of admission has been given to each journal, but it will henceforth receive two which will give their holders access to every part of the Houses. Moreover a room is to be specially allotted in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce for the accommodation of the representatives of the press.

Tuesday, December 22.

A curious point arose at the general meeting of Parliamentary members of the Seiyun-kai held on the 21st inst. The Seiyun-kai are showing a great deal of magnanimity in abandoning the post of Vice-President of the Lower House, but it appears that a great many of the members are not disposed to make this concession unconditional. These objectors raised their voices very audibly at the meeting, and insisted that the Party's endorsement of the Progressists' nominee should be deferred until the name of the nominee was known. This suggestion appears to have been directed principally against Mr. Kato Masanosuke, who is understood to be strongly lié with Mr. Oishi Masami, against whom a section of the Seiyun-kai is resolutely arrayed. It was justly pointed out by the moderates that to saddle the Party's action with such a proviso would deprive it of the nature of a genuine concession, since the Progressists' nominee would become virtually the choice of the Seiyun-kai. The discussion grew so warm that the leaders thought it advisable to close the doors, and after 20 minutes of secret session it was announced that an understanding existed with the Progressists, and that the latter's nominee would be one of three men, Mr. Taketomi, Mr. Minoura (the present holder of the post) and Mr. Koizuka. Politics in Japan certainly differ very considerably from politics in Europe or America. It is not the custom with political parties in the Occident to distribute any of the plums of office to their opponents.

There is as yet no sign of reconciliation in the ranks of the Progressists. So far as we can gather from the somewhat confused accounts that are published, Mr. Oishi Masami has not himself inspired the recalcitrancy. It would be perhaps truer to say that he has been hoisted on the shoulders of the recalcitrants, and that while his sympathies are with them, he is not prepared to go as far as they want to be led. It appears that before the meeting on the 20th inst. these malcontents came together and decided that the leadership in the House should be entrusted to Mr. Inukai alone, and that they would absent themselves from the general meeting before which this problem was to come. They were with difficulty persuaded to abandon this course, and to follow the more reasonable route of attending the meeting and supporting Mr. Inukai in his refusal to be a joint leader. Our readers know how that meeting ended, and it has now to be added that an attempt made on the 21st to shake Mr. Oishi's resolution failed signally. Thus on the one hand we have Mr. Oishi refusing to accede to the wishes of the majority of the Party in spite of the earnest solicitations of Mr. Inukai's followers, and on the other hand we have a number of Mr. Oishi's followers declaring that they will leave the Party if he abandons his resolve against joint service, while we have a smaller number who declare their intention of leaving the Party in any circumstances. It is hard to see how these differences can be composed, but the strength of compromise in Japan often greatly exceeds the limits of foreign expectation.

We have already stated that the leaders of the Yukokai resolved some days ago to dissolve their Association, and to form a new one. They met on the 21st inst. for the latter purpose and the meeting was attended by 44 members of the Lower House, so that the new Association will have quite a considerable following in the Diet. The first question which came before the meeting was the name by which the Association should be known in future, and after a little discussion, which elicited the fact that there is at present no idea of forming a political party in the legal sense of the term, it was decided to adopt the appellation Yushin-kai, which, literally translated, means the "renewed association." It is notable that the Association has received a great access of strength, as it has been joined by Mr. Ozaki Yukio. Perhaps it may be best described as a species of Cave of Adullam where all the political free lances will have their rendezvous. There is no idea of a union whose members shall be pledged to follow the views of the majority. This question was raised, but it received an emphatic quietus from Mr. Kono Hironaka, who pointed out that if they were to march in line they must openly proclaim a programme of principles, whereas the real intention was that every member should be free to consult his own views and to shape his course accordingly.

The Boshin Club also held a meeting on the 21st and talked of putting forward on their own account candidates for the posts of Vice-President and Chairman of the Whole. But eventually the meeting broke up without taking an definite step.

The Daido Club has issued a manifesto which may be said to be an echo of the policy declared by the present Cabinet.

Our readers will observe that the House of Representatives now contains five distinct Parties, which in the order of their strength stand thus:—Seiyu-kai, Progressists, Boshin Club, Yukokai and Daido Club. It is curious that the only open supporters of the Ministry in power are the smallest association of all.

Wednesday, December 23.

It is the custom for members of the Lower House in Japan to declare to the Chief Secretary of the House their political complexion. This is an essential preliminary to the section arrangement which the secretaries have to make. It constitutes the first really trustworthy clue to the division of the political parties. The inquiry resulted on the 22nd inst. in showing the following numbers:

Seiyu-kai .....	192
Progressists .....	67
Yushin-kai .....	44
Boshin Club .....	42
Daido Club .....	30
Unattached .....	4
Total .....	379

A striking feature of this return is that the number of Unattached has dwindled to 4. In previous Diets they stood at from 15 to 20, but it may be assumed that the great majority of them have joined the Boshin Club, since their proclivities naturally lie in the direction of an association of business men.

There is no change in the programme hitherto anticipated with regard to the procedure of the House. The official opening will take place on the 25th, and a short time on the 26th will be devoted to considering the reply to the speech from the Throne and to completing the organisation of the Chambers. The New Year's recess will commence on the 27th and last until the 20th of January, though a shorter interval was at one time said to be contemplated.

We regret to say that there is no appearance of an amicable settlement among the disputants of the Progressist Party. A number of the members are held from resigning solely by the exertions of Mr. Oishi, who maintains that this is not the time for such a step since the Party is on the eve of its general meeting. He urges that the latter event must be waited for, and he promises that if occasion for resigning occurs, he himself will be one of those to step out. It is said that the number of Mr. Oishi's followers is about 22, and that by the other side this threat of resignation is regarded as a mere menace. Thus the mood of the two sections does not point to reconciliation. Probably if the threatened secession took place, the seceders would go over to the Yushin Club, in which case the latter would change place with the Progressists and become the second strongest Party in the House.

THE IMPERIAL HOUSEHOLD.

On the 18th inst. the Emperor summoned Viscount Tanaka, Minister of the Imperial Household, and delivered to him a rescript which may be regarded as a natural sequel to the recently issued edict on the subject of economy. His Majesty alludes to the latter and calls upon the officials of the Household to be guided by corresponding principles. On the 19th the Minister of the Household communicated the rescript to the officials of the Department. It ran as follows:—"Recently we issued a rescript to inform the people as to the principles by which they should be guided in the management of their daily business, and we have now to enjoin that the expenditures of Our Court should be kept in harmony with the condition of national affairs. To that end every effort should be made to avoid mere outward show and to attain to substance by adhering rigidly to plans prepared with the utmost care. There are fixed limits to the finances of the Imperial Household, and to those limits the estimates of incomings and outgoings should be strictly adjusted, and the sums thus fixed should not, except in unavoidable circumstances be ever exceeded, so that a balance may be uniformly preserved between receipts and expenditures. We enjoin the officials of our Court to keep these points in mind, and to coöperate in reforming all branches of their business, labouring always to strengthen the bases of the Imperial Household's finances, which ought to bear a due relation to the progress of the post-bellum undertakings."

As yet there has not been time for Tokyo newspapers to comment on this edict, but we may be sure that they will not construe it as an evidence that there has been any extravagance in the Imperial Household. In fact, it may well be doubted whether any Court in the world is conducted on more economical principles than that of the present Ruler of Japan. His Majesty himself seems to spend practically nothing on personal indulgence, but none the less this new edict will surely impel the officials of the Household to fresh efforts in the direction of economy. Among the most prominent examples of such efforts is the case of General Nogi, who makes a frequent habit of himself sleeping in one of the dormitories of the Nobles' School, and setting to the students an example of a generally frugal life.

The Hochi Shimbun has a monopoly of the statement that the Minister of the Imperial Household and the Head of the Imperial Estates Bureau feel constrained to tender their resignations, in the sequel of the Emperor's Rescript enjoining economy. The argument is that this Rescript would not have been issued had not His Majesty been more or less dissatisfied with the management of the Throne's finances, and that consequently the responsible officials must at once evince their recognition of the implied censure. This appears to us to be an almost extravagant exercise of the reverence attaching to everything Imperial in Japan. If there had been any such feeling of dissatisfaction, the two high officials mentioned would have been the first to hear of it. We read the Decree to mean simply that His Majesty, recognising the superiority of practice over precept, has thought it wise to apply to his own estates the injunctions which he addressed recently to his subjects at large.

ENGAGEMENT OF MR. R. LOONEN AND MISS MORSS.

On Friday evening (18th) a dinner-party was given at the United States Embassy in Tokyo to celebrate the engagement of Mr. Robert Loonen and Miss Josephine Morss. His Excellency Mr. O'Brien announced the engagement in behalf of Miss Morss, and his Excellency M. Gerard, Ambassador of France, replied for Mr. Loonen.

Mrs. and Miss Morss, who have been staying for some time in Tokyo, will leave shortly for Cairo, where they purpose spending the rest of the winter, and where Mr. Loonen will meet them in March. According to present arrangements the wedding is to take place at Paris in the course of April, and Mr. and Mrs. Loonen will return to Tokyo by the end of June.

KOREA.

Saturday, December 19.

Strange stories continue to be circulated about the affair of the Wando forest. We are now asked to believe that the recent visit of the Il Ching-hoi leader to Tokyo was connected with this affair, his object being to obtain Prince Ito's consent to the grant of the concession on the ground that a large part of the profits would be devoted to the succour of the families of the Il Ching-hoi members who had become victims of the insurgents. Mr. Yi was unsuccessful in his efforts at that time, although—so the story runs—he spent a good deal of money bribing a newspaper and feasting officials. Subsequently, however, a new device was resorted to, though as to its nature we are told nothing, and finally the Resident General was induced to yield. This is a mere skeleton of the tale published by the Chosen Nichi Nichi Shinbun and communicated by telegraph to the Asahi Shinbun which, we are bound to say, seems at present to have some rather reckless reporters among its numerous staff. For our own part we do not believe for one little minute that Prince Ito has been betrayed into any imprudence in connexion with the grant of a forestry concession or any other concession. There will always be people with axes to grind, but we should have thought that the leading journals of Tokyo would abstain from holding the hone especially when the reputations of their country's greatest statesmen are to be impaired in the process. We have had a recent example nearer home in connexion with the Yokkaichi sugar case, which proved a wholesale exaggeration, and, so far as we can ascertain, there was no truth whatever in the sensational rider attached to this story, namely, that a great part of the sugar stored in the Osaka bonded warehouses was also found to have evaded the legal customs duties. Sooner or later the necessity of investigating the truth or falsehood of a story before giving publicity to it, or at least the necessity of clearly indicating its source and thus enabling the public to judge for themselves as to its credibility, will be recognised in Japan, but in the meanwhile a great deal of injury is done to the country's fair fame.

Sunday, December 20.

The Yalu is at last frozen over. It has been offering a serious impediment to traffic for some time past owing to the floating ice. Thus on the 17th inst. when a member of the House of Representatives, Mr. Saiga, attempted to pass, his boat was caught midway and it was with the greatest difficulty that the boatmen succeeded in extricating themselves. Finally Mr. Saiga was compelled to ascend the River and cross at a point much higher up where the ice was strong enough to bear. His efforts to be present at the opening of the Diet on the 22nd inst. will have been quite dramatic.

With regard to the affair of the Wando forest, the Asahi Shinbun has obtained an interesting statement from Mr. Kato Maso, formerly Adviser to the Imperial Household Department of Korea. Mr. Kato can not speak with certainty as to the condition of the forest, for, although he has cruised around the island on which it stands, he has never penetrated to the depths of the woods, and he speaks indeed as though no one were well acquainted with them. It is, however, one of the only forests remaining intact in Korea; it covers an area of about 5 miles by  $7\frac{1}{2}$  and it unquestionably possesses very fine timber. The value is large, but it has never been accurately estimated. It belongs to the Household Department, which, however, has derived practically no income from it and has never been able to check the surreptitious felling of timber. In 1906 a Japanese subject offered 30,000 yen for the privilege of exploiting the forest on the proviso usually observed in Korea, namely, that the greater part of the timber felled should be the property of the lessor—two logs to the lessee and eight to the lessor is the ratio named. The Residency General, however, refused to sanction the arrangement, on the ground that Wando being almost the only fine forest remaining in Korea, it ought to be carefully protected. If the Residency General has now departed from the policy adopted at that time, there must be some good reason. These particulars throw considerable light on the affair, and show how grossly exaggerated have been the reports hitherto circulated. If the royalty be 80 per cent., as Mr. Kato appears to think, the value of the forest to a lessee must be comparatively small, and it is easy to conceive that the Residency General may have given its consent on condition that for every tree felled a certain number of sapplings should be planted.

Monday, December 21.

The Asahi Shinbun's Seoul correspondent continues his attacks with reference to the Wando forest and writes in even a more vehement strain than he has done hitherto about corruption and intrigue. But we confess that the impression produced upon us by these communications is that the intrigue, if intrigue there really be, is shared by the accusers as well as by the accused. That there has been an attempt to secure possession of a valuable property seems certain, but as to whether there was anything unreasonable in the terms of the proposed transfer, it is difficult to form a definite opinion. If the lessee was to be required to carry on the enterprise in conformity with the alleged custom of paying over  $\frac{1}{3}$  of the proceeds as a royalty, the concession could not have been very valuable. To judge from the writings of our contemporary's correspondent, however, a colossal fraud was contemplated, and he expands his indictment so as to include practically all the Japanese officials now in the employment of the Korean Government. Whatever the truth may be as to these details, the fact is that the project has not been consummated. Prince Ito, immediately on his return to Seoul, despatched two experts to the island, one to investigate the actual value of the property, the other to ascertain the disposition of the people towards a timber-felling concession. What report these experts have made the correspondent does not say, but at all events it is plain that the enterprise has been or will be vetoed, unless everything is proved to be fair and satisfactory.

Tuesday, December 22.

There has suddenly arisen a heavy cloud upon the political horizon of Korea. Rumour says that owing to some difficulties connected with the Departments of Home Affairs and Finance a complete change of Cabinet is imminent, and all the Vice-Ministers have prepared their resignations. These Vice-Ministers are Japanese subjects, and as it is not at all usual for the Vice-Ministers to go out of office at the same time as the Ministers, the inference suggested is that there has been some friction in the working of the new system. There has been so much talk of the Wando forestry affair that our readers may be disposed to connect it with this political disturbance. But the Wando affair appears likely to prove, as we suspected, a greatly exaggerated business. The Nichi Nichi's Seoul correspondent wires, in effect, that the question is not worthy of serious attention, and the Osaka Asahi, having published a statement in the sense that some of the Japanese editors of newspapers published in Korea had been bribed to support the cause of the would-be concessionaires, a meeting of journalists has been held in Seoul, and a committee has been appointed to investigate the charge. It is now very plainly stated that the motive of the commotion raised about this affair is by no means immaculate, and that the accusations will recoil upon the heads of their formulators.

The Korean Government has followed the example of the Japanese in bestowing upon Dr. Sven Hedin a First Class Order.

With reference to the affair of Kang-wha Island, about which a good deal was heard lately, we take the following from the Seoul Press :—

The Chemulpo Police is to be congratulated upon its recent success in the suppression of trouble in Kang-wha Island. From various accounts printed in Japanese papers, it would seem that the task which the Police successfully coped with was literally a thorny one. Since the latter part of October last, when a Japanese mason was murdered in that island, fourteen Japanese have lost their lives at the hands of the insurgents. Thanks to the great energy and untiring efforts of the Police, however, a leader called Yi Leung-kon was arrested in quick succession to the recent arrest in the capital of Kim Pong-ki, supreme in command. The loss of their leaders thoroughly disheartened the rioters, but another serious difficulty which confronted the authorities was the suppression of arms which were known to be concealed in relatively large numbers. Police-Sergeant Kim of the Chemulpo Police Station was informed that there were only a few insurgents who knew of the hiding place of the arms, and he at once set out in search of those men. The result of his first efforts was anything but encouraging. With a posse of constables the officer went about hither and thither on the water for two days and nights in fruitless pursuit of the insurgents. The arrest of Leader Yi, above referred to, however, gave final solution to the difficulty. A close examination of this man by the Police revealed the fact that those arms were concealed in a big cell at a point not far distant from the famous monastery, Chyondeung-sa, near the capital of the island. A police detachment was immediately despatched to the cell, with the result that 17 rifles of various types, 17 suits of military uniform, 700 cartridge shots and two foreign suits one of which was smeared with blood, were seized. In addition, eight rifles were captured by another detachment from insurgents. The total, we are told, came nearly up to the number officially calculated, and it is believed by the Police that there are but two or three rifles left with the islanders. It is stated that the insurgents in the island were very sparing in the use of their ammunition and that they often paid some 40 sen for a cartridge. If they were fortunate enough to capture a Japanese, says the story, they would not use ammunition in disposing of the prisoner but would resort to the barbaric means of burying him alive or of throwing him into the sea.

Wednesday, December 23.

The commotion made about the Wando forest seems likely to disappear in smoke. Mr. Eto's application is said to have received approval in its preliminary stages, but when it came before the Cabinet it met with a less favourable reception and was finally pigeon-holed, a fate which is expected to receive Prince Ito's endorsement. It is difficult to discern in the final history of this affair any conclusive evidence of the commotion which it provoked at the outset.

ABOUT 11.30 a.m. on Dec. 18th fire occurred in Azabu, Tokyo. Some 70 houses were destroyed.

CHINA.

Friday, December 18.

There has been published in Peking an Imperial Rescript abounding in moral precepts of the highest ethical character. It is unnecessary to attempt any adequate translation of such a document. Every reader of Confucius will be able to divine its contents. The decree is addressed to the Viceroy and Governors throughout the Empire.

Of more practical importance is another decree issued on the 17th inst. and telegraphically epitomised by the correspondent of the Mainichi Dempo. It calls for expedition with regard to preparations for the establishment of constitutional government, and it appoints for that purpose a committee consisting of Prince Pu Lun, Mr. Na Tung and a third statesman whose name has been so mutilated in transmission as to be undecipherable.

The Dalai Lama is to leave Peking on the 21st instant, unless there be some further postponement, which would not at all surprise the public. His Holiness is to be accompanied as far as Paoing by a member of the Cabinet, and all the Viceroys and Governors along the route travelled by him are instructed to furnish guards of honour. In his suite there will also be four Imperial Chamberlains, who are to visit the great temples of Tibet, and present to each a sum of 3,000 taels for the purpose of requiem services. There are some rumours that the Dalai Lama is not entirely content with the relations that have existed between him and the Throne since the demise of the late Emperor.

It is stated that on the 16th inst. the police of Shanghai, acting in accordance with a request from the Chinese magistrates of the Mixed Court, effected the arrest of a man called "Tsang Kong" on suspicion of rebellion. Another telegram gives the name as "Wang Ping," but it appears likely that both appellations are incorrect. At all events the reports agree in describing him as a student just returned from Japan, and in stating that he was found in possession of a quantity of incendiary literature.

Saturday, December 19.

Imperial edicts are following each other in quick succession in the Chinese capital. The latest is reported to be a remonstrance against extravagance on the part of officials, against the inception of schemes which are intended solely to put money into the pockets of their projectors, and against the abuse of appointing superfluous officials in deference to the dictates of private interests. The Decree says that a sound financial condition is the first essential of efficient administration, a truism upon which China can not be said to have acted very conspicuously in the past.

Another committee has been appointed in Peking, this time for the purpose of examining the qualifications of applicants for office. It is called a committee for selecting talent, and Mr. Na Tung's name figures at the head of the members. This eminent official seems to be in great request by the Regency, and China is to be congratulated on the fact, for Na Tung is recognised as one of her best men, to say nothing of the close relations existing between him and Yuan Shikkai.

Sunday, December 20.

Dr. Sun is now said to be at Singapore. He was recently supposed to be on his way to Shanghai, where the police were waiting for him. Although he has accomplished very little in the way of actual anti-dynastic movement, he has managed to keep the official mind in a state of disquiet for many years.

The international opium conference is expected to hold its sittings in the Palace Hotel in Shanghai.

Tuesday, December 22.

The Dalai Lama set out on his return journey from Peking on the 22nd inst. It is stated that the questions between him and the Chinese Government as to the limit of his authority have not been disposed of.

The telegraph alleges that his Excellency Chang is desirous of raising £500,000 in America on account of the construction expenses of the Lu Han Railway, but his Excellency Yuan suggests that it would be wiser to ascertain whether the persons who have subscribed for shares in Canton may not prefer to pay up the calls at once instead of borrowing money abroad.

A telegram from Shanghai to the Asahi Shimbun says that the Cotton Spinning Companies there have decided to form a union with a capital of a million taels, and that the union has already been duly registered in Hongkong.

Wednesday, December 23.

[We have hitherto believed that the new Chinese Army was to consist of 36 Divisions, namely, two for each of the 18 home provinces, but it would appear that 34 was the true figure. The telegram now says that it has been decided to increase the number to 48. Exactly what this means we are still unable to say, as the strength of a Division has not been made public, but if we assume that the new military organisation of China is identical with that of Japan, the Chinese Army will be  $2\frac{1}{2}$  times the Army of Japan. That would place the Empire at once in the position of a foremost military Power. Hitherto the financial arrangements seem to have been made without any difficulty, but the provenance of the necessary funds is as yet an inscrutable problem.

It appears that there is an insurrection in the neighbourhood of Kulun. The insurgents made their presence known by robbing the mail from Changkaikow. The telegraph says that Russian and Chinese soldiers are jointly engaged in quelling the disturbance.

The Jiji Shimpō's Peking correspondent wires that the Dalai Lama, during his three months' residence in the Chinese capital, was twice received in audience at Court and had numerous interviews with Chinese statesmen as well as with foreign diplomats and other Occidentals. His views about the outer world were thus greatly broadened and softened. But it does not appear that the Chinese Government's plan for the future administration of Tibet secured the Lama's concurrence. Its provisions were not consistent with the sovereign attributes which he claims for himself. Before leaving Peking he is said to have stated to a prominent Englishman that the doubts and suspicions hitherto entertained by him about England had been mistaken, as he now clearly perceived. It is thought therefore that his return to Lassa will not be followed by any untoward consequences.

Another telegram to the same paper says that his Excellency Yuan, in conversation with a foreign representative, spoke in the highest terms of the intelligence, modesty and judgment of the Prince Regent, and declared that the placing of the reins of power in the hands of such a man could not fail to conduce to the peace and happiness of the Chinese nation. It must be confessed that the latest photographs of the Prince Regent, though they show an apparently clever face, suggest also a youthfulness which is scarcely consistent with the weight of responsibility now placed on his shoulders.

It will be remembered that during the days preceding the War, Russian engineers suggested the advisability of cutting a ship canal across the neck of the Tiger's Tail Peninsula on the west of Port Arthur. The advantages resulting from such a work must be obvious and General Oshima has been for some time endeavouring to consummate the project, but success has not hitherto crowned his efforts.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIA RAILWAY.

The general meeting of the South Manchuria Railway Company took place on Saturday, when the following accounts were presented:—

INCOME.	Yen.
Railway Income .....	4,372,751
Shipping .....	5,831
Mining .....	1,322,503
Harbour .....	319,796
Land .....	139,943
Hotels .....	72,956
Electric Enterprises .....	96,930
Various .....	628,822
	6,959,342

The above is to be applied in part as follows:—

	Yen.
Legal Reserve .....	38,590
Dividends to Share-holders (not including the Government) at rate of 6% .....	60,000
Special Reserve .....	500,000
Rewards to Officers .....	67,000
Carried forward .....	1,708,707

It has to be noted, also, that a sum of 1,602,497 yen was carried over from the previous half-year. Nothing is stated as to the interest and sinking fund of the debt, but evidently they are provided for.

We may mention here that the new loan of 20 million yen, together with 13 millions remaining over from the previous loan, is to be applied to the Kilin-Changchun, the Mukden-Hsinmintun and the Antung-Mukden lines, as well as to gas works, electric enterprises, hotels, harbours, and doubling of tracks. This new loan seems to have had a brilliant reception in London.

FORMOSA.

News received the other day in Tokyo shows that the attempt of the aborigines to revive an insurrection has met with short shrift. They have been crushed—partially at all events—with a loss of 30 killed, 3,000 koku of rice and many cattle seized, and the burning of their village.

The telegraph says further that the seven leaders of the South Nanwo head-hunter insurgents—against whom the Aiyu have been operating for some time—have made act of surrender on account of 667 of their followers, and have given up 120 rifles and 150 heads.

The reinforcements sent out from Taipei have reached Karenko and are concerting measures to crush the insurgents, but there is as yet no definite news of any encounter, the insurgents having evidently fled to their fastnesses in the hills. The bodies of the men who met their deaths have been recovered, and are found to be fewer than was originally supposed. They were all killed by bullets, and the corpses are headless. It is expected that news of decisive operations will soon be received, as the troops are now in ample force.

THE TOKYO RAILWAY.

Tokyo journals agree in stating that steps have now been definitely commenced for obtaining official sanction of a revised schedule of fares for the Tokyo Railways. The Governor of the Prefecture, however, is said to deny that any application has reached him though he anticipates its receipt shortly. He is quoted as virtually recognising the necessity for such a step. As to the Company's proposal to set aside a substantial sinking fund every year against the time when the property will have to be handed over gratis to the authorities, the Governor admits that, the project of municipalization having fallen through, no other course offers for the Company. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun, however, follows the line of reasoning recently taken by the Asahi Shimbun, namely, that if the property was worth some 60 million yen when the city attempted to purchase it in 1907, there should not be any occasion now to increase the Company's income. That has the sound of a very plausible argument, but before admitting its full force, a careful examination of the figures submitted at that time would have to be made, and so far as we know these figures have never become public property. It has always to be remembered that the income derived from the property, were it in municipal hands, would be a million and a half yen yearly greater than the income derived by a private company, although no change of fares was made. In this context it has been argued with much show of justice that in including this fact in their estimate the directors of the Company were selling an asset which did not belong to them. But after all every owner of property is entitled to consider its value to a would be purchaser as well as to himself, when he contemplates disposing of it. At any rate it is certain that the experience of the whole world may be said to have fully demonstrated the impossibility of obtaining a reasonable profit from an electric railway under the present conditions of the Tokyo enterprise.

It was reported in Tokyo on Monday afternoon that the Directors of the Tokyo Railway Company had formally presented, at 11 a.m. on that day, an application for permission to change the schedule of fares, making the present 4 sen into 5 sen, and charging an additional 1 sen for each change of cars.

If the newspapers continue in their present mood it is obvious that the Tokyo Railway Company's application for an increase of fares is likely to produce a great commotion in the capital. On the morning of the 21st inst. the Directors invited representatives of the various newspapers to a meeting in the head office of the Company, and the President gave a detailed explanation as to the procedure hitherto adopted by the Company and as to the terms in which its application is couched. He declared that everything possible had been done in the way of economy and efficiency, but that it was found quite hopeless under the present system to set aside funds for the essential reserves, apart from any question of dividend. The Company therefore asked, first, that the general rate of fare should be increased from 4 sen to 5 sen; secondly, that an additional one sen should be paid for each change of car; thirdly, that with regard to the present system of rebates for students and workmen, one of two courses should be adopted, namely, either distinct evidence should be apparent of the bona fides of the traveller's status, or the fare should be raised from two sen to three sen, and that in any circumstances the additional one sen per change of car should be levied; fourthly, that the discount now given to military men should in future be limited to non-commissioned officers and soldiers and that the latter's fares should be the same as those of students. After this explanation had been given by Mr. Mudaguchi, Mr. Kawada, one of the most prominent Directors, announced his willingness to answer any questions and a great many seem to have been put to him. According to the Company's estimate, if this change of schedule be effected, the sum accruing every year to the Municipal Treasury will be 344,000 yen. Mr. Kawada explained that originally the number of persons changing cars had been only some 50 per cent. of the whole, but it had now increased to 90 per cent. People spoke in general of a four sen uniform fare, but as a matter of fact the amount now actually collected by the Company in consequence of the various discounts was only 3.48 sen.

It is not necessary that this question should be submitted to the City Assembly, but as the custom has hitherto been to consult the latter, the Governor of the Prefecture has decided to be guided by that precedent. According to the forecast of the newspapers, 36 members out of the 60 forming the Assembly will support the Company's application. A meeting of the Assembly will probably be held on the 24th inst., and doubtless the course pursued will be to entrust the matter to a committee.

It is very natural to find the Tokyo newspapers espousing what seem to be the interests of a private company in contradiction to the interests of the citizens at large, and those who remember the kind of arguments used by the Tokyo press at the time of the Portsmouth Treaty will easily imagine the tone now adopted. It must be admitted, however, that they have some reason on their side who claim that the utmost possible light should be thrown on the affairs of the Company before a change of fares is permitted. We may observe, however, that machinery for generating that light is duly provided by law, and unless officialdom is singularly careless there can be nothing in the way of concealment still less of fraud.

An accurate statement has been published of the estimate made by the Directors of the Tokyo Railway Company in connexion with their proposed rise of fares. The figures are as follow:—

Income from transport .....	Yen. 2,850,000
Income from additional one sen on the basis of 447,000 travellers per diem.....	818,000
Income from changing cars, on the basis of 40 per cent. of the travellers.....	327,200
Various income .....	452,000
Total.....	4,447,200

It should be explained that the figures here given are a half-yearly estimate.

EXPENDITURE.	Yen.
Payment of employees .....	342,528
Running expenses .....	581,839
Motive power .....	296,579
Maintenance expenses .....	463,923
Sinking fund .....	500,000
Total.....	2,184,869
Net profits .....	2,262,331

The manner of disposing of the above profits is as follows:—

Ordinary Reserve .....	113,116
Special Reserve .....	113,116
First Dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. 1,552,500
To the Tokyo Municipality .....	171,800
Remainder .....	342,399
Brought over from previous account .....	11,019
Profits from electric lighting which do not concern the Municipality .....	24,000
Total extra income.....	377,418
The above is disposed of as follows:—
	Yen.
Second Dividend (1 per cent.).....	217,500
Remainder .....	159,918

Out of this remainder the rewards to officials and contingent expenses would be defrayed.

The Tokyo newspapers are up in arms at this proposal, but amongst the whole number we can not find one which assigns any solid arithmetical reason for its opposition. The situation seems to resolve itself simply into this, that on the one side there are a number of people who want to be carried cheaply about the streets of the City, and on the other side there is a comparatively small body of capitalists who object to sacrifice their money on the altar of public convenience. We regret to observe that some journals, like the Hochi Shimbun for example, are openly urging the citizens to hold mass meetings, and if mischievous results there will be no difficulty in tracing the responsibility. As for the Nippon, which was supposed to have become a sober journal under its new management, it writes as though the fate of the Empire were at stake. Unfortunately the habit with many Japanese newspapers is to accuse their own countrymen of motives which, were they attributed to them by foreign cities, would be received with vehement repudiation. One would imagine from the articles now appearing that the City was on the point of being set fire to in 50 different places simultaneously. The Asahi Shimbun, we observe with regret, lends its columns to the worse form of agitation. It publishes two caricatures, one of a hideous highwayman in the act of garroting an unfortunate wayfarer; and the other of two sedan chair bearers, resorting to the old-time practice of setting down their fare in a lonely place preparatory to robbery and murder. The Niroku Shimbun, true to its yellow traditions, represents a man in the act of getting his throat cut and his brains battered in, the first operation being performed by the Government and the second by the Tokyo Railway. The Yorodan is perhaps the least offensive. Its picture shows the citizens trying to pull down an electric car, which the shareholders of the Company are endeavouring to raise on a pile of ingots. Several papers write as though the Cabinet, the Seiyun kai and the City Assembly had all been purchased by the Railway Company, and as though every loafer in Tokyo were in the act of getting his pockets filled. It is a new revelation of Japanese character, and it seems to show that if socialism ever found favour in Japan, it might be pushed to great lengths. However, the Japanese have always said of themselves that they love extremes, and this incident bears out that verdict.

On the morning of Dec. 21st a sawyer named H. Sakamoto (50), living in Yakumo-dori, Kobe, murdered with a sword H. Uyeda, a coolie, and the latter's wife. He also severely injured a man and a woman who were in the victims' home, and who tried to prevent the crime. Later the murderer committed suicide. The cause is not yet ascertained.

A MISCHIEF-MONGER.

We find the following article in the Peking and Tientsin Times of the 12th instant:—

"THE CRISIS IN CHINA."

The above headline, without the quotation marks, appears daily in most of the European journals in Japan. Taking their "news" from our Shanghai contemporaries, whose imaginations during the last fortnight have been given more exercise than ever before, the Japanese papers are in dire distress over the terrible condition of affairs in North China. The regrettable deaths of their Majesties the late Emperor and Empress Dowager have been made the occasion, as we expected, for picturesque writing which would do justice to a wholesale massacre, but which under present conditions is merely silly. Give a dog a bad name and hang him; China was expected to rise in all her wrath and stagger humanity when the Empress Dowager died. Why she should do so is beyond us; but our Japanese friends, like our Shanghai friends, insist that such will be the case, and, lacking news, as we lack news, they continue to tell us so with a wealth of words that would do credit to a description of Armageddon. As fresh rumours are current, we take this opportunity of stating that no changes of any sort have taken place among the high officials, nor are any contemplated for the present. When they do take place, as take place they must, it would be as well to consider them of no more significance than a change of Cabinet at home. We have been told by a witty military sinologue that to understand this country one must stand on one's head. It is an interesting but slightly trying posture, and in our humble opinion the same amount of knowledge may be imbibed when remaining prosaically upon the feet. At any rate, the ups and downs of officialdom do not necessarily mean the disintegration of the Empire.

What a very perplexing utterance it is, to be sure! We are not certain, in the first place, whether foreign editors or Japanese editors are referred to. The article sets out by speaking of "the European journals in Japan," but subsequently speaks of "our Japanese friends." Whichever be the true rendering, however, we feel constrained to assure our Tientsin contemporary that the exaggerated tone of its own utterances quite out-herods any sensational rumours circulated by Shanghai throughout the recent period of anxiety. All of us are familiar with the ancient device of manufacturing a peg to hang a cap on, and the process is not unpardonable unless it does mischief. But the Peking and Tientsin Times drives its peg into the fabric of international relations, and that is not quite right. If it had a re-assuring message to give, surely a condition so urgently demanding re-assurance need not have been invented? In the first place, the headline "crisis in China" was perfectly legitimate and faithfully described the situation. There was a crisis: a very signal crisis, and its issue might have been anything. In the second place, the newspapers in Japan treated the situation quite moderately, and can not be said to have lost their heads for a moment. In the third place, they obtained the great bulk of their news direct from Peking, Shanghai's contribution being comparatively a bagatelle. To talk of their discussing the crisis "with a wealth of words that would do credit to a description of Armageddon," is quite too too. We should not think the matter worthy of reference did not our Tientsin contemporary's propinquity to the Chinese capital invest its words with considerable potentialities for mischief. Chinese officials should not be taught to believe what was not and is not, at all the case, namely, that Japan regards the situation in Peking as dangerously unstable.

MANCHURIA.

A telegram from Changchun to the Mai-suchi Dempo says that the rolling stock of the South Manchuria Railway is quite inadequate for the transport of the merchandise now offering. The quantity of beans piled up at Changchun awaiting conveyance southward is said to amount to 709 wagon loads, and its detention has caused some stringency in the money market.

There has been another attempt on the part of the Chinese in Northern Manchuria to negotiate for the purchase of Japan's moiety of the Changchun-Kilin line. A petition on the subject has been addressed to Viceroy Hsu, the petitioners citing the precedent of a similar re-purchase recently effected in China. The Viceroy, however, is said to have replied that the precedent quoted did not apply, inasmuch as the foreign party to the transaction was a commercial syndicate, whereas in the case of the Changchun-Kilin road an international agreement was in question. His Excellency suggested that there are other places in Manchuria where railway construction is greatly wanted, and that even if the petitioners did not care to apply their money elsewhere, they might employ it profitably in purchasing shares of the Changchun-Kilin line. Nothing could be more natural than that the Chinese should seek to get all their railways into their own hands, but they can not over-ride the provisions of treaties unless both of the contracting parties are willing, and after all it would be too much to expect that Japan should quietly consent to any measure calculated to depreciate the value of the large property she holds in Manchuria; a property now representing from 2 to 3 hundred million yen.

Telegrams from Antung indicate that the Chinese Government has paid up the whole of its moiety of the capital—3 million taels—which is to be employed in developing the timber enterprise in the Yalu valley. Mr. Hashiguchi, Japanese Manager of the enterprise, visited Tientsin, Mukden and Peking in connexion with this matter and has now returned to Antung, having lodged the money in various banks. It is said that Viceroy Hsu strongly approved of the scheme of operations submitted for his consideration by Mr. Hashiguchi. The latter is quoted as saying that he found everything perfectly quiet in Peking, and that the Japanese Representative is on the best possible terms with Chang Chihlung and Yuan Shihkai. We may note here that there has been no confirmation whatever of the stories published at one time as to friction between these high officials. In fact Yuan's name appeared prominently on the committee appointed in connexion with the obsequies of the late Emperor, and his influence seems to be more powerful than ever.

A MISAPPREHENSION.

We find the following in the columns of a local contemporary with reference to the Budget just published:—

The minimum annual appropriation promised for the sinking fund is fifty million yen. The legal minimum should of course be one hundred and ten million yen, but the policy of the present Cabinet in this respect is at any rate better than that of its predecessor, which was also forced to ignore the law, and which placed only 37,500,000 yen to the sinking fund.

There is a misapprehension, here; and as our contemporary would certainly regret to mislead the public in such a matter—or in any matter—we venture to offer a word of explanation. The "legal minimum of 110 million yen" spoken of in the paragraph quoted above, is not a "sinking fund."

It is a fund for the service of the debt contracted abroad during the war. That is to say, it includes the interest on the debt as well as a sum for redemption. Neither is it a "minimum" fund. On the contrary, it is a fixed amount, neither to be reduced nor increased, and without the Diet's consent the Cabinet has no power to meddle with it. The Saionji Cabinet did not "ignore the law" when it applied only 37½ millions of the fund to purposes of redemption. No larger part of the fund was applicable to such a purpose. We speak with some insistence because our contemporary's writing suggests that the Cabinet of Saionji cut down the fixed amount of 110 millions to suit Ministerial convenience, and that the Cabinet of Katsura is doing the same, only on a smaller scale. If such an impression got abroad it would seriously impair Japan's credit, and evidently nothing is further from our contemporary's purpose than to effect anything of the kind. Since the post-bellum programme of finance was drafted by the first Katsura Cabinet and approved by the Diet in its 1905-6 session, there has been no deviation whatever from the provisions of law as to this sum of 110 millions. It has been set aside without fail year by year, and devoted to the purposes originally indicated. What the present Cabinet has done is to prepare a Budget which enables the legal sinking fund of 37½ millions to be raised to at least 50 millions. Japan would forfeit credit at once if she played fast and loose with her financial programmes as suggested by the words we have quoted—not at all in a controversial spirit, be it noted, en passant.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY.

We have to thank the Japan Gazette for another comical display of the absolute unscrupulousness which habitually marks its conduct of a controversy. Our unfortunate contemporary seems to lose all appreciation of the difference between truth and falsehood when the polemical fever overtakes it. Thus, writing on the 10th instant, the Gazette says:—"This morning the Mail issues a long defence of its prejudice against Mr. Bethell. But it does not deny being prejudiced." The first of these assertions is a gross falsehood; the second is a dishonest subterfuge. We issued no "long defence of our prejudice against Mr. Bethell." Against such an accusation we deem no defence necessary. And to pretend that, because we had not demeaned ourselves by attempting to rebut the charge, therefore we constructively admitted it, is a method of controversy to which only the adjective "knaveish" is applicable. We have said that we entirely agree with the scathing indictment of Mr. Bethell's conduct uttered by a British judge when sentencing him to a term of imprisonment. If that be prejudice, we trust that the vast majority of Englishmen in the Far East are prejudiced. The Japan Gazette, however, in assertion of its fine sense of fair play, champions Mr. Bethell vehemently. Par nobile fratrum! It is enough that Mr. Bethell has devoted all his energies to maligning the Japanese and to inciting the Koreans to oppose them. Such conduct constitutes an immediate passport to the good graces of the Japan Gazette. That was a foregone conclusion. And naturally, from the Gazette's point of view, everybody that finds the spectacle repulsive must be a man of prejudice and un-blessed with the English instinct of fair play. It is all too grotesque to merit more than a smile.

A MATTER OF HEADLINES—AND OF FACT.

In its issue of the 18th inst. the Japan Advertiser reproduced a telegram—taken from the Asahi Shimbun—with the following headlines (1) THE AMERICAN NAVY (2) ADMIRAL EVANS ASSERTS THAT IT IS VASTLY SUPERIOR TO ENGLISH. Any one who may have gone on to read the telegram itself would soon have perceived that Admiral Evans said nothing of the sort. For the sake of that distinguished commander's reputation it may be assumed that he is too well acquainted with the facts to say anything so foolish. What he did say was that "the (American) ships built last year are much superior to the British Dreadnought type." That is a very different thing from declaring the American navy to be "vastly superior to the English;" and as some of our contemporary's readers may possibly content themselves with the perusal of its headlines, it seems desirable that the erroneous impression conveyed by the headlines in question should not remain uncorrected.

But what the Admiral did actually say is also in need of elucidation—"the ships built last year are much superior" etc. If by "built" is meant "completed," there were no American battleships "built" last year. We may take it that reference is made to the only ships in the American Navy at all comparable with the Dreadnought—to wit, the Delaware and North Dakota—which were laid down, not built, last year. Further, the term "British Dreadnought type" is not devoid of ambiguity. The Dreadnought herself, as everyone realizes, was a great experiment, which has since been improved upon in a score of ways not only in her successors in the British navy, but in all her foreign replicas. Whether there is any substantial difference between the "Dreadnoughts" recently laid down in the United States and the "improved Dreadnoughts" building for the British Navy is a matter of opinion, but there is certainly nothing to warrant the expression "vastly superior," as the subjoined table shows.

	The first "Dreadnought."	An "Improved Dreadnought" (the Collingwood .)	A U.S. "Dreadnought" (the Delaware .)
Tonnage.....	17,900	19,250	20,000
Speed .....	21½	21	21
Armament, Main	10 12in.	10 12in. or 10 12in. or 13 5in.	13in.
"Secondary....	27 3in.	24 4in.	14 5in.

While no official pronouncement has yet been made upon the subject, it is practically certain that the newest British Dreadnoughts will carry the 13.5-inch gun for their main armament. The rather obvious statement attributed to Admiral Evans that "the efficiency of the 13-inch gun is higher than that of the 12-inch" must have been made—if it was made at all—in ignorance of the latest developments in British naval gunnery.

As for the "Mammoth Additions To Uncle Sam's Navy Planned By Board" of which our local American contemporary informs its readers in a later issue, the incoherence of the figures, for which the Advertiser is not at all responsible, does not inspire confidence.

ARMY REORGANISATION.

The Official Gazette of the 19th inst. contains an extensive scheme of army reorganisation, the details of which, however, are not of general interest. We may mention here that prominent among the reforms is a veto against appointing full generals to the command of Divisions. Hitherto the usual practice has been to give these posts to Lieut-Generals, but there have been some exceptions, notably in the case of General Baron Inouye, who died at Osaka a few days ago. Another point now brought out clearly is that there has ceased to be any solid basis for the old-time assertion that the Army was practically in the hands of Choshu men. There is still some truth in the statement so far as the highest ranks are concerned, for out of the 15 full Generals 7 are Choshu men, while 4 of the remaining 8 are of Satsuma extraction and the rest belong to various other provinces. When we come to the Lieut-Generals, however, the Choshu predominance disappears altogether. There are 29 officers of this rank, and they consist of 7 from Choshu, 4 from Satsuma, and 18 from other places. In the rank of Major-General, Choshu does not hold any place of prominence whatever. Probably not many of our readers recall the time when this question of a Choshu Army and a Satsuma Navy used to attract a great deal of attention in Japan, but little has been heard of the issue lately, doubtless for the very sufficient arithmetical reason here assigned. The present holder of the portfolio of War belongs to Oshu. But it must be confessed that in the case of the Navy this is the first genuine break in the continuity of Satsuma Ministers. For a brief hour some years ago an attempt was made to place the portfolio in outside hands, and the late Admiral Viscount Enomoto was chosen for the experiment. But it proved a failure, and the Cabinet recognised the expediency of replacing the Viscount by the late Marquis Saigo. It is not to be denied, however, that the great bulk of the present high naval officers are of Satsuma extraction, a fact which is neither to the discredit of Satsuma nor to the detriment of Japan.

On the 21st inst. a number of changes in the high ranks of the Army were gazetted. These changes, so far as they concern the full Generals, were as follow:—

General Viscount Nishi, Inspector General of Military Education, relieved of his post and appointed a member of the Supreme Military Council.
General Viscount Hasegawa, Commander of the Army in Korea, relieved of his post and appointed a member of the Supreme Military Council.
General Viscount Kawanura, Governor of the Tokyo Garrison, appointed a member of the Supreme Military Council, retaining his present post.
General Viscount Oshima, Commander of the Guards Division, appointed Inspector General of Military Education.
General Baron Okubo, Commander of the Third Division, appointed Commander of the Army in Korea.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE "WORLD."

If President Roosevelt ever at any period of his career lacked the undivided sympathy of reasonable men, he will have it now in the fullest measure for the purposes of his campaign against the New York World. The question at issue is the disposal of a sum of 20 million dollars, and it was by an insignificant Democratic newspaper in Indiana that an accusation in connexion with this money was first levelled against the President. Then the New York World, that collector of all sensational rumours, espoused the Indiana journal's charge, and seems to have opened its editorial columns to an uncompromising attack upon the President. The details of the attack have not yet been telegraphed, but Reuter has told us of the scathing terms used by the President in denouncing Mr. Pulitzer, and the telegraph now adds that proceedings are to be immediately opened against the World on a charge of attempting to bring the President into contempt. This is just the sort of occasion which the World welcomes. Notoriety is quite as acceptable to it as fame. It has assumed a most defiant tone. The President, it declares, may browbeat the members of the Senate and the members of the House of Representatives, but he shall not browbeat the World. He may succeed in getting the judiciary to punish two or three members of the newspaper's staff, but he will not succeed in turning the World from its perpetual policy of denouncing fraud wherever fraud be found, even in the highest in the land. How familiar is this cant about high principles! Experience has taught us all that the people who walk through life wearing phylacteries of virtue pasted conspicuously on their brows are precisely the people from whom the practice of virtue is to be least expected. But the yellow press has never recognised the general belief in this experience. It proclaims its own fine morality in the context of its worst vices, and the World's utterances on the present occasion are amusingly illustrative of this blindness.

THE BOYCOTT.

The Viceroy of the Two Kwang has issued a long proclamation in accordance with instructions from Peking on the subject of the boycott. In the forefront of the proclamation his Excellency quotes the fact that the Japanese Minister of State for Foreign Affairs has addressed to all the customs officials and administrative officials throughout the Empire of Japan strict instructions that they should use their best endeavours to prevent treasonable communication between ill-disposed persons in Japan and men of like mind in China, and above all that they should take every step permitted by law to prevent a supply of warlike material from reaching the disaffected party in China via Japan. The Viceroy notes the large dimensions which the trade of Canton has attained during recent years, and, while congratulating the citizens on the fact, he reminds them that certain bad characters exist in their midst and that it is against the machinations of such persons that these precautions require to be adopted, in the interests not only of public peace and good order but also of the city's commercial prosperity. Japan has now given unequivocal evidence of her desire to cooperate with China in a sincerely friendly spirit for the attainment of the above end, and the Viceroy directs that the facts should be communicated to the Conservatives who have hitherto been maintaining and preaching a hostile attitude towards the neighbouring Empire.

The above is the gist of the proclamation. This is the second time since the present Cabinet came into power in Japan that the Viceroy of Canton has endeavoured to put an end to the boycott, and we must infer therefore that his Excellency is really in earnest. It is a pity that these steps were not taken sooner.

SILK.

It is stated that on the 22nd inst. holders of silk abandoned their unyielding attitude and became current, with the result that large quantities of the staple changed hands. Prices were comparatively low, but the volume of transactions atoned for this.

THE WEAK SPOT IN THE BUDGET.

The only weak spot in the Budget, so far as we can see, is the section relating to the railways. We mean "weak" in the sense of being out of tune with the note of "no more loans at present." Not in any other sense. The net profit accruing from the lines—after all interest has been paid on the capital needed for nationalization—is 8,100,000 yen, and of that sum 6,000,000 yen is to be placed to the reserves, leaving 7½ millions. The latter amount, under the previous arrangement of accounts, would have been included in the general revenue, but is now to be wholly devoted to extension and improvement of the lines. That is excellent. But according to the Budget the total amount needed for extensions and improvements is 29,100,000 yen, and if we deduct from that the profit of 7½ millions, there remains a sum of 21,600,000 yen which will have to be obtained by borrowing. No one finds any fault with the operation of borrowing money for honestly productive and thoroughly useful purposes, but borrowing is borrowing, and there was to be no more of that for the moment. We do not suppose that there will be any floating of bonds. The money can easily be obtained from the Yokubu and the Kakei Seiri kikin. Still it must be paid back sooner or later. On the other hand, we must do Marquis Katsura the justice of noting that, on every occasion of publicly alluding to the forthcoming Budget, he emphatically excepted the railways from the category of no borrowing. The country wants railways, and they can not be built without money. It is a great point that the profits of the lines already in existence are to be appropriated solely for extending and improving the system, and thoughtful persons will be glad to know that the Government sees its way to devoting a substantial sum to this most essential purpose.

THE BUDGET.

The draft of the Budget for next fiscal year (1909-10), as handed to the members of the Diet on the 1st instant, is as follows:—

In compiling the Budget for the 42nd fiscal year, the main purpose kept in view has been to regulate incomes and outgoings, so as to strengthen the foundation of the national finances, thereby augmenting the country's credit and harmonizing economy in general. In accordance with that policy the Budget has been compiled as follows:—

1.—The fixed expenditures have been met by the fixed revenue; outlays which have hitherto been met by loans have now all been defrayed from the general revenue, and the raising of new loans has been abandoned for the time, with the exception of the Formosa Public Undertakings Loan which has a special character.

2.—Every effort has been made to curtail general outlays; new appropriations have, as far as possible, been avoided, except in very urgent cases, and even with regard to outlays which fall under the fixed programme the utmost curtailment has been effected.

3.—The continuing enterprises which fall under the fixed programme have been confined within limits adapted to the financial and economic conditions, and the fixed period as well as the amounts of the annual appropriations have been subjected to such alterations as are in accord with the practical progress of the works.

4.—With the object of maintaining the credit of the State's securities and gradually improving their market value, so as to protect the interests of their holders, while, at the same time, producing a good effect on the general economic situation, the amount of bonds to be redeemed has been increased and will be at least 50 million yen annually.

5.—In accordance with the policy of making railway enterprise entirely independent and self-operative, a special account has been created such as shall enable the enterprise to be suitably prosecuted, the relations that have hitherto existed with the general accounts being severed.

OUTLINE OF THE GENERAL BUDGET FOR THE 42ND FISCAL YEAR OF MEIJI.

REVENUE.
Ordinary Revenue .....	470,667,970
Extraordinary Revenue .....	45,532,825
Total Revenue .....	516,200,795
N.B.—The Extraordinary Revenue shown above consists of the following:—
Customary Income .....	34,777,830
Surplus brought over from previous year .....	10,754,995
EXPENDITURES.
Ordinary Expenditures .....	400,912,102
Extraordinary Expenditures .....	115,288,693
Total .....	516,200,795

Thus the incomes and the outgoings balance exactly.

The Details of the Budget for the 42nd fiscal year, as compared with those for the previous year are as follow:—

Commerce .....	9,956,341
Total Extraordinary Appropriations .....	115,288,693
Grand Total Appropriations .....	516,200,795

N.B.—It is to be observed that, the Railways having been placed in a special account, there have been subtracted from the 42nd year's appropriations a sum of 65,193,588 yen, consisting of railway bonds to the amount of 32,162,792 yen and railway capital to the amount of 33,030,796 yen.

Apart from the Ordinary Revenue and Expenditure to be included in the General Budget for the 42nd year, there are Public Works Expenses brought over from the Special Account of the Extraordinary War Expenses, and also Expenses brought over from the 41st year, which have to be included in the accounts of payments for the 42nd year. When these additions are made the following results:—

TABLE V.

Increase of Navigation Encouragement Outlays ..... 528,470
Increase of Telephone Exchanges; installment of 4,200,000 yen (total obtained by subtracting the postponed amount), spread over 4 years from 1909 ..... 1,200,000
Total ..... 2,976,767

Total Extraordinary Expenditures ..... 7,663,038
Grand Total of Ordinary and Extraordinary ..... 22,451,282

The total amount appearing in the 42nd year's Budget as appropriated to the National Debts Consolidation Fund is 183 millions, made up of over 153,000,000 yen from the General Accounts, and over 29,900,000 yen from the Special Railway Accounts, and of that total amount 50,800,000 yen is to be devoted to the redemption of State Bonds.

The total amount of profit accruing from the State Railways in 1909 is over 38,100,000 yen, and out of that total the sum to be appropriated to the National Debt Consolidation Fund for the purposes of paying interest, &c., on Railway Bonds is 29,100,000 yen, so that there remains a net profit of over 8,100,000 yen. Out of this, a sum of 600,000 yen is to be placed to the reserves and the remaining 7,500,000 yen is to be devoted to constructions and improvements. But as over 29,100,000 yen is required for constructions and improvements, 21,600,000 will have to be met by borrowing.

In compiling the Budget for the 42nd fiscal year, the sums resulting from postponements or reductions of expenditures which fall under the Fixed Programme aggregate 168,186,383 yen. They are itemized in the following table:—

TABLE IX.
Yen.
Construction of Public Buildings abroad Roads, Bridges and Irrigation Works in Hokkaido ..... 28,000

Grand Total ..... 168,186,483

Among the expenditures affected by the above postponements and reductions, the manner in which the continuing outlays under the fixed programme are distributed among the years from 1909 onwards, so far as concerns the General Accounts, and the manner of this annual distribution under the amended programme, are shown in the following table:—

FIRE IN TOKYO.

The residence of Commander Dougherty, Naval attaché of the American Embassy in Tokyo, was destroyed by fire on the 22nd instant at about 8 p.m. The house was the property of Professor Terry, who formerly occupied it, and whose present residence within the same compound was in great peril for a time. Commander Dougherty was absent from home at the time of the conflagration. The fire is supposed to have been caused by an over-heated stove and the flames spread so rapidly that scarcely anything could be saved. Mrs. Dougherty lost all her wardrobe and jewelry, and many valuable documents are said to have been destroyed.

K. Watanabe, formerly a policeman, living in Mita, Shiba, Tokyo, who has been suffering from brain complaint for some weeks past, set fire to his house at noon on Dec. 22nd. He threw himself into the flames and also attempted to kill himself with a knife.

DEATH OF GENERAL BARON INOUE.

We regret to have to announce that General Baron Inoue died at 4 a.m. on the 17th inst. in the Kyoto Hospital at the comparatively early age of 57. The cause of death was cancer in the neck. It is said that had an operation been performed at an early date the illustrious officer's life might have been saved, but he declined to go into hospital until after the conclusion of the autumn manoeuvres, and he discharged all his duties in connexion with the manoeuvres in spite of the agony caused by the fell disease. The obituary notices published by the Tokyo press describe him as having been a man of impetuous and even wild habits in his youth, but, in spite of apparent indifference to study, he attained a high degree of proficiency in Chinese scholarship. In everything connected with actual warfare he was a thorough expert, and he possessed the rare gift of infusing the men under his command with a spirit of unconquerable daring. He served as Field-Marshal Oyama's aide-de-camp in the war with China, but he achieved his greatest distinction at the Battle of the Yalu, when he led the 12th Division across the river at Sukuchin, and effected the flanking attack at Homuton. General Inoue was one of three Japanese officers who were recalled from Europe at the outbreak of the war with China, and who were regarded as men of high promise. They were Major General Otera, who was killed by a shell at the capture of Weihaiwei, General Count Oku, now Chief of the General Staff, and General Baron Inoue.

NO. 222 OF THE "KOKKA."

In its latest number the Kokka has an essay from the pen of Mr. Nakamura Kyushiro, on the Influence of Western Art upon Chinese Painting. We are obliged to confess that the article is disappointingly meagre, for it adds nothing to previous knowledge. Above all it does not furnish any material for the construction of a new theory: we are left in possession of our old conviction that Western art produced no perceptible or permanent influence on Chinese, and that whatever traces of alien style are found in Chinese pictures are too rare to be counted anything more than curiosities. Kang-hsi (1660-1725), one of the most enlightened sovereigns that ever sat on the Throne of China, adopted an exceptionally liberal attitude towards foreign science and art. Everybody knows how, in his day, the Jesuits were encouraged to give astronomical instruction in Peking, and how a wonderful group of astronomical instruments were cast in bronze and mounted on the wall of the Chinese capital whence they were carried away by the German troops after the Boxer enueite in 1900 and subsequently restored to their old place. It is also on record that Kang-hsi invited the missionaries to summon foreign painters to Peking, and that, in obedience to this invitation, Gherardini and Belleville came to China, where they had only just begun to produce some impression when the quarrel between the Jesuits and Dominicans resulted in the expulsion of all missionaries from Peking. The renowned Ricci, who worked with such splendid zeal at an earlier date—the Wan-li—was probably a greater artist than either Belleville or Gherardini, but he accomplished nothing beyond bequeathing to China a few pictures, one or two of which have been identified. Most notable of all was the work of Castiglione and Attiret, who are recorded to have painted no less than 200 pictures at the command of Chien-lung (1736-1795) "including portraits of the Sovereign and his consort as well as the Ministers of State, besides paintings executed on the ceilings and walls of the Palace." Apparently, however, none of these works has been identified. Those painted for the decoration of the Palace were probably destroyed when the celebrated order of destruction was issued by the allied commanders in 1860. At all events nothing save a tradition has survived from any of these efforts. Mr. Nakamura justly says that "the native style still reigned supreme and kept intact its peculiar characteristics." Even in ceramic decoration the art of the Occident achieved only a succes d'estime. Towards the close of the 18th century some of the beautiful Sevres porcelains were carried to Peking where they found technical counterparts in specimens of the Famille Rose. The Sevres style was imitated, and occasionally one used to find an example of that class in the curio stores of Peking, where great prices were set upon them as oddities rather than as master-pieces. Nothing shook the Chinese out of their conservatism. Perhaps, on the whole, the world was a gainer. Chinese art, as it stands, inspires only one regret, namely, that its traditions are greater than its present exponents.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Saturday, December 19.

At the budgetary meeting held in Tokyo on the 18th inst. the head of the Accounts Bureau in the Finance Department, replying to a question put by Mr. Morimoto, a member of the Lower House, is said to have replied that the Government intends to restore to the City of Tokyo the money (1 1/3 million yen), put up by the latter on account of the Exhibition for 1912.

It is now confidently alleged that the Government has decided to continue subsidising the Sakura Maru, and that she will be handed over to either the Nippon Yusen Kaisha or the Toyo Kisen Kaisha. This, as our readers probably remember, is the first steamer of the Japanese Volunteer Fleet. Not having been constructed for economical purposes, her consumption of coal is large, and this fact renders her somewhat of a white elephant to any company.

It appears that the loan of two million sterling for the Manchuria Railway was closed in London at half past twelve on the 17th inst., the subscriptions in the City alone having reached 10 1/2 times the amount. It is thought that when the applications from the provinces are received a very remarkable result will stand on record.

On the 18th inst. the long talked of project of a union among the whaling companies of Japan became an accomplished fact. A meeting of delegates from 7 out of the 11 companies was held at the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, and articles of coalition were agreed to without dissent. Applications for admission were subsequently received from 3 other companies, so that one only remains to be heard from.

The Hochi Shinbun notes that the Budget for next year shows an increase of 1,248,297 yen under the heading of subsidies and encouragement of ship-building and navigation. Out of this total 400,000 yen represents the subsidy to the projected South American service, and the remainder is the natural increment resulting from the operation of the law.

Great depression exists in the cotton-yarn trade, largely on account, doubtless, of the depreciation of silver, which is now at a point that virtually prohibits export. It is stated that not more than ten thousand bales have left the country during the current month, and that large stocks have accumulated in the hands of the manufacturers.

Sunday, December 20.

Baron Goto has given up the Presidency of the South Manchuria Railway Company, and Mr. Nakamura Zeko has been appointed to that important post, with Mr. Kunisawa Shimbei for Vice-President. This will doubtless satisfy the critics who have been proclaiming with considerable show of reason that Baron Goto was "wearing two or three pairs of sandals."

The general half-yearly meeting of the above Company was held on the 19th inst. with the new President in the chair, and it was unanimously decided to make a present to Baron Goto in recognition of his able services. The income of the Company for the past half year had been 4,183,000 yen, showing an increase of 209,000 yen as compared with the preceding half year. Thus the daily earning per mile had been 46.50 yen against 44.11 yen for the previous half year, and the expenses had been 22.03 yen per mile against 23.99 for the previous half year. The net income from the coal mines had been 502,000 yen, and the mines had produced from 960 to 970 tons a day, against 360 tons which was the figure at the time when the Company took over the property. The Company had been able to pay the full interest on its debts, and the development of its landed property was proceeding so rapidly that the building of ten towns and 12 hospitals had been undertaken.

Among the passengers who arrived by the steamer Mongolia on the 19th inst. was Mr. Albert Kahn, the eminent French financier, who, on the occasion of his recent visit to this country, donated a sum of 20,000 yen to the University to found scholarships for promoting the visits of Japanese students to Europe. The Asahi has an article welcoming Mr. Kahn, and dwelling on the services he has rendered to Japanese finance.

THE IMPERIAL DIET.

The two Houses met on the 22nd instant, 280 members of the Peers, and 370 of the Representatives being present. In the Upper chamber some measures of organization constituted the sole business, but in the Lower the election of a President and a Vice-President had to be made. The first ballot resulted thus:—

Mr. Haseba Junko .....	354
Mr. Ooka Ikuzo .....	78
Mr. Motoda Hajime .....	78
Mr. Kono Hironaka .....	64
Mr. Shimada Saburo .....	21

The second ballot showed 223 for Mr. Motoda and 217 for Mr. Ooka. Therefore names submitted to His Majesty for choice were those of Mr. Haseba and Mr. Motoda, both members of the Seiyu-kai. For Vice-President the first ballot gave:—

Mr. Kizuka Ryo .....	264
Mr. Taketomi .....	61
Mr. Oishi .....	34
Mr. Minoura .....	30
Mr. Kato .....	16

In the second ballot 224 votes were cast for Mr. Taketomi and 123 for Mr. Minoura. Thus the names submitted to the Throne were those of Messrs. Koizuka and Taketomi, both Progressists.

"DOROTHY" IN TOKYO.

The Yokohama amateurs may be well satisfied with the impression produced in Tokyo by their acting and singing. No such house had ever previously assembled in the Japanese capital to hear foreign music and to see foreign acting. Nor was the number alone remarkable. On all former occasions good-natured tolerance had been the mood of the Japanese audience, but with "Dorothy" they were genuinely pleased and we have heard only words of applause. It is not so many years ago, about 24 if we remember rightly, since an opera troupe—a very small and very mediocre troupe undoubtedly—being engaged by the enterprising lessee of the Shintomi theatre, found that their best efforts evoked only amusement from a Tokyo audience, and that nothing better was suggested by the soprano's loftiest register than an attempt on the part of some students to produce similar screams. That was before the man in the streets of Japan's capital had learned to appreciate European music—how many of us have even now learned to appreciate Japanese?—and the unfortunate members of the troupe saw themselves obliged to substitute a mazurka for an opera, as gyrating and movement appealed to the audience much more than foreign music. Those benighted days are passed, but still the enthusiasm caused by the Yokohama amateurs was quite remarkable. Taken all in all, no such musical treat had ever been furnished for Tokyo. Now that the big city has a theatre planned on European lines and well equipped, we trust that the Yokohama amateurs will be tempted to delight Tokyo by further displays of the high talent they certainly possess.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, December 18.

The market opened brisk on Friday morning, but owing to profit-taking sales the afternoon session saw a decline in many cases. Osaka was reported to be strong but the news did not correct the weak tone in Tokyo.

Saturday, December 19.

Prices were maintained on the Stock Exchange on Saturday. There was a general feeling of uncertainty which deterred purchasers. It seems to be thought that there will be no special change during the remaining few days of operations.

Monday, December 21.

It had been bruited abroad that the second ten days of December would be found to show a favourable balance of over 4 million yen, but when the figures were published, it was found that imports had exceeded exports by 184,000 yen. This exercised a very dispiriting influence on the Stock Exchanges of Tokyo and Osaka alike. Nearly all quotations fell, except the shares of the Tokyo Railway which leaped up more than two points in response to a rumour that the Company had actually submitted its application for an increase of fares.

Tuesday, December 22.

The 22nd instant being almost the last day of the year, inasmuch as the Exchange closes on the 26th, buyers were disposed to hold their hand and prices were hereby sustained. The Hochi Shimbum, a vehement opponent of the Tokyo Railway Company, alleges that a big public meeting is being planned for the purpose of demonstrating against a rise of fares. That may or may not be true, but at any rate the prospects of the project are too obscure to give any impetus to quotations.

Wednesday, December 23.

The market opened firm on the 23rd instant, but in the afternoon session there was a slight feeling of depression. On the whole, however, prices were fairly well maintained, sugar, which suffered a fall of 1.38 yen, being the only notable exception. It is not thought that the brief period remaining before the market closes for the year will witness any signal change. We append the quotations for February:—

	Dec. 22nd.	Dec. 23rd.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

It has now become an established custom in Japan to communicate the contents of the Budget to the members of both Houses of the Diet and to the press a few days before the opening of the session. The meeting for that purpose has come to be called Naiji-kwai, and is generally held at the official residence of the Prime Minister. It was held yesterday as usual, but much of the interest of the communication had been discounted by the remarkable frankness of Marquis Katsura's previous attitude with regard to financial questions in general. The Budget, as handed out yesterday, contained practically no addition to the knowledge already possessed by the public. It may be described broadly as the first really sound document of its kind which a Japanese Cabinet has been in a position to compile for some years, since it brings expenditures strictly within the limits of visible income, and since it makes no draft upon contingent assets.

A Japanese traveller who has just returned from Hongkong to Nagasaki is reported as saying that the measures taken by the Colonial Government to restrain all persons attempting to foment the boycott are very stringent. Such men are either placed in custody or are deported from the colony. The latter fate overtook the principal editor of the Chinese paper Hongkong Shinpao, but instead of quietly taking his departure he appealed against the order, and an interesting trial is thus anticipated in the Supreme Court. A great many curious questions have come before Sir Francis Piggott since he took his seat on the Bench of the Supreme Court, and it is always a pleasure to read his luminous judgments. This pending trial may be expected to receive very lucid treatment at his hands, and as it concerns a question which may ultimately assume very large dimensions from the point of view of the foreign residents in China, the result will be closely watched.

The question of beef grows more and more interesting. Investigations show that the number of cattle raised every year in Japan is from 140,000 to 150,000 yearly, whereas the number killed is 220,000. At that rate the stock must soon become exhausted. Of late years recourse has been freely had to Korean cattle. Thus the number of bullocks imported from the Peninsula in 1907 was 18,356 at a total cost of 349,700 yen; whereas the number imported during the first 10 months of the current year was 19,526 at an outlay of 656,600 yen, from which figures it will be seen that the stock in Korea also is becoming scarce. In these circumstances the frozen meat from Australia is finding a great market, but the importers of the meat are said to have learned by experience that if they sell it wholesale, the retail dealers pass it off as home-killed beef, and thence the price of beef for the general public is not reduced. They have decided therefore to open retail stores throughout Tokyo. Already the market price in Tokyo and Osaka has been affected.

From Nagasaki comes a telegram explaining the reasons of the decision recently rendered by the High Prize Court in St. Petersburg with regard to the steamer Oldhamia. This vessel, while en route for Japan laden with petroleum, was seized by the cruisers of the Baltic Squadron, and while under the Squadron's escort ran ashore on the south coast of Korea, and became a total loss. In these circumstances alone it is improbable that Russia would have sought justification for refusing to compensate the owners, in some measure at any rate, though the full claim of £100,000 would probably have been disputed. But evidence was produced, it appears, which satisfied the Prize Court that the disaster to the Oldhamia was the outcome of an attempt on her own part to elude her escort and effect her escape. No further particulars are to hand, but this plea is plain enough.

It appears (Mainichi Dempo's telegram) that the trial of Chang, one of Mr. Stevens' murderers, has been going on in San Francisco for a week past. The telegraph says that Chang has openly confessed his crime, and has attempted to justify himself by saying that he considered Mr. Stevens as an enemy of Korea since, while engaged as Foreign Adviser to that country, he advocated measures detrimental to its interests. Evidently the rumour that the other murderer has effected his escape may be taken as true. Doubtless there was some failure to provide for his detention when he became convalescent, and between the not unnatural leniency of the hospital authorities and the improvidence of the police, he managed to get away. The shooting was actually done, however, by Chang, who is now undergoing trial.

The Senate at Washington is reported to have adopted a resolution in the sense that the commissioners appointed for the purposes of the Japanese Exhibition, when it was supposed that the latter would take place in 1912, should continue to hold their appointments, for the present at all events. This is interpreted as a desire on the part of the Senate to evince the sincere wish of the United States to promote the Exhibition; and it is further interpreted in some quarters as pointing to preparations to receive the Japanese business men who are to visit the United States next year.

It is rather curious to observe how quickly things have moved since we ventured, some months ago, to express the opinion that air-ships would soon be used for military purposes. Much more incredible results have been achieved by science during the past half century, and one must be endowed with an exceptional wealth of scepticism to doubt that the future may bear as marvellous fruit as the past has done. The telegraph says that Germany has actually decided to utilize the Zeppelin for scouting purposes, and to build floating docks and convertible air ship sheds. There is some obscurity about the programme, but the main fact is unequivocal. The air-ship's first use is to be for warlike purposes. Fate has been a little unkind in this instance to a local contemporary which undertook to ridicule our forecast, and to declare that not only had the air-ship a long way to travel before it reached the goal of belligerent utility, but also that nobody had yet thought of so employing it. Our German local contemporary too! And now Germany is the very Power to establish the record!

We are inclined to think that there was a good deal of exaggeration in the telegrams recently received about the attitude of the United States Senate towards the American-Japanese Entente. It was not unintelligible that the Senate should feel a little hurt about the fact that the road chosen by the President to reach the Entente had left the Upper Chamber on one side, but it really never seemed likely that this feeling would find expression in action, for the Senate is nothing if not law abiding, and in this matter there had been no departure whatever from the law of the land. The latest news is that the Entente has been welcomed by the Senate and that its only opponents are a small clique of Democrats.

Our readers will have observed that in table VIII. of our translation of next year's Budget there appears, under the heading of "Increase of Telephone Exchanges," a sum of 1,200,000 yen, being part of a total sum of 4,200,000 which is to be applied for that purpose during a term of 4 years. This is interpreted by the Asahi Shimbun and the Yorodzu Choho as showing that the system of message charges is to come into operation from the 1st of April next, if the Diet gives its consent, the extra profit thus attained being applied to the extension of the service. It certainly does seem a little hard that the pockets of person owning telephones should be exploited for the purpose of bringing this convenience within reach of their neighbours.

The figures of the foreign trade for the 10 days ended the 20th are as follow:—

	Yen.
Exports .....	10,741,000
Imports .....	10,925,000
Excess of Imports .....	184,000
Total Exports from January 1st to December 20th.....	363,876,000
Total Imports from January 1st to December 20th.....	424,003,000
Excess of Imports for the whole period...	60,130,000
Diminution of Exports for the whole period, compared with 1907 .....	55,128,000
Diminution of Imports for the whole period, compared with 1907 .....	55,915,000
Diminution of Whole Trade for the whole period, compared with 1907.....	111,043,000

On the 19th inst. the Japanese Ambassador in Washington was the guest of the Lotus Club in New York, and the banquet was attended by 270 persons. Baron Takahira made a speech on the relations between the United States and Japan. The gist of what he said, so far as we can gather from the telegrams (Asahi and Nichi Nichi), was that there had been some friction between the two countries during the recent past; owing mainly to mutual misunderstanding, and to the exaggerations of newspapers which snapped up unconsidered trifles, and, as the Japanese saying is, talked pins into poles. But now the horizon was completely clear, and there was not the slightest reason to apprehend the appearance of any cloud. This speech was loudly applauded, and the banquet is described as having been a memorable success.

The names of Mr. Taft's Ministers are telegraphed to the Asahi Shimbun, but as we shall doubtless have them presently without being disguised by transliteration, we refrain from attempting to decipher the originals.

It is alleged that the Nagoya Electric Light Company is in treaty for a loan of 1½ million yen to be obtained abroad at 6 per cent., the net price of the bonds to be 90 yen, and the period of redemption 35 years. This last condition is stated in the form "period preceding redemption" but we imagine that that must be a mistake. The terms certainly seem onerous.

FOREIGNERS AND THE COLLECTION OF FINE ARTS IN JAPAN.

It has been aptly remarked by Count Okuma, says the Jiyu Tsushin-Sha, that there are in Japan three subject matters the histories of which are worthy of our consideration namely, the history of politics, that of religion and that of fine arts. With regard to the former two, materials being accessory to students, thorough study has been made both by the Japanese and by foreigners, but with reference to the last item, the case is quite different, because genuine materials are not accessible. Germans, English and Americans have been dispatched by different associations in their respective countries, and the names of connoisseurs of Japanese fine arts are by no means few among them, while some of them have developed the power of keen perception concerning Japanese fine arts to an extensive degree. They are quite capable of appreciating the classic beauty of the fine art of the Suiko period, (600 A.D.) the boldness of that of the Ten-pei period, (750 A.D.) the refinement of the Fujiwara period, (800 A.D.) the frankness of the Ashikaga period, (1300) the inspiring delicacy of the Momoyama (1470) and the minuteness of that of the Tokugawa period (1600), and the different characteristics of fine art objects and paintings representing various schools which prospered and declined during tens of centuries that have gone by. Mr. Takahashi, of the Mitsui family, who has no mean conception of his own perceptive power of the fine arts of Japan was greatly surprised when the art-critic of the British Museum in his visit to the Mitsui family exhibited a remarkable power of artistic criticism when being shown the fine collections of the Japanese millionaire; but this class of foreigners is painfully small in number. The distinguishing of genuine pictures from their later imitations is much more difficult than distinguishing real coins from counterfeit ones. Reluctant as we are, we must admit the existence of counterfeit and pseudo-art productions in Japan, and sometimes, tolerably competent judges of Japanese fine arts are taken in. It was only recently that the writer was made acquainted with the fact that more than one half of the collections in the hands of wealthy Japanese have been proved to be false. Hundreds and thousands of dollars have thus been wasted both by foreigners and Japanese in making purchases of these counterfeits of the gems of genuine fine art production. The practice, however disgraceful it is, has already grown too deep to be rooted out with a single effort. Among the most reliable connoisseurs upon whom we may place complete confidence, and whose advice we may follow without any apprehension of incurring deception, we may mention the following names:—

Viscount Fukuoka, Privy Councillor. Mr. Matano, President of the Imperial Museum. Mr. Masaki, Principal of the Tokyo Fine Arts School. Mr. Imaizumi, Chief of the Fine Arts Department of the Imperial Museum. M. Omura, Professor in the Fine Arts School. Mr. Katano, member of the Council for the Preservation of old Temples and Shrines. Mr. Hirako, member of the Council for the Preservation of old Temples and Shrines. Baron Kuki, President of the Council for the Preservation of old Temples and Shrines. Mr. Takamine, Principal of the Tokyo Female Higher Normal School. Mr. Takamura, Professor in the Tokyo Fine Arts School. Mr. Sekino, Professor of the Tokyo University. Mr. Nakagawa, a member of the Council for the Preservation of old Temples and Shrines. Mr. Mizoguchi, Vice-chief of the Fine Arts Department of the Imperial Museum.

Foreigners are advised that it is better that they should consult competent persons, before they set about the collection of specimens of the Japanese fine arts. It reflects unfavourably upon the credit of Japan at large when foreigners invest sums for the purpose of obtaining our fine art objects and have spurious collections foisted upon them. It must also be remembered in this connection that the greater portion of the genuine specimens of the fine arts representing various prominent schools of painters in Japan is preserved in the Imperial Household or in the collections of renowned families of the nobility, access to which is by no means an easy task. Books on the fine arts of Japan by various prominent art-critic, both Japanese and foreign, have been produced depicting the results of their personal observations from different standpoints, all betraying a certain amount of their characteristic national superiority and weakness, and it was a universal desideratum that reproductions of fine arts collections in the possession of the Imperial family as well as those in the hands of wealthy Japanese individuals should appear. This long-felt desire seems to have been most ably satisfied by the publication of the Tōyō Butsu Tai Kan (lit General View of Oriental Fine Arts) by the Shin-bi Sho in of Tokyo.

This work, containing the finest collections, characterizing the four great periods of the history of Japanese fine arts, Suiko, Tenpei, Hei An, and Fujiwara will be a valuable nude mecum for foreigners who seek to find their way in the terra incognita of fine arts. The purchase of superior articles is a waste of money, and casts a slur upon the untarnished fame of Japanese integrity. Foreigners are advised to take every possible precaution before making collections of Japanese fine art works which will in all probability be rich heirlooms and valuable property to their posterity from generation to generation.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

The British Association of Japan desire us to make known that Mr. W. B. Mason has consented to be the permanent secretary of the Association, also that a prize fund has just been opened in connection with the Japanese Language Examination Scheme. It is hoped that the prizes offered to candidates passing the third stage under the conditions outlined in the advertisement will prove an incentive to many Britishers to enter for these examinations.

These examinations were only commenced some six months ago, and Mr. V. G. Bowden after eight months' study has already passed the required standard. The first prize out of the fund has therefore been awarded to him.

There are now about 250 members. Any Britishers desiring to join the Association are requested to send their names to the Secretary, 167 Yamashita-cho, Yokohama.

The committee elected at the Annual Meeting held last month is as follows:—

Chairman, Mr. F. G. Sale; Vice-Chairman, Mr. H. D. C. Jones; Hon. Treasurer, Mr. A. H. Cole Watson.

Committee.—Mr. P. S. Bent, Mr. A. J. Cornes, Mr. L. J. Healing, Mr. J. Williamson Jones, Mr. C. K. Marshall Martin and Mr. J. C. Ward.

THE BETHELL TRIAL.

THE proceedings in the BETHELL libel case, as published by the N.-C. Herald, have now reached Yokohama. We say the N.-C. Herald advisedly, for, owing presumably to some error on the part of the post-office, the N.-C. Daily News containing a report of the trial has not yet come to hand. There are some points worthy of note. The first relates to the security obtained for the loan of 27,000 yen made to Mr. MARTIN. Counsel for the defence took infinite trouble to discover the truth of that matter, and counsel for the prosecution endeavoured very earnestly to obstruct the inquiry. No less than four columns of the Shanghai journal's report are occupied by the examination and the discussion relating to this one point. They go to show that Mr. BETHELL himself was very reluctant to give any lucid explanation, and that he admitted that a part (5,000 yen) of the loan was secured by a promissory note only. It is difficult to understand why there should have been any hesitation in exposing the whole facts of such a transaction. We do not desire to suggest that anything in the nature of dishonesty or fraud is to be inferred. But our previously expressed view is confirmed, namely, that, on the face of the evidence hitherto published, Mr. BETHELL seems to have been indiscreet—to use the gentlest term—in his manner of disposing of funds entrusted to his charge. The Judge who tried the case evidently took the same view. He is quoted as having said, in his address to the Jury:—

Then they had to consider the evidence given in mitigation. The first subject was the argument of Mr. PHILLIPS, which his Lordship thought seemed to be supported by the evidence, that it (the libel) was due in great measure to Mr. BETHELL's own indiscretion in the way in which he had dealt with these funds. They had to consider if, when Mr. BETHELL stated at the meeting how he had invested the funds, his indiscretion did not start the story which led to this libel.

Another question raised at the trial was the measure of importance attaching to corrections and apologies published by a newspaper subsequently to the utterance of a libel. The North-China Daily News did everything within the reasonable range of its power to undo and to make amends for any injury which might possibly have been caused by the original publication. Moreover, there was never any question of malice. What had happened was that an erroneous telegram had been sent to the Shanghai journal by its Tokyo correspondent in the ordinary routine of the day's work, and had been published as a matter of course. The telegram said that "Japanese telegrams (from Seoul) stated that Mr. BETHELL had confessed to misappropriation." This appeared in the N. C. Daily News of August 31st, 1908, and on September 19th, the Shanghai journal published the following:—

A telegram in our issue of September 17 stated, in connexion with the trial of Yang Ki-tak at Seoul on the charge of alleged embezzlement of Korean national funds, that Mr. E. T. Bethell had "proved everything was in order." In these circumstances it is clear that the statement quoted by our Tokyo correspondent from Japanese telegrams alleging that Mr. Bethell had confessed to misappropriation was incorrect. The message in question appeared in our issue of August 31 and read:—

"It is reported from Japanese sources that there is continued native agitation in Seoul against Mr. Bethell in connexion with the national debts redemption funds. The Japanese telegrams state that Mr. Bethell confessed to misappropriation in reply to remonstrative inquiries that were made yesterday."

We have received assurances (anticipated indeed by our correspondent's message in Thursday's issue) that the Japanese vernacular reports in question were false and untrue, and we have, therefore, to express our sincere regret that our correspondent should have unwittingly given publicity to them."

It would have been difficult to be more explicit or apologetic within the limits of dignity. Ought Mr. BETHELL to have been satisfied, and are we to ascribe his prosecution of the suit to a desire to make capital—pecuniary profit—out of it, as was explicitly suggested by the defence? We do not think so. Unfortunately falsehood is much more nimble-footed than truth. Given a few days' start, the former will always outrun the latter. One of the only ways to correct the discrepancy is a libel action. A libel action invariably attracts so much attention that the error it is designed to correct can not survive the publicity of the correction. It appears to us that Mr. BETHELL merely obeyed the dictates of expediency in pressing his suit. On the other hand, we strongly sympathise with the N.-C. Daily News. Its course throughout appears to us to have been in accord with the best rules of journalism and, in the circumstances, the damages seem to have been excessive. The Judge evidently assessed them at a much smaller figure. In his charge to the jury his Lordship referred to a letter from the defendant's solicitors which contained the following:—

If Mr. Bethell is still not satisfied and you will tell us of any further publication or steps he wishes our clients to make or take, we undertake on their behalf that they will do all they can to meet him. They are prepared also to pay any reasonable expense he has incurred, but they cannot consider a demand for any money payment by way of damages.

The Judge said:—

If they thought that letter was a fair and reasonable proposal to make, they ought seriously to consider whether Mr. Bethell should not have accepted it. If they thought that he should have accepted it, they could not give him very much more than he would have got then. They must focus their attention upon that point. Presuming they had considered all these points, they had next to decide what amount to award. There was no claim for vindictive damages; on the other hand he did not think contemptuous damages would meet the case. They could give nominal damages or a small amount, or they might consider what he thought they ought to consider—the basis of that letter.

It had already been elicited that what the writers of the letter contemplated was about $300, and his Lordship's idea appears to have been directed to some such amount.

We desire to add a word on our own account. Vehement accusations of prejudice have been preferred against us in connexion with our attitude towards Mr. BETHELL, and a great deal has been said of Englishmen's love of fair-play. We do not know that we should be disposed to look to these critics for a practical exposition of what is called "fair play." But as to Mr. BETHELL, our opinion of him is very succinctly expressed in the words used by the English Judge who last June condemned him to 3 weeks' imprisonment:—

"Now I think it would be a monstrous neglect of duty if His Majesty's Government allowed such a state of things to continue: it comes to this that you, being a foreign guest in this country and owing a duty of quiet and orderly conduct to its Government, in return for the protection they extend to you, set yourself up as a piper leader of insurrection with this Court as a sanctuary to flee to in case of danger. In what respect can you be a real leader in the forefront of the battle with your life and family and property at stake? Suppose they follow the advice of your editor and take up the sword, where will you be when their blood is flowing? Without at all questioning your courage or disinterested motives I say you are in a false position and likely to do the most previous harm to the people you wish to benefit."

We have nothing to add to the above, except that the support given to Mr. BETHELL by the Japan Gazette, the Japan Herald and the Japan Chronicle is precisely what we should have expected of them.

"THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY FOR CHINA."

THIS is an institution to which we have already had occasion to refer. It used to be called the "Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge among the Chinese," but it was re-modelled in 1906 under the name set forth in the above headline. The President is Sir ROBERT HART, and among the Vice-Presidents we find the following laymen, namely, Messrs. C. S. ADDIS, G. JAMIESON, and Mrs. ARCHIBALD LITTLE, while the lay element on the Board of Directors comprises Messrs. H. T. MONTAGUE BELL, T. S. BRACKMAN, HORACE HANBURY, H. E. HOBSON, E. S. LITTLE and EDWARD WHEEN. The Honorary Treasurer is Mr. W. G. LAY and the General Secretary is the Rev. TIMOTHY RICHARD. We mention these names, not for the purpose of showing the strength of the Society, but rather to illustrate the co-operation that exists between the missionary body and an important element of the foreign mercantile community in China. Looking, too, at the list of members, we find that out of 191 names no less than 68 indicate laymen; and that among the latter appear many of the most distinguished Englishmen in China. It seems to be a fair inference that the labours of Christian missionaries obtain more sympathy among the foreign mercantile community in China than they do in Japan. In further evidence of that fact we read that at the last annual meeting of the Society, held in Shanghai on the 19th of November, Mr. D. LANDALE, Chairman of the Municipal Council of Shanghai, presided, and at the outset of his speech made use of the words:—"In referring to the report of the Society's work for the past year, I would like to say that when Dr. TIMOTHY RICHARD did me the honour to invite me to preside at this meeting, I agreed to do so in the hope that it would to some extent help to identify the commercial community of this place with Missionary enterprise, and more particularly with the Educational work in which this Diffusion Society is engaged. Although you may not find much active evidence of our interest in your work, let me assure you that it is more due to the scanty opportunities which our daily duties leave room for, rather than to any indifference or lack of interest." That is very plain speaking. Why, we wonder, should things be different in Japan. It is true that the aims of the Christian Literature Society can not be described as directly missionary. The chief object is to translate and bring within easy reach of Chinese readers all foreign books of a really useful and instructive nature. Nevertheless, considering that the Editorial Staff consists of four men who write "Rev'd." before their names, and one lady who, since she acts as Distributing Secretary, may be regarded as a missionary, it is easy to see that the great majority of the works issuing from the Society's press are likely to be of a propagandist character. Thus on the list of the Society's new publications we find such books as the "Scripture Idea of Sin and Salvation;" "Christian Theology;" "Confucianism and Christianity;" Sir OLIVER LODGE'S "Christian Catechism," the "Three-fold Secret of the Holy Spirit," and the "Christian Review"—6 publications out of 13. Hence the Society must be counted as an unequivocally Christian organ. Suppose that a cognate Society were started here in Japan, would it have any hope of securing similar support from the commercial community? The experience of the past compels a negative answer, but does not suggest reasons for the negation. There is a Japanese society working on cognate lines in China, and we gather that it has achieved excellent results, but it has never appealed for foreign aid, so far as we know, and indeed its warrant for such an appeal would be very much weaker than the warrant of a society under purely Occidental auspices. In the Christian Literature Society's annual report, the opening sentence is National conditions in the West profoundly affect the East. The leading telegrams in the newspapers of Europe appear a couple of days afterwards in the native press of Asia. Hence all mutual suspicion among nations professedly Christian, together with all increase of armaments to defend Christian nations from one another—indeed all prominence given to the arts of war rather than those of peace—has the inevitable result that non-Christian nations begin to wonder whether we have any moral practices to teach them that will be worth learning.

That is a very just comment, and equally just is it to say that the aloofness which marks the attitude of the average member of the foreign mercantile community towards Christian propagandism in this country can not fail to discredit missionary effort, more or less. The Japanese naturally ask why, if the merits of this foreign creed are so great, it is treated so coldly by the countrymen of those that preach it. The question is profoundly interesting and has never been frankly discussed.

THE NAVAL SITUATION.

ONE of the most striking features of the present age is the homage paid to sea-power by its all but universal recognition. "The world has never seen a more impressive demonstration of the influence of sea-power upon its history" said Captain MAHAN, than when "NELSON's far-distant storm-beaten ships, upon which the Grand Army never looked, stood between it and the dominion of the world." But it may be questioned whether the eager pursuit of maritime power in which the leading nations of the world without exception are now engaged does not afford still stronger testimony to the value of naval strength than did the spectacle of the baffled forces of the great Napoleon. Nations which a score of years ago, or less, were unheard of as naval Powers, have set themselves to the pursuit to such purpose that they are to-day by no means in the category of quantités négligeables. Even South American republics have taken to ordering Dreadnoughts, and the world is now witnessing the unwonted spectacle of a little State like Holland proving the potency of maritime power by means of "demonstrations" directed against a recalcitrant republic four thousand miles away.

A marked impetus has been given to the general growth of naval power by three events of recent years—the German Naval Act of 1900, the advent of the Dreadnought, and the cruise of the American Battleship Fleet in 1908. The first of these had the effect of intensifying the contest—as yet, happily, of the purse alone; the second awakened new ambitions and quickened the pace; the third has compelled a widening, to the greatest possible extent, of the scope and purview of the naval Powers of the world. Yesterday, as it were, the epicentre of the world's sea-power lay on the waters of north-western Europe: to-day the long-neglected Pacific is calling for inclusion in the Naval horizon. A new trident of naval power overhangs that great Ocean, to induce as it were a rekindling of rivalry, a competition within a competition.

It is a fact, however—often overlooked by the casual observer—that sea power in the absolute sense is indivisible. The command of the sea can ultimately fall to one Power only: the trident cannot be held save in a single grasp. It is probably in the full knowledge of this circumstance that that most ardent believer in sea-power, the Emperor WILLIAM II, coupled with his remarkable dictum "Our future is on the sea," the somewhat contentious declaration—"the trident must be in our fist." With all the energy characteristic of that able and ambitious Sovereign, this lofty aim has been unremittingly pursued. Recent events in the European arena have turned the World's attention from the East, both Near and Far, and thus it comes about that the insistent yet ambiguous cry from the far Pacific, though it may make itself heard once more in "the great debates of the future," is, for the time being, lost in the clamour of the greatest naval competition the world has yet beheld—that which is working out its portentous destiny on the opposing shores of the North Sea.

The practical embodiment of the Kaiser's very natural but disturbing ambition lies, as has already been implied, in that far-reaching measure which gave pause to a somnolent world and generated a new activity in all the dockyards of Europe—the German Naval Act of 1900. This Act is so framed as to place the Fatherland by the year 1917 in possession of a fleet of 38 first-class battleships. Since the passing of the Act, though circumstances unforeseen have arisen to make its fulfilment more difficult, there has been no looking back. Indeed, the most recent amendment of German naval policy—the shortening of the effective life of a battleship from 25 years to 20—will have the effect of increasing automatically, and to a very considerable extent, the fighting power of the fleet that is to be. Then came suddenly, and with something of a shock, the evolution of a new type of ironclad, revolutionizing all preconceived ideas of warship construction, rendering existing ironclads out of date and demanding from all promoters of naval efficiency an immediate recognition of the vastly increased dimensions and power of the new type of fighting machine.

To Germany the advent of the Dreadnought must at first sight have seemed a heavy blow. All the moderate sized battleships of the growing Fleet of the Fatherland, designed for the shallow waters of the North Sea, were outclassed and, albeit new, were already superannuated. Canals, harbours, docks built to accommodate them were, in their present state, useless in view of the new prototype. But the Fatherland rose to the occasion. The 13,000-ton battleships foreshadowed in the Act were henceforth to be Dreadnoughts. The necessary accommodation for the new monster-ships was to be prepared, despite the enormous cost. And with satisfaction it was recognized that, since all battleships laid down before the era of the "all-big-gun" were almost out of the reckoning, the same applied to their rivals—and to one rival in particular. Germany was now in a position to renew the race, as it were with a clean sheet, and while perfidious Albion had secured a little start, the competition could proceed on even terms, pace the bigger bill to pay. Thus the revolution in naval construction heralded by the Dreadnought, apparently a serious set back to German naval progress, has in reality proved a boon. So far at least as the first line of battle is concerned, there seems, on the surface, no reason why the Fatherland should not draw perceptibly nearer "to the great day" of the grasping of the trident.

It is impossible that events of such moment as we have described should pass unnoticed by other nations, and in particular by England, who stands to lose more—who stands to lose all—in the day when she no longer rules the waves. British public opinion has therefore turned with earnestness, not unmingled with concern, to the supreme question of comparative naval strength. How does the British navy, that greatest instrument of the world's peace, and sole instrument of British Imperial defence, compare with the forces which on all sides are rising to confront it?

The defence of the British Islands—the heart of the British Empire—depends in the first instance upon the so-called Channel and Home Fleets. Of the latter only the Nore Division is held in readiness for immediate service, while the Portsmouth and Devonport Divisions, consisting for the most part of older vessels, are held in reserve at six hours' notice. Leaving these for the moment out of the reckoning, there remain the following as the first line of British naval defence:—

CHANNEL FLEET.		NORE DIVISION.
Battleships:—
8 King Edward VII.		4 Dreadnought,
6 Formidable .....	14	2 Lord Nelson,
		3 Indomitable	9
Armament:—
12 in. guns .....	56	72
9 2 in. ....	32	20
6 in. ....	152	0
Weight of broadside, 61,250 lb.		51,200 lb.
Armoured cruisers .....		6
(1st Cruiser Squadron)		6
Armament:—
9 2 in. ....	12	30
7 5 in. ....	16	42
6 in. ....	45	0
Weight of broadside, 7,600 lb.		13,320 lb.

An analysis of the German Hochsee Flotte shows as follows:—

HOCHSEE FLOTTE.
1st Division	2nd Division
2 Deutschland class	3 Deutschland class
4 Wittelsbach class	5 Braunschweig class
2 Kaiser class
Total armament: Forty 11 in., twenty-four 9 4 in., 240 6 7 in., and 100 6 in. guns. Weight of broadside: Heavy guns, 31,414 lb.; secondary guns, 13,992 lb.; total, 45,406 lb.

ARMOURD CRUISERS.
2 Scharnhorst	2 Roon
2 Prinz Adalbert	1 Prinz Heinrich
Total armament: Two 9 2 in., thirty-two 8 2 in., sixty-two 6 in. guns; Weight of broadside, 6,268 lb.

From these figures it will be seen that the Channel Fleet alone has a substantial advantage in broadside fire over the whole German Fleet in commission. In reserve there are 16 German battleships of the Brandenburg, Heindall and Kaiser classes, as compared with 13 on the British side, consisting of the Royal Sovereign, Centurion and Trafalgar classes. Further, there is to be considered the British Atlantic Fleet, composed of the 6 fast Duncans, with a cruiser division, but as this force is pivoted on Gibraltar, in a position to reinforce the Mediterranean Fleet if occasion require, it cannot be regarded as immediately available for service on the "narrow seas."

It is, however, upon the not very distant future that the eyes of most Britons are cast. Battleships, like Rome, are not built in a day. Issues so momentous as those the British Navy is charged to protect cannot be left to the policy of "muddling through," or be provided against in a sudden emergency. We have seen that, as far as ships of the pre-Dreadnought era are concerned, Germany has wisely abandoned the race, and is concentrating all her efforts on the immense, powerful, and costly "capital" ship. Her intention of laying down at least four ships of that class each year, is now a matter of common knowledge. It is equally a matter of common knowledge that this figure for new construction, representing the minimum requirements of Great Britain as laid down by Lord SELBORNE, First Lord of the Admiralty in the late Unionist administration, has not been reached by Great Britain in either of her last two programmes. It is clear, then, that unless a very pronounced effort is made on the part of the premier Naval Power, the lead obtained by her through the inception of the Dreadnought type will be lost, and her most assiduous rival will find herself so nearly abreast of her in this type of vessel as to be able to call in question a supremacy which has remained unchallenged since the day of Trafalgar. By the end of 1911, assuming the German programme to be carried out with some approach to punctuality, the strength of the two navies in "capital" ships will stand as follows:—

British		German
Dreadnoughts .....	8	10
Invincibles .....	4	3
Armament: 12—11 in. ....	122	144
6 in. ....	0	120
Weight of broadside: 81,600 lb.		114,336 lb.

To this table must be added, on the British side, the programme of the coming year. It is little wonder, in the circumstances, that considerable importance is attached by the British public to that programme, and it is not too much to say that the fate of the present Liberal Government hangs upon that programme. If they show themselves worthy of the trust imposed upon them by responding to the call for an unusually heavy vote—from 6 to 8 Dreadnoughts is the general demand—they will do more to rehabilitate their somewhat tattered prestige than all the Licensing Bills and Old Age Pensions they could conceive. If not, their shift will be short, and the day may yet come when they will be taken to task by "the wild mob's million feet."

THE BOOKSHELF.

More Japonico, by JAMES S. DE BENNEVILLE Messrs. Kelly & Walsh.

MR. DE BENNEVILLE, already well known on account of his remarkable work, "Sakurambo," has now produced a book which will assuredly rank as one of the Classics of Japan. It is not a tempting volume so far as appearance goes. Nearly 600 pages, or more than 300,000 words, of small close print on thin paper and without any illustrations—that is a combination not by any means attractive. But we venture to predict that neither the diminutive size of the type nor the quality of the paper will be remembered for a moment by any reader of "More Japonico." The task which Mr. de Benneville has set himself to accomplish is to write a life history of the Japanese people from the earliest times to the present day; not a history compiled merely from the available annals which Japan itself furnishes, but a history showing the development of this now great nation side by side with Western illustrations. In other words, he has undertaken to read the East into the West and the West into the East, so that we are enabled to contrast and to compare the effects produced by cognate causes in the two hemispheres. Evidently such a task requires very extensive erudition, and Mr. de Benneville's pages afford plain evidence that his researches into the literature of the world have been conducted on a remarkably wide scale. There are nine chapters, and they are thus headed: (1) "A sketch of Japanese history in its formal development from earliest historical times." (2) "The Japanese house, its influence on Japanese thought in the past and hence on the present." (3) "Circulation, material and mental." (4) "The general course and possibilities of crystallization or development." (5) "The subjects of the preceding chapters as reacting with religion." (6) "The influence of mere living on custom." (7) "The existing Japanese State in its relations to the pre-Meiji era and to the individualism introduced from the West." (8) "Woman as a modifying factor in the communal life." (9) "Closes the book in general terms." It will be at once apparent from these headings that the work is something very different from an ordinary history. Its intention is not merely to show the Japanese as they are to-day, but also to show how they have become what they are, and how they might have been expected to become it. Covering ground so extensive and arriving at conclusions so definite, Mr. de Benneville must of necessity antagonise many pre-conceived views. For example, if there be one trait of Japanese disposition which impresses itself forcibly upon foreign observation, it is their good-humour, their sunny, laughing temperament. But Mr. de Benneville says:—"Any socialistic system is the most expensive as to taxation in the world. To maintain a level it must take all it can find in the range of vision. But one method could accomplish this—the military system. The army ideal—soldiership—runs all through the mental equipment of the Japanese of to-day. The actual unhappiness this can cause and has caused is unknowable. There is mental suffering in this constant suppression. Dull ignorance alone tolerates it. Many a fine Japanese mind must have worn itself out in its friction against the system. What relief it found was in the details of a most exquisite if grotesque art. . . . Japanese literature is generally criticized as pessimistic. And why should it not be? These people had something the matter with them. They were suffering from cramp and did not know what was their trouble. . . . Thus socialism slept and sleeps its hideous nightmare under these countless grass-thatched huts. . . . But what it could not evolve was happiness for its people or efficiency in the world strife." All this certainly suggests the idea of a nation living under conditions which could not fail to produce sad, colourless lives—"the dull mechanic paces to and fro; the set gray life, and apathetic end." But that is not Japan as we know it. Of course in the vast field covered by a work of such scope there must be much about which great differences of opinion will be provoked. We do not pretend to agree with all Mr. Benneville's theories, but we do most unequivocally admit that his way of stating and demonstrating them is most attractive and convincing. No book hitherto published has analysed the Japanese people in an equally exhaustive and profoundly thoughtful manner, and no author has apparently brought to bear on his subject such a mass of varied information. We should be disposed to place Dr. Gulick's "Evolution of the Japanese" next in the category. Both will remain at the head of the library for many a year to come. One pity—a very small matter—is there should have been occasion for a long list of errata, and that, long as it is, it is not exhaustive. But that is not Mr. de Benneville's fault: he has been ill used by the proof-readers.

The Positive Science of Morals. Its Oppor-tuneness, its Outlines and its chief Applications. By the late PIERRE LAFFITTE, Successor of Auguste Comte, and Professor of the History of the Sciences at the College de France. Translated by J. CAREY HALL, M.A., I.S.O., H.B.M.'s Consul-General for Yokohama, London, Watts & Co., 1908.

A GOOD translation should read like an original work. The book before us certainly does that. There are many fine passages in it, which reproduce in English the succinctness, perspicacity and verve of the original. Mr. Hall is an old hand at this kind of translation. Twenty-one years ago he published a translation of Laffitte's Essay on Chinese Civilisation. Only an ardent admirer of Auguste Comte and a well read Positivist could produce such a book as Mr. Hall has given us. It will certainly appeal to a very large number of English readers, since it presents Positivism to the world in a popular form, free from many of the technicalities which have seemed to many outsiders to render the system a hard one to master. Auguste Comte gave his thoughts to the world in fourteen or fifteen volumes. Frederic Harrison tells us that he was quite thirty-five before he fully absorbed Positivism and that he had been a systematic student of it for ten or twelve years before. But the leading ideas of Positivism can be briefly stated, for Mr. J. H. Bridges, a very great authority on the subject, tells us that 20 Positivist mottoes give in a nutshell all the principal thoughts which Auguste Comte bequeathed to mankind. This work is especially designed to appeal to the common-sense of ordinary readers. No special preparation is needed for understanding it. But it goes without saying that it is essentially a book which only serious-minded people who themselves have speculated time and again on the various questions discussed so clearly by Pierre Laffitte would ever go through. But there are numbers of conscientious, aspiring and highly cultivated men and women to whom this work will certainly appeal. It will appeal to all those who have given up supernaturalism as a basis for morals and religion but who feel the need of a substitute for that basis. The silly practice of trying to label everything and everybody has led to the use of a number of titles for the same class of thinkers. Agnostics, rationalists, free-thinkers, sceptics, atheists, infidels, heretics, Comtists, all adopt the same attitude to Christian supernaturalism. They unequivocally reject it as unproven and unprovable, as distinctly harmful in this twentieth century, and as a huge obstacle to the progress of high-class morality. That this class of thinkers are less earnest, less competent to distinguish between truth and error, less worthy of confidence than the people who cling to the old beliefs is not borne out by facts. Many of these non-Christian speculators are the very salt of the earth and are regarded with the most profound respect by all fair-minded, and enlightened persons the world over. There are practically only two kinds of Christianity in existence. One of these is that of the Catholic church and certain Protestant churches, which is embodied in definite creeds, is based on miraculous incidents, and has been handed down from generation to generation almost unchanged through twelve or fifteen centuries. The other form of Christianity has been aptly described as a creed that has "become as drifting as cloudland, as soft and shapeless as the morning mist." It lets the alleged miraculous evidences of the truth of Christianity go as useless impedimenta. It retains only such parts of the old creed as modern thought, modern criticism and, above all, modern science sanction. According to this unstable form of belief, each person accepts or rejects anything and everything that offends what is known as the individual conscience. Cardinal Newman held that this latter type of Christianity is no Christianity at all. Be that as it may, both the above-named types of Christianity are repulsive to the Comtist. According to him the Catholic, though mistaken, is logical, but the rationalist's Protestant's position is altogether indefensible. He started out to follow private judgment wherever it might lead him and he has shown lack of courage to carry the thing through.

I now proceed to give some account of the contents of Laffitte's lucid statement of the claims of Positivism. The first chapter entitled "The Present State of Affairs as viewed from the Standpoint of Morals" dwells on the growth of antipathy to theological morality all over the Western World. As regards the Eastern world, "Unbelief has won the day all along the line," says M. Laffitte, "It tends to become universal. In the East there have at all times been people emancipated from any belief in God. Most extraordinary instances of this have appeared among the Arabs and the Turks. At the present day, the higher classes and superior minds among Moslems, Hindoos, Japanese and Chinese have reached that stage. They regard theological conceptions merely as puerilities, fit, at best, only for the lower orders. In fact, the need of a Positive system of morals is a matter that concerns statesmen and the nobler spirits throughout the world." M. Laffitte denounces in scathing terms the conduct of the unbelieving father who causes his children to be brought up as Christians. Had he a system of morality of his own to impart to his children, he need never be driven to adopt such manifestly insincere devices. M. Laffitte concisely surveys the history of the development of morality, maintaining that where theological morality has succeeded it has always done so by an appeal to the very sentiments to which Positivism appeals. "It is always the Positive spirit, which is identical with the scientific spirit, that discovers. The theological spirit can only co-ordinate and sanction without ever discovering. The most thorough-going theologian may be safely challenged to name a single scientific proposition of any kind which was revealed." These assertions are further strengthened by an account of the organisation of Roman armies and the organisation of "that masterpiece of human wisdom—the Catholic Church." "Roman Catholicism employed scientific processes and taught precepts of Positive Morality. If it dressed them up in theological formulas, it was not till after it had discovered the Positive interpretation of them. In its moral system, what is supernatural is not the precepts, but the source and the sanction assigned to them." Theological morality, according to Comtism, has been useful. St. Paul and Mohammed were sincere. Living when they did they could think and theorize only through the intermediary of the theological spirit. Their success, however, then and in succeeding generations is to be attributed to the fact that they held "Positive notions, which—need we say it, are for ever beyond the reach of a chimerical Divinity."

The evolution of theological morality through all its various stages is traced in a very clear manner in Chapter IV. of Mr. Laffitte's work. The emancipation of mankind from the thralldom of orthodox theology began with the Knight-Templars. They were the first infidels. Walter Scott makes an atheist of the Templar Brian de Bois-Guilbert. From this time on it seemed to many thinkers no longer possible to defend the absolute claims of the Roman Catholic Church. The reign of liberalism commenced. Cardinal Newman, referring to this liberalism wrote:—"To one great mischief I have from the first opposed myself. For thirty, forty, fifty years I have resisted to the best of my powers the spirit of liberalism in religion. Liberalism in religion is the doctrine that there is no positive truth in religion, but that one creed is as good as another; and this is the teaching that is gaining substance and force every day. Religion is in no sense the bond of society. . . . Hitherto it has been considered that religion alone, with its supernatural sanctions, was strong enough to ensure the submission of the mass of the population to law and order; philosophers and politicians are bent on satisfying this problem without the aid of Christianity." M. Laffitte shows how the Metaphysical and Democratic morality in various parts of Europe in certain inquiring minds took the place of Theological morality. This he aptly describes thus:—"Metaphysical morality is neither more nor less than a debased stamp of theology, which it ruins by the very fact of increasing its inconsistency. It transfers from the Pope to each conscience the privileges of revelation and infallibility, thus opposing individual authority to the Catholic institution of the Papacy, which has been the interpreter of a superior will, personal in theory, but collective and general in point of fact. . . . Each individual, being transformed into a pope-king, became—without having learned anything—competent to deal with every subject, and the equal of all other men." Metaphysical morality as elaborated into a system by Cousin was infinitely inferior to the Catholic morality which it tried to replace. It authorized all sorts of base actions. It reconciled unbelief with participation in the sacraments of theology, and thus entirely mystified an honest, but too confiding, public. It manufactured hypocrites by the thousand.

In Chap VI of Part I of the book M. Laffitte, in treating of the spontaneous tendency towards a positive morality, shows how moral habits, believed originally to be of Divine institution, are finally consecrated in the name of Humanity.

Part II. of the work, consisting of seven chapters, discusses the leading characteristics of Positive Morality—its general spirit, its foundations, its sanction, its consecration in the name of Humanity, which is the Positivist's Supreme Being, its conception of duty, its essential sociality and its religious character.

Part III. deals with the chief appreciations of Positive Morals in 5 chapters under the headings of Personal Morals, Domestic Morals, Civic Morals, Western Morals and Planetary Morals. The God of the Comtist is Humanity. This term represents all that is finest and noblest in mankind, "To set up Humanity as the beginning and end of all existence," says Mr. Laffitte, "is the direct and necessary consequence of our social nature. . . . Everything should be attributed to Humanity, since everything comes from her. Composed of all that is good, true and beautiful, she represents the union of the spotless ideal with the perfect real. Her name expresses at once love, order and progress. Humanity is the exemplar for all beings and all ages. She is the model to contemplate, to meditate, to imitate and to develop. She reconciles everything without obstructing anything. . . . She is the inspirer of all good actions and the source of all laws, civil, intellectual, and moral. . . . the embodiment of that host of ties, moral, intellectual and physical, that bind us indissolubly to our fellow-men, to the earth and to Space. . . . Outside the Religion of Humanity there is no belief that can furnish proofs. It alone is demonstrable. . . . Are facts required? Why, that religion starts with facts. Principles? It is reason itself. Feelings? It fills the heart. It combines the features of antiquity, the future and youth. No religion preceded it; none can outlive it; and it is continually inspired with fresh ardour. . . . Has Humanity any occasion to show the light? Why, her existence is passed in the open day; she is born of criticism. . . . Who possesses universality, if not she? Nothing has been done, nor will be done without her having a share in it, woe her to develop and conserve, or to restrain and eliminate. She is connected with everything. Her creed was not made for one people, one race or one class. It is destined for all."

The chapter from which the above extracts are taken, that on the religious character of Positive Morals, seems to me to be the most striking one in the whole book, as it so effectually demolishes that hell and heaven, reward and punishment basis for morals which, despite the fact that it has been denounced by some Christians like St. Bernard,* Christianity as a whole has done so much to perpetuate, and thus raises morality to a higher level.

What success has Comtism had in the world? How many converts has it made? Is it not a fact that it is a mere imitation of Christian theology, with its priests, its hymns and its worship? I don't profess to know how many people have openly professed Comtism. The age in which we live is marked by strong antipathy to "isms" of all kinds. Individualism, independence, refusal to bow to the authority of churches, societies, and even learned bodies like the Comtists predominate everywhere, but notwithstanding this, there is no denying that the Comtists have done an enormous amount of good in the world. Positivist literature has been diligently studied, not only by philosophers and ministers but by intellectual men whose lives are passed in the study of very different subjects. The great danger of the present age in the world of thought is pessimism. So many great minds have settled down to this as a result of deep reflection on the sufferings of the world, the vanity of human existence, the hollowness of a great part of human life, the meanness and pettiness prevailing to such an enormous extent everywhere, the utter insignificance of the occupations, pursuits and pastimes which follow each other with ceaseless, wearisome regularity. Comtism is a powerful antidote to pessimistic gloom. It dwells but little on the darker side of human life. It culls from universal history proof after proof of the progress man has been making towards a more exalted state of existence. It holds out hopes for the future that fire the imagination of the earnest reader and make him feel proud that he belongs to a race of beings who are endowed with such lofty aspirations. Positivism appeals to the earnest, for it is intensely earnest. It appeals to the progressive, for progress and moral development are among its watchwords. It appeals to the benevolent and the unselfish, as it is one of the most altruistic among modern creeds. It appeals to lovers of sincerity and haters of cant and show, for is not vivre au grand jour one of its great mottoes? It ought to appeal especially to women, for it assigns to them a lofty rôle in the development of the race. That such a basis for morals as Positivism supplies is not only sadly needed but has actually been established in various parts of the world is an undeniable fact. Without the name Positivism we have much of the thing in the moral maxims, doctrines and spirit to which the Japanese have clung age after age. They may be said to be worshippers of Humanity. Supernaturalism has never taken a strong hold of their educated men and never will do so. Speaking generally, it is true to say that only the smaller minds have derived consolation from it. The deeper thinkers have sought and found a surer basis for ethics than supposed Divine commands. The Japanese ethical creed is essentially Humanitarian.

* Bonnet in his "Abridgment of the History of France" relates how an old Mussulman woman wished to destroy both Hell and Heaven in order to make men do good and refrain from evil entirely from pure love of God.

For names people care little nowadays. There are thousands of thinking men and thinking women who are Comtists in heart, though they do not openly acknowledge the title. Those who approve of the whole Positivist system are no doubt comparatively few. Even Frederic Harrison says that during the process of his absorption of Comtism up to the end he reserved large portions of the system, to which he felt actual repugnance or at least confirmed doubt. And in 1890 he wrote:—"Even now I am regarded by some Comtists par sang as a profane amateur, a schismatic and a Gallio." But there are I imagine, few serious, unprejudiced thinkers on moral topics who treat Comtism with indifference. In both France and England Positivist philosophy has taken a strong hold of many of the best minds. Some Christians denounce Comtism as Godless, but it is no more Godless than is Christianity itself. Christians worship a Being who is the product of man's imagination. The Comtist does the same; for Humanity is an abstract term expressing or embodying all the higher moral qualities which have been exemplified in human life and all the noble attributes which the world's greatest men have displayed. The God of Christianity is a Being that owes His existence to intellectual conceptions, the basis for these conceptions being man himself. Man's highest attributes in a state of harmony and perfection—these are the attributes of God according to Christian teaching. The Christian and the Comtist differ as to terms, but their conceptions and many of their ideals are essentially alike. They worship the same entity, the same Absolute one, be that entity named God or named Humanity; for the Christian knows nothing of the existence, moral attributes and power of any Being outside our world and wholly separate from man which are not the product of imagination or reason.

Not Positivists only but all lovers of truth can not but welcome the appearance of "The Positive Science of Morals" in English and desire to see it widely circulated.

The following beautiful lines on Humanity are from the pen of the late Rev. R. W. Dixon, Canon of Carlisle and Vicar of Warkworth.

There is a soul above the Soul of each,
A mightier soul, which yet to each belongs:
There is a sound made of all human speech,
And numerous as the concourse of all songs:
And in that soul lives each, in each that soul,
Though all the ages are its lifetime vast;
Each soul that dies, in its most sacred whole
Receiveth life that shall for ever last.
And thus for ever with a wider span
Humanity o'erarches Time and Death:
Man can elect the universal man
And live in life that ends not with his breath:
And gather glory that increases still Till Time his g ass with Death's last dust shall fill.

The Science of Jurisprudence. By HANNIS TAYLOR. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1908. Price $3.50, postage 30 cents.

DR. TAYLOR, for he has had the degree of Doctor of Laws conferred upon him by both Edinburgh and Dublin, presents us in this book with a most learned treatise, in which the growth of positive law is unfolded by the historical method, and its elements classified and defined by the analytical. It is not always true of United States diplomatic representatives that they bring to the discharge of their duties, a ripe knowledge of any kind, but in Dr. Taylor's case we are amply justified in saying that by education and practice he was exceptionally qualified to perform the duties of Minister Plenipotentiary to Spain. His labours have not been restricted to those fields which naturally came nearest his hand, because he is the author of "The Origin and Growth of the English Constitution," a work that is recognised as an authority in the United States, if it is not well known in Great Britain. Naturally, therefore, we expect the subject which such a man has chosen for the theme of his latest work to be treated in a wide and scholarly manner; and there is no question as to his success. He treats his topic in the broad way that was first made popular by a group of scholars who, something more than a century ago, founded the science now known as Comparative Philology; and from a short statement of jurisprudence, as a branch of the Science of Politics, just as a beginning, he passes on to a study of the historical method and its handmaids. He is thus prepared to take up the history of Roman Law, not only in its original habitat but in its widest ramifications. As a logical corollary to this chapter, comes an exhaustive study of the External history of English Law, followed by a chapter upon English Law in the United States. After that the author discusses Roman and English Law combined, as it is seen particularly in the Spanish and Portuguese colonies of America. Part II. is a remarkable analytical study of law proper or state law; law by analogy or international law; and international rules to prevent conflict of laws. The volume is truly a wonderful putting together of material culled from many sources; and the task of combining is one that no one but a master could undertake. It must not be understood that Dr. Taylor's book is a mere compilation of dry matter, useful to the professional lawyer only. Quite the contrary; the book is an exceedingly interesting one to the layman, and when we say that in many ways it reminds us of Sir Henry Maine's best books, we feel sure that a reasonable incentive has been given to those who like to read something of what every man ought to know, law as a science, if not as a vehicle to put into practical use professionally. To give even a clear idea of what this book of over six hundred pages is, the least one could do is to make a précis of its table of contents; but when such a table has already been condensed to a skeleton, a précis would really be a transcription, and that is, of course, impossible for a newspaper review. A glimmering of what the learned and painstaking author has done to strengthen his own knowledge and observation, may be had when we say that his list of "Titles of Leading Authorities Cited" fills fourteen pages, and these books themselves would make a very satisfactory equipment for an ordinary law school. Dr. Taylor, in his pages, pays many graceful tributes to the titanic work of Sir Henry Maine, and one of them emphasizes what everyone who has read Maine's books must have remarked, that is, the charming modesty of a man who actually did something which proved to be a veritable revelation. Our disposition is to turn Dr. Taylor's praise of Sir Henry back upon himself. We cannot say that there is, in "The Science of Jurisprudence," so much that is astonishing as was Maine's revelation in "Ancient Law," but the modesty with which Dr. Taylor presents his opinions, is quite as charming as was the manner of his eminent predecessor. Since Maine's days, the science that he loved has made some fairly long strides, and if he had had all the material which would now be at his disposal, we cannot but wonder what he would have done. For example, in the construction of his remarkable chapter of "Ancient Codes," Maine was deprived of the assistance to be drawn from the now famous Code of Hammurabi, unearthed since Maine's death, by M. de Morgan on the acropolis of Susa, the ancient capital of Elam in Persia. This code reveals clearly the state of society four thousand years ago, for Hammurabi, commonly identified with the Amraphel of Genesis xiv., 1, was the first ruler over the whole of Babylonia who united all of lower Chaldea under one sceptre and founded a great empire that lasted about two thousand years. The laws of Hammurabi, recognised as a codification of decisions given in the civil courts and adapted to general use in Babylonia, were doubtless observed throughout the empire, even as far as Palestine, for centuries before Moses entered the Holy Land, and continued in force until the Greek conquest under Alexander. It is just at the end of the chapter wherein reference is made to this most ancient code, that Dr. Taylor gracefully acknowledges his obligations to the masters who had worked before him, Edward A. Freeman, Sir Frederic Pollock and the Right Hon. James Bryce; and it is pleasing to note that the author considers "honourable mention," of to be due to Mr. Gubbins for his translation of the Civil Code of Japan. The flight of time has been so rapid that probably, if Dr. Taylor were to re-write his book, he might find himself under slight obligation to others in this part of the world. The dedication of the volume to James Bryce and Thomas Erskine Holland, seems singularly appropriate. The work is a splendid contribution to the subject of Legal Science, and must be given a place in the libraries of the Law Colleges of Japan. J.K.G.

TRADE MARK PROTEST.

The chief examiner of the Patent Bureau has passed a decision on a protest lodged by Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co., Ltd. On May 15th the firm applied to the Bureau for registering a trade mark with the design showing "the Rising Sun in centre with wheat stalks at both sides; 'Sun Chop' at the upper part and 'J.M.C.' at the lower." The authorities of the office dismissed the application on the ground that the mark resembled that of No. 9,887 registered. The applicants contended that the two marks were different in form and character described. The chief examiner refused to admit the protest in accordance with the 4th clause of Art. 2 of the Trade-Mark Law.

On the evening of Dec. 16th an explosion occurred in the engine room of the steamer Kaisho Maru at Ujina. S. Ohara, chief engineer, and two of the crew were injured.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The Socialistic movement in Japan, though not so powerful as some people seem to imagine, is considered by Christian writers to be of sufficient importance to call for a definition of the proper attitude to be assumed toward it by the Church of Christ. We have already epitomized articles on this subject from Protestant organs and from the Greek Church Magazine, the Seikyō Shimpō; we now give the gist of an article which appeared as an editorial in the November number of the Kōe. Christianity is essentially a future world religion and has little to teach us about this life, say some. Christianity approves of Socialism and supports it in various ways, say others. Both these views are wrong. Genuine Christianity chooses the middle way between the two extremes. As for concerning itself with society, its wants, its sorrows, its evils, its elevation and happiness, that it does. But while the socialists as a body regard the temporal and temporary benefit of society as the ultimate object of all their efforts, we Christians hold out the hope of entering paradise as the best incentive to virtuous living and self-sacrifice in this life. Rewards and punishments in the world to come, when steadfastly believed in prove, to be a most powerful stimulus to virtue and a preventive of vice. Now, according to our views, in order to reach a high state of attainment in this life, we must believe in the reality of the next. Our Christianity can supply such happiness as is not to be found among ordinary socialists. Whether truth, goodness or beauty be sought for, the God in whom we believe is the source of them all. Taine and many other eminent statesmen and writers have rightly maintained that it is only by means of the wings which Christianity supplies that men and women can soar above sordidity, selfishness and pettiness. Christianity is the most powerful factor the world contains for improving the lives of men, because Christ plainly taught that good works done in this life will be rewarded in the next. Turn to St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. XXV. Here it is plainly taught that in the Great Judgment Day all will depend on how men have acted to their fellow-men in this life. The criterion by which all men will be finally judged is benevolence and humanity. Whether men have acted humanely or whether they have not, this it is that determines their lot in the next world (Kore ga zenaku too saiban suru tame no mochiitaru yūtsu no hyōjun wa jiai no kōi, shakutai teki no kōi tada kore nomi). This it is that has led to Christianity's becoming one of the greatest benefactors men have ever had. It teaches them to love each other and to help each other. Kindness to the poor and the sick is a means of laying up treasure in heaven. In past years in every country where it has prevailed Christianity has taught charity so effectually that to day for almost every evil or misfortune from which men suffer there is relief of some kind or other; and while attending to all the many wants of the body, Christianity has administered comfort to the soul. So universal has been the charity which Christianity has dispensed that Châteaubriand once exclaimed:—"Oh, G. d. of Christians, what is there that Thou hast not done? Look where we may, Thy gracious gifts are to be seen. Countless are the memorials set up by Thee that greet the eyes of men everywhere.*" But though this is so, to say that orthodox Christianity has any affinity to socialism as explained by leading socialists is quite wrong. There are no doubt some Protestant sects whose creed is loose enough to allow of their fraternizing with socialists and co-operating with them in certain ways, but Catholic Christianity, which is the only genuine Christianity, is diametrically opposed to most of the remedies for existing evils proposed by socialists, on the ground that they do not go far enough; and as for many of the principles advocated by the socialists, to carry them out would mean the subversion of the existing order of society in a way that to Christians would appear to be a greater evil than any from which society now suffers.

"How best can the Evil of Divorce be remedied?" is the title of an article appearing in the November Kōe signed "Sanrokusei" from which we take the following statements. According to the Statistics for the year 1906, which were published in October last, the number of divorces in Japan for that year was 65,510, that is, each day of the year some 200 bills of divorcement (三下半, mikudari-han, 3½ lines) were drawn up in various parts of Japan. This, relative to the total number of people married, figures out at 18.05 per cent. But this does not represent the actual number of divorces by any means, as it only refers to divorces which have been duly registered. Unregistered divorces are of course far more numerous than the registered ones. More than this, what are known as private marriages (naïen) are very common among the lower orders. So that, on the very lowest estimate, it is true to say that in the proportion of 20 or 30 per cent of the total number of people married the tie is severed in the lightest way possible, that is to say, out of every 10 married couples two or three are divorced. After quoting David Hume on the many evils attending divorce, "Sanrokusei" goes on to observe that the prosperity of States depends on the prosperity of families, and that again on a due observance of good marriage laws. If in any State the relation of the sexes to each other resembles that of mere animals, that State must sooner or later crumble to pieces. In the palmy days of Greece and Rome the marriage contract was solemnly observed by men and women. In both cases the setting in of decay was marked by a large increase of divorces. One of the surest marks of barbarism to day is the absence of all stringent law respecting cohabitation. In places like Egypt and parts of Africa men get new wives every month or even every week. It is terrible to think of the fate of the children begotten by parents who separate from each other without compensation on the most trivial pleas. The Statistics published in this country show that divorces are more common in the North-Eastern prefectures than anywhere else. This may partly explain the want of enterprise and the general improvidence of the residents in these prefectures. (Waga kuni ni oite motomo furu-azaru mo, mata Jōhoku Chihō de aru. Gōjin wa Tohoku chihō fushin (不振) no ichi genin to shite rikon no hifū too aezaru too yenai no de aru.) The wide prevalence of divorce in Japan is undoubtedly the result of the great inequality that exists between the status of the woman and that of the man. The man is honored and the woman despised. The woman of course is the chief sufferer from divorce. The man can obtain another wife without the slightest difficulty. Neither his reputation nor his social position suffers in the least by the divorce which he has brought about. But with the woman the case is quite different. She enters the marriage market as second hand goods. She has lost in many cases the freshness of youth, and there are not a few people who will suspect her of being unworthy while attached to her first husband. In Japan the woman is usually blamed when things go wrong in conjugal life. In this country women are used as playthings by men and are thrown aside with astonishing levity.* In Roman Catholic countries women are differently treated, thanks to the influence of our religion on legislators. The evils of divorce as practised in this country must be apparent to every serious minded person, but the question is how can the existing state of things be remedied? For this we must largely depend on law and education. Our Civil Code does not absolutely forbid divorce in the way our Church does. It specifies 10 valid reasons for the separation of married couples and forbids divorce when none of these reasons exist unless with the mutual consent of both parties concerned. (Sōhō no sōdan gō [合意] ni arazareba riyen suru too yezu to kitei shitaru). This is a great improvement on the marriage laws of the Tokugawa times, but it is only a partial remedy for the existing evil. Till men's views fundamentally alter as to the respect due to women and as to the necessity of self-restraint, divorce will still be very common. That in past times our three religions, Shintoism, Buddhism and Confucianism, have failed to improve the position of women or to discourage divorce is undeniable. Our scholars have recently been recommending the revival of Confucianism as a means of reforming society. But it is quite plain that since Confucianism approves of polygamy and is essentially a man-honouring and woman-despising religion (dansō jōhi no oshiyae), it can give us no help in improving the relation of the sexes to each other. In a book used in Primary Schools which gives Confucian teaching concerning divorce, the famous seven reasons for divorce (shichikyō, 七去) are given. The wife may be divorced, (1) for being childless, (2) for being guilty of adultery, (3) for being guilty of disobedience toward her parents in law, (4) for talking too much! (5) for theft, (6) for jealousy and (7) if she suffers from a hereditary disease. Mr. Fukuzawa pointed out years ago that no Government school should use a text-book in which the reasons for divorce do not correspond with those specified by the Civil Code now in force. I am not intimately acquainted with Buddhism, says "Sanrokusei," but I can assert without fear of contradiction that the position consigned to woman by the Buddhists is a low one. According to the Buddhists a woman should always be under subjection. As a daughter she is subject to her parents, as a wife to her husband, as a widow to her eldest son (called 三從, sanyō). Besides this she suffers from 5 disabilities or impediments known as the goshō (五障)*; and she is regarded as quite beneath man in dignity. Shaka Muni forsook his wife before founding his religion. Respecting the position of woman Shinto teaching is no better than Buddhist or Confucian.

Coming to Christianity, it is true to say that in Protestant countries the marriage laws are laxer than they are in Roman Catholic countries, though it is a fact that Protestant countries are all on the side of monogamy. In Spain and Portugal the Civil Law forbids divorce altogether, and in other countries where Roman Catholicism has a strong hold on the minds of people divorces are rare. Protestants maintain that they have a right to interpret the Bible their own way. They began doing this in reference to divorce in the time of Henry VIII. The founding of the Protestant Episcopal Church of England was closely connected with the right to divorce. Queen Catherine and marry Anne Boleyn claimed by King Henry. This claim was supported by Archbishop Crammer, the first Protestant primate. In Germany Luther and Melancthon interpreted the Bible in the same lax way and sanctioned the Landgrave Philip's bigamy; and a colleague of Luther, Andrew Carolstadt, openly defended polygamy (ippu tasai wo yurushtar). Not only this, but the Protestant Churches by ceasing to regard marriage as a sacrament degraded it in the eyes of their adherents. It appears quite evident, then, that the only religion propagated in this country which can effectually deal with the evil of divorce is Roman Catholic Christianity. All other forms of Christianity show a certain amount of laxity in their interpretation of the scripture on this point. Our religion, while strictly forbidding divorce, sanctifies marriage by regarding it as a sacrament. We teach that marriages are not to be effected lightly, but that when once a man and woman have been joined together in holy matrimony nothing should ever be allowed to separate them but death. They must bear with each other's infirmities and cross the stormy sea of life hand in hand. Their union has not only been rendered sacred by the Church, it has, by being regarded as a sacrament, been raised to the rank of the supernatural (Shinto no konin wo seikwa shite, kore wo chōshizen no kurai ni takamete, hiseki to nashi). In thus making marriage one of the most solemn rites connected with our religion, we safeguard it against the abuses to which it is exposed when regarded in the light manner it has come to be regarded in Protestant countries. The marriage laws we observe are not of our making. They are laws which have been ordained by God, that we and all men are bound to obey.

In the December number of the Kaitakusha (The Pioneer), the organ of the Young Men's Christian Association, appears the report of an address delivered to young men at the Kanda Hall by Dr. M. Takagi, the well known Methodist pastor, on "The Future of Christianity in Japan." In the course of his speech Dr. Takagi, in substance, expressed himself as follows:—Young men seem to be dissatisfied with what is called Christianity to-day. As to Churches, they used to consist principally of young men, but they are gradually getting to be composed of old men and of women only. Dissatisfaction with Churches is not confined to Japan, however. It also prevails in the West. But to conclude that because people are dissatisfied with the Christianity of the Churches therefore Christianity is of no value is quite wrong. Christianity as we see it to-day and Christianity as taught by Christ are very different things. In the course of centuries the creed has undergone all sorts of changes, and consequently just as Confucius, were he to return to the earth, would repudiate a great part of the system of moral philosophy elaborated by some of his followers, so Christ would certainly disapprove of much that has been taught in His name. The two principal objections to orthodox Christianity as held to-day concern: (1) Theological doctrines and (2) ceremonies. (1) The chief doctrines objected to are original sin, the universal corruption of mankind, the incarnation and the atonement. But these doctrines were not taught by Christ. They began to prevail after the death of St. Paul. Of course they are not pure invention; as theological theories, there is something to be said for some of them, but most of them appear foolish to us nowadays (Konnichi nara mireba guranga sukoburu). (2) People object to-day to the great importance attached to ceremonies by most of the Churches. Some Churches seem to regard them as possessing a kind of magical charm. Efforts have been made in Europe and America to get rid of the two great obstacles to the progress of Christianity just mentioned—irrational theology and adherence to empty ceremonies. Christian theology is undergoing reconstruction with a view of bringing it into harmony with the teaching of modern science. There are in the West many earnest minded men who maintain that, Christianity being a religion and not a system of theology, its theology may be totally disregarded by those who wish to become Christians (Shingaku wa hitsuyō de nai. Yesu no tanjū na shūkyō ni ki sureba yoi no de aru to iu). We obtained our Christianity from Europe and America, so it is quite natural that we should see many defects in it to-day (Shiagatte fumanzoku naru ten ga ōi no wa ōzen nari). So it will have to be greatly changed. In what respects? Well, the first thing to do is to get rid of everything that is unhistorical or contrary to science and modern thought. No Christian is under any obligation to believe things for which there is no adequate proof. You have sometimes heard men defending medieval doctrines in our Churches and you have said to yourselves, "We can't accept such teaching." Let it go unaccepted. It is no part of Christianity. As Japanese you naturally want to explain Christianity your own way. We all feel like that. The European form of Christianity does not suit us in many respects. Moreover, we wish to blend certain Confucian and Buddhist elements with our Christianity. The early Japanese Christian preachers in this country denounced Confucianism and Buddhism, thinking to destroy them in order to make room for Christianity. They did this in ignorance of the teaching of these creeds, being impelled by excessive Christian zeal. But it was a mistake, as we see to-day: for both these creeds are in many respects very suited to Japanese ways of thinking, and are destined to play an important part in the culture of virtue hereafter. The Christianity of the future in this country will contain a mixture of Western and Eastern thought, will be composed of Buddhist, Confucian and Christian elements harmoniously blended? Who is going to develop this new form of Christianity? You young men. You have it in your power to give the world a new type of religion. This surely is something to live for and to work for. As you strongly object to the Christianity of the Churches, develop a creed for yourselves. You have nothing to fear in doing this, for the age has passed for men to blindly submit to authority in religious matters. Each man is his own pope nowadays.*

But all that I have been saying has to do with ideas, theories, doctrines, articles of belief. The chief concern of religion is not with these things, but with the formation of character. It is for this that we most need it. If religion is not capable of turning out fine types of men and women, it is of no use. Now what types of men are most wanted to-day? (1) We need active men. Mere book-worms or religious recluses effect little in the world. The popularity of pragmatism shows that the spirit of the age is in favour of practicality. (2) We need men of strong wills, men who will never succumb to small difficulties. (3) We need men of devotion, who are ready to serve their fellow-men, not for fame's sake but from genuine altruism. Whatever you find either in Christianity, Buddhism or Confucianism capable of turning out fine types of manhood, don't hesitate to use.

"The present state of the Theological World in Germany" is the title of an article, published in the December Shinjin (New Man), contributed by Rev. R. Minami, which we epitomize as follows:—Speaking generally, it is true to say that German theology has degenerated in recent years. By this we do not mean to imply that German theology has fallen behind English and American theology. That it has not done; and it goes without saying that it is far ahead of our Japanese theology. German theology is still pre-eminent among the theologies of the world. When we say it has deteriorated, we are comparing the works of German theologians to-day with the books that appeared 20 or 30 years ago. If we go back still further and contemplate the way in which theological thought was manifested by such men as Schleiermacher, Strauss and Bauer, we see how great is the dearth of originality in the German theological world to-day. But let us take the writers whose chief works appeared only a few decades ago, and ask ourselves whether there are any theologians publishing books to-day who will bear comparison with them. There were Petermann at the Zurich University (a German writer whose works are widely read in Germany as well as in Switzerland), Ritschl at the Göttingen University, and Lipsius at the Jena University. Then there were those great Biblical scholars Wellhausen, Keim, Reuss, Holsten and Holzmann, and these famous Church historians Hase and Harnack, and those first-class scholars Wendt, Pfleiderer and Hinneberg. These men are nearly all dead, but they left behind them works that rank very high as standard reference books to-day. Theology is now undoubtedly more widely studied than it used to be, and this has been brought about largely by the cheap editions of standard books which have been pouring out of the press at Tübingen. The history of religion has been written in popular style to suit ordinary readers and has been issued by the well known Publishing House of C. B. Mohr. But we look in vain among the books which have appeared within the past few years for anything on Christ's life, on Christian doctrine, Church history, religion or philosophy worthy of comparison with the works written by the above-named scholars years ago. But still it is gratifying to know that Wendt and Holtzmann have not laid aside their pens, and that the former has recently published a work entitled "A System of Christian Doctrine," which constitutes a free inquiry into what was actually taught by Christ. It is with theology as with other lines of inquiry: original thought is rare.

"Christ's Christianity" is the title of a very thoughtful article contributed to the December Shinjin by Dr. K. Ukita. The principal points made by Dr. Ukita are these:—Christ, like Confucius and Shaka Muni, did not found a new religion, but simply revived men's interest in Judaism. He came to fulfil and not to destroy. His God was the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. His Bible was the old Testament. He founded no new system of theology, nor was it made certain during his lifetime that he had any idea of founding a new sect. The name "Christian" came from the enemies of the followers of Jesus. Many of Christ's sayings show greater liberality than has been usually manifested by his followers. It is quite sure that had He known of Buddhism and Confucianism, He would have found much in these creeds to commend. The revival of Confucianism to-day is to be regarded as an extremely hopeful sign. It should be welcomed by Christians, as it evinces the existence of a new, keen interest in morals. The moral principles enunciated in the Imperial Rescript on education are very fine. Constant reference is made to them in schools, but it is true to say that they are totally disregarded by ordinary citizens. The majority of our people have in recent years grown mercenary and selfish. If Confucianism, which exercised so much influence in past times, can be revived, so much the better for Christianity, which is on the side of moral reform and moral elevation of all kinds. Confucianism resembles Christ's Christianity. (Shi Fukuinsho chū makoto no Khristo no oshiye nari to omowaruru tokoro wa Jukyo to koto naru tokoro wa nai). Christ speaks of God and Confucius of Heaven. The names differ, but the same Being is referred to. Christ's religion, like Confucianism, is essentially a religion for the present life. Christ taught two things only, the love of God and the love of man. We can not say that the Christianity of the writers of certain parts of the New Testament was Christ's Christianity. We do not believe in the miracles Christ is said to have performed in proof of his Divinity. The miracle-loving Christ of the orthodox Church is not the real Christ. Christ denounced the wonder-loving spirit which characterized many of the Jews in his day and which still prevails in many parts of the world (Matt. XII 39; XVI 1-4). In St. John's Gospel it is quite plain that the writer aims at proving Christ's Divinity by attributing miracles to him. But even in certain parts of this Gospel we have glimpses of the real Christ, the Christ who denounced the miracle-loving Jews. Nicodemus is represented as saying:—"No man can do those miracles that thou doest except God be with him." Christ does not endorse that view at all, but on the contrary condemns it. He practically says "Turn your thoughts away from miracles and seek a new birth, a different state of mind from that you are now in."

As to the revival of Confucianism, it seems to me, it may be the means of giving great life to Christianity in this country, says Dr. Ukita. At the present time Roman Catholic and Protestant Christianity are both very much at a standstill. What further development they can undergo it is rather hard to see (Kasoriku mo, Protestant no tomo ni hatattsu wa tomatte ōru). In Europe there are hardly any cases of Roman Catholics becoming Protestants nowadays. The tendency is all the other way about. While Christianity is spreading in barbarous countries, it is losing ground in civilized countries. The God in which men believe to-day is no longer the God of the Bible and the Church only, but the God that manifests Himself in men's hearts everywhere.

Mr. Ebina Danjō, the editor of the Shinjin, has been travelling in Europe and America for some months past. Letters from him have been appearing in his Magazine. One dated Oct. 17th. gives an account of his preaching and speaking in New York both in English and Japanese. He says he has tried reading English sermons, but that he finds he does better in extempore preaching, though his English must be described as "broken English." Mr. Ebina has been flying about hither and thither delivering as many as three or even four speeches a day. He has been well received everywhere.

* * *
i In No. 3,317 of the Kirisutokyo Sekai there is an editorial on preaching to believers and preaching to unbelievers. It has grown to be the custom in this country, says this organ, to give sermons in the morning whose object it is to supply spiritual food to Christians and to address unbelievers in a special manner at the evening services. Of course there are some unbelievers in the churches during the morning services and some Christians attend the evening services, but it is true to say that the different character of the preaching in the morning and the evening is recognized by most of the people who attend churches. This being so Christians are often somewhat disappointed when the morning sermons delivered are quite unsuited to their wants. The writer of the article then proceeds to observe that in preaching to Christians, resort to logic, criticism, philosophical discussion and theological argument is out of place. The preacher must dwell on spiritual experience and faith only. The food supplied must be distinctly spiritual in character rather than intellectual. The feelings of the audience must be appealed to rather than their rational faculties. This morning service should mostly be devoted to the worship of God and the sermon should harmonize with the other parts of the service, consisting of prayer and praise; it should have as its chief object the bringing of the congregation nearer God. It is no fitting occasion for discussing doubts, for answering difficult questions, for destructive criticism of any kind. The Christians assembled do not desire this. But the evening sermons, being designed to convince unbelievers that Christianity is worthy of their acceptance, should be full of logic and should deal in a thorough manner with popular objections to Christianity. The preacher should fall back on philosophy, science and history in support of the points he is trying to prove. In preaching to unbelievers it is no use pretending that religion is of higher rank than science and philosophy, and that its doctrines must therefore be accepted even if they appear to be in direct opposition to the teaching of science. Such assertions only do harm to the cause of Christianity. It is also of no use for preachers to defend the exploded doctrines which are still retained among their articles of belief by some Churches. That which is rational, that which is in harmony with modern thought, that which appeals to men of the world at the present time only will tell in sermons preached to outsiders. Discourses on topics which have no bearing at all on everyday life and that contribute nothing towards the solution of life's many problems have no interest to ordinary hearers. The two kinds of preaching are so different that each of them requires special talent and special preparation. Nothing is more harmful than an attempt to mix one with the other. This all preachers should realize. What Christians generally most desire is that sermons addressed to them should not even remotely resemble those addressed to unbelievers.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The Christmas Entertainment of the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society was held on Friday evening at the Gaiety, and was generally acknowledged to have been one of the best, if not the best, of the Society's Yule-tide celebrations. Everyone seemed to be in a mood to anticipate the merriest of the festive season so near at hand, and it cannot be gainsaid that every encouragement of this spirit was given by the performers. The first part of the programme was taken up by an one-act farce entitled "That Brute Simmons," an amusing sketch which turns upon the familiar theme of the reappearance of a long-lost husband to find his place taken by another. The parts of Mrs. Simmons, the masterful wife, Bill Simmons, the usurper, and Bob Ford, the former husband, were ably played by Mrs. McWilliams, Mr. A. H. Windett and Mr. C. Aslet, who succeeded, by their clever representation of the many humorous situations, in keeping their audience in continuous laughter. After the interval Miss Rose, Miss Hargreaves, M. Ruinat and Mr. Somerton entertained the house with tuneful numbers, Mr. W. E. Gooch sustaining mirth with two cleverly rendered musical sketches. All were cordially received, encores being insisted upon from both the ladies. We append the programme:

PROGRAMME.

YOKOHAMA.

The money market of Yokohama is firm, the interest rate for daily account being  $5\frac{1}{2}\%$  on an average. It is said that the steadiness is attributed partly to an expectation of money stringency at the end of the year and also partly to stocks of raw silk—about 4,000 bales—on which a considerable sum of money was advanced. The present situation, however, will be upheld until the beginning of next year without special alteration.

The Yokohama City Assembly held an extraordinary meeting on Dec. 17th. After the consideration of several bills, a petition of the Yokohama Electric Railway Company asking for permission to reclaim a part of the Yoshida creek in order to construct a permanent way for their line was discussed. The bill was passed by 24 to 15.

A man, about 25 years of age, was found on Dec. 17th killed on the railway near Kawasaki station. He was not identified. He is believed to have laid himself on the line with a view to self-destruction.

The Yokohama Five-Merchandise Exchange held a general meeting on Dec. 19th. An interim dividend was declared at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

While trying to repair a large tank in the Abe Sugar Refining factory, Midori-cho, on the night of Dec. 18th, a workman fell to the bottom. He was killed instantly.

About 1.30 p.m. on Sunday fire occurred in West Toke-machi destroying two houses. At 6.30 p.m. on the same day an outbreak of fire occurred on a lighter laden with about 240 bales of raw cotton in the sea near the Cotton Warehousing Company, Takashima-cho. Almost the whole cargo was destroyed. Tobacco ashes are said to have been the cause.

The Isezaki cho police arrested a man on the evening of Dec. 19th in Furo-cho, on a charge of having attempted to use a false coin—a 2-sen copper plated with silver so as to seem like 50-sen silver—at a tobacco shop, to pay for cigarettes. He is an ex-convict on a similar charge. On May 26th he was released after expiration of his term and since then he has been using base coins in Tokyo and Yokohama.

A young man, deaf and mute, was run over by a car on the Electric Railway near Kanagawa on Dec. 20th while trying to cross the permanent way. He was killed instantly.

Y. Abe, who is alleged to have committed fraud at Honolulu and absconded hence on July 15th, has been arrested at Dairen. On Dec. 21st he was brought to Yokohama by the Tokasago Maru via Kobe. On the same day he was handed over to Mr. C. A. Doyle, an American judicial official of Hawaii, who recently arrived in Yokohama to receive him in accordance with the Treaty relating to the extradition of criminal defendants. On Dec. 23rd he left by the China.

On Dec. 21st an explosion occurred in a fireworks factory, South Ota-machi, belonging to T. Tanahashi, destroying the building.

A case of hydrophobia is reported in Yokohama. The mad dog, belonging to S. Yoshida, a rice merchant living in West Toke-machi, was killed on Dec. 21st.

A storm with southerly wind was experienced during the night December 22nd—23rd in Yokohama. Some fences were destroyed on the bluff and in Yamashita-cho. On Tuesday evening a lighter laden with stones was capsized off Haneda on its way from Hommoku to Tokyo. The sendos, 3 in all, were rescued by the Tokyo Bay Steamship Company's steamer Boyo Maru.

According to a report received at the Yokohama Chief Police Office, a farmer murdered a woman with a sword on Tuesday morning at Shobusawa near Fujisawa. He subsequently gave up himself to the Fujisawa Police.

THE LAW COURTS.

THE CUSTOMS CASE.

In the Customs scandal case in which Takahashi and others, ten in all, were defendants, judgment was passed on Dec. 19th in the Yokohama District Court. The accused were sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for terms varying from one to ten months.

The Judge also announced that all the bribes received by the accused would be restored.

ALLEGED FRAUD IN KOBE.

In the Criminal Department of the Kobe Chihoh Saibansho the hearing was resumed of a charge of fraud against an American named B. Farman, 30 years of age, living in New York. The first hearing took place in the 11th inst. From a statement made by the prisoner it appeared that he came to Kobe on his way home from Vladivostok. After staying for some days in Osaka and Kobe, he was left penniless, and on applying to the American Consul at Kobe he was admitted to the Seamen's Institute. On Nov. 28 he entered a bar house in Shimoyamate-dori, 3-chome, and subsequently went to the Kobe Tei hotel in Sakai-machi, 1-chome, where he spent the night. On the following morning he went away without paying the hotel charges, etc., which amounted to about Yen 6. A charge was subsequently laid against him and he was arrested by the Kobe Police on the 3rd instant. The accused told the police that a woman invited him into the bar-room and that he was asked to take a girl to Shanghai as his wife. He stopped the night at the hotel because he was intoxicated. He intended to get some money from a friend, but was arrested before he could do so. The bar-room woman and two girls were examined as witnesses. They contradicted the statements made by the accused.

Judgment was then reserved to the 21st instant.

CLAIM FOR HOUSE RENT, &c.

The hearing of a case instituted by Mr. Victor

Heller, No. 176, Yamashita-cho, against Mr. F. Jacob, No. 80, claiming yen 376.11 came upon Dec. 21st in the Yokohama District Court.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that on June 16th this year Mr. Heller published an advertisement in a local newspaper for a house at No. 45-D, Yamashita-cho, to be let. Subsequently Mr. Jacob applied for the house and proposed to lease it from July 1st. to March 31st. next year. After a consultation between the parties, the house owner furnished the building. Later, Mr. Jacob, however, asked the owner to cancel the contract as he was about to leave for Shanghai in avoidable circumstances which arose suddenly. In consequence of the cancellation of the lease, Mr. Heller sustained damage, the amount claiming.

The contention of Defendant's Counsel was that his client never did make a contract such as insisted by Plaintiff's Counsel. Accordingly Mr. Jacob was not liable for the present claim.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Judge for leave to examine Abe and Saito as witnesses. The Judge granted the request and adjourned the proceedings till Jan. 21st.

FOOTBALL.

Two games of football, the Association preceding the Rugby, were played on Saturday. In the former, a team from Messrs. Vickers Sons and Maxim's works, assisted by a few local players, drew up against a Y.C. & A.C. team, only to be defeated, after a loose game, by 4 goals to nil.

The Rugby game, between teams designated "Whites" and "Colours," was fast and evenly contested. No points were registered for either side in the first half, but in the second Meere and Hearne for "Whites," and Strome and Mason for "Colours," succeeded in crossing the line. As Sharman, for Colours, was able to convert both tries, while Kellogg for Whites converted only one, the former were left victorious by the narrow margin of 4 points (two goals to a goal and a try). Truly the game may be said to illustrate the importance of place-kicking.

On Monday afternoon the semi-final of the six-a-side Rugby games was played on the Recreation Ground, Kellogg's team meeting Ward's team. A close game resulted in a win for Kellogg's six by 8 points (1 goal and a try) to 5 (a goal).

NEWS OF THE DAY.

OWING to a gale on Dec. 15th 34 fishing boats with 146 fisherman are missing off Kusbetsu, Nemuro.

EARLY on the morning of Dec. 21st fire broke out in a warehouse belonging to the Matsuyama Tobacco Monopoly Office. Three buildings were burned down.

FIVE hundred workmen employed by the Nagasaki Tailoring Co., which has connexion with the Manila Military Office, have struck for an increase of wages.

SIR CLAUDE MACDONALD, British Ambassador, proceeded to Tsuruga on Dec. 21st. Lady MacDonald is expected to arrive there on Wednesday by the Longwood from Vladivostok.

OWING to a gale a junk laden with stones was sunk on Dec. 18th in the Sumida River near Shin-Ohashi. On the same morning the sailing vessel Shoun Maru was submerged near Akashi-cho, Tsukiji.

THE American papers in Manila, says the Hongkong Daily Press, condemn Admiral Sperry in unmeasured terms for his "avoidance of the decencies of social intercourse" at Manila, and "for his absurd insults to the Governor-General, the Army, and the Americans resident in the Philippines."

IN connection with the death of the Chinese Emperor and consequent mourning, one or two curious incidents have occurred, writes the Huichoufu correspondent of the N.C. Daily News. The report was circulated that after a certain date nobody could get married for a year except in a very subdued manner. As every bride loves a fuss and the privilege of riding in the flowered chair, quite a number of approaching marriages were hurried up. Bridal chairs were too much in demand and some few ceremonies had to take place at night. It seems that in their anxiety to fill all engagements, the chair-bearers made mistakes, and prospective brides were delivered at the wrong houses. In some cases the mistake was not discovered till several days afterwards. This seems a rather severe penalty to pay for the privilege of having a few fire-crackers set off at the ceremony.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REVIEWS AND REVIEWERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—A good deal has now been written about the abuse of his opportunity of which the writer of your Religious Summaries has too often been guilty. I am glad all this has been said for it needed saying; and having now been said I hope there will be no need in the future of saying it again. I had had it in mind to send you a sort of monthly summary of Mr. Denning's transgressions, and I see by his fourth letter that he virtually invites us to do so.

Having said so much it will surprise some of your readers to be told that, though this long correspondence has grown out of a letter of mine contributed some weeks ago, the letter in question scarcely referred, save in a brief parenthesis, to Mr. Denning's Summaries. It had to do with a particular Review which demonstrated, as it were in a nutshell, his incompetence to deal with the momentous questions of religion. I refer your readers back to my letter and to the original article which it criticized. The consecutive letters which my letter drew forth from Mr. Denning were only calculated to bring increased discredit upon the writer of them. My indictment remains as it stood. It concluded with the expression of a hope that Mr. Denning's contributions would in future be confined to that in which he excelled, namely Translations and Summaries, as he was clearly disqualified for the responsible work of theological review.

It is really surprising that Mr. Walton and "Alpha" should have read my letters so carelessly as to confuse two such different things as reviews and summaries. A review may be said to connote the expression of the reviewer's own opinions, though, be it noted, here not less than elsewhere candour and reliability of statement are needed. A summary, on the other hand, does not differ essentially from a translation as an attempt to represent exactly the thought of another writer. Any translator or summarizer who fails to do this is convicted either of bad scholarship or want of candour, the last being of course by far the worse offence. A moment's reflection will show Mr. Walton that he has represented himself in needlessly disreputable guise when he confesses himself unable to summarize an opponent's opinions without showing definite bias. No doubt he was thinking of reviewing, not summarizing.

I only have further to add now that I hold that Mr. Walton commits himself to another serious fallacy in supposing that a journalistic writer, one moreover who assumes a special air of authority, wields little influence when he makes pronouncements on religious questions. It is surely a truism that the columns of a newspaper afford one of the most influential pulpits in the world—the only pulpit indeed to which most men listen. We need not go further than our recent correspondence to illustrate this truth. Apart from the remarks which have fallen from the lips of one or two other laymen, we have the pathetic spectacle of a man like "Alpha," who himself writes like a gentleman, still hoping that in Mr. Denning he may find a Gannaliet. Believe me, Sir, Yours faithfully,

C. H. BASIL WOODD.

Osaka, December 15, 1908.

* No one, except Mr. Walton by implication and, I believe, unintentionally, has accused Mr. Denning of either of these offences in connection with his summaries.

ALPHA'S SPECIAL PLEADING AND INSULARITY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—When a man reiterates and emphasizes, as does Alpha, his opinion that the inoffensive Americanism "a bad break" is ugly, and then proceeds to argue in favour of the application to individuals of the sweetly suggestive Anglicism "a bad egg," there is little more to be said. He simply displays a quality of mind akin to that of a certain Englishman of some distinction whom I not long ago heard at a London dinner-table insisting that it was easier to add up pounds, shillings and pence, dividing the first column by twelve and the second by twenty, than to add up dollars and cents or francs and centimes! There is a well-known malady, endemic in the British Islands, not found in pathological nomenclature, but known, euphemistically, as insularity. The only remedy for it is foreign travel, and it so happens that those who have been thoroughly cured of it constitute one of the finest existing types of clear-sighted and broad-minded manhood. Occasionally, however, there are cases in which the symptoms are so severe that instead of affording relief, travel seems only to aggravate them; and in that hopeless condition the wisest course for the patient to adopt is to return home and calmly await the time when his death will put an end to other people's sufferings.

From Alpha's statement that the only objection to the splitting of the infinitive is merely a prejudice on the part of "superior persons" that is fast dying out, I dissent in toto. There may be an increasingly large number of careless writers who are addicted to his vicious habit, and whose slovenliness is condoned by teachers and professors who themselves contracted in their youth habits of speech they cannot now overcome; but I know of no high authority who avowedly justifies it except Professor Lounsbury, of Yale, whom I think Alpha would be among the last to call to his assistance. If there are other recognized authorities on the English language who defend the splitting of the infinitive or who practise it themselves, Alpha can doubtless quote them, and I should be pleased to have the information, entirely apart from its connection with the present discussion.

I am too familiar with the story of the preacher who referred in one of his sermons to Jacob and his "pot of message" to assume for a moment that no clergyman ever misquotes the Scriptures; but I have assumed and I do assume that none would ever misquote a certain well-known passage, as Alpha did: "Take off thy boots from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

Alpha displays a familiarity with American slang to which even after many years' residence in America I cannot lay claim; but there are certain expressions in his letter, including his reference to the Hebrew, that prompt me to make what may or may not be another contribution to his philological repertory by expressing my belief that he is "talking through his hat."

Yours truly,

BETA.

MR. CONSUL-GENERAL HALL'S LECTURE ON JOHN MILTON.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—By his lecture on John Milton, delivered before the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society on December 10, Mr. Consul-General Hall placed under obligation not only the members of the Society he addressed, but every reader of the excellent epitome of his lecture that has since appeared in the local press. And yet the address, excellent as it was, would, I think, have been still more valuable had Mr. Hall included in it, as he is so competent to have done, a more extended and more critical statement with regard to Milton's poetry and the poet's place in the Temple of Fame. To say that Milton was "a man who is acknowledged to be second in the long roll of English poets, the first, of course, being Shakespeare," is very unsatisfying, somewhat misleading and, without some qualification, strictly, I think, in accordance with the facts.

No other name blazes in the literary firmament with the same glory as that of the "thousand-wouled" Shakespeare; but it is certainly the dramatic and not the strictly poetic element in his writings that is the foundation of his enduring fame.

Milton, on the other hand, was not only the greatest epic poet that has ever lived, but even in his lyrics and miscellaneous poems he illustrates, as does no other writer, the melodiousness, the splendour, the majesty of the English tongue.

It cannot be supposed for a moment that Dryden, himself one of the greatest of English poets and the writer of the most splendid ode in the language, considered Milton inferior to Shakespeare as a poet when he wrote his famous lines:—

"Three poets, in three distant ages born,
Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
The first in loftiness of thought surpassed,
The next in majesty, in both the last,
The force of Nature could no further go;
To make a third, she joined the former two."

These lines were written by Dryden, and it is not Shakespeare but Milton to whom he thus strikingly alludes as combining the greatest qualities of Homer and Virgil.

Another great English poet, in words almost worthy of Milton himself, says of him:

"Nor second he who rode sublime
Upon the seraph wings of ecstasy
The secrets of the abyss to spy.
He passed the flaming bounds of time and space

Where angels tremble as they gaze;
He saw, but blasted with excess of light,
Closed his eyes in endless night."

Speaking in July last at the Milton Tercentenary at Cambridge, the Professor of Poetry at Oxford said "Milton's primacy in English poetry might be said to have been first publicly proclaimed by Addison and established by Johnson." Thus we have two of the greatest masters of English in the eighteenth century, one of them the Prince of English Essayists, and the other the biographer of the British poets, confirming the judgment of the great poet of the seventeenth, and lastly we have the Oxford Professor of Poetry in the twentieth discussing the matter, not as one with regard to which there was merely a general agreement of opinion, but as one concerning which disagreement was inconceivable.

I feel sure that if the accomplished and versatile Consul-General would favour the community with a further expression of his views on the subject, he would give us an illuminating address that would make perfectly plain to us the exact place occupied by Shakespeare and that occupied by Milton. If the programme of the Literary and Musical Society is not already too full, I would respectfully suggest that its Committee invite Mr. Carey-Hall to give a second lecture under its auspices.

Yours truly,
Yokohama, December 20, 1908.

THE BUDDHIST SECTS OF JAPAN AND THE NUMBER OF THEIR ADHERENTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It is hardly ingenious in the writer of the Summaries to blame the Niroku Shimbun for his own mistake. He admits having supplied the word "adherents" when there was nothing in the original to show whether the figures had reference to temples, priests, novitiates, or something else; but how he could think it was adherents when the total number was only 71,830 and the whole of the Buddhist sects of Japan were included in it, is past comprehension. Besides, I should have supposed that the writer of the Summaries would have had at his elbow the means of determining in a moment to what the figures had reference.

Yours truly,
Yokohama, December 21, 1908.

THE "WORLD" AND PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR, I hold no brief for the New York World, but I certainly think it would be well to await further developments before taking sides in the controversy between the World and President Roosevelt. That the World is sometimes given to sensationalism I admit, but, unlike that of some of its contemporaries, it is not the sensationalism of the merely mercenary or the politically disappointed, but the sensationalism of achievement and of high and consistent purpose.

In all the great political movements or national crises of the last twenty years, the World has invariably been found on the side of honesty, good government and international amity, leading, in fact, helping to create, the best sentiment of the country, even where such attitude has involved its temporary separation from the political party with which it is in general identified.

When President Cleveland's extraordinary Venezuela message brought England and the United States nearer the verge of war than they had been since the Trent affair in 1861, nothing except the wonderful forbearance of Lord Salisbury (which the World's action did much to render possible) contributed so largely to the preservation of peace as the appeal made by the World to the thinking men of the two countries; and lest it should be supposed that I am making too much of this, I may add that its efforts were formally and handsomely acknowledged by the various peace and arbitration societies, and that Mr. Joseph Chamberlain paid tribute to it as having "performed an inestimable service to the English-speaking people of the whole world."

The World opposed the Free Silver propaganda; it was largely instrumental in the overthrow of that tremendously demoralizing and corrupting institution the Louisiana State Lottery; it brought to light the grossest scandals in the municipal government of New York and secured the punishment of those implicated, and finally, so far, at least as its greater achievements are concerned, it brought about that reorganization of certain great life insurance companies that prevented their possible wrecking with inconceivably disastrous results and redeemed American life insurance from the stigma that had so long attached to it.

The World may have been deceived as to the charges it is now making, but it would be well to await developments; remembering that apart from the statements of interested parties we have on the other side only the assurances of President Roosevelt, who cannot know any more about it than he has been told, and who is sometimes misled, frequently impetuous, and always positive and masterful.

Yours truly,
Yokohama, December 22, 1908.

MANHATTAN.

CRITICISM OF FOREIGNERS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It is the indignant wonder and regret of many of us foreigners in Japan that we have of late been so often made the victims of unjust depreciatory remarks by travellers writing to the home papers after a visit to this country. We naturally ask how it is that a stranger, after but a brief stay amongst us, can thus depart convinced that so many of his fellow-citizens resident in the Far East, have so far fallen from the ethical standards of their ancestors. For it must be apparent to all that none of those travellers who belie us, have, by residence or otherwise established any right to judge us. How then can their attitude be accounted for? The answer is easy. The average tourist is apt to estimate the character of the inhabitants of a strange country by the newspapers they tolerate. When a newspaper claims to be representative of a community, the stranger has no way of knowing whether the claim is false; he feels justified in taking it at its face value. If the press indicated a type of mind socially and morally below what the traveller is accustomed to at home, he naturally assumes that its readers demand this inferior ethical standard, and are in sympathy with it.

Now let any unbiased person read, for example, the one sheet which claims to be most representative of English speaking people in Japan, which regards itself their champion in every cause, and he must if he goes by evidence, conclude that those who believe in that paper, do not admire what is most esteemed in good society at home. That paper, for instance, keeps up a constant campaign in depreciation of Christianity, and thus inferentially of all the great names for which Christianity stands. No respectable general newspaper does this in Europe or America. Not only so, but this paper provides a weekly column for the special purveyance of scandal and idiotic innuendo, from the scurrility and ridicule of which neither age, sex, nor station is immune; and which, for invective aspersions, blatant ribaldry, and drivelling imbecility, probably cannot be duplicated in any other community on earth.

Now how can the stranger, who comes among us, contemplate this defiant indifference to the conventions of decent journalism, without concluding that those who tolerate it, must find satisfaction, if not mental and moral stimulus, in it? And yet, as a matter of fact, a very large proportion of the citizens who suffer its existence, deplore its character, and long for the establishment of a really respectable newspaper to take its place. Thus the traveller who knows the paper and not the people, reaches an unjust verdict concerning the community. Such journalism as this is a gross libel on the average foreigner's social and moral taste, and if we victims do not want the outside public to lose respect for us, we ought to record our united protest against this type of journalism.

I cannot conclude, sir, without gratefully acknowledging your own efforts to keep journalism up to the high level that it has reached in many a conspicuous instance at home, and to express satisfaction, with some of your recent correspondents, that the Japan Mail's is kept on file in most of the national capitals of the world, and is the usual journalistic authority consulted abroad on local affairs in Japan.

Yours, etc.,

"READER."

TIME.—WHITE, 1HR. 53MIN.; BLACK, 1HR. 54MIN.

NOTES BY MR. J. H. BLACKBURN.

(a) On this occasion the champion adopted the orthodox move, instead of P—Q 3, as in the 12th game.

(b) This looks a little premature; perhaps it was all right, but Kt—K 2 intending P—B 3 and P—Q 4 was preferable.

(c) Giving White the opportunity of winning a pawn as follows:—10. Kt x Kt. P x Kt; 11. B x Kt. Q x B; 12. B x P. B x Kt; 13. P x B. QR—Kt sq; 14. Q—Q 4, leaving White a pawn to the good, but whether it would have been enough to win with was another matter.

(d) The temptation to win a piece proved irresistible; perhaps a quiet move like 12. K—R sq would have been better, for if in reply Black played Q. Kt—Kt 5, then 13. R—B 3 with a fair game. The plausible looking move, 12. Kt—K 2, was unsatisfactory on account of P—Kt 4 followed by Kt x P. There was also another variation which could have been played without disadvantage—viz., 12. P x Kt. P x P; 13. B x Kt. B x Kt ch; 14. K—R sq. P x B; 15. Kt—Q 5. B x Kt; 16. P x B. B x P; 17. R—Q Kt sq; and although a few pawns down, White would soon have obtained a powerful attack on the king's quarters.

(e) Of course something was necessary at this point, for Black threatened to regain the piece by B x Q Kt.

(f) A very forcible move, difficult for White to parry, and no doubt the defence selected was as good as any.

(g) Dr. Tarrasch thinks that he had a winning advantage here; that, however, is a matter of opinion. Certainly some effort would have been necessary before that stray knight could be brought back into play, and probably P—Q R 3 or 4 would have been the best way.

(h) And thus ended the great match for the championship of the world. As will be seen from the time pointed at the foot of the game, both players had only a few minutes in which to complete their 20 moves in two hours. No doubt the tension from about the ninth move was very great, and this would account for Dr. Tarrasch overlooking the mate in two if 27. R x B. Universal sympathy has been expressed to the loser for the oversight, but these things will happen, even in championship matches.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIA RAILWAY LOAN.

London, 5.05 p.m., December 17.

The South Manchuria Railway loan of two millions sterling was covered upwards of ten times.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

TURKEY'S NEW PARLIAMENT.

London, December 17.

The Sultan drove in his state coach to and opened the new Parliament. He was cheered by immense crowds. The Sultan stood throughout the ceremony. Ali Djivad Bey read the speech from the throne, in which the Sultan said he was heartily glad to restore the Constitution as his will unalterable. He regretted that the Bulgarians should have departed from the path of loyalty and proclaimed independence, and he also regretted to announce that Austria Hungary had illegally annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina, contrary to the treaty and to international good faith. He hoped that with the good offices of the friendly Powers these questions would be peacefully and favourably settled.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIA RAILWAY LOAN.

The South Manchuria Railway loan was oversubscribed ten-fold.

THE "WORLD" AND ROOSEVELT.

Pulitzer's paper, the World, retorts calling Roosevelt a bully, a wholesale slanderer, and a bull-dozing of judges.

KING AND SULTAN.

Later.

King Edward has telegraphed his congratulations to the Sultan. The Turkish Parliament has appointed a temporary President and will adjourn on Saturday.

NO GROUND FOR DISQUIET.

In the Reichstag the Premier stated that there is no reason to consider the situation disquieting. He is confident that the existing differences can be arranged diplomatically.

REFORMS IN INDIA.

Lord Morley, in the House of Lords, has introduced a bill providing for reforms in India. It makes the provincial legislative councils largely elective through electoral colleges; it sacrifices official majorities except on the Imperial Council, but it retains the power of veto; and it foreshadows a wide extension of the popular element in district administration.

CONGRESS AND THE PRESIDENT.

Washington.—The House of Representatives has resolved to call on President Roosevelt to justify his insinuations that members of Congress fear the attentions of the detectives.

TAFT AS PEACEMAKER.

London, December 18.

Mr. Taft is acting as peacemaker between President Roosevelt and Congress.

GERMAN NAVAL AIRSHIPS.

The German Ministry of Marine has ordered four Zeppelin airships for scouting purposes and is building floating docks which will be convertible into airship sheds.

THE TURKISH PARLIAMENT.

London, December 19.

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

The British Parliament will be prorogued on Monday and reassembles on February 16.

BOTTOMLEY FINED.

Mr. Bottomley M.P. has been fined £300 for contempt of Court for commenting on the proceedings of December 2, which were sub judice.

THE INDIA REFORMS.

London, December 19.

The reforms are generally warmly welcomed throughout India.

IMPORTANT BILLS PASSED.

The Miners Eight Hours and Port of London Bills have passed their third reading in both Houses. The House of Commons has accepted the Lords' amendment to the Eight Hours Bill making an 8½ hours' day permanent instead of provisional.

MORE AERIAL CONQUESTS.

London, December 20.

Mr. Wright at Le Mans has covered in his aeroplane 62 miles in 114 minutes.

SENATOR KNOX.

Senator Knox has been appointed Taft's Secretary of State.

CABINET CRISIS AT LISBON.

Lisbon.—The Cabinet has resigned and a coalition ministry has been formed. It is declared that the policy of Portugal will not be affected by the change.

PORTUGAL AND CHINA.

Negotiations between Portugal and China for the delimitation of the waters about Macao are proceeding normally.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY FOR CHINA.

Lord William Cecil's wife is about to leave on a two months' visit to China in connection with a joint American-British scheme to found a Chinese university on Christian lines.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

London, December 21.

The Franco-German press have started renewed polemics with regard to the suggestion of the German papers that Germany should demand the delimitation of the Algeria-Morocco frontier. The French papers urge that the matter solely concerns France and Morocco.

MONTENEGRIN BOYCOTT OF AUSTRIAN GOODS.

Montenegrin merchants are starting to boycott Austrian goods.

GERMANY AND THE SIBERIAN RAILWAY.

London, December 21.

It is stated in St. Petersburg that Germany has decided to cease sending troops to the Far East by sea and has arranged with Russia to utilize the Siberian Railway.

BIRMINGHAM AND PIRACY OF TRADE MARKS.

Replying to a complaint by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce as to the piracy of trade-marks in Japan, Sir Edward Grey said the situation was largely due to the failure of foreigners to take proper action to secure their rights. He recommends traders to appoint a common agent in Tokyo to watch their interests.

AUSTRIA AND TURKEY.

Later.

The tone of the reference to Austria in the Sultan's speech at the opening of Parliament is resented in Vienna, but is not expected to affect the negotiations owing to anxiety to secure the termination of the boycott. Austria-Hungary has sent a memorandum to the Porte complaining of various acts of violence in connexion with the boycott.

ITALIAN ARMY SENSATION.

A sensation has been created in army circles in Italy by the statement that a commission presided over by the King has decided that none of the twelve army corps commanders shall retain command in the event of war.

THE KING'S SPEECH.

London, December 22.

Parliament has been prorogued. The King's speech stated that relations with other Powers continue friendly. Several important agreements have been concluded tending to the consolidation of peace. There was reason to hope that wise and conciliatory counsels would prevail in the Balkans and that an amicable settlement would be reached with the consent of the Berlin signatories.

THE OPIUM CONFERENCE.

Commissioners have been appointed to attend the international opium conference at Shanghai to suggest measures for the gradual suppression of opium, with a view to assisting China towards the eradication of opium from the trade of the empire.

LLOYD GEORGE ON "KING" LANSDOWNE.

Later.

Mr. Lloyd George, speaking at Liverpool, said Lord Lansdowne had usurped a sovereignty unclaimed since Charles I. "We are not going to stand 'King Lansdowne' any longer, and are going to shatter his throne." The Lords must be challenged on the question of finance.

THE "AMETHYST" AFFAIR.

Later.

A seaman of the cruiser Amethyst (on which leave was stopped over a week ago at Portsmouth on account of some of the gun-fittings having been thrown overboard) has been sentenced to two years imprisonment with hard labour, and to be dismissed from the Navy.

Another one of the crew of the Amethyst has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment with hard labour and to be dismissed from the Navy.

THE BATTLE AT TABRIZ.

The correspondent at Teheran of the St. Petersburg Russ sends a graphic account of the battle outside Tabriz on Nov. 29th which resulted in the routing of the Government forces with losses on both sides of about two thousand.

QUEEN WILHELMINA.

London, December 23.

At the Hague in the Chamber in the presence of the Ministers the Government read a physician's declaration that "Queen Wilhelmina is undoubtedly enccinte." (Cheers).

BULGARIA COMPLAINS.

Bulgaria in a Note to the Powers complains of the offensive tone of the passage in the Sultan's speech referring to Bulgaria. It is feared this will lead to tension in Turco-Bulgarian relations.

A COLOSSAL BRIDGE.

Later.

The Pennsylvania Railroad plans to construct a bridge three miles in length from New York to Long Island. The span across Hellgate is to measure a thousand feet and the cost of the whole structure, which is to be the largest in the world, will amount to £3,000,000.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

It is unlikely that any final step will be taken in the Straits with regard to the Opium Commission's report until the conclusion of the Shanghai conference. The suggestion that publication will be delayed for political purposes is unfounded.

THE VENEZUELAN IMBROGLIO.

Later.

The Venezuelan Vice-President Gomez has arrested the brother of Castro and all the leading Castroites for conspiring to assassinate him and seize the Government. Castro himself is charged with complicity. Gomez has revoked the decree hampering trade at Curacao, which is the main cause of the complication with Holland. This is regarded as equivalent to a settlement.

The American warships Montana and South Carolina have sailed, it is supposed for Venezuelan waters.

FRENCH MILITARY EFFICIENCY.

The French Chamber has debated a Bill for increasing the artillery. General Picquart declared that it is impossible for France to remain inferior as compared with any possible foe, though the French organization is superior to the German.

(By Special Arrangement with the "Tokyo Asahi Shimbun.")

GROWING ANARCHY IN PERSIA.

London, December 16.

St. Petersburg.—Growing anarchy is reported in Persia. Responsible quarters are pessimistic.

CHINESE WASTE OF MONEY.

Peking.—The way in which loan moneys are wasted is bound to shake foreign confidence. Chinese ignorance of the elementary principles of sound finance is increasing the currency confusion. Diplomats are urging the Waiwupu to take immediate measures.

WALL STREET WELCOMES A COMMISSION.

New York.—Wall Street welcomes Governor Hughes' commission to enquire into stock exchange methods.

SCORING THE COMMONS.

London, December 19.

The close of the parliamentary session on Saturday shows little work done. There is considerable public comment as to the advisability of more business management in the House of Commons and less party shouting, more persuasion and less diction. Then the House would accomplish much more and better work.

THE INDIA REFORM SCHEME.

Later.

Bombay.—The reform scheme is more liberal than was expected. It is greeted in the official world without misgiving, and warmly welcomed by responsible Indians.

THE AMERICAN BATTLESHIPS.

New York.—Admiral Robley D. Evans, answering critics of the American battleships, declares that the navy is second to none afloat, ship for ship.

THE DUMA AND THE AGRARIAN BILL.

London, December 22.

St. Petersburg.—Exceptional importance is attached to the vote of the Duma on Monday with reference to the clause of the Agrarian Bill which provides that the peasant lands will become the individual property of the present holders. The Premier considers it an essential feature, but a large section of the House thinks that it negatives vested communal rights. It is widely rumoured that, if the clause is rejected, the Premier will resign.

PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

New York.—Congress has postponed the hazardous task of rebuking the President for his comments on the restriction of the employment of the secret service funds. The public knows that several representatives and senators have been found guilty of fraud against the Government through the employment of secret service money. Public sentiment upholds Roosevelt.

GERMAN SYMPATHY.

Berlin.—A semi-official organ emphasizes German sympathy with Turkey while declaring that Austria is only defending her rights and interests in annexing the two provinces. It is obvious that Germany is still trying to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds.

PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

London, December 23.

New York.—The President cleverly proposes to meet the differences between himself and Congress with reference to the secret service by merging the service detective agency in all the Government departments into a Bureau of criminal investigation similar to the British Department of Justice.

EXHIBITION IN LONDON.

Berlin.—The principal organizer of the Imperial International Exhibition in London in 1909 is touring Europe to secure participation. A feature will be the reproduction of the world's health and pleasure resorts.

"EDWARD THE PEACEMAKER."

It is rumoured that King Edward will intervene in the Austro-Turkish negotiations to effect a reconciliation.

THE SHAH WEAKENING.

Teheran.—The Anglo-Russian pressure continues. The Shah is weakening, and the fall of the leading reactionaries is imminent.

REDUCTIONS AT CASABLANCA.

Paris.—Considerable reductions will be effected in the troops at Casablanca and on the Algerian frontier. The extra cost of the operations during the last two years has been nearly £2,000,000.

RUSSIAN POLITICS.

St. Petersburg is confronted by the possibility of ministerial complications. The Duma has voted the clause of the Agrarian Bill declaring individual ownership of the peasant lands.

It is understood that Iswolsky will address the House on Friday with reference to the Near Eastern Crisis. He will insist on some measure of autonomy being granted to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

JAPANESE FIRED AT.

In the neighbourhood of Bolucha (?) island, which lies off the Liaotung Peninsula, a shot was fired at some Japanese. The officer in command at Port Arthur has sent the warship Takao to investigate the circumstances.

THE FREE PORTS BILL.

With regard to the Bill for abolishing the freedom of the port of Vladivostok, which has passed the Lower House of the Duma, a motion has been adopted by the Upper House for committing the Bill to a special committee of 15 members, in view of its great importance from a political, an economic, a financial and an industrial point of view. The committee is to be elected on the 23rd instant.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE.)

THE AMERICAN-GERMAN EXCHANGE OF PROFESSORS.

Berlin, December 17.

The American Professors who are lecturing at the University of Berlin in the place of the German Professors, who are going to America, have been received in audience by the Kaiser. They report that the Kaiser was in good spirits, and has fully recovered from his late indisposition.

A STATE OF SIEGE IN VENEZUELA.

A state of siege has been proclaimed in Venezuela. The proclamation of a new Government is imminent.

FRANCE TO BUILD LARGE BATTLESHIPS.

The French Minister for the Navy announces the building of large battleships.

THE NEW TURKISH PARLIAMENT OPENED.

The New Turkish Parliament has been opened with great ceremony at Constantinople.

THE TURKISH PARLIAMENT.

Berlin, December 18.

The president of the Reichstag has sent a telegram of congratulation to the Turkish Parliament. The telegram was opened in the presence of the Sultan.

A speech from the Throne was read in which emphasis was laid on the injury done to the rights of Turkey by the declaration of independence on the part of Bulgaria and by the annexation of Bosnia. The speech also contained a plea for financial reform and for the increase of the Army and Navy.

The Sultan was greeted with great enthusiasm by the people and the ceremony was not interrupted by any untoward incident.

AUSTRIA AND TURKEY.

The Austrian Prime Minister emphatically pleads for an Austro-Turkish understanding and sympathies with the introduction of the Turkish Constitution.

GREAT FIRE AT ROSTOCK.

A gigantic fire has occurred at Rostock.

THE DECLARATION OF WAR.

American reports as to a declaration of war between Holland and Venezuela have not been confirmed up to now.

THE INDIA REFORMS.

Lord Morley, speaking in the House of Lords, demanded the introduction of reforms into India and pleaded for the creation of a body representative of the people, but not in the form of a European Parliament.

MR. TAFT'S VISIT TO PANAMA.

Berlin, December 20.
Mr. Taft, the newly-elected President of the United States, will leave for Panama in January next.

Mr. Taft desires to appoint Senator Philander Knox, representative of Philadelphia, as Secretary of State.

THE TSAR'S NAME DAY.

The Tsar on his name day conferred on the Cossack regiments the right to bear certain galloons as distinctive marks on their uniforms.

PORTUGAL.

The Portuguese Cabinet has resigned.

A new Cabinet has been formed consisting of three Liberal and three Conservative members.

The President of the Cabinet is M. Beirao, one of the Liberal members.

THE MILITARY ATTACHE AT TOKYO.

Lieutenant-Colonel von Etzel, now Military Attaché at the German Embassy at Tokyo, has been nominated Commander of the 14th Regiment of Dragons, which is stationed at Colmar.

PROPOSED OCCUPATION BY RUSSIAN TROOPS.

Berlin, December 21.
The Russian Government is sounding the British Government as to the occupation of Azerbaijan by Russian troops, in order to recapture Tabriz for the Shah.

It is reported from London that such action is imminent.

PRESIDENT CASTRO.

President Castro has undergone a surgical operation of the kidneys in a private hospital at Berlin.

THE TROUBLE WITH VENEZUELA.

An exchange of opinions as to the trouble between Holland and Venezuela has taken place between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States.

SIR ROBERT HART.

Sir Robert Hart will not return to his post in China.

THE DARDANELLES.

It is reported from London that the British Government objects to the proposal of the Russian Government for the opening of the Dardanelles by a resolution of the forthcoming conference.

THE SIBERIAN MAIL.

The mail via Siberia, with Yokohama dates of 3rd December, arrived at Berlin on the 21st inst.

STATEMENT IN BRITISH SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Berlin, December 22.
The British speech from the throne contains a peaceful passage as to the Balkan question, which will help to a favourable solution of the pending difficulties.

SPEECH BY ITALIAN PREMIER.

Signor Tittoni, the Italian Premier, speaking in the Senate, proved the advantages of the Triple Alliance.

THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH TURKEY.

The Austrian Government has expressed its willingness to pay compensation to Turkey for the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

DISCUSSION AS TO THE ALGERIAN FRONTIER.

The German and French Press are not participating in the passing discussion as to the Algerian-Moroccan frontier question.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

THE PANAMA CANAL AFFAIR.

New York, December 16.
The report that $20,000,000 of the Panama Canal construction expenses was missing was first published by several newspapers belonging to the Democratic Party in Indiana. The journals commenting on it condemned President Roosevelt. The New York World reproduced the report and further blamed him. The President and some lawyers concerned in the Panama canal affair published contradictions in the World. Nevertheless, the New York Journal produced several other reports against the President. On December 15th President Roosevelt published a further detailed explanation and declared that he had decided to lodge a criminal case against the newspapers in Court. In consequence of the strong attitude adopted by the President, the World says that he has tried to humiliate it as was done toward the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The paper adds that even if a few of the staff should be punished, the principles of the journal will not be altered.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

St. Petersburg, December 16.
General Spomenoff, Governor-General of Kiev and Commander-in-Chief of the army in that province, has been appointed acting Chief of the General Staff Office. The Commander-in-Chief of the Kronstadt Fortress has been transferred to the vacancy in Kiev.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg, December 17.
The Russian Government sent secretly a note to Austria on December 16th. It is said that in the note Russia has admitted the proposal of Austria that the question of the annexation should be submitted to the preliminary consultation at the proposed international meeting and thus be made the basis of the formal conference.

AMERICAN SECRETARY OF STATE.

New York, December 18.
It is reported that Mr. Knox, a Senator representing Pennsylvania, and formerly Attorney-general, has been nominated Secretary of State under Mr. Taft, whose ministry will be organized in March next year. It may be remembered that Mr. Knox was one of the candidates in the Presidential election.

PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

A bill providing for the increase of the annual allowance to the President and Vice-President to $100,000 and $50,000 respectively was introduced into Congress on Dec. 17th. If the bill becomes law, it will come into force when Mr. Taft is appointed to the Presidency.

SHIPPING SERVICE IN THE PACIFIC.

San Francisco, December 19.
The Norddeutscher Lloyd has decided to join its service with the West Pacific Railway, the construction of a branch of which will be completed next spring, and thus to start a service between San Francisco and the Orient. The German shipping firm has signed a contract with the railway company. Competition is expected to take place between the German shipping company and other firms which are engaged on the Pacific. It is generally believed that it will be necessary to grant a subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

IMPERIAL RUSSIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

St. Petersburg, December 19.
At the Imperial Russian Legislative Council, a bill providing for the issuing of loan bonds has been passed while a bill relating to the abolition of the free ports in the Far East has been handed over to a special committee.

THE TSAR'S CHRISTENING DAY.

Dec. 19th being the anniversary of the christening day of the Tsar, a celebration was held. The whole city was illuminated in accordance with a strict order by the police. Only one journal belonging to the Right Party published a congratulatory article.

FISHERY AFFAIRS.

Vladivostok, December 20.
Mr. Nomura, Japanese Consul in Vladivostok, has returned from Khabalovsk where he conducted negotiations with the Russian local government authorities with reference to the fishery affair. The question was resolved amicably. It is said that the Russian Government will make a special concession towards the Japanese fishing vessel now in Russian custody.

A SUSPICIOUS JAPANESE.

A question of the expulsion of a Japanese is still left unresolved. On Dec. 19th the Russian police urged the Japanese to leave Vladivostok at once. It is believed that the Russian police have taken him to be a spy.

THE U. S. MINISTRY.

New York, December 20.
The United States Ministry under Mr. Taft is expected to be as follows:
Secretary of State, Mr. P. C. Knox (Pennsylvania).
Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. M. T. Herrick (Ohio).
Attorney-General, Mr. George W. Wickham (New York).
Secretary of War, Mr. Charles E. Magoon (the Governor-general of Cuba).
Secretary of the Navy, Mr. William Loeb jr. (New York) or Mr. Charles H. Thomson (New York).
Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Richard H. Baling (Seattle).
Postmaster-General, Mr. Frank H. Hitchcock (Massachusetts).
Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. James Wilson (Iowa).
Secretary of Commerce and Labour, Mr. George A. Knight (California).
